alties are never extended by implication. They must be expressly imposed or they cannot be enforced. Full power is given in section 122, by reference to the other provisions of the internal revenue law, for the collection of the tax and penalty there provided for; but it nowhere appears, by reference or otherwise, that it was the intention of Congress to add to the one penalty which is expressly given for the failure to do what that section requires. As has been said, it is conceded that the addition of five per cent. and interest provided for in section 119 applies only to individual incomes. In this connection it is a noticeable fact that although by section 8 of the Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 473, a reduction was made from ten per cent. to five per cent. and interest at the rate of one per cent. a month in all cases where a penalty of ten per cent. had been imposed for any failure to pay any internal revenue tax, it was deemed necessary in section 13 of the same Act, 14 Stat. at L., 480, to amend section 119 specially, so as to reduce in the same way the additional per centage of ten per cent. imposed by that section. If it had been supposed that the penalties prescribed in the other parts of the Act for failure to pay taxes applied to taxes upon incomes, this special amendment would not have been necessary. But if they did not apply to section 119, it is difficult to see how they can to section 122. As it was supposed to be necessary to make express provision in section 119 for the payment of this additional percentage in order to charge the tax payer, and it was omitted in section 122, the conclusion is irresistible, that it was the intention of Congress to impose no other penalty for a failure to comply with the requirements of this section than the one which is specifically given.

We see nothing in the Act of July 14, 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 260, under which a portion of the taxes paid by the defendant in error was assessed, to manifest any intention on the part of Congress to add to the penalties imposed by section 122 while that section was in force. The penalty of $1,000 is confined to a default in making the required return, instead of default in making the return or in making the payment, as it was in section 122. In other respects the provisions as to penalties in the two Acts are substantially the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

MATHIAS TERHUNE, Appt.,

v.

JOHN PHILLIPS ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 592, 593.)

Patent law—judicial notice—invention.

1. This court will take judicial notice that a thing patented was known and in general use long before the issuing of the patent.

2. The substitution of metal for wood is destitute both of patentable invention and utility.

[No. 106.]

Submitted Dec. 24, 1878. Decided Jan. 27, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The appellant brought suit in the court below, for the alleged infringement of a certain patent for metallic corner sockets of show cases. The defense alleged a lack of novelty in the patent. The court entered a decree dismissing the bill, from which the complainant appealed.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. J. W. Merriam and L. L. Coburn, for appellant.

No counsel appeared for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The determination of this case is controlled by Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S., 37 [XXIII., 200]. We cannot fail to take judicial notice that the thing patented was known and in general use long before the issuing of the patent. The substitution of metal for wood was destitute both of patentable invention and utility. The admission of improper testimony, if it occurred, was, therefore, immaterial. The case of the appellant as it appears in the record, without any testimony, is clear and conclusive against him.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Cited—109 U. S., 101, 102; 111 U. S., 606; 17 Blatchf., 401; 19 Blatchf., 207.

THOMAS R. MILLS, JR., Admr., etc., of the Estate of GEORGE HALL, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,

v.

LEVI H. B. SCOTT.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 25-30.)

Georgia Statute of Limitations—action against stockholder—action of debt—excessive judgment.

1. The Georgia Statute of Limitations of Mar. 16, 1869, does not commence to run against administrators until twelve months from the date of their appointment and qualification.

2. In that State an action of debt will lie against a stockholder of an insolvent bank, or his administrator, to recover the amount he is liable to pay for the debts of the bank, where the amount of the bank's outstanding indebtedness and the number of shares held by the stockholder can be stated.

3. Actions for debt will always lie where the amount sought to be recovered is certain, or can be ascertained from fixed data by computation.

4. Where the recovery in such action is for too great an amount, the cause will be remanded to the court below with directions to grant a new trial, unless the plaintiff consent to remit from the judgment the excess.

[No. 119.]

Argued Jan. 16, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Oregon.

The case, which arose in the court below, is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walter S. Chisholm, Julian Hart-ridge and C. D. Willard, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. T. Akerman, for defendant in error:

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action at law against the administrator of the estate of George Hall, deceased, upon bills of the Merchants' and Planters' Bank of Savannah, Georgia, amounting to over $100,000. The deceased was, on the first of January, 1860, and up to the time of his death the owner of one thousand shares of the capital stock of that bank, of the nominal value of $100 a share. A clause in the charter of the bank provided that "The persons and property of the stockholders" should be liable for the redemption of its bills and notes at any time issued, in proportion to the number of shares held by them. The plaintiff was the owner of the bills in suit, and as they were not paid on presentation, he brought an action upon them against the bank in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia, and recovered judgment, upon which execution was issued and returned unsatisfied. He then brought this action to charge the estate of the deceased, Hall, under the provision of the charter mentioned.

To the declaration the defendant pleaded the general issue and the Statute of Limitations of March 16, 1869, requiring actions for the enforcement of rights of individuals under Acts of incorporation or by operation of law, which accrued prior to June 1, 1865, to be brought before the first of January, 1870, or be forever barred. To the special plea the plaintiff interposed a demurrer, and it was agreed in arguing it that the following facts should be considered as set forth in the plea, namely: that George Hall was domiciled in Connecticut, and died there in 1868, leaving a will; that there was no administration in Georgia on his estate until August 9, 1869, when letters of administration ad colligendum were granted to the defendant, Mills; and that permanent letters of administration, with the will annexed, were granted to him on June 7, 1869.

The court sustained the demurrer and struck out the plea. The case was then tried upon the general issue, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict for the sum of $100,000, of which sum $31,354 was to be made out of the property of the deceased, then in the hands of the administrator, and the remainder out of property which might subsequently come into his hands. Upon this verdict, judgment being entered, the defendant brought the case to this court on a writ of error.

The principal questions presented for our consideration are: 1, whether the Statute of March 16, 1869, is a bar to the action; and, 2, whether an action at law by a bill-holder to charge a stockholder will lie under the charter of the bank; and, if so, whether the declaration will sustain the finding of the jury.

The Statute of March 16, 1869, was intended to bring all claims to an early determination. It was passed, as recited in its preamble, on account of the confusion which had "grown out of the disturbed condition of affairs during the late war," and because of doubts entertained relative to the law of limitation of actions "which should be put to rest." It was a measure well calculated to bring disputed controversies to a speedy settlement. The time prescribed within which actions were to be brought was only nine months and fifteen days. In the case of Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S., 628 [XXIV., 365], it was held by this court that the Act was not open to any constitutional objection because of the shortness of this period. The question in such cases, the court said, was, whether the time allowed was, under all the circumstances, reasonable; and of this the Legislature of the State was primarily the judge, and its decision would not be overruled unless a palpable error had been committed. Looking at the circumstances under which the Legislature had acted, amidst the disasters which had affected the fortunes, property and business of almost every one in the State, the court could not say that the time mentioned was unreasonable. "Society demanded," observed the Chief Justice, "that extraordinary efforts be made to get rid of old embarrassments, and permit a reorganization upon the basis of the new order of things;" and for that purpose, whilst the obligations of old contracts could not be impaired, "their prompt enforcement could be insisted upon or an abandonment claimed."

There is in the statute no exception in terms of any class of cases; yet such a construction must be given to its provisions as not to impair the operation of other laws, which it is not reasonable to suppose the Legislature intended to repeal. The law of the State relating to the administration of the estates of deceased persons contains various provisions, which, in many particulars, would be defeated if the Statute of March 16, 1869, was held applicable to actions in behalf of the estates or against them. Thus, administrators are allowed twelve months from the date of their qualification to ascertain the condition of the estates confided to their charge; creditors are required to present their claims within this period; and no suits to recover a debt of the decedents can be brought until its expiration. Secs. 2530, 2548, 3348. The Supreme Court of the State has accordingly held that the Statute of 1869 does not affect this exemption from suit for the period designated, but that its spirit and equity require that suits against administrators upon the claims mentioned should be brought within a similar period after twelve months from the grant of administration; that is, within nine months and fifteen days afterwards. Such is the purport of its decision in Moravian Seminary v. Atwood, 50 Ga., 382; and that decision has since been followed in several cases. Edwards v. Ross, 53 Ga., 147. In conformity with them we must hold that the statute was not a bar to the present action. There was no administrator of the estate of Hall appointed in Georgia, even for temporary purposes until April 9, 1869, and this action was commenced December 30, 1870, which was within the period required after the expiration of the year of exemption.

Whether the present action can be maintained, it being an action at law by a bill holder to charge the estate of a deceased stockholder, depends upon the construction given to the clause of the charter of the bank, prescribing the personal liability of the stockholders. The language of the clause, so far as it bears upon this case, is that "The persons and property of the stockholders shall at all times be liable, pledged and bound for the redemption of bills and notes at any time issued, in proportion to the number of shares that each individual and corporation may hold and possess." This provision is held by the Supreme Court of the State to create a personal liability on the part of the stockholder for all the notes of the bank in the See 9 OTTO.

proportion that the shares held by him bear to all the shares of its capital stock, which any bill holder can enforce, upon the insolvency of the bank, by separate action to the extent of his claim. Lane v. Morris, 8 Ga., 468; Addins v. Thornton, 19 Ga., 325. Such liability may, undoubtedly, be enforced by a suit in equity, and in many cases such a proceeding would seem to be the only appropriate one, as was held by this court in Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall., 520 [87 U. S., XXII, 376]; see also, Terry v. Tubman, 92 U. S., 156 [XXIII, 537]. The proportion of the indebtedness with which the stockholder is to be charged can be ascertained only upon taking an account of the debts and stock of the bank, and a court of equity is the proper tribunal to bring before it all necessary parties for that purpose. But by the law of the State, as declared by its highest tribunal, an action for debt will lie where the amount of the bank's outstanding indebtedness and the number of shares held by the stockholder can be stated. In such cases, the extent of the latter's liability is fixed, and the amount with which he should be charged is a matter of mere arithmetical calculation. Actions for debt will always lie where the amount sought to be recovered is certain, or can be ascertained from fixed data by computation. Here the declaration states the number of shares of the capital stock of the bank to be twenty thousand, and that one thousand were held by the deceased. His liability, therefore, was fixed at one twentieth of the entire indebtedness of the bank on the bills issued by it, which is averred to be $800,000. The only recovery, therefore, which the declaration permitted was for $40,000 and not for $100,000, which the jury found. This error in the record is not specifically pointed out in the brief of counsel for the defendant, who was not present at the argument; but it is evident that it was at the erroneous apportionment of the indebtedness to the estate of the deceased that he aimed, when insisting that the remedy of the plaintiff should have been by a bill in equity, and not in this form of action.

Bethis as it may, where an error in the amount recovered is apparent upon the record, and it could not have been remedied by an amendment of the pleadings, this court will, of its own motion, in the interests of justice, direct that it be corrected, and, if necessary, order a new trial or further proceedings for that purpose.

This cause will, therefore, be remanded to the court below, with directions to grant a new trial, unless the plaintiff, within a period to be designated by the court, consent to remit from the judgment the excess over $40,000.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

OAKES A. AMES AND OLIVER AMES,
EXRS. of OAKES AMES, Deceased, ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 35-47.)

Bond in admiralty—recall of property—judgment—joint contractors—partnership—demurrer—relief in equity.

1. Where property is seized in admiralty, as forfeited, and a bond is given by its claimant for its return to him, such bond becomes the substitute for the property; and in case the property is condemned, the remedy is transferred from the property to the bond.

2. The question, whether a case is made for the recall of property released under bond in such a case, must be determined by the courts empowered to hear and determine the matter in controversy in the pending suit.

3. The property released cannot be recalled after it has been condemned and the libelants have proceeded to final judgment against the principal and sureties in the bond given for its release.

4. A judgment against one of two or more joint contractors is a bar to an action against the others.

5. Where the property was partnership property, and the release was obtained for the benefit of the partnership, those partners who did not sign the bond cannot be rendered liable for its value.

6. Mere legal conclusions are never admitted by a demurrer.

7. Relief in equity will not be granted merely because a security in an admiralty suit becomes ineffectual if it appears that it became so without fraud, misrepresentation or accident, which might have been prevented by due diligence.

[No 133.]

Argued Jan. 17, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. G. A. Somerby, E. S. Mansfield and George P. Sanger, for appellant:

The demurrers admits all the facts averred in the bill to be true, so far as they are well pleaded. If the United States has a right to recover the value of its property which the deceased partner has, immediately after its delivery and the execution of the release bond or stipulation, with knowledge of the entire cause of condemnation and forfeiture, and who, with his copartners, sold it and received the proceeds of the sale, then his executors are properly proceeded against by this bill, and the circuit court, as a court of equity, has original and plenary jurisdiction.

The case presented is that of a trust fund, a trustee holding and a cestui que trust claiming it. This gave the circuit court original and plenary jurisdiction. That the fund arose and the trustee was appointed under the Bankrupt Act, did not affect the right of the United States to pursue both by the exercise of the jurisdiction invoked. The same remedies are applicable as if the fund had arisen and the trustee had been appointed in any other way.

Lewis v. U. S., 92 U. S., 618, 622 (XXIII., 513, 514); citing Beaston v. Bk., 12 Pet., 134; Thelussou v. Smith, 2 Wheat., 425.

In the court of chancery, executors and administrators are considered as trustees, and that court exercises original jurisdiction over them in favor of creditors, legatees and heirs, in reference to the proper execution of the trust. A single creditor has been allowed to sue for his demand in equity, and obtain a decree for payment out of the personal estate, without taking a general account of the testator's debts. Atty-Gen. v. Cornthwaite, 2 Cox, Eq., 43; Adams, Eq., 257.

The existence of this jurisdiction has been acknowledged in this court, and in several of the courts of chancery in the States.

Green v. Creighton, 23 How., 90, 106 (64 U. S., XVI., 419, 423).

That a single creditor may maintain a bill against an administrator of a deceased debtor, for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt, there can be no doubt.

Hagan v. Walker, 14 How., 29, 34, 35; Hunter v. U. S., 5 Pet., 172.

That the United States, upon the averments of this bill, is entitled to the remedy therein prayed for, or to other and further relief, not inconsistent with the specific prayer, clearly appears from the nature of the original cause against The Rob Roy and cargo, the principles applicable to such cause, and to the averment in the bill.

What was that cause?

Certainly not an action at common law in which A recovered judgment against B on a promissory note made by B, and afterwards, discovering that C was a dormant partner of B, at the time the note was given, brought an action at common law against C and B.

Certainly not an action of assumpsit or debt at common law.

Certainly not an action at common law.

Certainly not a bill in equity brought by A after he had recovered judgment in an action at common law against B, against C and B or against C alone; the bill simply setting forth as the sole ground for equitable relief, the naked fact, that A did not know C was B's partner until after his judgment at law against B had been rendered.

Certainly not an admiralty cause of collision, where the ship had been released on bail. Certainly not an admiralty cause to enforce payment of a bottomry bond, where the ship had been discharged on the usual stipulation for value.

It was a cause of forfeiture to the United States of The Rob Roy, and her cargo of 1,120 bales of cotton, as enemies' property, because the cargo had been sought for, obtained and brought on board The Rob Roy, from within territory of the United States, declared by the President of the United States to be in a state of insurrection.

"The Government seized the steamer Rob Roy and her cargo, as liable to forfeiture for acts done during the war. These acts were in violation of the rules of war, as adopted by the United States. The title of the Government rested on such unlawful acts. * * * * *

The Government proved the unlawful acts." Mr. Justice Bradley in U. S. v. Rob Roy, 1 Woods, 42, 44.

Are the rights of the United States, after a condemnation, to be measured by and confined to the stipulation or release bond given in such a cause? If so, then if the stipulation or release bond proves to be insufficient, and final process thereon is returned wholly unsatisfied and the proceeds of the property condemned as forfeited to the United States for violation of its rules of war, can be traced to the hands of persons not bona fide purchasers, within the jurisdiction of its courts, the United States and its courts will be powerless to touch those proceeds. The rules of war will, in such cases be mere nullities, and the very object sought to be accomplished by those rules, the reduction of the enemies of the United States, will be entirely defeated.

Such a stipulation in such a cause is a mere incident and attendant upon the original cause, and the decree rendered on such a stipulation is not a distinct independent judgment at common law, but is interlocutory, and a mere incident and attendant upon the original cause.

Smart v. Wolfe, 3 T. R., 323; The Nied Elwin, 1 Dods., 50; The Pomona, 1 Dods., 25; Roberts, Adm. and Prize, 434; Upton, Mar. Warfare, 2d ed., 432, 433.

Additional security and the interlocutory decree thereon fixing the value of the cotton at the time of the unlivery, did not in any way strip from the United States its claim against Ames, Butler and Mansfield, as having had and sold and received the proceeds of the property of the United States, with perfect knowledge at the time of the unlivery, property condemned for violating the rules of war adopted by the United States.

It cannot be that the death of either of the co-partners has stripped from the United States its claim and annihilated the debt of that deceased partner if it shall be proved.

Messrs. George O. Shattuck and Oliver W. Holmes, Jr., for appellees:

If Oakes Ames had ever been a party to the bond, his liability was concluded, both at law and in equity, by the judgment entered upon it.

Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall., 231 (73 U. S., XVIII., 783); Wann v. McNulty, 2 Gilm. Ill., 355; U. S. v. Price, 9 How., 83, 94; Cabell v. Vaughan, 1 Wms. Saund., 291, e; Beltzhoover v. Com., 1 Watts., 126.

If a party obtains a judgment against certain members only of a firm, when there were other members who were jointly liable, and who might have been held liable by him, the fact that the plaintiff did not know of the parties not included in his judgment until after it was rendered, gives him no standing in equity.

Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch., 566; Wilkins v. Consequa, Pet. (C.C.), 301, 306; Sedam v. Williams, 4 McL., 51, 52; Spear v. Gillet, 1 Dev. Eq., 466, 469 (top); Moale v. Hollins, 11 Gill. & J. (Md.), 11; Wann v. McNulty, 2 Gilm. (Ill.), 355; Ward v. Motter, 2 Rob. (Va.) 536, 545; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass., 148; Anderson v. Levan, 1 Watts & S., 334, 339; Smith v. Black, 9 S. & R., 142; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns., 459, and other cases cited and approved in Mason v. Eldred (supra).

If Ames had been a party to the bond, he might have been made a party to the judgment upon it.

McLellan v. U. S., 1 Gall., 227; The Alligator, 7 Gall., 145.

It has been held by this court in the case of a bond made expressly joint and several, on which a joint judgment was taken, that even a party to the judgment was discharged by death, and that his estate could not be followed in equity.

U. S. v. Price, 9 How., 83.

Mr. Justice Lindley evidently holds the same opinion. Lind. Partnership, 4th ed., 371, 451, 454.

If the res itself, the cotton, had been within reach of the process of the court of Louisiana at the time of bringing this suit, it would not have been within the power of the court to order the arrest.

Coote, Adm. Pr., 2d ed., 19; Boyd, Adm., 39; Wms. & Br., 228; Roscoe, Adm., 6, 112; The Union, 4 Blatchf., 90; The White Squall, 4 Blatchf., 103; The T. P. Leathers, Newb., 432, 433, 435, 437, n.; The Thales, 3 Ben., 327, 329; S. C., 10 Blatchf., 203; The Jack Jewett, 2 Ben., 353, 355, 356; The Old Concord, 1 Brown, Adm., 270; The Kalamazoo, 15 Jur., 885; S. C., 9 Eng.

See 9 OTTO.

L. & E., 557; The Wild Ranger, Bro. & Lush., 84, 87, 88; S. C., Lush., 553; The Hero, 13 W. R., 927; S. C., Bro. & Lush., 447; The Webb, 14 Wall., 406, 418 (81 U. S., XX., 774, 777); The Ann Caroline, 2 Wall., 538, 549 (69 U. S. XVII., 833, 835); The Lady Pike, 96 U. S., 461, 465 (XXIV., 672, 673); The Virgo, 13 Blatchf., 255.

The law in question creates a forfeiture of a specific thing in terms, and does no more. It is penal in its nature, and should not, therefore, be extended to forfeit proceeds of the forfeited thing, which are not mentioned in the act.

U. S. v. Weed, 5 Wall., 62, 68 (72 U. S., XVIII., 531, 533); The Reform, 3 Wall., 617, 629 (70 U. S., XVIII., 105, 109); U. S. v. The Malek Adhel, 2 How., 210, 235; U. S. v. Huckabee, 16 Wall., 414 (83 U. S., XXI., 457).

Equity never lends its aid to enforce a forfeiture, and the law in question creates a forfeiture in terms.

Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How., 447, 453-455 (58 U. S., XV., 155, 157, 158); Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 521; Story, Eq. Pl., secs. 1391, 1494; U. S. v. McRae, L. R., 4 Eq., 327, 388, et seq.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Judicial cognizance of prize cases is derived from that article of the Constitution which ordains that the judicial power shall extend to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; and the district courts for many years exercised jurisdiction in such cases without any other authority from Congress than what was conferred by the 9th section of the Judiciary Act, 1 Stat. at L., 73, which gave those courts exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including the seizures therein mentioned, the rule adopted being, that prize jurisdiction was involved in the general delegation of admiralty and maritime cognizance, as conferred by the language of that section. Glass v. The Betsy, 3 Dall., 6; The Admiral, 3 Wall., 603 [70 U. S., XVIII., 58]; Jennings v. Carson, 1 Pet., Adm., 7; 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 355; 2 Stat. at L., 761, sec. 6.

Admiralty courts proceed according to the principles, rules and usages which belong to the admiralty as contradistinguished from the courts of common law. Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat., 473; 1 Stat. at L., 276.

Seizure of the property and the usual notice precede the appearance of the claimant; but when those steps are taken, the owner or his agent, if he desires to defend the suit, must enter his appearance in the case, and the court may, in its discretion, require the party proposing to appear and defend the suit to give security for costs as a preliminary condition to the granting of such leave.

Due appearance having been entered, the claimant, if he wishes to avoid the inconvenience and expense of having the property detained until the termination of the suit, may apply to the court at any time to have the property released on giving bond, which application it is competent for the court to grant or refuse.

Bail in such a case is a pledge or substitute for the property as regards all claims that may be made against it by the promoter of the suit. It is to be considered as a security, not for the amount of the claim, but simply for the value of the property arrested, to the extent of the claim and costs of suit, if any, beyond the preliminary stipulation. Williams & Bruce, Prac., 210.

Whenever a stipulation is taken in the admiralty for the property subjected to legal process and condemnation, the stipulation is deemed a mere substitute for the thing itself, and the stipulators are held liable to the exercise of all those authorities on the part of the court which the tribunal could properly exercise if the thing itself were still in the custody of the court. The Palmyra, 12 Wheat., 1; The Wanata, 95 U. S., 611 [XXIV., 464]; The Webb, 14 Wall., 406 [81 U. S., XX., 774].

Fees and expenses of keeping the property having been paid, it is the duty of the marshal to surrender the property as directed in the order of release; and it is settled law that if any one, in defiance of the order, unlawfully detains the same he is liable to be proceeded against by attachment. The Towan, 8 Jur., 223; The Tritonia, 5 N. of Cas., 111.

Concisely stated, the material facts as derived from the allegations of the bill of complaint are as follows: (1) That a certain steamboat with her cargo, consisting of eleven hundred and twenty bales of cotton, was seized as enemy property. (2) That proceedings, on the 23d of March, 1865, were commenced against the property in the District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, to procure a decree of forfeiture of the property, the charge being that the cargo was obtained within territory occupied by armed public enemies. (3) That the person named in the bill of complaint appeared in the suit as claimant of the cargo, and obtained an order of the court that the cargo of cotton might be released to the claimant, he, the claimant, giving bond to the complainants in the sum of $350,000, with good and solvent security. (4) That the claimant on the following day, in pursuance of the order, filed the required bond to the amount specified in open court, duly executed by the claimant as principal and with sureties accepted by the court as satisfactory. (5) That the marshal on the same day, in compliance with the order of the court, released and delivered the cargo to the claimant. (6) That on the 10th of May following, the district court entered a decree in the suit dismissing the libel and ordered that the cargo seized be restored to the claimant, from which decree the complainants appealed to the circuit court. (7) That the circuit court on the 8th of June then next, reversed the decree of the district court and entered a decree condemning the steamboat and her cargo as forfeited to the United States, and condemning the claimant to pay to the complainants $204,982.28, with interest, and a decree in the usual form against the sureties. (8) That the decree last named is in full force, and that neither the claimant nor sureties have ever paid the same or any part thereof to the complainants. (9) Nulla bona having been returned upon the execution, the present bill of complaint was filed in the name of the United States; and the prayer is that the executors of Oakes Ames may be decreed to admit assets in their hands sufficient to pay and satisfy the aforesaid decree and interest, and that it be decreed that they shall pay the amount of the decree and interest to the complainants.

Certain other matters are also set forth in the bill of complaint which, it is alleged, entitle the complainants to the relief prayed, of which the following are the most material: (1) That at the time of the seizure of the steamboat and her cargo, and at the time the bond for the release of the cargo was given, and at the time the decree was entered against the claimant and his sureties in the bond, the testator of the executors named as respondents and the other respondent named were partners of the claimant under the firm and style alleged in the bill of complaint; and that the partners in the course of the partnership business purchased the cargo of the steamboat for the benefit of the partnership; and that the other two partners well knew of the commencement of the suit by the complainants to procure a decree of forfeiture of the property; and that they directed the claimant to give the release bond in the name and style of the partnership as obligors; and that the copartners obtained possession of the cargo and sold the same, and received the proceeds to their own use as copartners. (2) That large sums of money, to wit: $21,963.72, paid for storage, internal revenue, and the charges of the treasury agent, were paid with the funds of the partnership with full knowledge of all the said copartners, as well as counsel fees and the expenses of defending the suit to condemn the property. (3) That the complainants at the time the release bond was executed had no knowledge that these parties were partners, and that neither the partnership nor the partner last named in the bill of complaint have sufficient goods or estate to pay the amount of the decree against the claimant and his sureties.

Service was made, and the respondent executors appeared and demurred to the bill of complaint, and on the same day the other respondent appeared, and he also filed a demurrer to the bill. Continuance followed, and at the next session of the court in the same term the circuit court entered a decree sustaining the demurrers and dismissing the bill of complaint. Prompt appeal was taken by the complainants in open court, and they now assign for error that the circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrers and in dismissing the bill of complaint.

Equitable relief is claimed by the complainants chiefly upon three grounds, each of which is attempted to be supported upon the theory that they have suffered a loss and that they have not an adequate and complete remedy at law. Irrespective of the course pursued by counsel in the argument of the cause, the respective grounds of claim will be examined by the court in the following order, as the one best calculated to exhibit the controversy in its true light.

Throughout it may be considered that the complainants admit that they have no remedy at law, but they contend that they are entitled to equitable relief for at least three reasons: (1) Because the property seized as forfeited to the United States has been legally condemned, and that the principal and sureties in the stipulation for value given for the release of the same at the commencement of the proceedings in the admiralty court have become insolvent and unable to pay the amount of the decree recovered by the complainants in the admiralty court. (2) Because the other two partners named in the bill of complaint were each equally interested with the claimant in the property seized and condemned, of which the complainants had no knowledge; and that inasmuch as the property when released went into the possession of the partnership and was sold for the benefit of all the partners, the claim of the complainants is that they are entitled to equitable relief. (3) Because the estate of the deceased partner is liable for the whole decree; and inasmuch as his estate is insufficient to pay all his debts the United States are entitled to maintain the bill of complaint to secure their preference.

Due seizure of the property was made and due proceedings were instituted in the Admiralty Court for its condemnation, and the allegations of the bill of complaint show that the person named was duly admitted to appear as claimant, and that the Admiralty Court on his motion passed the order that the property should be released upon his giving a bond to the complainants in the sum of $350,000, with good and solvent security, which is the usual order given in such cases.

Proceedings of the kind are usually adopted in all seizures under the revenue and navigation laws, as is well known to every practitioner in such cases. 1 Stat. at L., 696, sec. 89; R. S., 938. Bond or stipulation with sureties for the discharge of the property seized is allowed in all revenue cases, except for forfeiture, and the better opinion is that even in seizures for forfeiture the bond may be executed in the same manner by the claimant. R. S., secs. 940, 941.

Pursuant to the known and well recognized practice, the court allowed the claimant to give the bond with sureties approved by the court, and thereupon directed the marshal to surrender the property to the principal in the bond. Beyond all doubt, therefore, the claimant acquired the possession of the property lawfully and in pursuance of the order of the Admiralty Court.

Hearing was subsequently had; and the Admiralty Court entered a decree in the case dismissing the libel, and ordered that the property, consisting of the cargo of the steamboat, be restored to the claimant. Due appeal to the circuit court was entered by the libelants; and the record shows that the circuit court reversed the decree of the district court, and adjudged and decreed that the steamboat and her cargo be condemned as forfeited to the United States. No appeal was ever taken from that decree, and the allegations of the bill of complaint also show that the circuit court entered a decree against the claimant and his sureties in the release bond or stipulation for value in the sum of $204,982.28, with interest and costs of suit.

Attempt is not made to call in question the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court, nor of the circuit court in the exercise of its appellate power in the case. Nothing can be better settled, said Judge Story, than the proposition that the admiralty may take a fidejussory caution or stipulation in cases in rem, and that they may in a summary manner render judgment and award execution to the prevailing party. Jurisdiction to that effect is vested in the district court, and for the purposes of appeal is also possessed by the circuit courts, both courts in such cases being fully authorized to adopt the process and modes of process belonging to the admiralty, and the district courts have an undoubted right to deliver the property on bail and to enforce conformity to the terms of the bailment. Authority to take such security is undoubted, and whether it be by a sealed instrument or by a stipulation in the nature of a recognizance, cannot affect the jurisdiction of the court. Having jurisdiction of the principal cause, the court must possess the power over all its incidents, and may by monition, attachment or execution enforce its decree against all who become parties to the proceedings. Brig Alligator, 1 Gall., 145; Nelson v. U. S., Pet. (C. C.), 235.

See 9 Otto.

Bonds given in such cases, says Dunlap, are to all intents and purposes stipulations in the admiralty, and must be governed by the same rules. Original cognizance in such cases is exclusive in the district courts; but the circuit courts, in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction, possess the same power to the extent necessary in re-examining the orders and decrees of the subordinate court. Dunlap, Prac., 174; The Peggy, 4 C. Rob., 305; The Ann Caroline, 2 Wall., 538 [69 U. S., XVII., 333].

Such security was taken for the cargo seized in the district court, and no review of that order was asked in the circuit court. Where an appeal is taken from the decree of the district court, the res if not released, or the bond or stipulation for value, follow the cause into the circuit court, where the fruits of the property if not released, or the bond or stipulation for value, may be obtained in the same manner as in the court of original jurisdiction, the bond or stipulation being, in fact, nothing more than a security taken to enforce the final decree. McLellan v. U. S., 1 Gall., 227.

It matters not, says the same magistrate, whether the security in such a cause be a bond, recognizance, or stipulation, as the court has an inherent right to take it and to proceed to render judgment or decree thereon according to the course of the admiralty, unless where some statute has prescribed a different rule. The Octavia, 1 Mas., 150; The Wanata, supra.

Securities of the kind are taken for the property seized for the value of the same when delivered to the claimant, and the stipulation will not be reduced if the property when sold brings less than the appraised value, nor can the court award any damages against the sureties beyond the amount of the stipulation, even if the amount of the stipulation is less than the decree. The Hope, 1 W. Rob., 155.

Authorities may be found which deny the power even of the Admiralty Court to recall the property for any purpose after the stipulation for value has been given and the property has been delivered to the claimants. The Wild Kangaroo, Bro. & L., 671 [see, Lush., 553]; Kalamazoo, 9 Eng. L. & E., 557; S. C., 15 Jur., 885; The Temiscouata, 2 Spinks, 211; The White Squall, 4 Blatchf., 103; The Thales, 10 Blatchf., 203.

Other decided cases, perhaps for better reason, hold that in case of misrepresentation or fraud, or in case the order of release was improvidently given without any appraisal or any proper knowledge of the real value of the property, it may be recalled before judgment where the ends of justice require the matter to be reconsidered. The Hero, Bro. & L., 447; The Union, 4 Blatchf., 90; The Duchesse, Swab., 264; The Flora, L. R., 1 Adm. & Eccl., 45; The Virgo, 13 Blatchf., 255.

Suppose the power, in case of fraud, misrepresentation, or manifest error in the court, exists in the court of original jurisdiction, or even in the circuit court, inasmuch as the stipulation for value follows the appeal into that court, still it is clear that no other court possesses any such jurisdiction nor any power to re-examine the discretionary ruling of the admiralty courts in that regard. Smart v. Wolfe, 3 T. R., 340; Cambden v. Home, 4 T. R., 382; The Wanata [supra]; Houseman v. The North Carolina, 15 Pet., 40.

Even if the rule were otherwise, it would not avail the complainants in this case, as they never made any application either to the district court or to the circuit court to recall the property, nor is it now pretended that the amount of the stipulation is not fully equal to the value of the cargo released, nor that the sureties were not perfectly solvent at the time the bond was executed. Nothing of the kind is alleged, and of course nothing of the kind is admitted by the demurrer.

Suitors in cases of seizures on waters navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burthen are saved the right of a common law remedy where the common law is competent to give it. 1 Stat. at L., 77.

Given as the bond was on the release of the cargo of cotton in a suit in rem for its condemnation, it became the substitute for the property; and the remedy of the libelants, in case they prevailed in the suit in rem for condemnation, was transferred from the property to the bond or stipulation accepted by the court as the substitute for the property seized. Common law remedies in cases of seizure for forfeiture or to enforce a lien are not competent to effect the object for which the suit is instituted and, consequently, the jurisdiction conferred upon the district courts, so far as respects that mode of proceeding, is exclusive. Parties in such cases may proceed in rem in the admiralty; and if they elect to pursue their remedy in that mode, they cannot proceed in any other forum, as the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts is exclusive in that mode of proceeding, subject of course, to appeal to the circuit court. Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall., 185 [78 U. S., XX., 74]; Steamboat Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall., 522 [83 U. S., XXI., 369]; The Belfast, 7 Wall., 624 [74 U. S., XIX., 266].

Proceedings in rem are exclusively cognizable in the admiralty, and the question whether a case is made for the recall of property released under bond or stipulation in such a case must, beyond all doubt, be determined by the courts empowered to hear and determine the matter in controversy in the pending suit. Nor is there anything unusual in the fact that other parties beside the claimant were interested in the property seized at the time the property was released and the bond for value taken in its place. Matter of Stover, 1 Curt., 201; The Adeline, 9 Cranch, 244.

Whenever a seizure takes place, it is the right of the owner to appear and file his claim, if he complies with the preliminary order of the court as to costs; but the claim is often made by the master of the vessel or the managing owner, and it may be made by an agent or the consignee, and in the case of a foreign ship it may be filed by the consul of the Nation to which the ship belongs. Experience has approved the practice, as the security is rendered sufficient by the sureties; nor is the danger of loss from their insolvency much if any greater than what arises where the property is retained, from liability to decay or to destruction by fire or flood. Admiralty courts everywhere favor the practice, and the same is sanctioned to a very large extent by the Acts of Congress. 9 Stat. at L., 181; R. S., sec. 941.

2. Many of the preceding observations made to prove that the first ground of claim set up by the complainants cannot be sustained are equally applicable to the second, for the same purpose; but there is another answer to the second, which is even more conclusive than anything before remarked to show that the decree of the circuit court is correct.

Although the claimant is the sole principal in the bond, yet the allegations in the bill of complaint are that the other two partners were equally interested in the property, and that the claimant procured the release of the property, for the benefit of the copartnership; and the complainants allege that the transaction should be viewed in all respects as if all the members of the firm had been principals in the bond, inasmuch as the property when released went into the possession of the firm and was sold for the benefit of all the partners. Concede what is not admitted, that evidence to prove that theory may be admissible, it is, nevertheless, true that the theory must be examined in view of the established fact that the circuit court entered a final decree on the bond against the principal and sureties for the whole value of the cargo which was seized and condemned, and the bill of complaint alleges that the decree of the circuit court is in full force and unreversed.

None of the authorities afford any countenance whatever to the theory that the property released can be recalled for any purpose after the property has been condemned and the libelants have proceeded to final judgment against the principal and sureties in the bond or stipulation for the release of the property seized. Difficulties of the kind, it would seem, must be insuperable; but if they could be overcome, there is still another, which of itself is entirely sufficient to show that the second ground of claim is no better than the first.

Judgment has already been rendered against the claimant; and even admitting that the other two partners may be treated as if they were joint principals in the bond given for the value of the property released, it is quite clear that the judgment against the claimant would be a bar to an action against the other partners upon the bond. Even without satisfaction, a judgment against one of two or more joint contractors is a bar to an action against the others, within the principle of the maxim transit in rem judicatam, the cause of action being changed into matter of record. King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W., 494.

Judgment in such a case is a bar to a subsequent action against the other joint contractors, because the contract being joint and not several, there can be but one recovery. Consequently, the plaintiff, if he proceeds against one only of the joint contractors, loses his security against the others, the rule being that by the recovery of the judgment, though against one only, the contract is merged and a general security substituted for the debt. Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U.

S., 347 [XXIV., 596]; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall., 231 [73 U. S., XVIII., 783]. From which it follows, if the theory of the complainants is correct that the bond is to be regarded as the joint bond of the three partners, that they are without remedy against the other two, as they have proceeded to final judgment against the claimant.

Neither of the other partners signed the bond but the complainants allege that the firm directed the claimant to give the bond for and in the name and style of their said partnership as obligors; to which it may be answered that if the firm gave such directions the claimant did not follow them, as the bond set forth in the record as an exhibit to the bill of complaint shows that it is the individual bond of the alleged senior partner. Nor do the complainants pretend that the other partners ever signed the instrument, but they contend that the demurrer admits everything which they have alleged.

Matters of fact well pleaded are admitted by a demurrer, but it is equally well settled that mere conclusions of law are not admitted by such a proceeding. Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall., 430 [88 U. S., XXII., 673]; Ford v. Peering, 1 Ves., Jr., 72; Lea v. Robeson, 12 Gray, 280; Redmond v. Dickerson, 1 Stockt., 507; Murray v. Clarendon, L. R., 9 Eq., 17; Nesbitt v. Berridge, 8 L. T. (N. S.), 76; Story, Eq. Pl., 7th ed., sec. 452.

Facts well pleaded are admitted by a demurrer; but it does not admit matters of inference or argument, nor does it admit the alleged construction of an instrument when the instrument itself is set forth in the record, in cases where the construction assumed is repugnant to its language. Authorities to that effect are numerous and decisive; nor can it be admitted that a demurrer can be held to work an admission that parol evidence is admissible to enlarge or contradict a sealed instrument which has become a matter of record in a judicial proceeding. Beckham v. Drake, 9 Mees. & W., 79; Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B., 315; McArdle v. Iodine Co., 15 Irish C. L., 146; Sprigg v. Bk., 14 Pet., 201.

Mere legal conclusions are never admitted by a demurrer; now would it benefit the complainants even if it could be held otherwise, as it must be conceded that the theory of the bill of complaint is that the liability of the three partners is a joint liability, and it is equally well settled that a judgment against one in such a case is a bar to a subsequent action against either of the others, as appears from the authorities already cited, to which many more may be added. Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns., 459; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass., 148; Cowley v. Patch, 120 Mass., 137; Smith v. Black, 9 Serg. & R., 142; Beltzhoover v. Com., 1 Watts, 126.

Where the contract is joint and several the rule is different, to the extent that the promisee or obligee may elect to sue the promisors or obligors jointly or severally; but even in that case the rule is subject to the limitation that if the plaintiff obtains a joint judgment he cannot afterwards sue the parties separately, for the reason that the contract or bond is merged in the judgment; nor can he maintain a joint action after he has recovered judgment against one of the parties, as the prior judgment is a waiver of his right to pursue a joint remedy. Sessions v. Johnson [supra].

See 9 OTTO.

Concede that, and still the complainants aver that they did not know, when they obtained their decree against the claimant and his sureties, that the property belonged to the partnership, or that the bond for value was in fact given by the claimant pursuant to the direction of the other partners.

Averments in a bill of complaint that the parties to a judicial proceeding understood that the legal effect would be different from what it really is, amounts merely to an averment of a mistake of law against which there can be no relief in a court of equity. Hunt v. Rousmaniere, 1 Pet., 1.

Courts of equity may compel parties to execute their agreements, but they have no power to make agreements or to alter those which have been understandingly made; and the same rule applies to judgments duly and regularly rendered and in full force. 1 Story, Eq., 9th ed., sec. 121; Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East, 469.

Fraud is not imputed, nor is it charged that there was any mistake or misrepresentation. Where there is neither accident nor mistake, misrepresentation nor fraud, there is no jurisdiction in equity to afford relief to a party who has lost his remedy at law through mere ignorance of a fact, the knowledge of which might have been obtained by due diligence and inquiry or by a bill of discovery. Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch., 566; Anderson v. Levan, 1 Watts & S., 334.

Courts of equity will not grant relief merely upon the ground of accident where the accident has arisen without fault of the other party, if it appears that it might have been avoided by inquiry or due diligence. 1 Story, Eq., 9th ed., sec. 105.

Ignorance of the facts is often a material allegation, but it is never sufficient to constitute a ground of relief, if it appears that the requisite knowledge might have been obtained by reasonable diligence. Id., sec. 146.

Relief in equity will not be granted merely because a security in an admiralty suit becomes ineffectual, if it appears that it became so without fraud, misrepresentation, or accident, which might have been prevented by due diligence. Hunt v. Rousmanier, 2 Mas., 366; Sedam v. Williams, 4 McLean, 51.

Having come to the conclusion that the alleged claim of the United States is not well founded, the question of priority becomes wholly immaterial.

Decree affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Bradley.

Cited—87 N. Y., 256; 66 How. Pr., 369; 5 N.W. Rep. 63.

ARISTIDES DOGETT, RECEIVER, ETC.,
Appt.,
v.

THE FLORIDA RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 72-78.)

Florida railroad—tax on bonds.

1. In Florida, where a railroad was sold and the proceeds applied to the extinguishment of the bonds issued by the Company, the purchaser was not bound thereafter to pay to the Receiver of the Internal Improvement Fund of Florida, the one half of one per cent., semi-annually, upon the entire amount of the bonds issued by the Company, but only to make such payment upon the amount of such bonds as were still outstanding, pursuant to the Act of Florida to provide for internal improvements in such State, passed Jan. 6, 1855.

2. Where the receiver brought an action to compel such payment, owners of the bonds should not be joined as complainants in the action.

[No. 124.]

Argued Jan. 14, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida. The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips, W. A. Maury, J. B. C. Drew, T. G. Strong and Matt. H. Carpenter, for appellant.

Mr. W. M. Merrick, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a case in equity. The bill was filed by Doggett, as a receiver appointed in another case in the same circuit court whence this case came, and by Vose and Wagner, as co-complainants with him. The defendant demurred upon the grounds, among others, that the bill does not make a case that entitles the complainants to any relief, and that there is a fatal misjoinder of parties with respect to Vose and Wagner. The circuit court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill. Doggett thereupon removed the case to this court by appeal. With respect to the merits, the case presents but a single question; that is, whether the appellee is bound to pay Doggett, as the Receiver of the Internal Improvement Fund of Florida, the one half of one per cent., semi-annually, upon the entire amount of the bonds issued by the Company, or only to make such payment upon the amount of such bonds as are still outstanding. The bonds were issued pursuant to an Act of the Legislature of Florida, entitled "An Act to Provide for and Encourage a Liberal System of Internal Improvements in this State," passed January 6, 1855. The road was sold, and the proceeds applied, as far as they would go, to the extinguishment of the bonds. The whole number issued was 1518, of $1,000 each. Twelve hundred and ninety have been retired. Two hundred and twenty-eight are still unredeemed and outstanding.

The determination of the question before us depends upon the construction and effect of the 2d, 3d and 12th sections of the Act before mentioned.

The 2d section, after making the Governor and other designated officers of the State, Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund, proceeds to define their powers and duties. They are empowered "To receive and demand semi-annually the sum of one half of one per cent. (after each separate railroad is completed) on the entire amount of the bonds issued by said Railroad Company, and invest the same in the stocks of the United States or state securities, or in the bonds herein provided to be issued by said Company."

The 3d section provides that the bonds shall contain "A certificate on the part of the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund that said bonds are issued agreeably to the provisions of this Act, and that the Internal Improvement Fund, for which they are trustees, is pledged to pay the interest as it may become due on said bonds." Provision is then made for the seizure and sale of the road in default of payment as required. The section thus concludes: "The proceeds arising from such sale shall be applied by said trustees to the purchase and canceling of the outstanding bonds issued by said defaulting Company, or incorporated with the sinking fund: Provided, that in making such sale it shall be conditioned that the purchasers shall be bound to continue the payment of one half of one per cent. semi-annually to the sinking fund until all the outstanding bonds are discharged, under the penalty of an annulment of the contract of purchase and forfeiture of the purchase money paid in."

Under these provisions the road was sold and the proceeds applied, as before stated.

The 12th section is as follows:

"Every railroad company accepting the provisions of this Act shall, after the completion of the road, pay to the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund at least one half of one per cent. on the amount of indebtedness on bond account, every six months, as a sinking fund, to be invested by them in the class of securities named in section 2, or to be applied to the purchase of the outstanding bonds of the Company; but it shall be distinctly understood that the purchase of said bonds shall not relieve the Company from paying the interest on the same, they being held by the trustees as an investment on account of the sinking fund."

By the proviso in the 3d section it is declared that after a sale the payment of the semi-annual half per cent. shall continue "until all the outstanding bonds are discharged." It is clear that it was to continue no longer. Before the sale, if the trustees should purchase the bonds as an investment for the sinking fund the Company was to continue to pay the interest upon them. This was right and reasonable. After the sale and the discharge of a part of the bonds by the proceeds of the sale, as occurred here, there is no provision for the payment of any interest. It would be wrong as to the bonds discharged by means derived from the Company, and absurd as to all other bonds, the Company being deprived of all means of payment by the loss of their road. Hence, after the sale, the exaction is only that the semi-annual half per cent. shall be paid, and that by the purchasers of the road; and it is expressly declared by the 12th section that it shall be "on the amount of indebtedness on bond account." This is the requirement, and it goes no further. Upon what ground, then, can the purchasers be required to pay anything more? There is no warrant for such a demand in the letter, meaning or reason of the statute. The primary requirement is that the payment shall be made upon all the bonds issued, and to cease when they are all discharged. The extent of the burden assumed by the State was graduated as to each road by the total amount of its bonds. Why should not the burden of the Company be diminished in the same ratio with the burden of the State? The former is to cease wholly when all the bonds are discharged. Why should it not be lessened in the exact proportion that the amount of the outstanding bonds is reduced? The contrary, we think, cannot be supported. As well might a creditor, where payments at different times have been made by the debtor, demand interest upon the whole amount of the original debt until the last dollar is paid. This, in effect, is the case made by the bill. But there is a short and conclusive answer to the claim. It is, that the 12th section constituted a contract with the purchasers of the road. That contract was that they should pay "on the amount of indebtedness on bond account." This was made a condition of the sale; and they so agreed, and they agreed to nothing else. This contract is binding upon both parties, and cannot be changed without their mutual consent. The language of the Act is too clear to admit of doubt. In a statute "where the intent is plain, nothing is left to construction." U. S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 386.

There is no complaint that payment upon the bonds outstanding has not been regularly made.

We have no doubt as to the merits of the bill. We think the objection of misjoinder was also well taken. The case was purely ancillary in its character. The receiver represented the court which appointed him and the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund. Vose and Wagner claimed to own a part of the outstanding bonds. But that gave them no standing place in the litigation. As well might every other holder of any of the bonds, however small the amount, or how numerous such holders might be, have been made co-complainants with the receiver, as Vose and Wagner. The presence of the latter as such parties was unwarranted, and if permitted, and the suit had gone on, would have incumbered the record unnecessarily and have led to confusion.

The demurrer was properly sustained, and the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Cited—99 U. S., 199.

SOLOMON L. HOGE, COMPTROLLER-GENERAL of the STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Appt.,

v.

THE RICHMOND AND DANVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 348-355.)

Exemption from taxation—property of corporation—construction of law—Atlanta and Richmond Railway.

1. The power of the Legislature of a State to exempt particular parcels of property of individuals or of corporations from taxation, not merely during the period of its own existence, but so as to be beyond the control of the taxing power of succeeding Legislatures, has been asserted in several cases by this court.

2. But this power is accompanied with the qualification, that the intention of the Legislature to grant the immunity must be clear, beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. It cannot be inferred, from uncertain phrases or ambiguous terms. If a doubt arise as to the intent of the Legislature, it must be solved in favor of the State.

4. The Atlanta and Richmond Air Line Ry. Co. is not entitled to the exemption from taxation enjoyed by the Greenville and Columbia R. R. Co.

[No. 134.]

Argued Jan. 17, 20, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

See 9 OTTO,

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina.

The case, which arose in the court below, is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Le Roy F. Youmans, Atty-Gen. of S. C., D. H. Chamberlain and Wm. Stone, for appellant:

All grants of special powers or exemptions to individuals or corporations, are construed strictly as against the grantees and in favor of the State.

Jackson v. Lamphire, 3 Pet., 289; Beatty v. Knowler, 4 Pet., 168; Bk. v. Billings, 4 Pet., 514; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet., 544.

And more especially where the State's right of taxation is concerned, implication is never admitted to create or continue an exemption from taxation.

Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall., 458 (82 U. S., XXI., 205).

Such exceptions are uniformly and emphatically restricted to clear and unambiguous grants in express words.

R. R. Co. v. Supervisors, 93 U. S., 597 (XXIII., 815).

Whatever exemption the Air Line R. R. Co. may have had does not inure to the Atlanta and Richmond Air Line R. Co.

Morgan v. La., 93 U. S., 217 (XXIII., 860).

Messrs. Skipwith Wilmer, Wm. E. Earle and Jas Lowndes, for appellee:

The case of Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall., 247 (83 U. S., XXI., 326) sustains a claim for exemption, which was granted in the same manner and in almost the same terms.

When the Air Line R. R. Co. in South Carolina was consolidated to form the Atlanta and Richmond Air Line R. Co., it carried to the consolidated Company the exemption which attached to the property in South Carolina.

This is established by the decision of this court in Tomlinson v. Branch, 15 Wall., 460 (82 U. S., XXI., 189).

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of Virginia, is the owner of 22,000 shares of the capital stock of the Atlanta and Richmond Air Line Railway Company, a corporation created under the laws of South Carolina and Georgia, and brings the present suit to enjoin the collection of taxes assessed upon its road and other real property in that State, alleging that they are exempt from taxation. Its claim to exemption arises in this wise: A company known as the Air Line Railroad Company in South Carolina was incorporated in 1856 by the Legislature of that State and authorized to construct a railroad between certain designated points, and to equip, use and enjoy the same, "With all the rights, privileges and immunities granted to the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company, under the Act incorporating the same and the several Acts amendatory thereof," so far as they were applicable. The company was also empowered to unite with any other railroad company and to consolidate their management, and by an amendment to its charter, to adopt any other corporate name which it should deem best. In pursuance of this authority, it united in 1870 with a company incorporated under the laws of Georgia, known as the Georgia Air Line Railroad Company, and took the name of the Atlanta & Richmond Air Line Company.

The Greenville & Columbia Railroad Company was incorporated in December, 1845, and, by a provision in its charter, the stock of the Company and the real estate it might purchase, connected with or subservient to its works, were exempted from taxation for the period of thirty-six years. At the time of its incorporation there was a law of the State in force, enacted in 1841, establishing the principles on which charters of incorporation were thereafter to be granted, the 41st section of which provides "That it shall become part of the charter of every corporation which shall, at the present or any succeeding session of the General Assembly, receive a grant of a charter, or any renewal, amendment or modification thereof (unless the Act granting such charter, renewal, amendment or modification shall, in express terms, except it), that every charter of incorporation granted, renewed or modified as aforesaid shall at all times remain subject to amendment, alteration or repeal by the legislative authority."

The Act incorporating the Greenville & Columbia Railroad Company excepted its charter, in express terms, from the operation of the Act of 1841; but the Act incorporating the Air Line Railroad Company in South Carolina made no such exception with respect to its charter. It is contended, however, that by the provision conferring the same rights, privileges and immunities which the Greenville & Columbia Railroad Company possessed, the Air Line Company not only acquired immunity from taxation for the same period, but that such immunity was placed beyond legislative repeal. The Constitution of the State adopted in 1868, having required that the property of corporations then existing or thereafter created should be subject to taxation, except in certain cases, not applying here, subsequent legislation, passed in conformity with this requirement, imposed a tax upon the property of railroad companies, including that of the Atlanta & Richmond Air Line Railway Company, notwithstanding the exemption mentioned. The present suit was thereupon brought to enjoin its enforcement. The court below held that the property of the Company was exempt from taxation for the period of thirty-six years from the date of its charter, and enjoined the officers of the State from collecting the tax assessed. From its decree the present appeal is taken.

By the Law of 1841 every charter of a corporation in South Carolina subsequently granted, amended or modified, was subject to repeal, amendment or modification by the Legislature; unless specially excepted from such legislative control in the Act granting the charter, amendment or modification. Such is evidently the meaning of the 41st section of that law, though the intention is inaptly expressed. This construction is somewhat different from that placed upon it in Tomlinson v. Jessup, reported in the 15th Wallace, 459 [82 U. S., XXI., 206], and gives the Legislature a more extended control. But it is the construction to which a more careful examination of the language has led us. By it the Legislature said, that subsequent charters should be subject to repeal or amendment, unless they were, in express terms, excepted from its control in the Acts granting them; and that existing charters, if subsequently amended or modified, should stand in the same position. Its provisions constituted the condition upon which every charter was afterwards granted, amended or modified. They formed as much a part of the new or amended charter as if they had been originally embraced in it. They did not of course operate as a limitation upon the power of succeeding Legislatures so as to control any repugnant legislation, but so long as they remained unrepealed, subsequent legislation, not repugnant in its terms, was to be construed and enforced in accordance with them. R. R. Co. v. Me., 96 U. S., 499 [XXIV., 836].

As the Act incorporating the Air Line Company in South Carolina in 1856 contained no clause excepting its charter from the provisions of the Law of 1841, they must be held applicable to it. To include in that charter an exemption from legislative control because such exemption was possessed by the Greenville & Columbia Company would be to thwart the declared will of the Legislature, that such exemption should not exist, unless the Act granting the charter excepted it in express terms from that law. Its charter must, therefore, be read as if it declared that its capital stock and the real property purchased by it and connected with or subservient to its works should be exempt from taxation for the period of thirty-six years, unless the Legislature should in the mean time withdraw the exemption. Its stock and real property were thus exempted for that period from the general tax levied upon property of that kind, unless the Legislature should specifically direct otherwise.

If it be assumed, however, that by the Act incorporating the Air Line Company it acquired not only the immunity from taxation which the Greenville & Columbia Company possessed, but also its original exemption from future legislative control, this exemption ceased when the Company obtained an amendment to its charter in September, 1868, before its consolidation with the Georgia Company. By that amendment the charter of the Company was at once brought under the control of the Legislature by virtue of the Act of 1841, the Act granting the amendment containing no clause excepting the charter from the provisions of that Act.

In whichever way the legislation of the State may be viewed, the same result follows: that the Legislature of South Carolina was not inhibited from subjecting the property of the Company to taxation, to restrain the collection of which this suit is brought.

The power of the Legislature of a State to exempt particular parcels of property of individuals or of corporations from taxation, not merely during the period of its own existence, but so as to be beyond the control of the taxing power of succeeding Legislatures, has been asserted in several cases by this court, although against this doctrine there have been earnest protests by individual judges. But though this power is recognized, it is accompanied with the qualification that the intention of the Legislature to grant the immunity must be clear beyond a reasonable doubt. It cannot be inferred from uncertain phrases or ambiguous terms. The power of taxation is an attribute of sovereignty, and is essential to every independent Government. Stripped of this power, it must perish. Whoever, therefore, claims its surrender must show it in language which will admit of no other reasonable construction. If a doubt arise as to the intent of the Legislature, it must be solved in favor of the State.

It follows that the decree of the court below must be reversed and the cause be remanded, with directions to dismiss the suit; and it is so ordered.

MICHAEL RYAN, Appt.,

v.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 382-389.)

Railroad grant—lands included.

1. Where there was not enough of the alternate odd sections within the primary limits to satisfy a grant to the railroad company, lands within the indemnity limits prescribed in the Act, selected by the company, and a patent issued therefor, cannot be entered under the Homestead Act of 1862.

2. The patent to the railroad company conveys a better title than one under a patent subsequently issued under the Homestead Act.

[No. 983.]

Argued Jan. 27, 28, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. John Currey, Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., E. B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., and E. M. Marble, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellant. Mr. S. W. Sanderson, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

After this case was submitted to the court upon printed arguments by the counsel of the parties, the Attorney-General expressed a wish to be heard in behalf of the United States, and an oral argument was thereupon ordered. The case was argued in that way, fully and ably, by that officer and by the counsel for the appellee, and I am directed now to deliver the opinion of the court.

There is no controversy about the facts.

By the Act of Congress of July 25, 1866, Congress granted certain lands to the California and Oregon Railroad Company. The appellee claims under that grantee, and has succeeded to its rights. At the date of the Act there was pending a claim for the confirmation of a Mexican grant, which embraced within its boundaries the premises in controversy between these parties. The appellant insists that he has a paramount title, not under, but by reason of this claim, as will hereafter appear.

The 2d section of the Act referred to is as follows:

“Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, that there be, and hereby is, granted to the said companies, their successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war and public stores over the line, of said railroad, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile (ten on each side) of said railroad line; and when any of said alternate sections, or parts of sections, shall be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, preempted or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by said companies in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections designated by odd numbers as aforesaid, nearest to and not more than ten miles beyond the limits of the said first named alternate sections,” etc. 14 Stat. at L., 239.

Under this statute, when the road was located and the maps were made, the right of the Company to the odd sections first named became ipso facto fixed and absolute. With respect to the “lieu lands,” as they are called, the right was only a float, and attached to no specific tracts until the selection was actually made in the manner prescribed.

On the 3d of March, 1873, the alleged Mexican grant was declared invalid by this court and finally rejected. On the 30th of October, 1874, it was found there was not enough of the alternate odd sections within the twenty mile limits to satisfy the grant to the Railroad Company. On that day the appellee selected the land in question. Though not within the primary limits, it was within the ten mile indemnity limits prescribed in the Act, and was intended in so far to supply the deficiency within the former. The selection was approved by the local land-officers on the 26th of December, 1874. This approval was confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, and a patent in due form was issued to the appellee on the 17th of March, 1875. At the time of the selection the premises were public land. The Mexican claim had been rejected by this court more than a year and a half before, and the land was not within any exception expressed or implied in the Act. Afterwards, on the 14th of July, 1876, the appellant being in all respects qualified, filed an application in due form to be allowed to enter the land in question under the Homestead Act of 1862. He paid the proper fees and received a duplicate receipt from the register and receiver of the land-office of the district. He filed this bill to restrain the appellee from availing itself of the patent, upon the ground that the land was not subject to selection in lieu of the deficit of odd sections within the twenty mile limits specifically granted by the Act.

After this plain statement of the case, it is difficult to imagine any defect that can exist in the title of the appellee, or any right, legal or equitable, that the appellant can have.

But it is said the case is within the principle established in Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S., 761 [XXIII., 769], and must be controlled by that adjudication. This is the sole objection to the appellee's title, and it is founded in a mistake. The two cases are distinguishable by a broad line of demarcation.

In the former case, the lands covered by the false Mexican claim were situated within the limits of the territory where the right of the Company attached to the odd designated sections granted when the road was located and the requisite maps were made. At that time the claim was in litigation, and sub judice. The court held that under these circumstances the premises were not "public land," within the meaning of the law, and could not become such until the title of the government was vindicated by the defeat of the claim, and that the patent issued to the Railroad Company was, therefore, void.

After the Mexican claim was disposed of and before a new appropriation was made or attempted to be made by the Company, the junior patent was issued to another party, and it was held that he had a valid title. The Mexican claim was finally rejected by this court on the 13th of February, 1865. It was insisted by the Company that the judgment should be held to relate back to the first day of the Term, so as to disembarass the title of the claim as of that date. This was refused. The court said, "To antedate the rejection of a claim so as to render operative a grant which would be otherwise without effect, does not promote the ends of justice, and cannot be sanctioned." It was admitted by clear implication that if the lands had been thus disembarassed at the date of the grant or their withdrawal from sale, the elder patent would have been valid.

Again; speaking of lands embraced in such a claim the court says expressly, "They were regarded as forming a part of our public domain only after the claim covering them had been finally rejected. * * * They then became public in the just meaning of that term, and were subject to the disposing power of Congress."

Here the land was not a part of the alternate odd sections specifically granted. It was not within the limits of that territory. There, there was a deficiency.

It was within the secondary or indemnity territory where that deficiency was to be supplied. The Railroad Company had not and could not have any claim to it until specially selected, as it was, for that purpose. It was taken to help satisfy the grant to the extent that the odd sections originally given failed to meet its requirements. When so selected there was no Mexican or other claim impending over it. It had ceased to be sub judice, and was no longer in litigation. It was as much "public land" as any other part of the national domain. The patent gave the same title to the appellee that a like patent for any other public land would have given to any other party. The Mexican claim when condemned lost its vitality. From that time, as regards the future, it ceased to be a factor to be considered, and was in all respects as if it had never existed. In this state of things the appellee acquired its title, and that title is indefeasible.

Newhall v. Sanger applies only where the adverse claim is undisposed of when the grant would otherwise take effect. It has no application to the future after the claim has ceased to exist.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan concurred in the opinion that the bill should have been dismissed, because Ryan, upon the face of his bill, was not entitled to any relief from a court of equity. The dismissal should have been ordered without any consideration of the merits of the case, about which he expressed no opinion.

Cited—110 U. S., 39; 112 U. S., 731; 7 Sawy., 473; 11 N. W. Rep., 334.

VILLAGE OF EVANSTON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JESSIE GUNN.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 660-668.)

Official record, as evidence—specific objection—duty of village as to its streets—charge to jury.

1. A record, kept by a person employed by the United States Signal Service, is admissible in evidence.

2. Where a party objected to evidence and specified his objection, it must be considered that all others are waived, or that there was no ground upon which others could stand.

3. Where a village has ample authority to keep the streets and walks in a safe condition at all times for passage, the power carries with it the duty of exercising it.

4. Where the instruction given to the jury was full, and strictly accurate and the jury could not have been misled, the judgment will not be reversed, because detached sentences of it, if read alone, need qualification.

[No. 164.]

Submitted Jan. 13, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The defendant in error brought suit and obtained judgment in the court below, for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. O. Ide and C. F. Peck, for plaintiff in error:

Under certain Acts of Congress, law-books may be evidence of the facts they state, but only as to the matters designated by those Acts, and they must be identified as duly kept.

U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. (C. C.), 478; U. S. v. Sharp, Pet. (C. C.), 118.

So, letters of administration upon the estate of a deceased person, issued by the proper probate court, do not afford legal evidence of the death of such person.

Mut. Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S., 238 (XXIII., 314).

Neither is a certificate of naturalization evidence of the residence, age or good character of the applicant. Nor is the certificate of steamboat inspectors, under the Act of Congress of 1852, evidence of the facts therein recited, when drawn in question by a stranger, although the officer was required by law to make a return of such facts.

See, cases cited in 91 U. S., 245 (XXIII., 317).

In Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 94 U. S., 593 (XXIV., 294), this court held, that "An entry in the minute book of a Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which the deceased assured was a member, made prior to the issue of the policy, and showing his age as recorded by the Secretary of the Lodge in the usual manner of keeping its records, is not admissible as evidence of such age. It is merely hearsay."

NOTE.—The common law liability to repair highways. See note to City of Providence v. Clapp, 58 U. S., XV., 72.

Liability to repair highways in U. S.; safety and convenience a mixed question of law and fact. See note to Fitch v. Creighton, 65 U. S., XVI., 596.

See, also, Chaffee & Co. v. U. S., 18 Wall., 516 (85 U. S., XXI., 908).

Messrs. Wirt Dexter and Stephen Sibley, for defendant in error:

A record is defined as "A written memorial made by a public officer authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said or done."

Bouv. L. Dic., tit. Record; Olivot's Champagne, 3 Wall., 139 (70 U. S., XVIII., 119); Whitcher v. McLaughlin, 115 Mass., 168; R. R. Co. v. Morgan, 69 Ill., 492; R. S. U. S., secs. 221, 222.

Facts of universal notoriety need not be proved. Courts will take notice of whatever is generally known within the limits of their jurisdiction.

Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S., 42 (XXIII., 201); 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 6.

This court has judicial knowledge of the extended system of the Signal Service. These observations, made with every appliance and test of accuracy which liberal appropriations can afford, are made the basis of scientific observation and study.

Such documents are entitled to an extraordinary degree of confidence, and it is not necessary that they should be confirmed and sanctioned by the ordinary tests of truth.

1 Stark. Ev., 195; 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 483.

There are many familiar illustrations of the character of such evidence. Thus, parish registers, Lewis v. Marshall, 5 Pet., 472; prison registers, Salte v. Thomas, 3 Bos. & P., 188; the register of vessels in the custom-house, U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall., 415; the record of the Land-Office, Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet., 332; custom-house registers, Tomkins v. Atty-Gen., 1 Dow., 404; and registers of voters, Reed v. Lamb, 6 Hurl. & N., 75, have all been held admissible as evidence of the facts which they record.

In Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet., 331, the entries in the record of a land-office were admitted.

In Merriam v. Mitchell, 13 Me., 439, the record kept at a local postoffice, of mails received and sent, was admitted in evidence.

In Gurney v. Howe, 9 Gray, 404, a record kept, of registered letters received at a postoffice, was held admissible.

In De Armond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich., 231, a record of the weather kept at the Insane Asylum was received.

So in the Catharina Maria, L. R., 1 Adm. & Eccl., 53, in a case of collision, the books containing the entries made by the coast-guard, and sent to the coast guard office, to prove the state of the wind and weather.

In Sisson v. R. R. Co., 14 Mich., 497, for the purpose of showing the state of the market at a given time, the market reports in the newspapers of the date in question.

Lush v. Druse, 4 Wend., 317; and Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall., 145 (70 U. S., XVIII., 121.)

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The admission in evidence of a record kept by a person employed by the United States Signal Service at Chicago was objected to at the See 9 OTTO.

trial, not because it had not been properly made, identified and proved, but for the alleged reason that "There was no law authorizing such records to be used, and because it was not competent testimony." The defendants having thus specified their objection, it must be considered that all others were waived, or that there was no ground upon which others could stand. Turnpike Co. v. Myers, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.), 12; R. R. Co. v. Morgan, 69 Ill., 492. We have then only to consider the objections that were made, the only ones that appear in the bill of exceptions, and they present the question whether the record, conceding it to be properly proved, was competent evidence. It may be admitted there is no statute expressly authorizing the admission of such a record, as proof, of the facts stated in it, but many records are properly admitted without the aid of any statute. The inquiry to be made is, what is the character of the instrument? The record admitted in this case was not a private entry or memorandum. It had been kept by a person whose public duty it was to record truly the facts stated in it. Sections 221 and 222 of the Revised Statutes require meteorological observations to be taken at the military stations in the interior of the Continent and at other points in the States and Territories, for giving notice of the approach and force of storms. The Secretary of War is also required to provide, in the system of observations and reports in charge of the chief signal officer of the army, for such stations, reports and signals as may be found necessary for the benefit of agriculture and commercial interests. Under these Acts a system has been established and records are kept at the stations designated, of which Chicago is one. Extreme accuracy in all such observations and in recording them is demanded by the rules of the Signal Service, and it is indispensable, in order that they may answer the purposes for which they are required. They are, as we have seen, of a public character, kept for public purposes, and so immediately before the eyes of the community that inaccuracies, if they should exist, could hardly escape exposure. They come, therefore, within the rule which admits in evidence "Official registers or records kept by persons in public office in which they are required, either by statute or by the nature of their office, to write down particular transactions occurring in the course of their public duties or under their personal observation." Taylor, Ev., sec. 1429; 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 483. To entitle them to admission it is not necessary that a statute requires them to be kept. It is sufficient that they are kept in the discharge of a public duty. 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 496. Nor need they be kept by a public officer himself, if the entries are made under his direction by a person authorized by him. Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet., 332. It is hardly necessary to refer to judicial decisions illustrating the rule. They are numerous. A few may be mentioned. De Armond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich., 231; Gurney v. Howe, 9 Gray, 404; The Catharina Maria, L. R. 1 Adm. & Eccl., 53; Olivot's Champagne, 3 Wall., 114 [70 U. S., XVIII., 116]. We think, therefore, that there was no error in admitting the records kept by the person employed for the purpose by the United States Signal Service.

The exceptions to the charge, though numerous, in our opinion point to no error. Without going through in detail the statute under which the village was organized and the powers conferred upon it, it is enough to say that it had ample authority to keep the streets and walks in a safe condition at all times for passage. And the power carried with it the duty of exercising it. Nothing could have been a more palpable violation of that duty than permitting the continuance of such a trap as that into which the plaintiff below fell. And this duty was not suspended during the changes from a township to a village organization. The identity of the Corporation was not destroyed by the change, and its obligations in regard to the streets, avenues, sidewalks, drains, etc., continued in full force. The fact that the Board of Trustees of the Village were not authorized to make their annual appropriation for the year in which the plaintiff's injury occurred, if it was a fact, and that they, as well as every department and officer of the Corporation, were prohibited by law from adding to the corporate expenditures in any one year anything above the amount provided for in the annual appropriation bill for that year, is quite immaterial. The power to borrow money sufficient to provide for making any improvements, the necessity for which was caused by any casualty or accident happening after the annual appropriation, was expressly given. Besides, the Village succeeded to all the property and funds of the township, as well as to its liabilities. It was organized in October, 1872, and the accident to the plaintiff occurred on the 22d of April, 1873, six months afterwards.

We see no error in the instruction given to the jury respecting contributory negligence of the plaintiff. It was full, all the case demanded, and strictly accurate. Sentences may, it is true, be extracted from the charge, which if read apart from their connection, need qualification. But the qualifications were given in the context, and the jury could not possibly have been misled. Upon the whole, we think the case was submitted in a manner of which there is no just cause of complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cited—13 N. W. Rep., 770; 15 N. W. Rep., 39.

WILLIAM G. PERRIS, for Himself and as Admr. of WILLIAM PERRIS, Deceased, ET AL., Appts.,

v.

ERNEST HEXAMER.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 674-676.)

Copyright of a map.

1. A copyright gives the author or the publisher the exclusive right of multiplying copies of what he has written or printed. To infringe this right, a substantial copy must be produced.

2. A copyright of a map does not give the publisher an exclusive right to the use upon other maps of the particular signs and key which he saw fit to adopt for the purposes of his delineations.

[No. 93.]

Argued Dec. 17, 18, 1878. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The appellants were the complainants below, where the case arose.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Van Santvoord, Francis Forbes, George Gifford and J. J. Coombs, for appellants.

Mr. Joshua Pusey, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainants are the owners of a copy-right of a series of maps of the City of New York, prepared for the use of those engaged in the business of fire insurance, the title of which is as follows: "Maps of the City of New York, surveyed under the direction of insurance companies of said city, by William Perris, civil engineer and surveyor, 1852. Volume 1, comprising the 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th wards. The maps exhibit each lot and building, and the classes as shown by the different coloring and characters set forth in the reference." The maps were made after a careful survey and examination of the lots and buildings in the enumerated wards of the city, and were so marked with arbitrary coloring and signs, explained by a reference or key, that an insurer could see at a glance what were the general characteristics of the different buildings within the territory delineated, and many other details of construction and occupancy necessary for his information when taking risks. They are useful contrivances for the dispatch of business, but of no value whatever except in connection with the identical property they purport to describe.

The defendant made the necessary examination and survey, and published a similar series of maps for Philadelphia. At first he used substantially the same system of coloring and signs and, consequently, substantially the same key that had been adopted by the complainants, but afterwards he changed his signs somewhat, and, of course, changed his key.

The question we are to consider is, whether the publication of the defendant infringes the copyright of the complainants, and we think it does not. A copyright gives the author or the publisher the exclusive right of multiplying copies of what he has written or printed. It follows that to infringe this right a substantial copy must be produced. It needs no argument to show that the defendant's maps are not copies, either in whole or in part, of those of the complainants. They are arranged substantially on the same plan, but those of the defendant represent Philadelphia, while those of the complainants represent New York. They are not only not copies of each other, but they do not convey the same information.

The complainants have no more an exclusive right to use the form of the characters they employ to express their ideas upon the face of the map, than they have to use the form of type they select to print the key. Scarcely any map is published on which certain arbitrary signs, explained by a key printed at some convenient place for reference, are not used to designate objects of special interest, such as rivers, railroads, boundaries, cities, towns, etc.; and yet we think it has never been supposed that a simple copyright of the map gave the publisher an exclusive right to the use upon other maps of the particular signs and key which he saw fit to adopt for the purposes of his delineations. That, however, is what the complainants seek to accomplish in this case. The defendant has not copied their maps. All he has done at any time has been to use to some extent their system of arbitrary signs and their key.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

JOHN G. WILLIAMS, Admr. de bonis non, of the Estate of CHARLES TAYLOR, Deceased, Appl.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

Surgeon in Continental Army—claim for pay.

1. A surgeon in the Continental Army, who did not continue in service until the end of the war, is not entitled to five years' pay, under the Resolutions of Congress of Oct. 21, 1780, and March 22, 1783.

2. An acceptance of an appointment in the new regiment of guards, authorized by the Resolution of Jan. 9, 1779, of the Continental Congress, took supernumerary officers out of their former position in the line.

[No. 1058.]

Submitted Jan. 24, 1879. Decided Feb. 3, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The appellant's intestate filed his petition in the Court of Claims, claiming compensation for services in the Continental Army.

The facts found are, in substance, that in 1776, Dr. Taylor, the appellant's intestate, was surgeon's mate in the Second Virginia Regiment, in the Continental service, and that upon the reduction and consolidation of the regiments of that State, in 1778, he became a supernumerary. While he continued as supernumerary, he was appointed surgeon's mate in the temporary regiment of guards authorized by the Resolution of Congress of January 9, 1779, and he accepted the same and afterwards was promoted to be surgeon in the same regiment, and so continued, receiving pay, etc., until it was discharged, June 13, 1781. It also appears that the State of Virginia has recognized Dr. Taylor as having been a supernumerary surgeon of the Continental Line of that State until the end of the war, by granting his heirs bounty land warrants, and that he died after Jan. 4, 1821.

The question is whether, under the above state of facts, Dr. Taylor continued in service to the end of the war, within the meaning of the Resolutions of the Continental Congress of Oct. 21, 1780, and Mar. 22, 1783, granting five years' pay, etc.

The court below having dismissed the claim, appeal was taken to this court.

Messrs. P. E. Dye and John Pool, for appellant.

Messrs. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., and S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

From the finding of facts sent up with this appeal, we are clearly of the opinion that Dr. Taylor did not "Continue in service until the end of the war," within the meaning of the Resolutions of Congress of October 21, 1780, and of March 22, 1783, under which the claim in this case is made. When he accepted his appointment in the regiment of guards, January 9, 1779, he ceased to be a supernumerary surgeon's mate and became an active officer in the new regiment. Consequently, when that regiment was discharged because its term of enlistment had expired, he was out of service. When the new regiment was raised, the Governor and Council of Virginia were authorized by Congress to appoint its officers out of those in the Virginia line who were then supernumerary. Although it is said in one of the additional findings, that Dr. Taylor was assigned to active duty, this is to be construed in connection with the Resolution to which reference is made; and that being done, it is apparent there was no intention by that language to modify the previous finding that "He was appointed surgeon's mate of the regiment of guards authorized by the Resolution of January 9, 1779, of the Continental Congress." By the Resolution, Congress permitted the supernumerary officers in the line to accept appointments in the new regiment. Such an acceptance took them out of their former position in the line and put them into the new organization.
See 9 OTTO. U. S., Book 25.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

M. WOLF, ELIAS LOWENSTEIN, ET AL.,

Appls.,

v.

LOUIS STIX ET AL., as LOUIS STIX & Co.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 1-10)

Fraud, under Bankrupt Law—positive fraud—bond in replevin—effect of discharge—of principal—of surety.

1. Fraud, as used in the section of the Bankrupt Law, which provides that "no debt created by fraud * * shall be discharged in bankruptcy," means: positive fraud or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong.

2. It does not include such fraud as the law implies from the purchase of property from a debtor, with the intent thereby to hinder and delay his creditors in the collection of their debts.

3. A debt not created by the purchase of goods, but by a bond given in a replevin suit to pay their value if the party failed to sustain his title, is not created by fraud, but is a contingent debt provable under the Bankrupt Act.

4. As the debt was not created by fraud and was provable under the Act, the obligor's discharge released him from his liability on the bond.

5. Although the principal in such bond is discharged from liability thereon by his discharge in bankruptcy, such discharge does not discharge the surety on the bond.

[No. 810.]

Submitted Jan. 13, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee.

The case fully appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Henry Craft, Fillmore Beall and W. M. Randolph, for appellants:

Unless Mr. Wolf can, in this proceeding, plead his discharge in bankruptcy, it is evident that he cannot do so at all. The decree of the Chancery Court was in his favor, and was prior in date to the filing of his petition in bankruptcy. The date of this decree was Dec. 13, 1872. The petition was filed Jan. 5, 1874. The complainants in the chancery suit prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State, and not until Apr. 28, 1877, was the cause heard in that court. Wolf's discharge was granted Mar. 28, 1874, pending the appeal. For reasons shown in the record, he did not attempt to plead his discharge in the Supreme Court until after the decree of that court had been rendered. If he had attempted to plead it in that court at an earlier day, he would not have been allowed to do so, because it is the settled practice of that court not to receive such a plea.

Ward v. Tunstall, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.), 319.

In the case just cited, the Supreme Court of Tennessee declares in effect, that a discharge granted pending an appeal to that court, can only be pleaded in Tennessee, in the mode which is here adopted.

If the discharge can be made available to protect Wolf from liability on the replevin bond, it will be conceded that it will be equally available to protect the complainants, Lowenstein and Helman, as the sureties in that bond. Section 5118, Revised Statutes, does not apply in such a case. Without doubt, it has been correctly said: "A careful perusal of this section will show that it only applies to a surety who contracted to become liable for the payment of the debt, and not for the payment of the judgment which might be entered in a particular action. It clearly contemplates a case where the surety contracts to become liable with the principal for the payment of the debt. Where a discharge is pleaded in the appellate court, so that no judgment can be rendered against the defendant, a surety on an appeal bond, conditioned to pay such judgment as might be entered in the appellate court, is released. As no judgment was rendered against his principal, no liability attaches to him."

Odell v. Wootten, 4 Bk. Reg., 183; S. C., 38 Ga., 225.

"This clause applies to persons who are liable for the debt of the bankrupt, which existed before and is discharged by the proceedings in bankruptcy. A bond given to dissolve an attachment is not such a debt. It does not become of the nature of the debt until the contingency arises, upon which it is to be made operative, to wit: a judgment valid against the principal and which he is bound to pay. When a judgment is rendered for the defendant upon a plea of a discharge in bankruptcy, the bond is discharged; not by the proceedings in bankruptcy but by the determination of the contingency upon which the obligation of the bond is made to depend."

Carpenter v. Turrell, 100 Mass., 450.

Such is also the ruling of the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Martin v. Kilbourn, 1 Cent., L. J. 94.

And of many other courts.

Payne v. Able, 4 Bk. Reg., 220; S. C., 7 Bush., 344.

Then does the discharge operate to release Wolf from liability upon the replevin bond? Section 5115, Revised Statutes, prescribes the bond, as did section 32 of the original Act, of the discharge and defines its extent. The discharge which Wolf pleads follows this form. It must operate a release from liability upon the replevin bond, if that liability was a debt or claim provable against his estate, and was not a debt excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy.

But it is insisted that the liability of Wolf upon this bond, even if provable, is "excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy," under section 5117 Rev. Stat., old sec. 33, because, it is insisted, that it is a "debt created by fraud, etc., of the bankrupt," "Debts and claims" are mentioned in section 5115 as provable, and as affected by the discharge, but the excepting clause is only as to debts, both in section 5115 and 5117. The effort has been made herein, to show that M. Wolf, the bankrupt, did not owe Louis Stix and Co. any debt, either created by fraud or otherwise. They charged him with a fraudulent holding of their debtor's property, and attached that property in his hands. His bond dissolved that attachment, and constituted a contract between them and him as aforesaid.

In U. S. v. Rob Roy, 1 Woods, 42, Bradley, Circuit Judge, said: "Now, the appearance of the claimant in court, and his bonding the property, are the transactions on which the present claim is based. They cannot be regarded as fraudulent. Every person is entitled to come into courts, and prosecute and defend his suits in the ordinary way."

The fraud contemplated by the Statute is actual, not constructive nor implied.

Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S., 704 (XXIV., 586).

The liability of Wolf to Louis Stix & Co., if any, does not grow in any way, was not created, by Wolf's fraudulent purchase of the goods attached. They were attached and in the custody of the law, notwithstanding that fraud, just as fully as if they had been found in possession of Marks, Pump & Co. Under the authority and with the sanction of law, Wolf received these goods back; took them to his own use, upon a contract made with Louis Stix & Co. The debt, if it can be called a debt, was created by their contract. "If the record shows that the debt was created by contract, the plaintiff cannot, when a discharge is pleaded in bar to a judgment, be allowed to show that the debt sought to be collected was created by fraud."

Palmer v. Preston, 45 Vt., 154; Shuman v. Strauss, 10 Bk. Reg., 300; S. C., 52 N. Y., 404; Brown v. Broach, 52 Miss., 536; Fowles v. Treadwell, 24 Me., 377; Jones v. Knox, 46 Ala., 53.

Under the other head of "excepted debts," in section 5117, viz.: "fiduciary," it has been held: "If the guardian gives his note under seal to the ward's husband, in settlement of his account, and receives a release from them, he is not liable thereon in a fiduciary capacity."

Coleman v. Davies, 45 Ga., 489.

Messrs. Gantt & Patterson and Josiah Patterson, for appellees:

Is M. Wolf discharged?

His liability originated in fraud, in fact. This conclusively appears from the allegations and charges of the original and amended bills, and the decree of the Supreme Court of the State, which adjudges the liability of said Wolf.

The inquiry, then, is: does the discharge in bankruptcy, release the bankrupt from such a liability?

The object of the law was to relieve the honest citizen from hopeless insolvency; but it was not intended to relieve those who were guilty of moral turpitude, or intentional wrong.

Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S., 709 (XXIV., 587).

Neal and the sureties, in the above case, were exonerated, because Neal was guilty only of constructive fraud, without intentional wrong.

Complainant, Wolf, and his sureties, must be held, on the authority of that case, as remaining liable, notwithstanding Wolf's discharge in bankruptcy, because Wolf was guilty of positive fraud and intentional wrong.

But it is contended that the judgment eliminates the wrong and purges the case of the taint of fraud and, therefore, Wolf is released. The law is just the reverse. The court will look back to the "root of the matter," and see if it had its origin in positive fraud.

Bump, Bankruptcy, 10th ed., 742, 743; In re Robinson, 6 Blatchf., 253; In re Patterson, 1 Bk. Reg., 307; Hawkins v. Bk., 2 Bk. Reg., 108; Sampson v. Burton, 4 Bk. Reg., 15-63; Warner v. Cronkhite, 13 Bk. Reg., 52.

These authorities also show that giving a delivery bond does not vary the case. The court will go back to the origin of the liability.

It is urged that the word "debt," used in section 33 of the Bankrupt Law of 1867, means a liability which arises ex contractu.

The authorities are all against this view.

Bump, Bankruptcy, 10th ed., 728, notes; Stokes v. Mason, 12 Bk. Reg., 498; S. C., 10 R. I., 261.

The case of Neal v. Clark (supra) is, necessarily, against it.

See, also, further, in this connection, Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301; Horner v. Spelman, 78 Ill., 207; Warner v. Cronkhite, 13 Bk. Reg., 52; Broadnax v. Bradford, 50 Ala., 270.

It is a cherished doctrine of the law, never to let one thus offending escape under cover of the wrong he has done. He shall take no benefit from his wrong. He will be treated as a trustee for the injured party, if necessary.

Bump, Fraudulent Conveyances, 588; Bean v. Smith 2 Mas., 252; Strike v. McDonald 2 Har. and G. (Md.), 191; Townshend v. Duncan 2 Bland, 56; 2 Whart., Ev., sec., 1088 and notes.

Assuming that Wolf's discharge releases him, does it follow that the sureties are also released?

All the conditions have happened, upon which the liability of the sureties depends:

1. Said Wolf has been cast in the suit.

2. He has failed to pay the $10,000 and interest, as the court has ordered and directed.

3. The goods and other property have been found and decreed, subject to the attachment and liable thereunder to the satisfaction of the debts of complainants, Louis Stix & Co., against Marks, Pump & Co.

Suppose Wolf's discharge is effectual as to him, does it relieve the goods? His release does not settle that they are not still liable. The attachment created a specific lien upon the goods for complainant's benefit. The bond stands for the goods. If the goods had not been replevied, the discharge of Wolf, if effectual to work his release, would not have set the goods at liberty.

On the 8th of December, 1866, Louis Stix & Co., commenced a suit in the Chancery Court of Shelby County, Tennessee, against Marks, Pump, & Co., and M. Wolf, to recover a debt owing by Marks, Pump, & Co., and to set aside a sale of goods by the latter firm to Wolf, on the ground, as alleged that it had been made to defraud creditors. In accordance with the practice in that State, a writ of attachment was sued out and levied upon the goods in the possession of Wolf.

By the Code of Tennessee, sec. 3509, "The defendant to an attachment suit may always replevy the property attached by giving bond with good security, payable to the plaintiff, in double the amount of the plaintiff's demand, or, at defendant's option, in double the value of the property attached, conditioned to pay the debt, interest and costs, or the value of the property attached, with interest, as the case may be, in the event he shall be cast in the suit;" and, sec. 3514, "The court may enter up judgment or decree upon the bond, in the event of recovery by the plaintiff, against the defendant and his sureties for the penalty of the bond, to be satisfied by delivery of the property or its value, or payment of the recovery, as the case may be." As soon as the attachment was served, Wolf moved the court to ascertain the value of the goods and fix the amount of the bond to be given in replevying them. This was done, and the value ascertained to be $10,000; and on the 24th of December, 1866, Wolf, as principal, and Lowenstein and Helman, as his sureties, filed in the cause their bond, a copy of which is as follows:

"We, M. Wolf, as principal, and Elias Lowenstein and Leon Helman, as sureties, hereby bind ourselves unto Louis Stix & Co. in the sum of $20,000.

The condition of the above bond is that, whereas, in the suit now pending in the Chancery Court at Memphis, in favor of said Louis Stix & Co. and against Marks, Pump & Co., and in which said Wolf is joined as a defendant, an attachment has been issued against said Marks, Pump & Co. for $18,699.54, besides interest and costs, and has been levied upon a stock of goods and other property as the property of said Marks, Pump & Co., which were in the possession of said M. Wolf, and were and are claimed by him as his property; and this bond is given by him for the purpose of replevying said stock of goods and other property attached, being, altogether, as it is agreed by the parties, of the value of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars. Now, in the event said M. Wolf shall be cast in said suit, and said stock of goods and other property shall be found and decreed by the court to have been subject to said attachment, and liable thereunder to the satisfaction of the debts of complainants against Marks, Pump & Co., then and in that event, should said Wolf pay to complainants, as the court may order and direct, the said sum of $10,000, the value of said stock of goods and other property, with interest thereon from this date, this bond shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

Witness our hands and seals this—day of December, 1866.

M. WOLF.

ELIAS LOWENSTEIN.

L. HELMAN."

[L. S.]

[L. S.]

[L. S.]

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

See 9 OTTO.

The property attached was thereupon surrendered to Wolf. All the members of the firm of Marks, Pump & Co. were afterwards discharged in bankruptcy, and in due time, by leave of the court, they severally filed formal pleas setting up their respective discharges. Wolf put in his answer, claiming title to the goods and denying all fraud. Testimony was taken; and on the 13th December, 1872, after hearing, the Chancery Court found and decreed that there was no fraud in the sale to Wolf, and dismissed the suit as to him. As Marks, Pump & Co. had been discharged in bankruptcy, it was also dismissed as to them. From this decree Stix & Co. appealed to the Supreme Court on the 21st of March, 1873. On the 28th of March 1874, Wolf obtained a discharge under the bankrupt law. On the 28th of April, 1877, the Supreme Court, upon hearing, reversed the decree of the Chancery Court, and, after finding the amount due from Marks, Pump, & Co., and ordering a recovery, concluded as follows:

"And this court being of opinion, as before recited, that said sale was fraudulent and void, and that said stock of goods, fixtures, etc., so attached and replevied, were subject to said attachment, and liable for complainants' said debt. And it further appearing from simple calculation that said sum of $10,000, with interest from the date of said bond, December 24, 1866, to the present time, amounts to the sum of $16,200; it is, therefore, further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court, that said fraudulent sale be and is hereby set aside, and for naught held, as to complainants' said debts herein against defendants Marks, Pump & Co., and that the complainants Louis Stix & Co. in their own right, and also for the use of Rinskoﬀ Bros. & Co., do have and recover of and from the defendant M. Wolf, and Elias Lowenstein and L. Helman, his sureties on the aforesaid replevin bond, the said sum of $16,200, the value of the property replevied, and interest thereon to this date, for which execution may issue. And it further appearing from the record that the said defendants, Marks, Pump & Co., have been since the filing of complainants' bill discharged in bankruptcy, no execution is awarded against them for complainants' recoveries herein; and the cost of this cause, and the court below, will be paid out of the said recovery of $16,200, against defendant, M. Wolf, and his aforesaid sureties on replevin bond."

On the 3d day of May, 1877, after this decree was rendered, Wolf and his sureties petitioned the court for leave to come in and plead in that court the discharge of Wolf in bankruptcy; but this was denied, as no new defense could be made in that court, and it was not allowable to set up the defense of bankruptcy by any proceedings there for that purpose.

On the 26th of May, 1877, these appellants filed this bill in the Chancery Court of Shelby County, setting forth the facts substantially as above stated, and praying that the judgment or decree of the Supreme Court might be decreed to be satisfied, and of no force and effect by reason of the discharge of Wolf in bankruptcy, and that Stix & Co. might be enjoined from enforcing the collection.

The case was afterwards removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee. The answer of Stix & Co. does not deny any of the material facts alleged in the bill, but sets up as a defense:

1. That the discharge of Wolf does not release him from his liability upon the decree of the Supreme Court, because the decree is founded upon a debt created by fraud;

2. That if Wolf is discharged, his co-complainants, the sureties upon his bond, are not; and,

3. That the appellants have been guilty of such laches as to cut them off from relief in a court of equity.

The circuit court dismissed the bill, and from a decree to that effect this appeal has been taken.

This cause may be considered as supplementary to that of Wolf v. Stix, 96 U. S., 541 [XXIV., 640]. It is in fact the suit in chancery referred to in the opinion in that case as furnishing the complainants an appropriate remedy for enforcing their rights growing out of the discharge of Wolf in bankruptcy during the pendency of the original cause on appeal in the Supreme Court, and before the final judgment as rendered in that court. In addition to the case of Anderson v. Reeves, cited in the argument of the other case, we are now referred to Ward v. Tunstall, 58 Tenn. (2 Bax.), 319; Riggs v. White, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.), 503; and Longley v. Swayne, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.), 506, n., as establishing the same practice. In Ward v. Tunstall the rule is thus stated: "On the record when presented, to which we can alone look, in our view of the case, a judgment can be rendered, and then if the debtor desires to be relieved he will find no difficulty in being protected from payment of improper judgments in the bankrupt court, or by an original proceeding in the state court, where he can make such issues as will raise the question, and as he is precluded from interposing his defense arising out of his bankruptcy, the judgment will not interfere with his case in any way." But it is unnecessary to pursue this branch of the case further, as we do not understand that the position assumed by the appellants is disputed.

The two questions which have alone been argued here in behalf of the appellees are:

1. Whether the liability of Wolf was one created by fraud, within the meaning of sec. 5117, R. S., which provides that "No debt created by fraud * * * shall be discharged in bankruptcy." And,

2. Whether if Wolf was discharged his sureties were also.

1. As to Wolf.

In Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S., 704 [XXIV., 586], it was decided that "fraud," as used in this section of the Bankrupt Law, "means positive fraud or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, as does embezzlement; and not implied fraud or fraud in law, which may exist without imputation of bad faith or immorality." With this definition we are content. It is founded both on reason and authority. Clearly it does not include such fraud as the law implies from the purchase of property from a debtor with the intent thereby to hinder and delay his creditors in the collection of their debts. But if it did, such a purchase does not create a debt from the purchaser to the creditors. As between the debtor and the purchaser the sale is good, but as between a creditor and the purchaser it is void. The purchaser does not by his purchase subject himself to a liability to pay to creditors the value of what he buys. All the risk he runs is that the sale may be avoided, and the property reclaimed for the benefit of creditors. To come within this exception in the Bankrupt Act the debt must be created by fraud. The debt of Wolf in this case was not created by his purchase of the goods, but by his bond to pay their value if he failed to sustain his title. In this there was no fraud. It was a right the law gave him as the claimant of the property, and he availed himself of it in a lawful way. He thus perfected his title to the goods by agreeing to pay their value if his original purchase should be held to be invalid. A debt thus incurred cannot be said to be created by fraud. It occupies in this respect the same position it would if Wolf, acknowledging the invalidity of his original purchase, had, without suit, given his note to the creditors for the value of the goods in order to perfect his title.

The debt thus created was provable under the Bankrupt Act. It was payable upon the happening of an event which might never occur, and was, therefore, contingent. The bond was in full force when the petition in bankruptcy was filed. The sum to be paid was certain in amount. Whether the event would ever occur which would require the payment was uncertain; but if it did occur, the amount to be paid was fixed. This clearly is such a case as was provided for in sec. 5068, R. S., which is, that "In all cases of contingent debts and contingent liabilities contracted by the bankrupt, * * * the creditor may make claim therefor, and have his claim allowed, with the right to share in the dividends, if the contingency happens before the order for the final dividend." There is nothing in the case of Ruggin v. Maguire, 15 Wall., 549 [82 U. S., XXI., 232] in conflict with this. That case arose under the Bankrupt Law of 1841, 5 Stat. at L., 440, which was somewhat, though perhaps not materially, different from that of 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 517, in this particular, and not only the happening of the event on which payment was to be made, but the amount to be paid, was uncertain and contingent. The amount to be paid depended materially upon the time when the event happened. Everything was uncertain. The obligation in this case is to pay $10,000 and interest, if, upon the trial of the suit in the progress of which the bond was executed, it should be adjudged that the goods attached were subject to the attachment, and liable thereunder to the satisfaction of the debt sued for. As, therefore, the debt of Wolf was not created by fraud, and was provable under the Act, it follows that his discharge released him from his liability on the bond. The discharge would have been a bar to a judgment against him, if, before the judgment, it could have been pleaded as a defense to the action. It follows that, under the practice which prevails in Tennessee in this class of cases, Wolf is entitled to the relief he asks for himself.

2. As to the sureties.

Sec. 5118, R. S., provides that "No discharge shall release, discharge, or affect any person liable for the same debt for or with the bankrupt, See 9 OTTO.

either as partner, joint contractor, indorser, surety, or otherwise." The cases are numerous in which it has been held, and we think correctly, that if one is bound as surety for another to pay any judgment that may be rendered in a specified action, if the judgment is defeated by the bankruptcy of the person for whom the obligation is assumed, the surety will be released. The obvious reason is that the event has not happened on which the liability of the surety was made to depend. Of this class of obligations are the ordinary bonds in attachment suits to dissolve an attachment, appeal bonds, and the like. But here the bond was not given to dissolve the attachment. That was issued against the property of Marks, Pump & Co.; and in order to get possession of the goods which had been attached, and which Wolf claimed as his own, he subjected his bond to the operation of the attachment which was to continue in force, and took the goods away. In legal effect, he purchased the interest of the creditors in the goods, and, with Lowenstein and Helman as his sureties, agreed to pay the creditors $10,000, if, upon the trial of the suit in which the attachment was issued, it should appear that they had any interest to sell. In this obligation Lowenstein and Helman were jointly bound with Wolf, and their liability was made to depend, not upon the recovery of a money judgment against him, but upon a judgment that the title he acquired by his purchase from Marks, Pump & Co., was void as against the attaching creditors. The case stands precisely the same as it would if Wolf and his sureties had entered into a contract with the attaching creditors, in a form authorized by law, to take the goods from the sheriff and pay $10,000, if on the trial it should be determined that the attachment was valid, and this was a suit on that contract. Clearly, under such circumstances, it could not be successfully contended that Wolf's bankruptcy released his sureties.

As we understand the practice in Tennessee, the parties are to have the same relief in this action they would have been entitled to in the original suit, if, before the judgment, Wolf's discharge in bankruptcy could have been pleaded. This proceeding performs the office of such a plea, and enforces the same rights.

Had the plea been filed, it would have shown a discharge of Wolf from his liability, but not that of his sureties. They were bound not to pay any judgment which might be rendered against him, but to pay the debt he had agreed to pay in a certain event, which had happened. The judgment which the Code of Tennessee authorizes in such cases is upon the bond according to its tenor and effect, and if the principal debtor is discharged his sureties must respond, as in other cases of joint liability. They are no more released by his discharge than they would be from a note or ordinary money bond which they had signed as his sureties.

No question has been raised as to the effect of the bankruptcy of Marks, Pump, & Co., and it is unnecessary, therefore, to take time to consider it.

Our conclusion is, that as to Wolf the judgment is erroneous, and should be reversed, but as to Lowenstein and Helman, that it was right, and should be affirmed.

The cause is remanded, with instructions to modify the decree below in such manner as to give to Wolf the benefit of his discharge in bankruptcy, as stated in this opinion, but to leave it in all other respects in force. The costs in this appeal must be paid by the appellees.

Cited—82 N. Y., 117; 90 N. Y., 37.

MARY G. HUSSEY, Appl.,

v.
JOB SMITH.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 20-25.)

Mortgage by occupant of land—deed on sale by U. S. Marshal.

1. Under the Act of Congress of Mar. 2, 1867, the occupant of land in a city, entered by the mayor thereof in trust for the occupants thereof, had an equitable interest in such land which he could sell and convey.

2. Such occupant may mortgage the land, and a foreclosure and sale under the mortgage carried his title to the purchaser at such sale.

3. That the original process in the foreclosure case was served, the sale made and the deed to the purchaser executed by the United States Marshal, and that this court afterwards decided that the Marshal of the Territory was the proper person to perform such acts, do not invalidate the sale.

4. Such United States Marshal was an officer de facto, and his acts were valid.

[No. 131.]

Submitted Jan. 16, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

The case fully appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Z. Snow and E. D. Hoge, for appellant:

NOTE.—Acts of officer de facto, when valid.

An officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law. Rex v. Bedford Level, 6 East, 356.

One who exercises the duties of an officer under color of an appointment or election to that office is an officer de facto. Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn., 585; S. C., 44 Am. Dec., 574.

The ministerial acts of a sheriff de facto, though ineligible to office, are valid. State v. Anderson, Coxe, 318; S. C., 1 Am. Dec., 207.

The acts of officers de facto are as valid and effectual, when they concern the public or the rights of third persons, as though they were officers de jure. People v. Collins, 7 Johns., 549; Potter v. Luther, 3 Johns., 431; Reed v. Gillet, 12 Johns., 296; 4 T. R. 366; 16 Vin., 114; 2 Camp., 131; Ring v. Grout, 7 Wend., 344; People v. Stevens, 5 Hill, 630; People v. Cook, 14 Barb., 287; People v. Tiernan, 30 Barb., 196; People v. Brennan, 30 How. Pr., 420; Read v. City of Buffalo, 3 Keyes, 449; Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend., 231; S. C., 21 Am. Dec., 213; Buckman v. Ruggles, 15 Mass., 180; 8 Am. Dec., 98; Police Jury v. Haw, 2 La., 41; S. C., 20 Am. Dec., 294; Farms & Mechs. Bk. v. Chester, 6 Humph., 453; S. C., 44 Am. Dec., 318; Burke v. Elliott, 4 Ired. L., 355; S. C., 42 Am. Dec., 142; Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn., 432; S. C., 4 Am. Rep., 89; Culver v. Eggers, 63 N. C., 630; Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass., 445; S. C., 23 Am. Rep., 374.

In an action between other parties, the court will not decide whether a person claiming to be sheriff and discharging the duties of the office, be sheriff de jure. Fowler v. Bebee, 9 Mass., 231; S. C., 6 Am. Dec., 62; Com. v. Hawkes, 123 Mass., 629.

Contract of officers de facto with innocent parties, good, but it is not so when contracting party knows defect in title to office. St. Luke's Ch. v. Mathews, 4 Des., 578; S. C., 6 Am. Dec., 619.

The acts of officers of private corporations illegally elected or ineligible to office, are valid and binding as acts of officers de facto. Savage v. Ball,

The Marshal was an officer de facto.

State v. Carroll, 38 Conn., 449; S. C., 9 Am. Rep., 409; Fowler v. Bebee, 9 Mass., 231; Com. v. Fowler, 10 Mass., 290; S. C., 11 Mass., 338.

Messrs. J. B. Rosborough, Samuel A. Merritt and R. P. Lowe, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne, delivered the opinion of the court:

There can be no question that under the Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 541, Smith had an equitable interest in the premises in controversy which he could sell and convey. Phyfe v. Wardell, 5 Paige, 268; Armour v. Alexander, 10 Paige, 571; Thredgill v. Pintard, 12 How., 24. Until the Mayor of Salt Lake City made the entry at the proper land-office, which he was authorized to make, the legal title was in the United States. By the entry it became vested in the Mayor. He held the entire tract so entered "In trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests." Such is the language of the statute. The Act does not prohibit a sale, but is silent upon the subject. Smith mortgaged to Bernhisel, and subsequently to Linforth. Bernhisel foreclosed, making Smith and Linforth defendants. Under a decree of the proper court, the premises were sold by the United States Marshal. Jennings became the purchaser, and thereafter sold and conveyed to the appellant. His deed to her bears date March 9, 1872. On the 24th of May, 1872, the appellant filed her claim pursuant to law in the proper probate court, for a judgment to enable her to obtain a deed from the Mayor for the premises. Smith had before filed a claim also. On the 10th of July, 1872, the probate court decided in favor of Smith. She 17 N. J. Eq., 142; Cahill v. Kalamazoo Ins. Co., 2 Doug. (Mich.), 124; In re County Life Ass. Co., 5 L. R. Ch. App., 238; Mahony v. East Holyford Min. Co., 7 L. R. H. L., 894; Rockville v. Andrews, 2 Cranch, C. C., 449; Bk. of U. S. v. Dandridge, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.), 64; Minor v. Mechs. Bk., 26 U. S. (1 Pet.), 46; Djs. L. of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H., 223; Matter of Directors of M. & H. R. R. Co., 19 Wend., 135; Matter of Chenango C. M. Ins. Co., 19 Wend., 635; Atl. R. R. Co. v. Johnston, 70 N. C., 349; O. & M. R. R. Co. v. McPherson, 35 Mo., 13; P. & K. R. R. Co. v. Dunn, 39 Me., 587; Baird v. Bk. of Washington, 11 S. & R., 411; D. & H. Can. Co. v. Pa. Coal Co., 21 Pa. St., 131; Doremus v. Dutch Ref. Ch., 2 Green Ch. (N. J.), 332; Tustees of Vernon Soc. v. Hills, 6 Cow., 23.

The acts of a de facto officer cannot be attacked collaterally as invalid, but only in a direct proceeding by the proper authority. Aulanier v. Governor, 1 Tex., 653; People v. Sassovich, 29 Cal., 480; Com. v. Kirby, 2 Cush., 577; Gumberts v. T. A. B. Co., 28 Ind., 181; Coles Co. v. Allison, 23 Ill., 437; Creighton v. Piper, 14 Ind., 182; Callison v. Hedrick, 15 Gratt., 244; People v. Stevens, 5 Hill, 616; Comrs. v. McDaniel, 7 Jones L., 107; People v. Albertson, 8 How. Pr., 363; Neale v. Overseers, 5 Watts, 538; Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me., 79; Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn., 585; Hagner v. Heyberger, 7 Watts & S., 104; S. C., 42 Am. Dec., 220; Petersilea v. Stone, 119 Mass., 465; S. C., 20 Am. Rep., 335.

But the mere exercise of the functions of an office will not be sufficient where there is no claim of election or appointment to it, unless there has been open exercise of it, without interference by the public, long enough to justify presumption of appointment. Burke v. Elliott, 4 Ired. L., 355; S. C., 42 Am. Dec., 142; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn., 449; Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend., 231; S. C., 21 Am. Dec., 213; Gilliam v. Reddick, 4 Ired. L., 368.

The judgment of a judge de facto is valid. State v. Carroll, 38 Conn., 449; S. C., 9 Am. Rep., 409; Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass., 445; S. C., 23 Am. Rep., 374.

thereupon appealed to the district court. The decision of the probate judge was affirmed. She then appealed to the Supreme Court of the Territory. The judgment of the probate court was again affirmed, and she thereupon removed the case by appeal to this court.

The validity of the mortgage to Bernhisel is not controverted, nor is it denied that, if the foreclosure and sale divested Smith's title, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory was erroneous, and must be reversed.

It was held by that court that the foreclosure proceedings were void, for two reasons:

First. That the mortgage was not sufficiently described in the complainant's petition to warrant the decree pro confesso, which was taken.

Second. That the United States Marshal, by whom the original process in the case was served, the sale made and the deed to the purchaser executed, had no authority to act in anywise in the premises.

The first objection is clearly untenable, and has not been insisted upon here. We, therefore, pass it by without further notice.

The second objection is necessary to be considered.

There were two marshals in the Territory, one appointed by the National Government, the other under a territorial law. The former was called the Marshal of the United States, the latter, Marshal of the Territory.

A question arose which officer was entitled to serve the processes issuing from the local courts. A case was brought in the proper district court to settle their respective claims. On the 12th of May, 1870, that court decided that the right and authority belonged exclusively to the Marshal of the United States. The Supreme Court of the Territory, at its October Term in the same year, affirmed this judgment. Such was then understood to be the law, and the Marshal of the United States proceeded in the performance of his official functions, having the field to himself, until the subject came under the consideration of this court in Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall., 434 [80 U. S., XX., 659]. It was then held (on the 15th of April, 1872) that the Marshal of the United States had such authority only in cases where the United States were concerned.

It will thus be seen that the period of his recognized right and of its uninterrupted exercise extended from May 12, 1870, to April 15, 1872. Within that time all the proceedings in the Bernhisel foreclosure case were had. The petition to foreclose was filed, the process was issued and served upon Smith, the decree was taken, the sale was made and the Marshal's deed was executed to Jennings. During all this time the Marshal's acts were valid, as being those of an officer de facto. They were as much so as if they had been done by him de jure. These remarks apply with full force to his acts as a ministerial officer in the Bernhisel case. An officer de facto is not a mere usurper, nor yet within the sanction of law, but one who, colore officii, claims and assumes to exercise official authority, is reputed to have it, and the community acquiesces accordingly. Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend., 231; Gilliam v. Reddick, 4 Ired. L., 368; Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me., 423. Judicial as well as ministerial officers may be in this position. Freeman, Judgments, sec. 148. The acts of such officers are held to be valid because the public good requires it. The principle wrongs no one. A different rule would be a source of serious and lasting evils.

See 9 OTTO.

The Marshal's sale and deed to Jennings extinguished the entire right of Smith to the premises. Thereafter he stood to them in the relation of a stranger. All the title which he possessed when the mortgage was executed passed from him to Jennings, and from Jennings to the appellant.

The territorial law of Utah of February 6, 1869, Comp. L. of Utah, 379, authorized to be passed by the Act of Congress before mentioned, gave to the party "entitled to the occupancy or possession," as well as to the "occupant or occupants," the right to apply for the judgment by the probate court, upon which, when rendered, the Mayor was to execute his deed. If this were not so, the right would be clearly within the equity of the Act of Congress, and conferred by it.

The rejection of the appellant's claim and the adjudication in favor of Smith, who had not then a shadow of right to the premises, by the probate court was, therefore, a gross error, and the Supreme Court of the Territory repeated it by affirming the judgment.

The judgment of the latter court is, therefore, reversed and the cause will be remanded, with directions to proceed in conformity to this opinion.

* NOTE.—Joseph G. Hussey et al., Appts., v. Job Smith et al., No. 132. Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah; argued by the same counsel at same time as preceding.

Mr. Justice SWAYNE delivered the opinion of the court.

The opinion of this court in the preceding case, No. 131] ante, 314], is decisive of this case. The cardinal question here, as there, is as to the validity of the proceedings touching the sale, under the Bernhisel mortgage, and the result must be the same. The decree of the Supreme Court of Utah is reversed and the cause will be remanded, with directions to proceed in conformity to this opinion.

Cited—99 U. S., 615.

EDWARD W. BURBANK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

THOMAS J. SEMMES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 138-142.)

Confiscation Act—marshal's deed.

In the proceedings to condemn land under the Confiscation Act, where a particular parcel of the same is not mentioned either in the information, the monition or the decree of condemnation, the marshal's deed on the sale conveyed no title to such parcel, although purporting to convey the same.

[No. 169.]

Argued Jan. 31, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana.

The history and facts of the case are fully stated by the court.

Messrs. T. J. Durant, O. W. Horner and J. Q. A. Fellows, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Thos. J. Semmes, pro. per., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Seizure of the estate, property, money, stocks, credits and effects of certain persons engaged in rebellion was authorized to be made by the Act of Congress to suppress insurrection, and it was made the duty of the President to apply the proceeds of the same when condemned to the support of the army. 12 Stat. at L., 590.

Proceedings in rem, on the 7th of August, 1863, were instituted in the District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, under the said Confiscation Act, against six certain lots of land, as the real property of the original plaintiff in the present suit, which resulted, on the 5th of April, 1865, in the decree of that court condemning the property described in the information. On the 11th of the same month a writ of venditioni exponas was issued, commanding the Marshal to sell the property on the day named in the writ; but the Marshal did not sell the same on that day, for the want of bidders. Unable to comply with the order in that respect, he withdrew the property from sale, and gave a new notice, as directed by the prior order of the court.

Two lots of land were embraced in the information and in the decree of condemnation, which in fact were not the property of the present plaintiff. Both of those lots belonged to an innocent third person, and the true owner of the same in the meantime, to wit: on the 2d of May in the same year, filed a petition in the same court setting up his right to the two lots, and stating that they were improperly advertised for sale by the Marshal, and prayed the court to open the decree to enable him to assert his title. Consent in writing to that effect having been given by the district attorney, the court granted the prayer of the petitioner, and opened the decree for the purpose of enabling the intervenor to submit his claim to those two lots, as shown by the evidence. Pursuant thereto, the court, on the 31st of May in the same year, rendered judgment restoring those two lots to the intervenor, as claimed in his petition. Due correction of the decree of condemnation having been made, the return of the Marshal shows that he sold the residue of the lots described in the information, pursuant to the second advertisement for the amount specified in the record, and that he paid the money into the registry of the court.

Subsequent application was made by the present plaintiff to set aside the default against him, and for leave to file his claim and answer. Leave to that effect was granted; and due notice to the purchaser of the lots having been given, he appeared and filed exceptions to the proceedings. Both parties were heard, and the court overruled the exceptions of the purchaser, set aside the default of the defendant, and finally rendered judgment dismissing the information, and restored the property to the original owner.

Proper steps were taken in behalf of the United States to remove the cause into the circuit court, where the judgment of the district court was in all things reversed and judgment rendered, that the original judgment rendered by the district court should stand and remain in full force and effect, and that the sale made by the Marshal do stand confirmed, which decree of the circuit court was subsequently affirmed in this court. Semmes v. U. S., 91 U. S., 21 [XXIII., 193]; U. S. v. Six Lots of Ground, 1 Woods, 234.

None of the foregoing proceedings are now controverted by either of the parties to the present controversy; but the plaintiff instituted the present suit in the Fourth District Court for the Parish of Orleans, in which he alleges that he is the sole owner and absolute proprietor of the lot of land described in the complaint as No. 15 on the plan therein referred to, and he avers that the defendant, on the 17th of June, 1865, unlawfully obtruded himself into and took possession of the said lot, with the buildings thereon, and has ever since withheld and now withholds possession of the same from the petitioner.

Service was made; and the defendant appeared and filed an answer, in which he admits that he is in possession of the premises, but alleges that he is the owner and possessor of the same in good faith, by virtue of an adjudication to him at the Marshal's sale under the before mentioned writ of venditioni exponas, and he makes profert of the Marshal's deed to him of the premises as evidence of his title. Proofs were taken, hearing had, and the court of original jurisdiction entered a decree that the plaintiff is the lawful owner of the lot, with the improvements described in the complaint.

Conclusive proofs were introduced by the plaintiff showing that he was the lawful owner of the lot in question prior to the confiscation proceedings, and that he acquired the fee simple title to the same by exchanging part of lot 18 for the same with the former owner of the lot in question.

Beyond all doubt the title of plaintiff to the same is perfect, unless the lot was condemned and the title to the same conveyed to the defendant by virtue of the Marshal's sale under the confiscation proceedings. Suffice it to say that the defendant claims title to the premises upon no other ground, and in respect to that the subordinate court remarked, that neither in the information nor the motion, or the decree of condemnation, is there any reference whatever to the lot in question, or to the fractional part thereof purchased by the complainant, from which it follows to a demonstration, that the property was never condemned as forfeited to the United States. Nor has the defendant any other evidence of title than what is exhibited in the deed of the Marshal; and it is clear that inasmuch as the decree of condemnation did not apply to the lot in controversy, the Marshal's sale of the same was utterly without warrant or authority of law, and that as against the plaintiff it can have no effect to change the ownership of the premises.

Application for new trial was made by the defendant, which was overruled, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, where the parties were again heard, and the Supreme Court of the State affirmed the judgment of the subordinate court. Immediate steps were taken by the defendant to remove the cause into this court for re-examination.

Of the errors assigned three only need be noticed, as the others are deemed immaterial: (1) That the court decided that the confiscation proceedings did not include the lot in question, upon insufficient grounds. (2) That the property was condemned as a whole, and not the particular lots of which it was composed. (3) That the owner, inasmuch as he did not point out the defect of description at the trial, is estopped to claim the property. Semmes v. Burbank, 28 La. Ann., 694.

Propositions of like character, it seems, were presented to the State Supreme Court, and it is difficult to see what better answer can be given to them than that found in the opinion of that court.

Half of lot 15 is the subject of the present controversy, which fronts on Edward Street in the Square bounded as described in the petition. Title to the same is claimed by the defendant under the decree of confiscation and the sale by the Marshal under writ of venditioni exponas. He admits that the property belonged to the plaintiff prior to those proceedings, but contends that the title was conveyed to him by the Marshal's deed. On the other hand, the plaintiff concedes that the confiscation proceedings were regular, but avers that the property in question was not embraced in those proceedings.

Six lots were described in the information, two of which, sometimes described as one, did not belong to the accused party, and were in the course of the proceedings restored to the true owner. By the decree of condemnation the title of the plaintiff, as the accused party, was divested of lots 14, 16, 17, and part of 18. Lot 15, which is the lot in question, was not mentioned either in the information, the monition, or the decree of condemnation. Nor did the venditioni exponas authorize the sale of any other property than that described in the information and decree of condemnation. Nothing, therefore, in the semblance of title is possessed by the defendant except the Marshal's deed, and it is clear that the Marshal could only make a valid title to the property described in the decree of condemnation, as that was all that became vested in the United States; and it is equally clear that he could not sell property not authorized by the writ placed in his hands for execution.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is clear that the decision of the State Supreme Court rests upon sufficient and solid foundations, and that it deserves to be affirmed, for the reasons which the court gave for its conclusions. Nor is it correct to suppose that the property was condemned as a whole, as the proposition is refuted by the information, the monition, and the decree of condemnation. Specific lots being mentioned in the information and the monition, the accused party had no ground to suppose that any other portion of his real estate was embraced in the proceeding and, of course, cannot be held to have acquiesced in its condemnation.

Certain other errors are assigned, but the court is of opinion that there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

EDWARD HARRIS ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

JOHN MC GOVERN ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 161-168.)

Statute of Limitations—subsequent disability—limitation of ejectment in California.

1. Where a cause of action has accrued, and the Statute of Limitations has commenced to run during 9 OTTO.

ing the lifetime of a person, the running of the Statute is not interrupted by his subsequent decease and the descent of the right of action to his heirs, though minors at the time and under disability to sue.

2. When the Statute of Limitations once begins to run, it will continue to run without being impeded by any subsequent disability.

3. In California, continuous adverse possession of land, for a period of more than five years subsequent to the time when the Statute began to run and before the action was commenced, bars an action of ejectment.

[No. 168.]

Submitted Jan. 31, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

The case, which arose in the court below, is fully stated by the court.

Mr. D. Wm. Douthitt for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. S. M. Wilson, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Actual title to the lot in controversy is claimed by the plaintiffs as devisees and heirs of Stephen Harris, deceased, by virtue of an ordinance of the city, which, as they allege, was subsequently ratified by an Act of Congress. Opposed to that, the theory of the defendants is, that the city ordinance granted the lot to Stephen A. Harris, under whom they derived title, and that inasmuch as they have been in the open adverse possession of the same, claiming title, for more than five years, the title of the plaintiffs, if any they or their testator ever had, is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Possession being in the defendants, the plaintiffs brought ejectment, and the defendants appeared and pleaded as follows: (1) The general issue. (2) That they were seised in fee simple of the premises. (3) That the title and right of possession of the plaintiffs were barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Pursuant to the Act of Congress, the parties waived a jury and submitted the evidence to the court. Special findings were filed by the judge presiding, with his conclusions of law, as exhibited in the record. Hearing was had, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiffs sued out the present writ of error.

Three errors are assigned, as follows. (1) That the court erred in the conclusion of law that the Statute of Limitations began to run as early as July 1, 1864, as found in their first conclusion of law. (2) That the court erred in the conclusion that the defendants were in possession of the premises for more than five years subsequent to the time when the Statute of Limitations commenced to run. (3) That the court erred in their fourth conclusion of law, that the defendants were entitled to judgment.

Actions of the kind cannot be maintained in that State, unless it appears that the plaintiff, NOTE.—What necessary to constitute adverse possession; requisites of; occupancy necessary. See note to Ricard v. Williams, 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.), 59; and note to Ewing v. Burnet, 36 U. S. (11 Pet.), 41.

Effect of disability occurring after Statute of Limitations begins to run.

Death of the debtor does not, as a general rule, stop the running of the Statute of Limitations. Wenman v. Mohawk Ins. Co., 13 Wend., 267; S. C., 28 Am. Dec., 464; Nicks v. Martindale. Harper's L. Rep., 135; S. C., 18 Am. Dec., 646.

his ancestor, predecessor or grantor, was seised or possessed of the premises in question within five years before the commencement of such action. Stats. Cal., 1863, 326; 2 Code, sec. 318.

From the findings of the circuit court it appears that the lot in controversy is within the corporate limits of the city, and that it is situated west of Larkin Street and northwest of Johnson Street, as they existed prior to the passage of the ordinances, which were afterwards ratified by the Act of the Legislature of the State. Stats. Cal., 1858, 53. Said land is also within the boundaries designating the lands to which the right and title of the United States were relinquished and granted to the city and its successors. 13 Stat. at L., 333, sec. 5.

Prior to the incorporation of San Francisco the locality was known as the pueblo or town by that name; and the findings of the court show that on September 25, 1848, the alcalde of the pueblo made a grant in due form of the land in controversy to a party designated in the instrument by the name of Stephen A. Harris, which grant was duly recorded in the official book of records kept for that purpose; that at that date there was a man residing in that pueblo by the name of Stephen A. Harris and another man by the name of Stephen Harris; that the grant was intended for and delivered to the latter and not to Stephen A. Harris; and that Stephen Harris, to whom the grant was delivered, acquired all the title that passed or was conveyed by the grant of the alcalde. It also appears that Stephen Harris, two years later, left California, and that he never returned to that State; that he went to New Jersey, where he remained several years, and then removed to Illinois, where, on the 5th of November, 1867, he died, leaving a will, by which he devised his property, including the land in controversy, to the plaintiffs, who are his children.

By the fifth finding of the court it appears that there was no evidence introduced tending to show that the deceased, or the plaintiffs, or any person claiming through or under them, ever improved the land, or was ever in the actual possession or occupation of the land or any part of the same. On the other hand, it appears that Stephen A. Harris, May 1, 1854 conveyed the land to the person named in the sixth finding, by deed in due form, which was duly recorded, and that all the right, title and interest thus acquired by the grantee by sundry mesne conveyances subsequently vested in the defendants for a valuable consideration, without notice of the claim of the plaintiffs or their testator.

There was no evidence to show that any party was in actual occupation of the land January 1, 1855, or at any time between that date and the first day of July of the same year; but the seventh finding of the court shows that one of the grantors of the defendants, in the spring of 1864, took actual possession of the land, claiming title under one of the said mesne conveyances, and that he fenced and occupied the lands, and that he and his several grantees, including the defendants, have since that time to the present been in the actual, peaceable, open, continuous, exclusive and adverse possession of the land, claiming title thereto in good faith against all the world, under the said several mesne conveyances.

Section 5 of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1864, relinquished to the city all the right and title of the United States to the lands within the corporate limits of the city, as defined in the Act of incorporation passed by the State Legislature and, of course, the title of the city to those lands became absolute on that day. Lynch v. Bernal, 9 Wall., 316 [76 U. S., XIX., 714]; Montgomery v. Bevans, 1 Sawy., 653; 13 Stat. at L., 333.

Infancy is not set up in this case, and if it were, it could not avail the plaintiffs, as the ninth finding of the court shows that the minor plaintiffs arrived at full age more than a year before the suit was commenced.

Lands lying west of Larkin Street and southwest of Johnson Street were relinquished to the possessors, subject to the right of the city to take possession of the same if wanted for public purposes, without compensation; but the lot in controversy is not within that reservation, as the first finding of the court shows that it is situated northwest of Johnson Street.

Appended to the findings of fact are the conclusions of law pronounced by the circuit court. They are as follows: (1) That the adverse possession of the grantors of the defendants commenced in the spring of 1864, and that the Statute of Limitations began to run as early Subsequent disability does not stop the running of the Statute of Limitations when it has once begun to run. Partridge v. Mitchell, 3 Edw. Ch., 181; Christophers v. Garr, 6 N. Y., 62; Sanford v. Sanford, 62 N. Y., 556; Quivey v. Hall, 19 Cal., 100; Fitzhugh v. Anderson, 2 Hen. & M., 289; S. C., 3 Am. Dec., 625; Faysoux v. Prather, 1 Nott & McC., 296; S. C., 9 Am. Dec., 691; Ruff v. Bull, 7 Har. & J., 14; S. C., 16 Am. Dec., 290; Harvey v. Tobey, 15 Pick., 99; S. C., 25 Am. Dec., 430; Weilborn v. Weaver, 17 Ga., 267; Doe v. Jones, 4 T. R., 300; Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill, 138; S. C., 43 Am. Dec., 306.

When the statute once begins to run, neither insanity nor any other supervening disability arrests its progress. Adamson v. Smith, 2 Mill, 269; S. C., 12 Am. Dec., 665; Clark v. Trail, 1 Met., 35; Allis v. Moore, 2 Allen, 306; Lincoln v. Norton, 36 Vt., 679; Smilie v. Biffle, 2 Pa. St., 52; S. C., 44 Am. Dec., 156.

Death of party having a cause of action against which the statute has commenced to run, will not impede the statute. Swearingen v. Robertson, 39 Wis., 462; Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark., 394; Rogers v. Brown, 6 Mo., 101.

An infant heir can claim no protection against statute which began to run in lifetime of ancestor. Jackson v. Moore, 13 Johns., 513; S. C., 7 Am. Dec., 389; Daniel v. Day, 51 Ala., 431; Haynes v. Jones, 2

Head, 372; Rogers v. Brown, 61 Mo., 187; Henry v. Carson, 59 Pa. St., 297. Contra, Ladd v. Jackson, 43 Ga., 288; South v. Thomas, 7 B. Mon., 59; Maclin v. May, 4 Bibb., 43; Sentney v. Overton, 4 Bibb., 445.

Party cannot take advantage of successive or cumulative disabilities. He can only avail himself of those which existed when the right first descended or accrued. Angell, Limitations, secs. 477-479; Bensell v. Chancellor, 5 Whart., 371; S. C., 34 Am. Dec., 561; Fritz v. Joiner, 54 Ill., 101; Rankin v. Tenbrook, 6 Watts, 388; DeKay v. Darrah, 2 Green (N. J.), 294; Lynch v. Cox, 23 Pa. St., 265; Rogers v. Brown, 61 Mo., 187; McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt., 165; Harris v. McGovern, supra, 2 Sawy., 615; Mercer v. Selden, 42 U. S. (1 How.), 37; Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S., XXIV., 317; Demarest v. Wynkoop, 3 Johns. Ch., 129; S. C., 8 Am. Dec., 467.

The plaintiff, to prove a disability exempting him from effect of Statute of Limitations, must show that it was a continuing one from the time the cause of action first accrued. Edwards v. University, 1 Dev. & B. Eq., 325; S. C., 30 Am. Dec., 170.

Statute of Limitations does not run against an heir who was under one or more disabilities at the time his right accrued, until all such disabilities are removed. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt., 165; S. C., 44 Am. Dec., 325.

at least as the first day of July of that year, when the title of the city to the municipal lands within its boundaries became perfect under the Act of Congress, to which reference has already been made.

Authorities to show that the facts stated in the seventh finding of the court amount to an adverse possession of the lot in controversy, within the meaning of the state statute, are quite unnecessary, as the proposition is too plain for argument. Ang. Lim., 6th ed., sec. 394; Green v. Litter, 8 Cranch, 239.

Cases frequently arise where the property is so situated as not to admit of use or residence, and in such cases neither actual occupation, cultivation, nor residence are absolutely necessary to constitute legal possession, if the continued claim of the party is evidenced by such public acts of ownership as the owner would exercise over property which he claimed in his own right, and would not exercise over property which he did not claim. Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet., 41; Jackson v. Howe, 14 Johns., 405; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal., 365; Prop. of Ken. Purchase v. Springer, 4 Mass., 416.

Apply the rule to the case which the foregoing authorities establish, and it is clear that the first conclusion of law adopted by the circuit court is correct, as the seventh finding of facts shows that the defendants, from the date of the Act of Congress, confirming the title of the city to her municipal land to the date of the judgment, were in the actual, peaceable, open, continuous, exclusive and adverse possession of the land, claiming title thereto in good faith against all the world, which is certainly a bar to the plaintiffs' right of action under the statute of the State.

Nor is there any valid objection to the second conclusion of law adopted by the circuit court, which was that the cause of action having accrued and the Statute of Limitations having commenced to run during the lifetime of the deviser of the plaintiffs, the running of the statute was not interrupted by his subsequent decease and the descent of the right of action to the plaintiffs, though minors at the time and under disability to sue.

Decided cases of a standard character support that proposition, and the court is of the opinion that it is correct. Jackson v. Moore, 13 Johns., 513; Jackson v. Robins, 15 Johns., 169; S. C. 16 Johns., 537; Fleming v. Griswold, 3 Hill., 85; Becker v. Van Valkenburgh, 29 Barb., 319.

When the statute once begins to run, says Angell, it will continue to run without being impeded by any subsequent disability. Smith v. Hill, 1 Wils., 134; Ang. Lim., 6th ed., sec. 477; Currier v. Gale, 3 Allen, 328; Duroure v. Jones, 4 T. R., 301; Jackson v. Wheat, 18 Johns., 40; Welden v. Gratz, 1 Wheat., 292.

Decisive support to the third conclusion of the circuit court is also derived from the authorities cited to sustain the second. Continuous adverse possession of the land, say the court in their third conclusion, having been held by the defendants and their grantors for a period of more than five years subsequent to the time when the statute began to run and before the action was commenced, the action is barred, as there was no disability to sue when the cause of action first accrued.

See 9 OTTO.

Suppose that is so; then clearly the defendants were entitled to judgment, and there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

THE SOUTHERN EXPRESS COMPANY,

Appt.,

v.

THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA
RAILROAD COMPANY AND W. W.
ROLLINS ET AL., COMMISSIONERS in possession of the road.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 191-201.)

Corporation—contract by—receiver of railroad—specific performance.

1. The contract of a corporation is presumed to be infra vires, until the contrary is made to appear.
2. A receiver of a railroad appointed in a foreclosure action is the only necessary party defendant in an action to compel the specific performance of a contract made by the railroad company.
3. Such receiver cannot be compelled to perform a contract for the transportation of persons and property over the road made by the railroad company.
4. The enforcement of contracts not relating to realty by a decree for specific performance, is not an unusual exercise of equity jurisdiction. A court of equity never interferes where the power of revocation exists.

[No. 153.]

Argued Jan. 28, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina.

The appellant filed a bill in the court below, for the specific performance of an alleged contract. A decree of dismissal having been entered, the complainant appealed to this court.

Messrs. Clarence A. Seward and Edwin M. Shepherd, for appellants:

The contract created, as between the R. R. Co. and the Express Co., an equitable lien upon the right of occupancy of transportation, and upon an accruing fund which equity will enforce as against all parties having notice thereof.

In Groton Mfg. Co. v. Gardiner, 11 R. L., 626, the parties had made a lease, in which they pledged and bound all improvements in machinery which they might put upon the premises, and the stock of goods which they might have on the premises, for the payment of the rent and for the due performance of all covenants in their lease contained. It was held that this covenant was a contract for a lien when the rent was in arrear, and constituted an equitable lien in favor of the lessors, on personality thereafter put on the leased premises, which took precedence of an attachment laid on such personality by creditors of the lessees.

The same principle was enforced in Smith-hurst v. Edmunds, 14 N. J. Eq., 408; in Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall., 544 (86 U. S., XXII., 183); as against a growing crop of cotton; and in the cases of Pennock v. Coe, 23 How., 117 (64 U. S., XVI., 436); and in Dunham v. Ry. Co., 1 Wall., 254 (68 U. S., XVII., 584), where the court held that a railroad company, authorized to borrow money, may mortgage as security, not only the then acquired property, but such as might be acquired in future. If it may mortgage the property per se, no good reason is perceived why it may not create an equitable lien upon the use of the property which it may incur by an absolute mortgage, which equitable lien the court has power to enforce against all persons subsequently acquiring the property, with notice of the existence of the lien.

The contract between the two Companies was a license for the enjoyment of the occupancy of way and terminal stations, and of the vehicles of the Railway Co. while in transit. Such license was executed by the Express Co., so far as an advance payment of rent was concerned. The payment is called "rent" in the contract. Such license could not be revoked by the R. R. Co., nor could it be revoked by those who purchased, or had notice prior to the attachment of their interest, of the existence of such license.

Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 308; Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt., 374; Wood v. Lake, Sayers, 3; Ameriscoggin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H., 108; Van Rensselaer v. R. R. Co., 1 Hun, 507; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 344.

This being a valuable contract for a right of occupancy of stations and of vehicles in transit; and it appearing satisfactorily from the bill that the road is not in operation; and it also appearing that the trustees had express notice of the existence of this contract and of the claim of the Express Company thereunder, a court of equity can grant the complainant the relief which it prays for in its bill.

The principle of a court of equity in regard to cases of specific performance concerning mere chattels is, that where courts of law, by awarding damages, can give adequate compensation, courts of equity will not interfere; and, therefore, that principle cannot apply where the defaulting party has become insolvent, and the court of review acts upon this principle.

Ex parte Masterman, 4 L. J. (N. S.), Bankruptcy, 54; Barnes v. Barnes, 65 N. C., 261; Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick., 231; 2 Story, Eq. Pl., 31; Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & S., 590; Bk. v. Seton, 1 Pet., 305.

So this court, in Parker v. Cotton & W. Co., 2 Black, 551 (67 U. S., XVII., 337), said:

"A remedy at law, in order to defeat a suit in equity, must be as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and to its prompt administration, as the remedy in equity."

See, also, Brown v. Pacific Mail Co., 5 Blatchf., 525; Kirkpatrick v. Peshine, 24 N. J. Eq., 206; Trustees v. Lynch, 70 N. Y., 440.

Mr. A. S. Merrimon, for appellees:

The contract does not stipulate for any interest in the road, nor can it be construed like a contract of covenant running with the land.

The parties to the contract did not contemplate that the complainant should have a lien of any kind on the road, or any of the property of the R. R. Co. Any lien intended as against creditors would have been void, unless the instrument creating the same had been duly registered under the laws of North Carolina. The contract was not a mortgage; it created no laborers' lien, or indeed, any lien. And if it had been so intended, the registry laws of North Carolina rendered the same nugatory without registration.

See, Vattel's Revisal, pp. 354, 563.

There is nothing in the nature of the contract that creates an equitable lien. There is no more an equitable lien in this case, than A would have upon the land or railroad of B, where he had loaned the latter $1,000 for general purposes.

The bill does not show by averment that the contract can be performed on the part of the R. R. Co. in specie. What may be the condition of the Company now, as to the rights of other creditors does not appear. The inference is, that the R. R. Co. has ceased to have control of the road; that all its property has passed into the hands and control of others; and who such persons are, does not appear.

The remedy at law is adequate, and the complainant is not, on that ground, entitled to the relief sought by the bill. The mere fact that the R. R. Co. may be insolvent raises no equity. There is no ground of advantage in favor of the complainant as against other creditors, who advanced money by loan or otherwise, to build and repair the road. Other creditors took the mortgage of the Company's property to secure the debt. This they had a right to do.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill avers that it was filed against the receiver appointed by the court below, that he was in possession of the railroad, and that the institution of the suit was by the consent of the court. Without this latter fact the bill could not have been filed or maintained. The suit would have been a contempt of the court which had appointed the receiver, and punishable as such. Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall., 203 [83 U. S., XXI., 447].

The citizenship of the complainant Corporation is sufficiently averred. Express Co. v. Kountze, 8 Wall., 342 [75 U. S., XIX., 457]. Such a complainant need not prove its existence, unless the fact is directly put in issue by the defendant. Soc. for Prop. Gosp. v. Paulet, 4 Pet., 480.

To the objection that the requisite corporate power of the complainant is not shown, there are two answers. The contract of a corporation is presumed to be infra vires, until the contrary is made to appear. 2 Waite, Act. and Def., 334.

The charter is set out in the record, and forms a part of it. That leaves no room for doubt upon the subject.

Adequate capacity on the part of the Railroad Company to make the contract is to be presumed in like manner.

No party defendant was necessary but the receiver. He was in the possession of the property and effects of the Railroad Company, subject to the order of the court, and could have specifically performed the contract, or paid back the money loaned if the court had so directed. The presence of the other parties was immaterial, and the bill might well have been dismissed as to them Davis v. Gray, supra; Doggett v. R. R. Co., recently decided by this court and not yet reported [ante, 301].

The contract between the Express Company and the Railroad Company was that the latter should give to the former the necessary facilities for the transaction of all its business upon the road, forward without delay by the passenger trains both ways all the express matter that should be offered, do all in its power to promote the convenience of the Express Company, both at the way and terminal stations, and carry free of charge the messengers in charge of the express matter, and the officers and agents of the Express Company passing over the road on express business. The consideration for these stipulations was a loan by the Express Company to the Railroad Company of $20,000, to be expended in repairs and equipments for the road, the loan to bear interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and the payment of fifty cents per hundred pounds for all express matter carried over the road. The latter was to be applied in discharge of the loan and interest. The contract was to continue for one year from the first day of January, 1866, and until the principal and interest of the debt were fully paid. The bill avers that the receiver had refused to carry out the contract, and that the principal of $20,000 and a part of the interest were unpaid.

The enforcement of contracts not relating to realty by a decree for specific performance is not an unusual exercise of equity jurisdiction. Such cases are numerous in both English and American jurisprudence. They proceed upon the ground that under the circumstances a judgment at law would not meet the demands of justice, that it would be less beneficial than relief in equity, that the damages would not be an accurate satisfaction, that their extent could not be exactly shown, or that the pursuit of the legal remedy would be attended otherwise with doubt and difficulty.

Judge Story, after an elaborate examination of the subject, thus lays down the general rule: "The just conclusion in all such cases would seem to be that courts of equity ought not to decline the jurisdiction for a specific performance of contracts whenever the remedy at law is doubtful in its nature, extent, operation, or adequacy." 2 Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 728; see, also, Stuyvesant v. Mayor of N. Y., 11 Paige, 414; Barr v. Lapsley, 1 Wheat., 151; Storer v. Ry. Co., 2 You. & C. (N. R.), 48; Wilson v. Furness R. R. Co., L. R., 9 Eq., 28.

But we need not pursue the subject further, because there is one provision of the contract in this case which is fatal to the relief sought. A court of equity never interferes where the power of revocation exists. Fry, Specif. Perform., 64.

The contract stipulates that after the first year it shall cease upon the payment of the $20,000 and interest. This might be made immediately upon the rendition of the decree. The action of the court would thus become a nullity.

There is another objection to the appellant's case which is no less conclusive.

The road is in the hands of the receiver appointed in a suit brought by the bond holders to foreclose their mortgage. The appellant has no lien. The contract neither expressly nor by implication touches that subject. It is not a license as insisted by counsel. It is simply a contract for the transportation of persons and property over the road. A specific performance by the receiver would be a form of satisfaction or payment which he cannot be required to make. As well might he be decreed to satisfy the appellant's demand by money, as by the service sought to be enforced. Both belong to the lien holders, and neither can be thus diverted.

See 9 OTTO.

The appellant can, therefore, have no locus standi in a court of equity.

Both these objections appear by its own showing. It was, therefore, competent and proper for the court below, sua sponte, to dismiss the bill for the want of equity upon its face. Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S., 37 [XXIII., 200].

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Cited—11 N. W. Rep., 268; 47 Mich., 455; 41 Am. Rep., 722.

DEWITT C. FARRELL ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 221-224).

Tax on liquors.

That the high wines or distilled spirits mentioned in a distiller's warehousing bond were entirely destroyed by fire, without any fault, negligence, or carelessness on his part, does not relieve the obligors in the bond from liability to pay the government tax upon the liquors thus destroyed.
[No. 816.]

Submitted Jan. 13, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The United States sued and obtained judgment in the court below, upon a certain distiller's bond.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. E. B. McCagg and S. D. Puterbaugh, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence given in the court below we cannot consider. It is improperly brought before us. The circuit court made no special finding of facts. All the finding it made was, that the high wines or distilled spirits mentioned in the distiller's warehousing bond were entirely destroyed by fire, without any fault, negligence or carelessness on the part of the distiller, or of any person in charge of the distillery and bonded warehouse in the employment of the distiller; that they were so destroyed while in the bonded warehouse connected with the distillery, and that the warehouse was in the charge of an internal revenue storekeeper. The single question, therefore, is, whether these facts thus found relieve the obligors in the bond from liability to pay the government tax upon the liquors thus destroyed. We think they do not. The bond was dated on the 13th of June, 1870. It bound the obligors in a penal sum, conditioned to pay the taxes on the spirits deposited in the warehouse before their removal, and within one year from the date thereof. The obligation was unconditional, and it was exactly that which the distiller and his sureties were by the Act of Congress required to assume. Act of July 20, 1868, sec. 23; 16 Stat. at L., 135, 136. Depositing distilled spirits in a government warehouse did not make them the property of the Government, or cause them to be held at the risk of the bailee. The property remained in the distiller, and the risk of loss by fire or any other casualty was, consequently, his. He and his sureties undertook to pay the government tax upon the spirits in the warehouse within one year, with no exception for any possible contingency. The judgment of the circuit court, was, therefore, correct. The case of the distiller may be a hard one; but his misfortune is not the fault of the Government. He might have protected himself by insurance, and possibly he did; or he might have obtained relief under the Act of Congress of May 27, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 162. By that Act Congress has provided a way in which a remission of the tax upon distilled liquors, casually destroyed while in the custody of a revenue officer in a bonded warehouse, may be obtained. The provision of such a mode of relief indicates a purpose to exclude any other.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is, therefore, affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

WALTER PUGH.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 265-272.)

Abandoned and captured property, recovery for—review of judgment—findings—money presumed in treasury.

1. The Abandoned and Captured Property Act, as extended by the Act of July 2, 1864, authorizes a recovery in the Court of Claims for the proceeds of property captured and sold by the military authorities, without judicial condemnation, after July 17, 1862, and before Mar. 12, 1863, but accounted for and credited by the Secretary of the Treasury to the abandoned and captured property fund in the treasury.

2. The judgment of the Court of Claims, as to the legal effect of the ultimate circumstantial facts in a case, may be reviewed in this court.

3. When the rights of the parties depend upon circumstantial facts alone, and there is doubt as to the legal effect of the facts, it is the duty of the Court of Claims, when requested, to so frame its findings as to put the doubtful question into the record.

4. The money sued for will be presumed to be in the treasury, within the meaning of the Abandoned and Captured Property Act, when the property in question was sold, and an account of sales stated by the Sequestration Commission, and the Chief Quartermaster received, at various times, from the commission, the proceeds of property sold, which were duly accounted for to the treasury.

[No. 227.]

Submitted Dec. 6, 1878. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The petition filed in the court below by the appellee claims the proceeds of certain sugar and molasses. That court found the facts to be as follows:

I. In December, 1862, the claimant was in possession as owner, of a plantation in Louisiana. The sugar and molasses described in the petition were a part of the products of such plantation, and were stored thereon and in the possession of the claimant's agents.

II. In December, 1862, the said sugar and molasses were seized by the military forces of the United States and turned over to a military commission known as the Sequestration Commission, Jan. 12, 1863. The commission was directed by General Order No. 8, Department of the Gulf, "To sell, at public auction, all property in its possession that has not been or may not be claimed or released, except such as may be required for the use of the army, and turn over the proceeds thereof to the Chief Quartermaster." The said sugar and molasses were then in the possession of the commission. On the 4th February, 1863, the commission caused the same to be sold, with other property, at public auction in New Orleans. By the accounts kept by the commission, it appears that the net proceeds of the sugar and molasses amounted to $4,362.23. It does not appear specifically that the proceeds were paid over to the Chief Quartermaster of the Department of the Gulf, but it appears, and the court finds the fact to be, that he received money at various times in the year 1863, from the sales of sugar and molasses in New Orleans, to the amount of $33,796.02. For this amount the chief quartermaster accounted on the final settlement of his accounts, and the same was credited by the Secretary of the Treasury to the "Abandoned and Captured Property Fund" in the Treasury.

Upon the foregoing facts and those found on the requests of parties, the conclusion of law is, the claimant is entitled to recover $4,362.23.

The defendant appealed to this court.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty.-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. Edward Janin, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions are presented by the finding of facts in this case, to wit:

1. Does the Abandoned and Captured Property Act, as extended by the Act of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 375, authorize a recovery in the Court of Claims for the proceeds of property captured and sold by the military authorities, without judicial condemnation, after July 17, 1862, and before March 12, 1863, but accounted for and credited by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Abandoned and Captured Property Fund in the Treasury?

2. Does it appear that the proceeds sued for in this case were actually paid into the Treasury?

The first of these questions has been often the subject of consideration in the Court of Claims, but has never, until now, been brought here for determination. It was first decided adversely to the United States as early as 1867, in Bar-ringer's Case, 3 Ct. of Cl., 358; and although that court has ruled the same way many times since, no appeal was taken by the Government until the rendition of this judgment in 1876. Under these circumstances, we ought not to disturb what may fairly be considered a rule of decision in that court acquiesced in by the United States, unless the error is manifest.

The Abandoned and Captured Property Act was, undoubtedly, intended to be prospective only in its operation. It provided the mode by which that class of property was thereafter to be collected and disposed of, and directed what should be done with the proceeds. By the Act of July 17, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 589, the seizure of certain kinds of property owned by those engaged in the rebellion, and an application of the property or its proceeds to the support of the Army of the United States, were authorized.

This Act contemplated, however, a condemnation of the property by judicial proceedings in rem, instituted in the name of the United States in some court having jurisdiction of the territory within which the property was found, or to which it might be removed. The title did not pass by a seizure under the authority of this Act until a decree of condemnation was rendered.

The 6th section of the Abandoned and Captured Property Act made it the duty of every officer or soldier of the Army of the United States, who took or received any abandoned property, or cotton, sugar, rice or tobacco, from persons in the insurrectionary districts, or who had it under his control, to turn it over to the treasury agent provided for in the Act, and take a receipt therefor. As the property captured in this case had been sold by the Sequestration Commission before this Act took effect, no question arises as to whether, after the Act did take effect, the property should have been turned over to the proper treasury agent, or proceeded against for condemnation under the Act of 1862. Having been converted into money by the action of the capturing military authorities, without judicial condemnation, there was nothing left for the treasury agent to do; and as the property had been released from custody, there could be no proceeding against it in rem.

By section 3 of the Act of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 375, sections 1 and 6 of the Abandoned and Captured Property Act were extended so as to include every description of property mentioned in the Act of 1862. This has been supposed by the Court of Claims to give that court jurisdiction over cases for the recovery of money actually paid into the treasury as the proceeds of property captured after July 17, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 589, and before March 12, 1863. Barringer's Case, supra; Mrs. Minor's Case, 6 Ct. of Cl., 393; Terry & Carne's Case, 8 Ct. of Cl., 277; Miss Moore's Case, 10 Ct. of Cl., 375. It is also understood to have been the practice of the Executive Departments of the Government from the beginning, to credit the abandoned and captured fund in the treasury with the proceeds of all property captured after July 17, 1862, and before March 12, 1863, paid over to the quartermasters, and accounted for by them in their settlements with the Treasury Department. No distinction was made in this particular between captures after March 12, 1863, and those before. It is a familiar rule of interpretation, that in the case of a doubtful and ambiguous law, the contemporaneous construction of those who have been called upon to carry it into effect is entitled to great respect. Edward v. Darby, 12 Wheat., 210. While, therefore, the question is one by no means free from doubt, we are not inclined to interfere, at this late day, with a rule which has been acted upon by the Court of Claims and the Executive for so long a time. Besides, the interpretation which has been given the Act, is in strict accordance with the well settled policy of the Government not to enforce the right of capture during the late war against the property of the inhabitants of the insurrectionary districts, without giving the owners an opportunity of proving in a court of justice that, although they were in law enemies, they were in fact friends of the United States. Under the Act of 1862 this proof might be made in the suit for condemnation, and under the Abandoned and Captured Property Act, in a suit instituted to recover the proceeds in the Treasury. Under these circumstances, it can hardly be considered a forced construction of the Act of 1864 to hold, as has been done, that it was intended to subject the proceeds in the Treasury, of property captured after July 17, 1862, and sold without judicial condemnation before March 12, 1863, to the same suits that were allowed in cases of captures and sales after that date. If this practice is not supported by the exact letter of the law, it is by the spirit, and is certainly just. We are not disposed to change it.

See 9 OTTO.

The second question presents for consideration a subject of much importance connected with the practice under our rule, in reference to appeals from the Court of Claims, which requires "a finding" by that court, "of the facts in the case established by the evidence, in the nature of a special verdict, but not the evidence establishing them." The ultimate fact to be determined in this case is, whether the proceeds of the sale of the captured property belonging to the claimant have been paid into the Treasury. No direct proof to that effect has been given, but if shown at all, it is by way of inference from certain circumstantial facts which have been established by the evidence. These circumstantial facts are set forth in the finding which has been sent here as the finding upon which alone the judgment was rendered, and as the case stands, the question we are to decide is, whether those facts are sufficient to support the judgment. Confessedly, the court has found all the facts which have been directly established by the evidence. These facts are not evidence, in the sense that evidence means the statements of witnesses or documents produced in court for inspection. They are the results of evidence, and whether they establish the ultimate fact to be reached is, if a question of fact at all, to say the least, in the nature of a question of law. If what has been found is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the legal equivalent of a direct finding that the proceeds of this claimant's property have been paid into the Treasury, the judgment is right; otherwise, it is wrong. The inquiry thus presented is as to the legal effect of facts proved, not of the evidence given to make the proof; and the question of practice to be settled is, whether, under our rule, the judgment of the Court of Claims as to the legal effect of what may, perhaps not improperly, be called the ultimate circumstantial facts in a case, is final and conclusive, or whether it may be brought here for review on appeal.

From what is said by the Court of Claims in Ross's Case, 12 Ct. of Cl., 565, and by the reporters in a note, 11 Ct. of Cl., 344, we are led to suppose that the Court of Claims understands that our decisions in U. S. v. Ross, 92 U. S., 281 [XXIII., 707] and Intermingled Cotton Cas., 92 U. S., 651 [XXIII., 756], leave this question somewhat in doubt. To avoid misapprehension in the future, we take this opportunity to say, that we not only think such a judgment may be reviewed here if the question is properly presented, but that when the rights of the parties depend upon circumstantial facts alone, and there is doubt as to the legal effect of the facts, it is the duty of the court, when requested, to so frame its findings as to put the doubtful question into the record. This would not require us on the appeal to decide upon the weight of evidence. That is done in the court below, when the particular fact is found which the evidence tends to prove. The effect of mere evidence stops when the fact it proves is established. After that the question is as to the effect of the fact; and when the evidence in a case has performed its part and brought out all the facts that have been proved, these facts thus established are to be grouped, and their legal effect as a whole determined. If the case could come here in such a form as to require us to consider the evidence, we should be required to trace the evidence to its logical results, find in this way all the facts that had been proven, and then declare the final legal conclusion. The rule relieves us from the necessity of considering the evidence at all, and confines our attention to the legal effect upon the rights of the parties of the facts proven as they have been sent up from the court below. In this way the weight of the evidence is left for the sole consideration of the court below, but the ultimate effect of the facts which the direct evidence has established is left open for review here on appeal. The position which the case occupies when it comes here under such circumstances is precisely the same as it would be if the facts, instead of being found by the court, had been agreed upon by the parties, and their agreement embodied in the record.

In U. S. v. Crussell, 14 Wall., 1st [81 U. S., XX., 821], the question was, whether the particular facts found justified the conclusion that the money sued for had been paid into the Treasury; and inasmuch as the legal presumption is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the officers of the Government perform their duties when called upon to act in their official capacities, we thought that the law would infer from the facts found that the money which ought to have been paid over by a quartermaster to his superior officer was actually paid over, and that in this way it had reached the Treasury. So in the Intermingled Cotton Cases, supra, when it was found that the cotton of the several claimants contributed to and formed part of the captured mass from which the cotton sold was taken, we concluded that the claimants were entitled to their respective shares of the money in the Treasury as the proceeds of the sale. In U. S. v. Ross [supra], however, we thought a similar conclusion from the particular facts there found was too remote, and so reversed the judgment and sent the cause back for a new trial. The premises we considered too uncertain to justify the inference that had been drawn. We thought independent and material facts were wanting, and that the law would not raise the presumption from what did appear, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The difficulty in that case was not as to the power of this court to act upon the facts as found, but as to the sufficiency of the facts to support the judgment.

Upon the facts found in this case we have no difficulty in presuming that the money sued for is in the Treasury, within the meaning of the Abandoned and Captured Property Act. The Sequestration Commission was directed to sell captured property, and turn the proceeds over to the Chief Quartermaster. The property in question was sold, and an account of sales stated by the commission. The case shows that at various times during the year 1863 the Chief Quartermaster received from the commission the proceeds of sugar and molasses sold, amounting in the aggregate to $33,796.02, and that this amount was all duly accounted for to the Treasury, and there passed to the credit of the fund. This has always been treated in that department as equivalent to an actual payment into the Treasury. In June, 1863, the commission refused the application of the wife of the claimant for a restoration of the proceeds. This raises the presumption that down to that time the money had not been released; and as it is specially found that it does not appear what did become of the money unless it was paid over, as it should have been, to the Chief Quartermaster, we think the law will presume it was disposed of as the order of the commanding general required it should be. If any evidence to the contrary exists, the burden was cast upon the United States to produce it. Until the presumption in favor of the claimant is repelled, the law gives him the right to the judgment he has obtained.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cited—105 U. S., 695; 107 U. S., 406, 503; 110 U. S., 485.

NATHAN MYRICK ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

BENJAMIN THOMPSON.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 291-297.)

Sale of land scrip—Indian lands—location—federal questions.

1. An agreement made by a holder of certificates or scrip for land in Minnesota Territory, set apart for the Sioux half-breeds, issued by the President in pursuance of a law of Congress, that he would secure the title to the land located under such certificates or scrip, to be lawfully vested in another, for a consideration agreed upon, is not void under the Treaty of July 15, 1830, made at Prairie du Chien, or the Act of Congress approved July 17, 1854.

2. The provision authorizing the scrip to be located upon unoccupied lands, was for the benefit and protection of occupants of the land, which such occupant might waive; and if he did, the effect would be to restore the premises occupied by him to the condition of unoccupied land.

3. That the holders of such certificates or scrip were forbidden to transfer the same does not render such an agreement invalid.

4. Where the federal questions involved in a case were correctly decided by the State Supreme Court, the judgment of that court must be affirmed, without determining any other questions not of a federal character.

[No. 147.]

Submitted Jan. 24, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota.

The case, which arose in the District Court of Ramsey County, Minnesota, is fully stated by the court.

Mr. C. K. Davis and Morris Lamprey, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. E. C. Palmer, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Lands in the Territory of Minnesota had been set apart for the use and benefit of the Sioux half-breeds, and the President was empowered to make a new arrangement with them, and for that purpose was authorized to issue to such of them as would relinquish to the United States their title to the reservation, certificates or scrip for an amount of land equal to what they would be entitled in case the reservation should be divided among them, and the Act provided that the certificates or scrip might be located upon any of the lands within the reservation not occupied by actual and bona fide settlers of the tribe, * * * or upon any other unoccupied lands subject to preemption or private sale, or upon any other unsurveyed lands not reserved by government, upon which they have respectively made improvements. 10 Stat. at L., 304.

Certificates or scrip of the kind were held by the defendant as attorney in fact of the half-breeds named in the petition, and it appears that he placed the same with his powers of attorney in the hands of the plaintiff, with the view to the location of the same for the benefit of the beneficiaries. Contemporaneous with the delivery of those papers the plaintiff and defendant entered into the written agreement set forth in the petition, in which the defendant agreed that upon the location of the scrip he would secure the title to the land located to be lawfully vested in the plaintiff, in consideration of which the plaintiff agreed to pay the defendant the sum of $2,800 in one year from the date of the note, and to secure the payment of the same upon the land located as soon as he, the plaintiff, shall acquire the title to the same.

Difficulties attended the location, which were overcome in the manner set forth in the petition; and the plaintiff avers that he made all the locations as stipulated in the written agreement, and alleges that the defendant neglects and refuses to comply with his part of the agreement; that, instead of doing so, he has fraudulently caused the lands located to be conveyed to his wife, the other defendant in the case, and that she now holds the same, or the principal part thereof, without consideration and in fraud of the just rights of the plaintiff in this action. Many other matters are alleged in the complaint, which, being immaterial in this investigation, are omitted.

What the plaintiff demands against the defendants is the judgment and decree of the court for a specific performance of the said written agreement, that the defendants convey to him one-fourth part of the lands first described and the entire fee in all the parcels last described, and that the decree of the court shall stand and be effectual to convey the title to the plaintiff.

Service was made, and the defendants appeared and filed an answer setting up several defenses, no one of which involves any federal question. They admit the execution of the written agreement, and that the certificates or scrip were located by the plaintiff. Nothing of the kind is in controversy; but they deny that the quantity of land located is correctly set forth, or that the fees and expenses paid by the plaintiff exceeded $50. Sales and deeds of the lands located they admit were made by the first named defendant as alleged, but they aver in the answer that they first and in repeated instances requested the plaintiff to pay the note and take the title, and that he refused so to do, alleging as a reason that he could not raise the money; and they deny that the sales were made with intent to cheat or defraud the plaintiff. Every such imputation is denied; and the defendants set up as a defense that the arrangement contracted in the written agreement was, by the mutual consent and understanding of the parties, abandoned, and that the defendants have ever since and now hold the note as canceled, and are ready and willing to surrender the same to the plaintiff.

Sundry explanations are also given in respect to the several conveyances through which the title to the lands passed into the hands of the wife of the principal defendant, from which it appears that the deed to her was a voluntary conveyance; but the defendants allege that she subsequently purchased the same of the beneficiaries, for which deeds she paid a valuable consideration to the respective grantors.

Proofs were taken, and the parties heard by the court without a jury; and the record shows that the court made a special finding of the facts, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, to the effect that the defendants convey to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns forever, the land and lots therein described, to which description of the land and lots is appended the following: "And that this decree shall stand in place of a conveyance of said premises to said plaintiff by said defendants, and be effectual to convey the title to said land and lots to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns forever."

Due appeal was taken by the defendants to the Supreme Court of the State, where the parties were again heard upon the finding of facts, certified from the subordinate court, and the State Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the State District Court. Proceedings in these courts being at an end, the defendants sued out a writ of error and removed the cause into this court.

Appended to the writ of error is the assignment of errors filed by the defendants, which is that the plaintiff has no ground of action except upon the agreement set out in his complaint, which is void under the Act of Congress approved July 17, 1854, and under the Treaty of July 15, 1830, made at Prairie du Chien. 7 Stat. at L., 330; 10 Stat. at L., 304.

Sufficient appears to show that the theory of defense presented in the assignment of errors was not set up in the answer, nor does the record furnish any support to the proposition that any such question was raised or decided in the court of original jurisdiction. Evidence to support the theory that the question stated in the assignment of errors was discussed and decided in the Supreme Court of the State is found in the opinion of that court as published in the record, and inasmuch as that question is raised in the assignment of errors exhibited in the brief, the court is of the opinion that the case to that extent is properly here for re-examination.

Enough has already been remarked to show that the parties waived a jury in the court where the action was commenced, and submitted the evidence to the determination of the court invested with that jurisdiction. Special findings were made by the court as the basis of their conclusions of law, and on appeal the Supreme Court of the State adopted the findings of the subordinate court as the basis of fact for their judgment. Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is quite clear that the findings of fact exhibited in the record are not the proper subject of review in this court, nor will it be necessary to reproduce those findings, as they are fully set forth in the record and in the official volume of the State Reports. Thompson v. Myrick, 20 Minn. 207.

Reference either to the record or to that case will show that the subordinate court found as a conclusion of law that the plaintiff below was entitled to judgment, directing and decreeing that the defendants should convey to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns forever, the one undivided fourth part of the lands so located by the plaintiff as aforesaid in the name of the said beneficiaries, and the whole of the seventeen lots otherwise described; and that in case the defendants should fail to convey the lands as directed, the decree of the court shall stand in place of such conveyance.

From the opinion of the Supreme Court it also appears that the defendants, through their counsel, made several points to show that the judgment of the subordinate court was erroneous, the first of which was that the agreement set out in the complaint is void under the said Act of Congress and the Treaty made at Prairie du Chien. By the 9th article of the Treaty a certain tract of land was set apart for the half-breeds of the Sioux Nation, and the United States agreed to suffer said half-breeds to occupy said tract of country, they holding by the same title and in the same manner that other Indian titles are held. 7 Stat. at L. 330.

Certain rights of occupancy were, doubtless, guarantied to the half-breeds by that article of the Treaty; but the record furnishes no ground to suppose or even to suspect that the agreement in the case did or could interfere with or impair any right which the Treaty conferred, which is all that need be said upon that subject. Congress, by the Act referred to, authorized the President to make an exchange with the half-breeds for their rights in that reservation, by issuing to them certificates or scrip for the amount of land before described, which said certificates or scrip the Act provided might be located upon any of the lands within the reservation, * * * or upon any other unoccupied lands subject to pre-emption or private sale, or upon any other unsurveyed lands not reserved by the government, upon which they have respectively made improvements.

Attempt, it seems, was made in the argument of the case in the Supreme Court of the State to show that the terms of the agreement were in conflict with the provisions of the Act of Congress; but the answer which that court made to the proposition, though brief, is satisfactory and decisive. Outside of the pleadings, the defendants, it seems, contended in the Supreme Court of the State that, by the terms of the agreement between the parties to it, the scrip was to be located on land occupied by the plaintiff and, consequently, that the agreement was void as contravening the regulations which the Act of Congress prescribed; to which the court responded, that the provision authorizing the scrip to be located upon "unoccupied lands" was evidently framed for the benefit and protection of occupants of the land, and that if the occupant saw fit, as the plaintiff did in this case, to locate the scrip upon land occupied by himself, there could be no objection to the location, as the occupant might waive his right to object and abandon his occupancy; and that if he did, the effect would be to restore the premises to the condition of unoccupied land.

Plain as that proposition is, it is not deemed necessary to pursue the argument, as the statement of it is sufficient to secure for it universal assent.

Suppose that is so; still it is insisted by the defendant that the agreement is repugnant to the provisions of the Act of Congress, because it contemplates that the location of the scrip may be made upon land other than that upon which the beneficiaries "have respectively made improvements;" to which the State Supreme Court answered, that the clause of the Act referred to qualifies the phrase "other unsurveyed lands," instead of the phrase "other unoccupied lands," as is supposed by the defendants, which, in the judgment of the court, is the correct construction of the provision in the Act of Congress applicable to the subject.

Support to that view is also derived from the contemporaneous construction given to it by the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, as appears from the circulars issued by him for the guide and direction of all engaged in making such locations under the Act of Congress authorizing the President to issue such certificate or scrip to the half-breeds therein mentioned. 1 Lester, Land L., 628; 2 Lester, Land L., 369.

Holders of such certificates or scrip were forbidden to transfer the same, and the defendants contended that the real object of the agreement was to effect a transfer of the same; but the State Supreme Court overruled the defense, and referred to one of their former decisions, assigning the reasons for their conclusion that the defense was not well founded. Gilbert v. Thompson, 14 Minn., 544.

Since the cause was submitted, the opinion of the court in that case has been carefully examined, and the court here concurs with the state court that the case is applicable to the present case, and that the reasons given for the conclusion are satisfactory and conclusive. For these reasons the court is of the opinion that the federal questions involved in the record as set forth in the assignment of errors were decided correctly by the State Supreme Court.

Six other defenses were set up by the defendants, as appears by the opinion of the State Supreme Court, no one of which involves any federal question. They are as follows: (1) That the agreement is void on common law ground on account of the relation which the principal defendant bore to the grantees of the scrip. (2) That, by the terms of the agreement, the payment of the note by the plaintiff is a condition precedent to the right to specific performance. (3) That the contract is not one which a court of equity will enforce, because it is not a contract for a conveyance, but for services to be rendered by the plaintiff to procure a conveyance from the said beneficiaries. (4) That the findings of the court show that the agreement was abandoned by mutual consent. (5) That the circumstances disclosed show that it would be inequitable to enforce the agreement. (6)

That the action is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Remarks are not necessary to show that none of these several defenses present any federal question for re-examination; and having already decided that the federal questions involved in the case were correctly decided by the State Supreme Court, the settled rule of this court is that the judgment must be affirmed, without determining the other questions not of a federal character. Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall., 590 (87 U. S., XXII., 429).

Judgment affirmed.

THOMAS KEELY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

XENOPHON B. SANDERS ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 441-449.)

Commissioner's certificate of sale of lands—taxes—state injunction—description of lands—sale—notice to owners—presumption of regularity—City of Memphis.

1. A certificate of tax sale, given in accordance with section 7 of the Act of June 7, 1862, as amended by the Act of Feb. 6, 1863, is prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of the tax sale and of the title of the purchaser under it.

2. It can only be affected, as evidence of the regularity and validity of the sale, by establishing the fact that the property was not subject to taxes, or that the taxes had been paid previously to the sale, or that the property had been redeemed.

3. No state court can, by injunction or otherwise, prevent federal officers from collecting federal taxes.

4. In describing lands to be sold at a tax sale, the description is sufficient if it identifies the land, and informs the owner of the claim made upon his property.

5. It is no objection to the validity of the sale that, while the taxes due bore but a small proportion to the value of the property, the commissioners sold it as an entirety without subdivision.

6. The proceeding to collect a tax is a proceeding in rem, of all stages of which the owners have legal notice; the commissioners are not bound to hunt them up.

7. The law presumes, until the contrary is shown that persons acting in a public office have been duly appointed and are acting with authority.

8. The City of Memphis was an insurrectionary district within the meaning of section 6 of the Act of 1862.

[No. 108.]

Submitted Jan. 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

The bill in this case was filed by the defendants in error in the Chancery Court of Shelby Co., Tenn., to amend a certain tax sale. A decree having been given in their favor and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State, the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Wm. M. Randolph and Fillmore Beall, for plaintiff in error.

No counsel appeared for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

In the courts of the State this was a bill to NOTE.—Sale of land for taxes—strict compliance with the statute necessary. See note to Williams v. Peyton, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.), 77.

See 9 OTTO.

quiet title to a parcel of ground in the City of Memphis, filed against the appellant, who claims to be the owner by virtue of a sale for direct taxes made on the 24th day of June, 1864. The appellant holds a certificate of tax sale, No. 1054, given to him in accordance with the Act of June 7, 1863. The force and effect of that certificate we have had occasion to consider recently in the case of De Treville v. Smalls, not yet reported [ante, 174]. By the Act of Congress it is made prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of the tax sale and of the title of the purchaser under it, and it is enacted that it shall only be affected as evidence of the regularity and validity of the sale by establishing the fact that the property was not subject to taxes, or that the taxes had been paid previously to the sale, or that the property had been redeemed according to the provisions of the Act. The bill assails the title of the appellant, and charges that the sale made to him was null and void, for ten different reasons, which it assigns. Most of them are assertions of fact, denied in the answer and sustained by no proof. Among the charges is one that at the time of the tax sale the property was in custodia legis, and that under orders of the state court in which the lis was pending, all creditors, individual, state and federal, were enjoined from selling or interfering with the same. This, of course, was susceptible of proof only by the record. But no such record was produced. All that was submitted was the parol testimony of a witness, that the Chancery Court and the Supreme Court had both taken jurisdiction of the property, and ordered sales of the same, or parts thereof, to pay the debts of the decedent owner. Waiving, however, objection to this mode of proof, we do not perceive that the fact charged, if it was a fact, had any tendency to impair the validity of the tax sale. Such a sale did not disturb any possession which the state court had of the property; and no state court could, by injunction or otherwise, prevent federal officers from collecting federal taxes. The Government of the United States, within its sphere, is independent of state action; and certainly it would be a strange thing if a state court by its action could relieve property subject to federal taxation from liability to pay the taxes, when they are due.

Secondly, the bill charges that the property was misdescribed in the publication, orders of sale, and in the sale itself, and that no legal or proper notice of the sale was ever given by advertisement or otherwise. There is, however, no proof of any material misdescription. The lot was described as follows: "Market Street and Thornton Avenue part of country lot five hundred and six (506) two acres, assessed to Sanders and Perkins in 1860, fifth civil district, City of Memphis." That this was a true description, quite sufficient to identify the property, is not denied. Nor is it denied that it is the same as that made in the state assessment of 1860. But it is charged that though the property was part of lot 506, as described, the part sold was known as portions of lots 19 and 3, allotted to the heirs and devisees of Sanders. It was not, however, described in the state assessment by those numbers, and mentioning those numbers in the description made by the tax commissioners would have added nothing to its certainty.

The purposes in describing lands to be sold at a tax sale, says Judge Cooley, in his Law of Taxation, p. 284, "are: first, that the owner may have information of the claim made upon him or his property; second, that the public, in case the tax is not paid, may be notified what land is to be offered for sale for the non-payment; and, third, that the purchaser may be enabled to obtain a sufficient conveyance." "If the description is sufficient for the first purpose, it will ordinarily be sufficient for the others also." There can be no doubt that the description in this case was all that was needed to identify the land, and to inform Sanders' heirs or devisees, who are the complainants in the bill, of the claim made upon their property.

As to the objection that the property was not advertised for sale legally and properly, it is sufficient to say that the Act of Congress makes the commissioners' certificate of sale prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of the sale and of the title of the purchaser. Even if it is not conclusive of the existence of everything antecedent necessary to such regularity and validity, except liability for taxes and their non-payment, it is affirmative evidence controlling until rebutted. In this case, so far from there being any evidence to rebut the prima facie of the certificate, or any evidence to support the allegation of the bill, there is positive testimony that the property was advertised for sale in a newspaper then published in Memphis.

Thus far we have not considered the effect of the proviso to the 7th section of the Act of 1863. That should not be overlooked. After having declared that the commissioners' certificate should be prima facie evidence both of the regularity and validity of the sale, as well as of the title of the purchaser, Congress went further, and enacted that it should be affected as evidence of such regularity, validity and title, only by establishing one or more of three facts: non-liability of the property for taxes; or that the taxes had been paid before the sale; or that the property had been redeemed. Of what possible use was this proviso, unless it was intended to make the certificate conclusive of the validity of the sale and the title of the purchaser, unless it should be impeached by establishing one of the three facts mentioned? If it meant only that proof of the existence of one of those facts should destroy the prima facie effect of the certificate, it was quite superfluous. Without it, if either of those facts existed, a sale would have been invalid, and the certificate good for nothing, no matter how regularly the sale might have been conducted, or how fully and correctly it might have been advertised, or how accurate might have been the assessment. Congress must have had a purpose in the proviso, and what that was it is not difficult to discover. It was not to repeat what had been enacted in the same section. The provisions of the whole Act were designed to enforce the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts, avowedly so. Governmental disturbance in such districts must have been anticipated, as well as only a partial restoration of the ordinary forms of governmental rule, while the districts were under military control, and consequent irregularities in the processes of collecting taxes. Substance therefore, not form, was to be required. Hence the proviso. It secured to land-owners every substantial defense against sales for taxes, and made the sale certificate conclusive of everything else. Such was our opinion expressed in the case of De Treville v. Smalls, and we adhere to it now.

The fourth and fifth objections to the validity of the sale are, that while the taxes due bore but a small proportion to the value of the property, the commissioners sold it as an entirety without subdivision. If this was so, it was a mere irregularity, and by no possibility could it affect the validity of the sale. But it was not even an irregularity. The 7th section of the Act of 1863 required the commissioners to sell the "lot or parcel of land" upon which the tax was assessed, not such parts of it as on trial might prove sufficient to pay the tax. It was not made their duty to subdivide the property.

Another objection urged in the bill against the title acquired by the appellant at the commissioners' sale is, in effect, that the complainant resided in Texas; did not know of the sale until after it was made; that some other person who was interested could not get to Memphis in time to redeem before the commissioners' had left; and that there was no safe communication by travel or otherwise outside the City to Nashville or elsewhere. All this is only asserted as hearsay, and there is no proof that there was ever any attempt to redeem, or any purpose to redeem. On the contrary, the proof is that one of the owners was in the City of Memphis before the commissioners left, and was told he could redeem the property if he wished; but he refused, expressing the opinion that "As soon as the courts got organized it would all be upset." But at best, the objection is wholly unimportant. The law charged the tax upon the land. The proceeding to collect it was a proceeding in rem, of all stages of which the owners had legal notice. It was their duty to pay the tax when it was due. The commissioners were not bound to hunt them up. Turner v. Smith, 14 Wall., 553 [81 U. S., XX., 724]. And it is not claimed that either the commissioners or the purchaser at the sale had any agency in preventing a redemption, or that there was any obstacle in the way thereof that could not easily have been overcome. While it may be admitted that a statutory right of redemption is to be favorably regarded, it is, nevertheless, true, that it is a statutory right exclusively, and can only be claimed in the cases and under the circumstances prescribed. Courts cannot extend the time, or make any exceptions not made in the statute. Redemption cannot be had in equity, Mitchell v. Green, 10 Metc., 101, except as it may be permitted by statute, and then only under such conditions as it may attach. Craig v. Flanagan, 21 Ark., 319. Thus it has been held that the pendency of the civil war, and the fact that the owner resided in another State then in rebellion, cannot enlarge his right to redeem. Fenley v. Brown, 22 Iowa, 538. It is enough, however, for the present case that there was no attempt or even offer to redeem.

There are several other matters charged by the bill as objections to this sale unsustained by evidence, and immaterial.

One more only requires consideration. It is the averment that when the tax sale was made, the military authority of the United States was not established in and over the County of Shelby,

State of Tennessee, nor was it established in any one county, as required by law.

The 6th section of the Act of June 7, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 422, to which the Act of Feb. 6, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 640, was a supplement, enacted that the Board of Tax Commissioners should "Enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office whenever the commanding general of the forces of the United States, entering into an insurrectionary State or district, should have established the military authority throughout any parish or district or county of the same." Manifestly, this was only directory to the commissioners. It was neither a grant nor a limitation of power. By previous sections the tax had been charged upon every parcel of land in the State, and the commissioners had been authorized to fix the amount and receive payment. The 6th section merely directed when their duties should commence.

Further than this, whether the military authority had been established throughout Shelby County before the commissioners entered upon the discharge of their duties, is a political question, to be answered by the executive branch of the government and not by the courts. In its nature it was incapable of being determined by the latter. Successive juries might give to it different and contradictory answers.

That, before the commissioners undertook to enforce the collection of the tax upon the lot in controversy, it had been determined by the Executive that military authority had been established in the district, is plain enough. We know, historically, that the President had appointed a Military Governor of the entire State, and he was in active service as such. No other and civil authority existed. The commissioners themselves were executive officers, and their entering upon the duties of their office was an assumption that the military authority had been established throughout the district. The Act of Congress required no express and formal determination that it had been so established and, therefore, whether it had or not may be inferred from any executive action that assumed it had. Hence, opening an office for the collection of the tax, and proceeding to enforce collection, raised a presumption of the legality of the commissioners' action. The law presumes that persons acting in a public office have been duly appointed, and are acting with authority, until the contrary is shown. And it has been said that if officers of corporations openly exercise a power which presupposes a delegated authority for the purpose, the acts of such officers will be deemed rightful, and the delegated authority will be presumed. Bk. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat., 64.

This is not all of the case in hand. Not only is the averment of the bill that the military authority of the United States was not established in the County of Shelby when the tax sale was made denied by the answer, but the averment is unsustained by proof. The City of Memphis, it is conceded, was in full and undisputed possession of the Federal Army. All that is proved is that the military lines were around the city, at a distance of a mile or so from its corporate limits, and that the remaining part of the county was not in federal occupation. All that is quite consistent with the fact that federal military authority was established over the whole county. No conquering army occupies the entire territory conquered. Its authority is established when it occupies and holds securely the most important places, and when there is no opposing governmental authority within the territory. The inability of any other power to establish and maintain governmental authority therein is the test.

But if it should be conceded that federal military authority had not been established throughout the entire County of Shelby, undeniably it had been over Memphis, where the sale was made and where the lot sold is situated. That city had territorial limits and a municipal organization, with taxing power and assessments distinct from the county of which it was a part. It was in a very proper sense a "district," and, we think, a district within the meaning of the Acts of Congress. Those Acts manifestly had in view not merely the larger civil divisions of a State or Territory, but "portions of a State," "sections of country," or "conquered territory." The title of the Act of 1862 is, "An Act for the Collection of Direct Taxes in Insurrectionary Districts Within the United States, and for Other Purposes," and the 1st section enacted that "When in any State or Territory, or in any portion of any State or Territory, by reason of insurrection or rebellion, the civil authority of the Government of the United States is obstructed, etc., * * * the said direct taxes * * shall be apportioned and charged in each State or Territory, or part thereof, wherein the civil authority is thus obstructed, upon all the lands and lots of ground situate therein, etc." The 2d section required the President to declare by proclamation in what States or "parts of States" the insurrection existed. These provisions make no reference to civil divisions of a State. And when we pass to the 6th section, it is observable that it speaks of an entry of a commanding general into "any such insurrectionary State or district." Here it is plain the word "district" means simply a "part" or "portion" of a State, such as has been previously mentioned. The section then proceeds to direct the commissioner to open offices when the military authority shall have been established throughout any county or parish or district of the same; that is, throughout any district of an insurrectionary district or State. It seems almost an inevitable conclusion that "taxing districts" was meant, and not alone the large divisions, such as counties or Louisiana parishes. "Taxing districts" were in view, as appears also from the 13th section, which contemplated a reference by the commissioners to the records of assessments and valuations previously made; and such districts for taxation had a well known meaning when Congress passed the law. They are portions of a State's territory, described for the purpose of assessment, not necessarily political subdivisions for any other purposes. Our conclusion, therefore, is, that the City of Memphis was a district, within the meaning of the 6th section of the Act of 1862; and for the various reasons we have given, we hold that the objection which we are now considering to the validity of the appellant's title, is without foundation. Upon this mainly, if not alone, the court below appears to have rested its judgment.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee is reversed and the record remitted, with instructions to order a dismissal of the bill.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Field.

Cited—99 U. S., 456, 497.

PATRICK SHERRY ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

ANDREW MCKINLEY AND LUTHER H. THURSTON, Exrs. and Trustees of JOHN MCKINLEY, Deceased, ASHLEY MCKINLEY ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 496-498.)

Case followed—military authority—sale for taxes—presumption.

1. Most of the questions presented in this case were decided in Keely v. Sanders, ante, 327.
2. The military authority of the United States had been established throughout Shelby Co., Tenn., when the tax sales mentioned in this case took place, and the lots were then subject to sale, according to the provisions of the Act of Congress.
3. The effect of the commissioners' certificate of sale was determined in Keely v. Sanders, as also in De Treville v. Smalls, ante, 174.
4. It is to be presumed that the sales were adjourned from day to day until the sale of the land in question. If not, there was but an irregularity which the Act of 1863 rendered ineffective to defeat the title of the purchaser.

[No. 116.]

Submitted Jan. 10, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

The case arose in the Chancery Court of Shelby Co., Tenn., upon a bill to annul a certain tax sale. A decree was rendered in favor of the complainants, and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State; whereupon the respondents sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. Wm. M. Randolph and Fillmore Beall, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. J. B. Heiskell, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

Most of the questions presented in this record received our consideration in the case of Keely v. Sanders, heretofore decided, to which we refer. We shall not repeat what was there said. The sole ground upon which the Supreme Court of the State rested its judgment, that the tax sales were invalid, was, that the military authority of the United States had not been established throughout the County of Shelby when the sales took place and, therefore, that the land was not then subject to sale according to the provisions of the Act of Congress. That this ground cannot be maintained, we held in the former case.

That both the lots sold by the tax commissioners were subject to the tax and that the taxes had not been paid or the land redeemed, is not controverted; and it is also in evidence and not denied, that the Commissioners gave a certificate of sale of each of the lots to Sherry, the purchaser. What the effect of that certificate is, we determined in the case of Keely v. Sanders [ante, 327], as also in that of De Treville v. Smalls, decided a few weeks since [ante, 174]. If it be suggested, though it has not been during the argument, that the sale of lot 32 was of a different lot from that claimed by the plaintiffs, it may be replied that the suggestion is in conflict with the proof.

It is true it was mentioned as "part of Manly tract," which was an obvious mistake that could have misled no one; for there was no such tract, and the remaining portion of the description clearly identified the property. It was as follows: "Lot 32 * * * Six and fifty-eight one hundredths acres (6 $\frac{58}{100}$) assessed to heirs of McKinley (the complainants) in 1860. Fifth civil district (country)."

It is a fair presumption that the description was taken from the state assessment of 1860, and followed it, since there is no evidence to the contrary. The number and the designation of owners are correct. No doubt the description would be sufficient in a deed, since it afforded the owners the means of identification, and could not have misled them. Cooley, Const. Lim., 282.

The objection that the sale was not sufficiently advertised, is met in the cases we have heretofore decided. But in truth it was advertised four weeks before it was made. The tax sales in the district were advertised to commence on the 13th of June, and to continue from day to day until all the lands not redeemed from forfeiture were sold. The sale of the lot now in controversy was made on the 25th day of June, confessedly more than a month after it had been advertised for sale. Lorain v. Smith, 37 Iowa, 67.

It is to be presumed that the sales were adjourned from day to day until June 25th. At most, there was but an irregularity which the Act of 1863 rendered ineffective to defeat the title of the purchaser.

The judgment of the Supreme Court is reversed and the record is remitted, with instructions to order a dismissal of the bill.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Field.

Cited—102 U. S., 594.

I, James H. McKenney, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the opinion of the court in the case of P. Sherry and D. Seaton, Plffs. in Err., v. Andrew McKinley et al., Exrs., etc., et al., No. 116, October Term, 1878, as the same remains upon the files and records of said Supreme Court.

In testimony whereof I hereto subscribe my name and affix the seal of said Supreme Court, at the City of Washington, this 7th day of May, A. D. 1885.

JAMES H. MCKENNEY,
Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

WILLIAM C. WILSON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

SALAMANCA TOWNSHIP, CHEROKEE COUNTY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 499-504.)

Coupons of town bonds—defenses to.

1. In Kansas it is not a defense to an action on coupons, by a bona fide holder for value without notice, that the amount of bonds issued by the town was in excess of the amounts prescribed by the Acts of the State in relation to the taxable property of the town.

2. It is not a defense to such action, that, after a favorable vote of the qualified electors of the township according to law, to subscribe stock in the railroad company, the subscription of stock and the issue of bonds without any further election were made to another company, with which said prior company, in whose favor the vote was had, had become merged and consolidated under a law existing at the time of said election, to form a continuous line.

3. Harshman v. Bates Co., 92 U. S., distinguished. [No. 101.]
Argued Dec. 20, 1878. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

Suit was brought in the court below upon certain bonds. Certain questions arising, upon which the opinions of the Judges were opposed, judgment was given for the defendant, and the questions certified to this court as follows:

First. Whether or not, in said action by a bona fide holder of the interest coupons sued on for value, and without notice, the fact that the amount of bonds, to wit: $75,000, issued by the defendant, was in excess of the amounts prescribed by the Acts of the Legislature of Kansas, approved Feb. 25, 1870, and Mar. 2, 1872, in relation to the assessed taxable property of the defendant at the times of the voting and issuing said bonds, constitute a defense in bar of the plaintiff's causes of action.

Second. Whether or not, in said action by a bona fide holder of the interest coupons sued on for value, without actual notice, the fact that after the order of the Board of County Commissioners for an election, and after a favorable vote by a three fifths majority of the qualified electors of Salamanca Township according to law to subscribe stock in the State Line, Oswego and Southern Kansas R. R. Co., payable in negotiable bonds, to aid in the construction of the railroad, the subscription of stock and the issue of bonds without any further election were made to the Memphis, Carthage and Northwestern R. R. Co., with which said prior company, in whose favor the vote was had, had become merged and consolidated under a law existing at the time of said election, to form a continuous line, is a sufficient defense in bar of the plaintiff's causes of action.

Messrs. Joseph Shippen and T. K. Skinner, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Wallace Pratt, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The first question certified is answered in the negative upon the authority of Marcy v. Oswego, 92 U. S., 637 [XXIII., 748], decided in this court since the trial below.

The second question is likewise answered in the negative upon the authority of Scotland Co. v. Thomas, 94 U. S., 682 [XXIV., 219], also decided here since the trial below. The power of the State Line, Oswego & Southern Kansas Railroad Company to consolidate with other companies existed when the vote for subscription was taken in the Township. When the consolidation took place there was a perfected power in the Township to subscribe to the stock of that company, and there was also an existing privilege in the company to receive the subscription. That privilege, as we held in the Scotland County Case, passed by the consolidation to the consolidated company.

See 9 OTTO.

The township trustee and the township clerk who made the subscription and issued the bonds in this case were the officially constituted authorities of the Township, and when they subscribed to the stock and issued the bonds they acted in their official capacity as the legal representatives of the Township, and not as mere agents. In this particular they occupied the position of the county court in the Scotland County Case. They were to all intents and purposes the township in its corporate capacity. In Harshman v. Bates Co., 92 U. S., 569 [XXIII., 747], the case was different. There the county court was the mere agent of a corporation, with which it had no official connection. The difference between the two cases is precisely that between a principal and an agent, and it is so expressly said in the Scotland County Case. In the one case the corporation is bound if the action of the officers is within their corporate powers, while in the other the action must be within the corporate powers delegated to the agent.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded for such further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as may appear to be necessary.

Cited—102 U. S., 95; 103 U. S., 533; 105 U. S., 76; 109 U. S., 737; 110 U. S., 687.

UNITED STATES, ex rel. ALFRED HUIDEKOPER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
COUNTY COURT OF MACON COUNTY.

(See S. C., 9 OTTO, 582-592.)

Municipal bonds—levying tax to pay—mandamus.

1. Every purchaser of a municipal bond is chargeable with notice of the statute under which the bond was issued. If the municipality has no power, either by express grant or by implication, to raise money by taxation to pay the bond, the holder cannot require it.

2. This court has no power by mandamus to compel a municipal corporation to levy a tax which the law does not authorize.

3. A judgment does not give the creditor any right to a levy of taxes which he did not have before the judgment.

[No. 98.]

Argued Dec. 19, 20, 1878. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

This was a mandamus proceeding instituted in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri, by Alfred Huidekoper, the plaintiff in error, against the County Court of Macon Co., Mo., to compel the levy and collection of a tax to pay his judgment for $6,656.79, recovered in said court against Macon Co. upon certain interest coupons.

An execution had been issued and returned nulla bona, and a demand made had been refused.

NOTE.—Mandamus to compel city, town or county to levy tax to pay bonds or interest on bonds. See note to The Mayor v. U. S., 76 U. S., XIX., 704.

The case further appears in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph Shippen and T. K. Skinner, for plaintiff in error:

The bonds issued under this charter are a debt of the County as fully as is any other liability.

The clause of section 13, "And levy a tax to pay the same, not to exceed one twentieth of one per cent. upon the assessed value of all the taxable property for each year," was a conferring of power to levy a special tax to enhance the credit and value of the bonds, in addition to the taxes otherwise authorized for their payment.

In U. S. v. Clark Co., 96 U. S., 211 (XXIV., 628), this court in passing on this 13th section, has already expressed itself in a clear and emphatic manner, thus decided:

"That was a special tax, distinct from and in addition to the ordinary tax, which, by other statutes, the county court was authorized to levy."

The special tax authorized by said clause was intended to provide for the payment of the principal of the bonds by creating a sinking fund for their gradual extinction. It had no reference or application to current interest. This interpretation harmonizes with the decision of this court in U. S. v. Clark Co., supra.

It does not conflict with the points actually presented of record and decided by the Supreme Court of Missouri on this subject, because both of those cases involved not simply the interest, but chiefly the principal debt itself.

State v. Shortridge, 56 Mo., 126; State v. Walker (see pamphlet).

The intention of the Missouri Legislature in 1865, when chartering a railroad corporation with $4,000,000 of capital stock, to construct a great public improvement, and authorizing counties to aid in such construction, was that the bonds to be issued therefor, should be of an amount to render substantial aid and be of negotiable character.

Both these ends would have been frustrated by adopting the construction now sought to be given.

Such was the construction given in 1870 and prior:

1. By the Supreme Court compelling the first issue to be made.

State v. Macon Co. Court, 41 Mo., 453 (1867).

2. By the defendant, in making its two subscriptions and issues, and subsequently for years levying a tax of one half of one per cent., adequate to pay the interest and part of the principal thereof.

3. By the Railroad Company, which, receiving the bonds, issued $350,000 of its capital stock therefor to the defendant.

4. By the purchasers of the bonds.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege.

Broom, Leg. Max., 456, (marg.) 608 (532, 4th ed.); Dwarr. St., 562; State v. The Mayor, 49 Mo., 401.

An instrument whose payment is contingent or uncertain, is non-negotiable.

1 Pars. Bills & N., 42; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst., 34.

"In construing a statute, reference must be had to the object to be attained and the means to be employed. It will not be presumed that the Legislature attempted to authorize a proceeding unreasonable in itself."

Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo., 525.

"A construction of law that would impute to the Legislature a design to perpetrate an unconscionable and barefaced fraud, ought to be avoided, if it can be fairly and reasonably done."

Milner v. Pensacola, 2 Wood, 633.

The estoppel created in favor of the bona fide purchaser against the defendant by the facts admitted of record, protects such purchaser, not only in the recovery of judgment, but also in its payment.

Messrs. James Carr, W. P. Hall and Jas. O. Broadhead, for defendant in error:

The following words, in the 13th section of the charter, viz.: "And levy a tax to pay the same, not to exceed one twentieth of one per cent. upon the assessed value of the taxable property for each year," were a limitation upon the power of the County Court to levy a tax; and this limitation was enacted, not for the bond holders, but for the benefit of the tax payers, so that they might not be harassed with a railroad tax in any one year, too grievous to be borne."

State v. Shortridge, 56 Mo., 126; U. S. v. Clark Co., 95 U. S., 769 (XXIV., 545).

Statutes in derogation of common right and charters of incorporation, are always strictly construed; and if there is any doubt about the power conferred, that doubt is always resolved against the power claimed under the charter, and in favor of the public.

R. R. Co. v. Canal Co., 20 Pa., 9; Bailey v. Magwire, 22 Wall., 215 (89 U. S., XXII., 850); Rice v. R. R. Co., 1 Black, 380 (66 U. S., XVII., 153).

Notice was given by the charter and the bonds issued under and by authority thereof, that there was a limitation upon the power of the county court to "levy a tax to pay the same, not to exceed one twentieth of one per cent. upon the assessed value of taxable property for each year."

This court follows the decisions of the highest court of a State construing its own Constitution and statutes.

Green v. Neal, 6 Pet., 291; U. S. v. Morrison, 4 Pet., 124; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 (67 U. S., XVII., 261).

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In U. S. v. Clark Co., 96 U. S., 211 [XXIV., 628], we decided that bonds issued by counties under section 13 of the Act to Incorporate the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company were debts of the county, and that for any balance remaining due on account of principal or interest after the application of the proceeds of the special tax authorized by that section, the holders were entitled to payment out of the general funds of the county. In Loan Co. v. Topoka, 20 Wall., 660 [87 U. S., XXII., 460], we also decided that "It is to be inferred, when the Legislature of a State authorizes a county or city to contract a debt by bond, it intends to authorize it to levy such taxes as are necessary to pay the debt, unless there is in the Act itself, or in some general statute, a limitation upon the power of taxation which repels such an inference."

When the Act to Incorporate the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company was passed, the power of counties in the State to tax for general purposes was limited by law to one half of one per cent. on the taxable value of the property in the County. R. S. Mo., 1865, p. 96, sec. 7; p. 121, sec. 76. This limit has never since been increased, and the Constitution of 1875, which is now in force, provides that this tax shall never exceed that rate in counties of the class of Macon. Art. X, sec. 11. If there had been nothing in the Act to the contrary, it might, perhaps, have been fairly inferred that it was the intention of the Legislature to grant full power to tax for the payment of the extraordinary debt authorized, to an amount sufficient to meet both principal and interest at maturity. This implication is, however, repelled by the special provision for the tax of one twentieth of one per cent. and the case is thus brought directly within the maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Thus, while the debt was authorized, the power of taxation for its payment was limited, by the Act itself and the general statutes in force at the time, to the special tax designated in the Act, and such other taxes applicable to the subject as then were or might thereafter by general or special Acts be permitted. No contract has been impaired by taking away a power which was in force when the bonds were issued. The general power of taxation to pay county debts is as ample now as it was when the railroad company was incorporated and the debt was incurred. The difficulty lies in the want of original power. While there has, undoubtedly, been great recklessness on the part of the municipal authorities in the creation of bonded indebtedness, there has not unfrequently been gross carelessness on the part of purchasers when investing in such securities. Every purchaser of a municipal bond is chargeable with notice of the statute under which the bond was issued. If the statute gives no power to make the bond, the municipality is not bound. So, too, if the municipality has no power, either by express grant or by implication, to raise money by taxation to pay the bond, the holder cannot require the municipal authorities to levy a tax for that purpose. If the purchaser in this case had examined the statutes under which the County was acting, he would have seen what might prove to be difficulties in the way of payment. As it is, he holds the obligation of a debtor who is unable to provide the means of payment. We have no power by mandamus to compel a municipal corporation to levy a tax which the law does not authorize. We cannot create new rights or confer new powers. All we can do is to bring existing powers into operation. In this case it appears that the special tax of one twentieth of one per cent. has been regularly levied, collected, and applied, and no complaint is made as to the levy of the one half of one per cent. for general purposes. What is wanted is the levy beyond these amounts, and that, we think, under existing laws, we have no power to order.

Our attention has been directed to the general Railroad Law in force when the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company was incorporated and when the bonds in question were issued, and it is insisted that ample power is to be found there for the levy of the required tax. The power of taxation there granted is, as we think, clearly confined to subscriptions authorized by that Act, which require the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters of the County. Under such circumstances, it seems to have been considered proper to allow substantially unlimited power of taxation to pay a debt which the voters had directly authorized. In this case no such assent by the voters was required, and the tax payers were protected against the improvident action of the official authorities by a limit upon the amount they should be required to pay in any one year. The general Railroad Act was in force when this company was incorporated, but its provisions seem not to have been satisfactory to the corporators. They wanted authority for counties to subscribe without an election, and on that account accepted the terms which were offered. As the bond holders claim under the corporation, they must submit to the conditions as to taxation which were substituted for those that would otherwise have existed.

We have not been referred to any statute which gives a judgment creditor any right to a levy of taxes which he did not have before the judgment. The judgment has the effect of a judicial determination of the validity of his demand and of the amount that is due, but it gives him no new rights in respect to the means of payment.

This disposes of the case, and without answering specifically the questions that have been certified, we affirm the judgment.

COUNTY COURT OF MACON COUNTY, Plff. in Err., v. ALFRED HUIDEKOPER, No. 858, argued at same time and by same counsel as No. 98. This case arose upon Huidекoper's petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the plaintiff in error to cause a warrant to be drawn on the County Treasurer of Macon County, for the amount of his judgment, interest and costs, payable out of the general funds of the County that are now, or may hereafter be in said Treasury. The judgment was the same that was mentioned in the preceding case. A writ of peremptory mandamus having been granted, the respondent sued out this writ of error. Mr. Chief Justice WAITE announced the judgment of the court as follows: A majority of the court adheres to the decision in U. S. v. Clark Co., 96 U. S., 211 [XXIV. 628], and I am directed to announce the affirmation of this judgment upon the authority of that case.

Cited—105 U. S., 736, 738; 109 U. S., 230.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF LEAVENWORTH, Plff. in Err.,

v.

RALPH SELLEW.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 624-628.)

Counties in Kansas—service of process on—mandamus.

1. In Kansas, counties are bodies corporate and politic, capable of suing and being sued. The name by which they can sue or be sued is the "Board of County Commissioners of the County of —."

2. When a copy of a writ of mandamus is served upon the clerk of the Board, it is service on the corporation, and equivalent to a command that the persons who may be members of the Board shall do what is required.

3. A peremptory writ of mandamus is properly directed to the Board in its corporate capacity.

[No. 743.]

Submitted Jan. 10, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Matt H. Carpenter and Taylor and Gillpatrick, for plaintiff in error:

Two recent and well considered decisions of this court, Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall., 298 (76 U. S., XIX., 579), and U. S. v. Boutwell, 17 Wall., 607 (84 U. S., XXI., 722), condemn the proceedings in the case at bar as erroneous.

The Commissioners are not federal officers. They can in no way interfere in execution of a judgment on the bonds rendered by the Federal Court. They are to proceed, not in the performance of a duty cast upon them by the judgment, but under the obligation which the state law lays upon them as state officers.

"A mandamus does not confer power upon those to whom it is directed. It only enforces the exercise of power already existing, when its exercise is a duty."

U. S. v. Clark, Co., 95 U. S., 773 (XXIV., 546).

The proceedings by mandamus are no more a part of the original suit than is a judgment creditor's bill filed on the equity side of a court to enforce a judgment at law; or than is a judgment creditor's bill filed in a state court to enforce a judgment at law rendered in a Federal Court, a part of the suit in which such judgment was rendered.

What the law seeks to enforce by the writ of mandamus, is the personal obligation of the officer.

The same principle was declared in Downs v. Supervisors of R. I. Co., 4 Biss., 508, where the court decided that an alternative writ of mandamus must be served upon the individual members of the Board, and that service on the clerk of the Board and service admitted by such clerk by order of the Board, was not a good service.

See, also, Badger v. U. S., 93 U. S., 599 (XXIII., 991); U. S. v. Supervisors of Lee Co., 2 Biss., 80.

Mandamus cannot compel the levy of a tax at any other time or in any other manner than that designated by law.

Supervisors v. Klein, 51 Miss., 807; People v. Westford, 53 Barb. (N. Y.), 555.

Where the relator does not controvert the return, but moves for peremptory writ, he admits the return to be true.

Beard v. Supervisors, 51 Miss., 542.

II. The proceeding by writ of mandamus is a civil action between the real parties thereto. Anciently the writs of mandamus and quo warranto were considered as prerogative writs, to be issued only in the name and for the benefit of the Crown. But in modern practice both are treated as civil actions between the parties in interest.

Mandamus: Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How., 100; Com. v. Dennison, 24 How., 98 (65 U. S., XVI., 726); State v. Comrs., 11 Kan., 69; State v. Marston, 6 Kan., 524; Dove v. School Dist., 41 Ia., 689.

Quo warranto: Rex v. Francis, 2 T. R., 484; Bk. v. State, 1 Blackf., 272; 2 Kyd, Corp., 439; State v. Lingo, 26 Mo., 496; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill., 384; Com. v. Browne, 1 Serg. & R., 382.

334

By the practice in the State Courts of Kansas, mandamus proceedings must be in the name of the party interested, and not in the name of the State on relation, etc.

State v. Comrs., 11 Kan., 66; State v. Marston, 6 Kan., 524.

The mere fact claimed, that the party has no other remedy, will not authorize proceedings by mandamus.

Ex parte Ostrander, 1 Den., 679; High, Extr. Rem., sec. 19; Ex parte Newman, 14 Wall., 152 (81 U. S., XX., 877); Lewis v. Barclay, 35 Cal., 213.

Messrs. E. Stillings, T. A. Hurd and L. B. Wheat, for defendant in error:

The writ in this case was properly ordered to be directed to the Board of County Commissioners, whether its direction was to be governed by the Statute of Kansas, prescribing the manner of such proceeding, or by the common law. See, 3 Steph. N. F., 2322, 2323, and last case referred to on p. 2329; see, also, Moses, Mandamus, ch. 20, and Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 24 How., 376 (65 U. S., XVI., 735), and Tapp. Mand., 341, 384, etc.

The decision of the court in U. S. v. Boutwell, 17 Wall., 607 (84 U. S., XXI., 722), was in an entirely different case. There was no Board or body of persons to whom the writ could run. See, also, section 914 U. S. Rev. Stat.

Here we have a law, making it the duty of a certain body, composed of individuals, to levy certain taxes. It does not levy them. The court has allowed a writ against that body in its collective capacity, that is the Board of County Commissioners, a body composed of divers individuals. Now, if that is proper and it compels just what the contract calls for; that is, the levy of a tax by the tax levying power, resignations and successions cannot avail. The new incumbent, when he takes his place, will take it subject to the performance of the duties imposed on the office.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In the State of Kansas, counties are bodies corporate and politic, capable of suing and being sued. Their powers are exercised by Boards of County Commissioners, chosen by the electors. The name by which they can sue or be sued is the "Board of County Commissioners of the County of ——" In legal proceedings against a county, process is served on the clerk of the Board. 1 Dassler, Kan. Stat., 217-221, secs. 1, 3, 5, 6, 9.

The Boards of County Commissioners are authorized "To apportion and order the levying of taxes as provided by law;" 1 Dassler, Kan. Stat., 224, sec. 16, sub. 4; and they are required to meet on the first Monday in August of each year to "Estimate and determine the amount of money to be raised by tax for all county purposes, and all other taxes they may be required by law to levy." 2 Dassler, Kan. Stat., 1024, sec. 83.

Whenever a judgment is rendered against the Board of County Commissioners of a county, no execution shall issue, but the judgment "Shall be levied and collected by tax, as other county charges, and, when so collected, shall be paid by the county treasurer to the person to whom the same shall be adjudged, upon the delivery of the proper voucher therefor." 1 Dassler, Kan. Stat., 221, sec. 8.

99 U. S.

By an Act of the Legislature of the State, approved February 10, 1865, and proceedings thereunder, the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Leavenworth were authorized to subscribe to the capital stock of the Leavenworth and Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, and to issue bonds in payment of the subscription. Under this authority a subscription was made and bonds issued, bearing date July 1, 1865, and falling due July 1, 1875.

On the 29th of November, 1875, Sellaw, the defendant in error, recovered judgment in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas against the Board of County Commissioners of Leavenworth County upon part of the bonds so issued for $19,923.40 and costs of suit. On the 9th of October, 1877, he made known to the court, by affidavit, that on the 6th of August previous he had demanded of the Board of County Commissioners that they should levy a tax to pay his judgment, and that they had failed to do so. He then obtained from the court an alternative mandamus directed to the Board of County Commissioners and to John S. Van Winkle, Ebenezer W. Lucas and William S. Richards, individual members of the Board, directing that they levy the tax immediately, or show cause, on the 26th of November, 1877, why it had not been done. Copies of this writ were in due form served on the clerk of the Board and upon each of the individual members. On the return day the Board, appearing for the purpose of the motion only, moved to quash the alternative writ because it did not state facts sufficient to authorize the issue of a peremptory writ, and the several individual members answered, stating that the Board met on the first Monday in August, 1877, and estimated and determined the amount of money to be raised by taxation for all purposes for the year 1877; that having completed their labor, they adjourned sine die; that in due time afterwards the tax lists were made out, and on the 1st of November put in the hands of the treasurer for collection; that a part of the taxes so levied and collected had already been paid; that the judgment mentioned in the alternative writ was not rendered on any of the kinds of indebtedness mentioned in the proviso of section 1, ch. 90, of the Session Laws of 1876; and that on the 6th of November, at the general election of county officers, Van Winkle and Lucas were not re-elected as members of the Board, but that other persons were elected in their places, and that by reason thereof they would not be members of the Board after their present term expired.

Chapter 90 of the Session Laws of 1876 was an Act relating to Taxation in Leavenworth County, and did not specially authorize a levy of taxes to pay this judgment, but it declared that no more taxes than were therein provided for should be levied.

On the 6th of December, 1877, a peremptory writ of mandamus was ordered "To and against the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Leavenworth, * * * commanding it to levy, on or before the first Monday in the month of August next, and collect at the same time and in the same manner that general taxes are levied and collected, * * * a tax on all taxable property * * * in said County of Leavenworth * * sufficient in amount to pay the judgment," etc.

To reverse this judgment this writ of error has been sued out.

In U. S. v. Boutwell, 17 Wall., 604 [84 U. S., XXI., 721], it was decided that as a mandamus was used "To compel the performance of a duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent," if directed to a public officer, it abated on his death or his retirement from office, because it could not reach the office. That principle does not, as we think, apply to this case. There the officer proceeded against was the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and the writ was "aimed exclusively against him as a person." Here the writ is sent against the Board of County Commissioners, a corporation created and organized for the express purpose of performing the duty, among others, which the relator seeks to have enforced. The alternative writ was directed both to the Board in its corporate capacity and to the individual members by name, but the peremptory writ was ordered against the Corporation alone. As the Corporation can only act through its agents, the courts will operate upon the agents through the Corporation. When a copy of the writ which has been ordered is served upon the clerk of the Board, it will be served on the Corporation, and be equivalent to a command that the persons who may be members of the Board shall do what is required. If the members fail to obey, those guilty of disobedience may, if necessary, be punished for the contempt. Although the command is in form to the Board, it may be enforced against those through whom alone it can be obeyed. One of the objects in creating such corporations, capable of suing and being sued, and having perpetual succession, is that the very inconvenience which manifested itself in Boutwell's case may be avoided. In this way the office can be reached and the officer compelled to perform its duties, no matter what changes are made in the agents by whom the officer acts. The Board is in effect the officer, and the members of the Board are but the agents who perform its duties. While the Board is proceeded against in its corporate capacity, the individual members are punished in their natural capacities for failure to do what the law requires of them as the representatives of the Corporation.

We think, therefore, that the peremptory writ was properly directed to the Board in its corporate capacity. In this way the power of the writ is retained until the thing is done which is commanded, and it may at all times be enforced, through those who are for the time being charged with the obligation of acting for the Corporation. If, in the course of the proceedings, it appears that a part of the members have done all they could to obey the writ, the court will take care that only those who are actually guilty of disobedience are made to suffer for the wrong that is done. Those who are members of the Board at the time when the Board is required to act will be the parties to whom the court will look for the performance of what is demanded. As the Corporation cannot die or retire from the office it holds, the writ cannot abate as it did in Boutwell's case. The decisions in the state courts in which this practice is sustained are numerous. Maddox v. Graham, 2 Met. (Ky.), 56; Soutter v. Madison, 15 Wis., 30; Pegram v.

Cleveland Co. Comrs., 65 N. C., 114; People v. Collins, 19 Wend., 56.

This disposes of the only question which has been argued here. It is not contended that the Law of 1876 presented any valid objection to the levy of the tax. The cases of Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall., 535 [71 U. S., XVIII., 403]; and Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575 [75 U. S., XIX., 490], are decisive of this point.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, but as during the pendency of this writ of error the time has gone by when by the terms of the order for the peremptory writ the Board was directed to levy the tax in question, the cause is remanded with authority, if necessary, to so modify the order which has been entered, in respect to the time for the levy and collection of the tax, as to make the writ effective for the end to be accomplished.

Cited—103 U. S., 484; 2 McCrary, 31; 13 N. W. Rep., 260.

CITY OF LEAVENWORTH, Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. N. KINNEY.

Mandamus.

1. A peremptory writ of mandamus may be directed to the Mayor and Common Council of a City in their corporate capacity, and need not be directed to the individual persons who were Mayor and Councilmen.

2. Comrs. v. Sellew, ante, 333, followed.

[No. 744.]

Submitted Jan. 10, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Matt. H. Carpenter and Taylor & Gillpatrick, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. T. A. Hurd, E. Stillings and Clough & Wheat, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is substantially disposed of by that of Board of County Commissioners of the County of Leavenworth v. Sellew, just decided [ante, 333]. A peremptory writ of mandamus has been ordered against the Mayor and Council of the City of Leavenworth in their corporate capacity, and the objection is that it should have been directed to the persons who were mayor and councilmen. The principle upon which the decision in the other case rests is conclusive of this, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is, consequently, affirmed and the cause remanded, with authority, if necessary, to so modify the order which has been entered, in respect to the time for the levy and collection of the tax, as to make the writ effective for the end to be accomplished.

THE NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY OF OHIO, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF CHICAGO.

(See S. C., 9 Otto., 635-645.)

Nuisance—defect in highway—city improvement in street—riparian owner—right of lateral support—extent of.

1. That which the law authorizes cannot be a nuisance, such as will give a common law right of action.

2. Persons appointed or authorized by law to make or improve a highway are not answerable for consequential damages, if they act within their jurisdiction and with care and skill.

3. Acts, done in the proper exercise of governmental powers and not directly encroaching upon private property, although their consequences may impair its use, do not entitle the owner of such property to compensation from the State or its agents nor give him any right of action.

4. A city is not liable for consequential damages resulting from an improvement made in the street, the fee of which is in the city, provided the improvement had the sanction of the Legislature.

5. A riparian owner on a navigable stream, cannot maintain a suit at common law against public agents to recover consequential damages resulting from obstructing a stream in pursuance of legislative authority.

6. An adjoining owner, excavating on his own land, must not remove the earth so near to the land of his neighbor that his neighbor's soil will crumble away under its own weight and fall upon his land.

7. But this right of lateral support extends only to the soil in its natural condition; it does not protect whatever is placed upon the soil increasing the downward and lateral pressure.

[No. 144.]

Argued Jan. 22, 1879. Decided Mar. 3, 1879.

NOTE.—Lateral support of soil of adjoining lands, right to.

Party digging upon land is liable for the damages caused by depriving the adjoining soil of lateral support, to the extent of the injury to the soil in its natural condition, but not for injuries to buildings or improvements thereon without proof of actual negligence. Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass., 199; S. C., 23 Am. Dec., 312; Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass., 220; S. C., 7 Am. Dec., 57; Foley v. Wyeth, 2 Allen, 131; Farrand v. Marshall, 21 Barb., 409; Mamer v. Lussem, 65 Ill., 484.

One has a right to have his soil stand in its natural condition, and anyone who infringes that right is a wrong-doer, independently of any question of negligence. Foley v. Wyeth, 2 Allen, 131; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y., 159; Richardson v. Vt. Cent. R., 25 Vt., 465; Humphries v. Brogden, 12 Q. B., 739; McGuire v. Grant, 1 Dutch., 363; Wilde v. Minsterly, 2 Rolle Abr., 565.

If it appear that the falling of the soil of the adjacent lot was the result of weighty erections on the adjoining soil, the liability is removed. The party making the erections has contributed to the cause of the loss, and, in order to recover, must show a carelessness, negligence or want of due skill on the part of one digging upon his own land. Washburn on Easements, sec. 444; Charles v. Rankin, 22 Mo., 566; Beard v. Murphy, 37 Vt., 99; Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass., 199; S. C., 23 Am. Dec., 312; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns., 92; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169; S. C., 25 Am. Dec., 524; Dodd v. Holme, 1 Ad. & El., 493; Eliot v. Northeastern Ry. Co., 10 H. L. Cas., 333; Hide v. Thornborough, 2 Car. & K., 250.

Owner of property adjoining a street has no right to the lateral support of the soil of the street, and can acquire none by prescription. City of Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill., 231; S. C., 20 Am. Rep., 243; O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa., 187.

The owner of a building erected on the line of his lot, cannot by lapse of time acquire a prescriptive right to the lateral support of the adjacent soil. Mitchell v. The Mayor, etc., of Rome, 49 Ga., 19; S. C., 15 Am. Rep., 669.

Owner of land about to excavate it must give adjoining owner notice to shore up his building, and must exercise care and skill in improving his own lot. Eno v. Del Vecchio, 4 Duer, 66; 6 Duer, 17; Charles v. Rankin, 22 Mo., 572; Massey v. Goyder, 4 Car. & P., 161.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case, which arose in the court below, sufficiently appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Horace F. Waite & Clark and R. P. Spalding, for plaintiff in error:

Under the decisions of the State of Illinois, the plaintiff being in possession of the property bounded by Chicago River, became and was the owner of the water and soil to the center or thread of the stream.

Chicago v. Laftin, 49 Ill., 176; Braxton v. Bressler, 64 Ill., 488; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill., 384; Middleton v. Pritchard, 3 Scam., 510; Canal Trustees v. Havens, 11 Ill., 554; R. R. Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill., 45.

By the construction of the coffer-dam in the river, so as to interfere with the plaintiff's access to its dock, in the manner proved, the plaintiff has been deprived of its property by the City and has suffered damages; and for such damages it is entitled to just compensation. This is so, first, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois.

Middleton v. Pritchard, R. R. Co. v. Stein, Chicago v. Laftin, Braxton v. Bressler, Ensminger v. People, Canal Trustees v. Havens (supra); People v. St. Louis, 5 Gilm., 351.

The same rule prevails, under the decisions of the Federal Courts, and by such decisions our proposition is fully sustained.

Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall., 504 (77 U. S., XIX., 986); Avery v. Fox, 1 Abb., 246; Boston v. Leetaw, 17 How., 436 (58 U. S., XV., 122); Richardson v. Boston, 19 How., 270 (60 U. S., XV., 642); S. C., 24 How., 188 (65 U. S., XVI., 625); Pa. v. Bridge Co., 13 How., 518; S. C., 18 How., 431 (59 U. S., XV., 437); Jolly v. Bridge Co., 6 McLean, 237; Ins. Co. v. Curtenius, 6 McLean, 209; Georgetown v. Canal Co., 12 Pet., 98; Bozman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 382; see, also, Rose v. Groves, 5 Man. & G., 612; Baron v. Baltimore, 2 Am. Jur., 203; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick., 158; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass., 218; Lyon v. Fishmonger Co., L. R., 10 Ch. App., 679; Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I., 35-38; Rose v. Miles, 4 Maule & S., 101; Clement v. Burns, 43 N. H., 609; Pierce v. Dart, 7 Cow., 611; Davis v. Bangor, 42 Me., 522; Re v. Russell, 6 East, 427; Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binn., 463; Bacon v. Arthur, 4 Watts, 437; Harrison v. Sterett, 4 Har. & McH., 540; Ang. High., 567; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass., 208; Bell v. Hull & Selby R. R. Co., 6 Mees. & W., 699; E. & W. India Dock and R. R. Co. v. Gatlke, 15 Jur., 261; McCarthy v. Board of Pub. Works, L. R., 7 Com. P., 508; S. C. on appeal to the H. of L., L. R., 8 Com. P., 191; Gerrish v. Brown, 51 Me., 256; Atty-Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J., 528; Enos v. Hamilton, 27 Wis., 256; Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St., 523; Duke of Buccleuch v. Board of Pub. Works, L. R., 5 H. L., 418; Board of Pub. Works v. McCarthy, L. R., 7 H. L., 243; Chamberlain v. West End of London R. Co., 2 B. & S., 605; Rickett v. Metrop. R. Co., L. R., 2 H. L., 175; Dobson v. Blackmore, 9 Q. B., 991.

Mr. Joseph F. Bonfield, for defendant in error, cited Chicago v. Rumsey, 10 Chic. Leg. N., 333.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

See 9 OTTO.

We are of opinion that no error has been shown in this record, though the assignments are very numerous. The action was case to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs in consequence of the action of the city authorities in constructing a tunnel or passage-way along the line of La Salle Street and under the Chicago River, where it crosses that street. The plaintiffs were the lessees of a lot bounded on the east by the street, and on the south by the river, and the principal injury of which they complain is, that by the operations of the City they were deprived of access to their premises, both on the side of the river and on that of the street, during the prosecution of the work. It is not claimed that the obstruction was a permanent one, or that it was continued during a longer time than was necessary to complete the improvement. Nor is it contended there was unreasonable delay in pushing the work to completion, or that the coffer-dam constructed in the river, extending some twenty-five or thirty feet in front of the plaintiff's lot, was not necessary, indeed indispensable, for the construction of the tunnel.

The case has been argued on the assumption that the erection of the coffer-dam, and the necessary excavations in the street, constituted a public nuisance, causing special damage to the plaintiffs, beyond those incident to the public at large; and hence, it is inferred, the city is responsible to them for the injurious consequences resulting therefrom. The answer to this is that the assumption is unwarranted. That cannot be a nuisance, such as to give a common law right of action, which the law authorizes. We refer to an action at common law such as this is. A Legislature may and often does authorize and even direct acts to be done which are harmful to individuals, and which without the authority would be nuisances; but in such a case, if the statute be such as the Legislature has power to pass, the acts are lawful, and are not nuisances, unless the power has been exceeded. In such grants of power a right to compensation for consequential injuries caused by the authorized erections may be given to those who suffer, but then the right is a creature of the statute. It has no existence without it. If this were not so, the suffering party would be entitled to repeated actions until an abatement of the erections would be enforced, or perhaps he might restrain them by injunction.

Here the tunnel of which the plaintiffs complain, or rather its construction, was authorized by an Act of the Legislature of the State, and directed by an ordinance of the city councils. This we do not understand to be denied, and it certainly cannot be. The State, and the city councils, as its agents, had full power over the highways of the city, to improve them for the uses for which they were made highways, and the construction of the tunnel was an exercise of that power. Since La Salle Street was extended across the river, the City not only had the power but it was its duty to provide for convenience of passage. This it could do either by the erection of a bridge, or by the construction of a tunnel under the river and along the line of the street. And the grant of power by the Legislature to build a bridge or construct a tunnel carried with it, of course, all that was necessary for the exercise of the power. We do not understand this to be controverted by the plaintiffs in error. Their argument is, that though the city had the legal right to construct the tunnel, and to do what was necessary for its construction, subject to the condition that in doing the work there should be no unnecessary interference with private property, yet it was liable to make compensation for the consequential damages caused to persons specially injured. To this we cannot assent.

It is immaterial whether the fee of the street was in the State or in the City or in the adjoining lotholders. If in the latter, the State had an easement to repair and improve the street over its entire length and breadth, to adapt it to easy and safe passage.

It is undeniable that in making the improvement of which the plaintiffs complain the City was the agent of the State, and performing a public duty imposed upon it by the Legislature; and that persons appointed or authorized by law to make or improve a highway are not answerable for consequential damages, if they act within their jurisdiction and with care and skill, is a doctrine almost universally accepted alike in England and in this country. It was asserted unqualifiedly in British Cast-Plate Manufacturers v. Meredith, T. R., 794; in Sutton v. Clarke, 6 Taunt., 29; and in Boulton v. Crompton, 2 Barn. & C., 703. It was asserted in Green v. Reading, 9 Watts, 382; O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa., 187; in Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick., 418; as well as by the courts of numerous other States. It was asserted in Smith v. Corp. of Washington, 20 How., 135 [61 U. S., XV., 588], in this court; and it has been held by the Supreme Court of Illinois. The decisions in Ohio, so far as we know, are the solitary exceptions. The doctrine, however it may at times appear to be at variance with natural justice, rests upon the soundest legal reason. The State holds its highways in trust for the public. Improvements made by its direction or by its authority are its acts, and the ultimate responsibility, of course, should rest upon it. But it is the prerogative of the State to be exempt from coercion by suit, except by its own consent. This prerogative would amount to nothing if it does not protect the agents for improving highways which the State is compelled to employ. The remedy, therefore, for a consequential injury resulting from the State's action through its agents, if there be any, must be that, and that only, which the Legislature shall give. It does not exist at common law. The decisions to which we have referred were made in view of Magna Charta and the restriction to be found in the Constitution of every State, that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation being made. But acts done in the proper exercise of governmental powers, and not directly encroaching upon private property, though their consequences may impair its use, are universally held not to be a taking within the meaning of the constitutional provision. They do not entitle the owner of such property to compensation from the State or its agents, or give him any right of action. This is supported by an immense weight of authority. Those who are curious to see the decisions will find them collected in Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, page 542 and notes.

The extremest qualification of the doctrine is to be found, perhaps, in Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13th Wall., 166 [80 U. S., XX., 557], and in Eaton v. R. R. Co., 51 N. H., 504. In those cases it was held that permanent flooding of private property may be regarded as a "taking." In those cases there was a physical invasion of the real estate of the private owner, and a practical ouster of his possession. But in the present case there was no such invasion. No entry was made upon the plaintiffs' lot. All that was done was to render for a time its use more inconvenient.

The present Constitution of Illinois took effect on the 8th of August, 1870, after the work of constructing the tunnel had been substantially completed. It ordains that private property shall not be "taken or damaged" for public use without just compensation. This is an extension of the common provision for the protection of private property. But it has no application to this case, as was decided by the Supreme Court of the State in the case of Chicago v. Rumsey, recently decided and reported in Vol. X., Chicago Legal News, p. 333 [87 Ill., 348]. That case also decides that the City is not liable for consequential damages resulting from an improvement made in the street, the fee of which is in the City, provided the improvement had the sanction of the Legislature. It also decides that La Salle Street is such a street, and declares that a recovery of such damages by an adjacent lotholder has been denied by the settled law of the State up to the adoption of the present Constitution. There would appear, therefore, to be little left in this case for controversy.

It is insisted, however, that the plaintiffs may recover for the obstruction to the access of their lot, caused by the coffer-dam in the river. It is admitted that the dam was necessary to enable the City to construct the tunnel under the river; and it is not complained that it was unskillfully built, or that it was kept in the stream longer than the necessities of the work required, but it is contended that neither the State nor the City had any right to obstruct passage on the river at all. Yet the river is a highway, a state highway as well as a national. It has long been held that navigable rivers wholly within a State are not outside of state jurisdiction so long as Congress does not interfere. An abridgment of the rights of those who have been accustomed to use them, unless it comes in conflict with the Constitution or a law of the United States, is an affair between the Government of the State and its citizens, of which this court can take no cognizance. Wilson v. Black Bird Cr. M. Co., 2 Pet., 250. In numerous instances, States have authorized obstructions in navigable streams. They have authorized the erection of bridges, the piers of which have been more or less impediments to navigation. In this case the coffer-dam was only a temporary obstruction. It was no physical encroachment upon the plaintiffs' property, and it was maintained only so long as it was needed for the public improvement. The tunnel could not have been constructed without it. We cannot doubt that it was lawfully placed where it was, and having thus been, that the city is not responsible in damages for having erected and maintained it while discharging the duty imposed by the Legislature, the obstruction not having been permanent or unreasonably prolonged.

We have examined the decisions of the courts of Illinois, and others to which we have been referred by the plaintiffs in error, but in none of them was it decided that a riparian owner on a navigable stream, or that an adjoiner on a public highway, can maintain a suit at common law against public agents to recover consequential damages resulting from obstructing a stream or highway in pursuance of legislative authority, unless that authority has been transcended, or unless there was a wanton injury inflicted, or carelessness, negligence or want of skill in causing the obstruction.

Very many of the decisions relied upon were cases in which it appeared that the acts complained of as having wrought injurious consequences were done by private individuals, for their own benefit, and without sufficient legislative authority. The distinction between cases of that kind and such as the present is very obvious. It was well stated by Gibbs, Ch. J., in Sutton v. Clarke, supra, which, as we have seen, was decided on the ground that the defendant was acting under the authority of an Act of Parliament, deriving no advantage to himself personally, and acting to the best of his skill and within the scope of his authority, and so was not liable for consequential damages. "This case," said the Chief Justice, "is totally unlike that of the individual who for his own benefit makes an improvement on his own land according to his best skill and diligence, not foreseeing it will produce injury to his neighbor; if he thereby, though unwittingly, injure his neighbor, he is liable. The resemblance fails in this most important point, that his act is not done for a public purpose but for private emolument. Here the defendant is not a volunteer; he executes a duty imposed upon him by the Legislature, which he is bound to execute."

The observations we have made cover the whole case as made for the plaintiffs in error, except the point presented by the 16th assignment. That was not mentioned in the argument, but we will not overlook it.

There was evidence at the trial that during the progress of the necessary excavation of La Salle Street a portion of the walls of the plaintiffs' buildings on the lot cracked and sunk. This was caused by the caving in of the excavation in the street, the timbers used for bracing the sides having given way. In reference to this testimony the court instructed the jury that if they were satisfied from the evidence that the sinking of the wall, or rather the cracking of the wall, was due to the weight of the wall upon the selvaige or portion of the earth which was left, and not to the removal of the material which was taken out of the street, that is, from the pit, the defendants were not liable. If they were satisfied that if the wall had not stood upon the plaintiffs' lot where it did there would have been no change in the level of the ground there, but that the change in the level which caused the deflection of the wall was due to the weight of the wall resting upon the earth after the excavation was made, then the defendant was not liable for that.

We think this instruction was entirely right. The general rule may be admitted that every landowner has a right to have his land preserved unbroken, and that an adjoining owner excavating on his own land is subject to this restriction, that he must not remove the earth so near to the land of his neighbor that his neighbor's soil will crumble away under its own weight and fall upon his land. But this right of lateral support extends only to the soil in its natural condition. It does not protect whatever is placed upon the soil increasing the downward and lateral pressure. If it did, it would put it in the power of a lotowner, by erecting heavy buildings on his lot, to greatly abridge the right of his neighbor to use his lot. It would make the rights of the prior occupant greatly superior to those of the latter. Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad., 871; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169; Wash. Easements, ch. 4, sec. 1.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

Cited—2 McCrary, 346; 3 McCrary, 265; 90 N. Y., 184, 185; 11 N. W. Rep., 453; 18 N. W. Rep., 462, 572; 79 Ind., 499; 41 Am. Rep., 624; 90 N. Y., 176; 43 Am. Rep., 158; 16 W. Va., 420 37 Am. Rep., 783.

WILLIAM R. FOSDICK ET AL., Appts.,

v.

MICHAEL SCHALL, INTERVENER.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 235-256.)

Cars sold, title to remain in vendor until paid for—not subject to lien of mortgage—vendor only a general creditor for amount unpaid.

1. Where one sold and delivered cars to a railroad company under an agreement that they were to remain his property until paid for, a prior mortgage given by the company upon all the property which it then owned or possessed or might afterwards acquire, did not attach as a lien upon the cars, but they remained the property of the vendor until paid for, and he might reclaim them, on default of payment.

2. When a court of chancery appoints a receiver of railroad property, it may impose such terms in reference to the payment from the income during the receivership, of outstanding debts for labor, supplies, equipment or permanent improvement of the mortgaged property, as may, under the circumstances of the particular case, appear to be reasonable.

3. It is within the power of the court to use the income of the receivership to discharge obligations for labor, supplies and the like, which, but for the diversion of funds, would have been paid in the ordinary course of business.

4. The owner of the cars, for the balance due upon such contract, occupies the position of a general creditor only, and cannot receive from the funds arising from the mortgage sale, such balance.

[No. 631.]

Argued Jan. 7, 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 10, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Henry Crawford and Ashbel Green, for appellants.

Mr. R. Biddle Roberts (argument of John M. Butler being also filed), in support of discretionary power of court of equity to order payment of operating expenses of railway, prior to appointment of receiver, for Schall, intervenor.

NOTE.—The lien of a mortgage on after-acquired property. See note to Pennock v. Coe, 64 U. S., XVI., 436.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The Chicago, Danville and Vincennes Railroad Company, an Illinois corporation, on the 10th of March, 1869, executed a mortgage to William R. Fosdick and James D. Fish, Trustees, to secure an issue of $2,500,000 of bonds. This mortgage covered all the franchises, issues and profits of the company, and all the property it then owned or possessed, or might thereafter acquire, either in law or equity. Provision was made to the effect that, in case of default in the payment of interest on the bonds continuing for six months, the trustees in the mortgage, on demand of the holders of at least one half the bonds then outstanding and unpaid, might take possession of all the mortgaged property, together with all the books, records, papers, accounts and money of the company, and enter into the management and control thereof, paying all the expenses of taking, holding, managing and operating the property from the income and profits thereof, or, if the property should be sold, from the sale thereof. The property might be sold as an entirety, and the proceeds, after deducting the expenses of sale, applied to the payment of the interest and principal of the bonds.

On the 12th of March, 1872, a second mortgage was executed to the same trustees, to secure a further issue of bonds to the amount of $1,500,000.

On the 1st of February, 1873, after both these mortgages were executed, the railroad company and Michael Schall entered into a contract in writing, a copy of which is as follows:

"NEW YORK, February 1, 1873.

Sold this day for account of Mr. Michael Schall, of York, Penn., To the Chicago, Danville, and Vincennes Railroad Co. Office
38 Pine Street, New York:

Two hundred (200) eight-wheel gondola coal cars, as per specifications and agreement made by J. E. Young, and herewith attached.

Price, delivered on the track at Pittsburg, at depot of P. C. & St. L. R. R., seven hundred dollars per car. Cars to remain the property of Michael Schall until paid for.

Delivery to commence, and cars to be taken, on or before March 1, and at least twenty-five (25) cars in each week thereafter until all are delivered, the seller having the option of increasing the number of cars to be delivered per week, if desired.

Settlement to be made on delivery of each twenty-five (25) cars or more, at the option of sellers, with the notes of the Chicago, Danville and Vincennes Railroad Company, payable in the City of New York, and adding interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. The first notes are to be drawn at sixty days from date of delivery, and for twenty (20) dollars on each car, and the balance for a like amount and payable monthly thereafter.

Cars to be lettered and numbered as per directions of Mr. Young.

Invoice and shipping receipts to be sent to the railroad company's office, No. 38 Pine Street, New York.

It is understood the sellers shall not be responsible for the acts of Providence, strikes of workmen, or other causes beyond their control, which may retard and delay the manufacturing and delivery of the said cars as above stated.

Shipping receipts to be evidence of delivery.

(Signed) MICHAEL SCHALL.

I hereby accept the above proposition for the R. R. Co.

(Signed) J. E. YOUNG, Gen. Manager."

Under this contract 225 cars were delivered into the possession of the railroad company by Schall, numbered from 0141 to 0365, both inclusive, and lettered, "This car is the property of Michael Schall, York, Pa." Notes were executed by the company, according to agreement, for the price of the cars as they were delivered. Of these notes $44,323.43 have been paid by the company, and $110,334.04 are outstanding. The cars were used by the company in the usual course of business.

On the 22d of February, 1875, Stephen Osgood, who held $9,000 of the bonds secured by the mortgage of 1869, and $2,000 of those secured by that of 1872, filed a bill in chancery in the Circuit Court of Will County, Illinois, against the railroad company and Fosdick and Fish, trustees, with others, for a foreclosure of the two mortgages and a sale of the mortgaged property for the benefit of the bond holders, according to their respective priorities; and on the same day the court appointed Henry B. Hammond and John B. Brown receivers in the cause with authority to take the moneys, property and effects of the company into their possession, and run and operate the railroad under the orders of the court until discharged. In the order making the appointment it was specially provided that, out of the moneys which should come into the hands of the receivers by reason of the operation of the road, the collection of debts, or the sale of the property, they should pay without further order as to particular demands:

1. The necessary current expenses of carrying out the duties of the trust;

2. "All debts now [then] due and owing by said railroad company for labor and services rendered in operating the railroad within the [then] last three months, and all indebtedness for engines, iron, wood, supplies, cars, or other property purchased within said period of three months for the use of the company;"

3. Taxes, insurance, and charges of litigation; and,

4. Liabilities for animals killed by engines or cars upon the line of the road.

On the 5th of May, 1875, the cause was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois on the application of Fosdick and Fish, trustees, two of the defendants, and on the 17th of the same month the receivers appointed by the state court filed in the circuit court an account of their receivership for the months of February, March and April.

On the 20th of May, Fosdick & Fish, as trustees, filed in the same Circuit Court of the United States their bill against the railroad company and certain other defendants, for the foreclosure of the two mortgages of which they were trustees; and on the same day an order was entered in that court appointing Adna Anderson receiver, with authority to take possession of all the books, papers, vouchers and evidence of indebtedness, moneys and assets of the company, and all other effects of every kind, name and nature which belonged to the company, or were held for its use and benefit, or in which it had any beneficial interest. He was also authorized to run, operate and manage the road and pay the expenses thereof, and manage and control all the property and affairs of the company. Authority was also given him to use the moneys of the company for any and all the purposes specified in the order, and he was required, as speedily as possible, to examine into the condition of the property and assets of the company, its contracts, leases, running arrangements, its business affairs, and take an inventory of its movable property and make a schedule of its floating indebtedness for labor and supplies, and report the same, as soon as might be, with his recommendation as to the proper disposition of the same and payment thereof. Under this order Anderson took possession of the property, and on the 11th of June the receivers appointed by the state court filed their final accounts, and asked to be discharged from their trust.

The cars delivered under the Schall contract were in use by the company when the receivers appointed by the state court took possession. Those receivers also continued to use the cars during all the time they operated the road, and Anderson took the possession when he entered upon his receivership. On the 27th of November, 1875, Anderson having ascertained what the claim of Schall was, and finding that the cars were necessary for the use of the road, entered into an arrangement with him, subject to the approval of the court, by which they were valued at $420 each; and it was agreed that Schall should be paid $7 a month for each car as rent. The aggregate of payments at this rate for five years would equal the value of the cars; and it was further agreed that if the rent was paid promptly, and in addition an amount which would be equal to interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the deferred installments, the cars should, at the end of that time, become the property of the company.

On the 19th of July, 1875, the circuit court denied a motion of Osgood to consolidate his suit removed from the state court with that of Fosdick & Fish, but made an order allowing him and his associates to intervene in the latter suit for the protection of their respective interests, upon taking the necessary steps therefore. Accordingly, on the 6th of January, 1876, Stephen Osgood, Frederick W. Huidekoper, Thomas W. Shannon, John M. Dennison, George W. Gill, Alanson A. Sumner, Chandler Robbins and William T. Hickok, owners and holders of a large amount of bonds secured by the several mortgages which were in the process of foreclosure, with the permission of the court, filed their petition of intervention.

On the 27th of January, 1876, Schall filed an intervening petition, in which, after setting forth the facts of his claim substantially as they have already been given, and averring that he had been paid at the rate of $7 a month as rental during all the time the cars had been in use by the present receiver, he asked that the balance, his due, might be paid him out of any funds to the credit of the cause not otherwise appropriated, or that the cars might be returned to him.

Fosdick & Fish and the intervening bondholders answered this petition, claiming that the title of the cars had passed to the company under its contract with Schall, and that consequently the lien of the mortgages had attached to the cars as after-acquired property. They denied the right of Schall to payment for the cars out of the income of the road or out of the proceeds of the sale, and they denied his right to a return of the cars.
See 9 OTTO. U. S., Book 25.

On the 5th of December, 1876, the court entered a decree in the suit of Fosdick & Fish for a sale of the mortgaged property, not, however, including the cars of Schall; and on the 7th of February, 1877, the property was sold in accordance with the provisions of the decree to Huidekoper, Shannon and Dennison for $1,450,000. On the 13th of April the sale was approved by the court, and the master ordered to convey the property to the purchasers.

On the 28th of April, 1877, the master, to whom the matter of the intervening petition of Schall had been referred, reported the facts as they have already been stated, and also that the cars were necessary for the use of the road, and that the arrangement which had been made by the receiver was a beneficial one, whether the road remained in the hands of the receiver or passed into the possession of other parties.

To this report Fosdick & Fish and the intervening bond holders excepted, in substance, because the master found the title to the cars to be in Schall, and not in the company. Upon the final hearing, the court held that Schall had not parted with his title to the cars, and was entitled to the possession. Accordingly, it was ordered that the receiver, if in possession, or the purchasers at the sale, should restore the cars to Schall, and that the clerk of the court, out of the funds standing to the credit of the cause, should pay him the sum of $9450, as rental for the cars, at the rate of $7 each per month for the six months preceding the 22d of February, 1875, the date when the receivers of the state court were appointed and took possession, and the further sum of $5,118.75, for a like rental during the time the cars were used by the receivers of the state court. It nowhere appears from the record that there are any funds in court to the credit of the cause except such as arose from the sale of the mortgaged property.

From this decree Fosdick & Fish and the intervening bondholders have appealed.

Two questions are presented by the assignment of errors in this case:

1. Did the lien of the mortgages attach to the cars of Schall on their delivery to the company under his contract, so as to prevent their reclamation as against the mortgagees if the price was not paid according to agreement?

2. Was the order for the payment out of the fund in court of the rental of the cars, during the time they were used by the receivers appointed by the state court and for six months before, justifiable under the circumstances of this case?

As to the first question, it is contended that the mortgage created a subsisting and paramount lien on the cars as soon as they were put into the possession of the railroad company under the contract, and that the reservation of the title was void under the laws of Illinois, because the contract was not recorded.

It must be conceded that contracts like this are held by the courts of Illinois to be, in effect, so far as the Chattel Mortgage Act of that State is concerned, the same as though a formal bill of sale had been executed and a mortgage given back to secure the price. We had occasion to consider that question in Hervey v. Locomotive Works, 93 U. S., 664 [XXIII., 1003], and there held, following the Illinois decisions, that if such an instrument was not recorded in accordance with the provisions of the Chattel Mortgage Act, R. S., Ill., 1874, 711, 712, a lien like that of Schall would have no validity as against third persons. Whatever may be the rule in other States, this is, undoubtedly, the effect of the Illinois Statute as construed by the courts of that State. In Green v. Van Buskirk, 5 Wall., 307 [72 U. S., XVIII., 599], this court also held that "Where personal property is seized and sold under an attachment, or other writ issuing from a court of the State where the property is, the question of the liability of the property to be sold under the writ must be determined by the law of that State, notwithstanding the domicile of all the claimants to the property may be in another State." Hervey v. Locomotive Works [supra], was also a case of seizure and sale under judicial process; and the language of the court, as expressed in its opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Davis, is to be construed in connection with that fact.

As between the parties, notwithstanding the Illinois Statute, the transaction is just what, on its face, it purports to be, "A conditional sale, with a right of rescission on the part of the vendor, in case the purchaser shall fail in payment of his installments—a contract legal and valid as between the parties, but made with the risk, on the part of the vendor, of his losing his lien" if it works a legal wrong to third parties. Murch v. Wright, 46 Ill., 488. The question, then, is whether these mortgagees occupy the position of third parties within the meaning of that term as used in this statute.

They are in no sense purchasers of the cars. The mortgage attaches to the cars, if it attaches at all, because they are "after-acquired" property of the company; but as to that class of property it is well settled that the lien attaches subject to all the conditions with which it is incumbered when it comes into the hands of the mortgagor. The mortgagees take just such an interest in the property as the mortgagor acquired; no more, no less. These cars were "loose property susceptible of separate ownership and separate liens," and "such liens, if binding on the railroad company itself, are unaffected by a prior general mortgage given by the company and paramount thereto." U. S. v. R. R. Co., 12 Wall., 363 [79 U. S., XX., 434]. The title of the mortgagees in this case, therefore, is subject to all the rights of Schall under his contract.

The possession taken by the receiver is only that of the court, whose officer he is, and adds nothing to the previously existing title of the mortgagees. He holds, pending the litigation, for the benefit of whomsoever in the end it shall be found to concern, and in the meantime the court proceeds to determine the rights of the parties upon the same principles it would if no change of possession had taken place.

It follows that the decree ordering a return of the cars to Schall was right. Whether, if the property is worth more than is due upon the contract of purchase, the mortgagees can obtain the benefit of the overplus, is a question we are not called upon to consider.

As to the second question, we have no doubt that when a court of chancery is asked by railroad mortgagees to appoint a receiver of railroad property pending proceedings for foreclosure, the court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, may, as a condition of issuing the necessary order, impose such terms in reference to the payment from the income during the receivership of outstanding debts for labor, supplies, equipment or permanent improvement of the mortgaged property as may, under the circumstances of the particular case, appear to be reasonable. Railroad mortgages and the rights of railroad mortgages are comparatively new in the history of judicial proceedings. They are peculiar in their character and affect peculiar interests. The amounts involved are generally large, and the rights of the parties oftentimes complicated and conflicting. It rarely happens that a foreclosure is carried through to the end without some concessions by some parties from their strict legal rights, in order to secure advantages that could not otherwise be attained, and which it is supposed will operate for the general good of all who are interested. This results almost as a matter of necessity from the peculiar circumstances which surround such litigation.

The business of all railroad companies is done to a greater or less extent on credit. This credit is longer or shorter, as the necessities of the case require; and when companies become pecuniarily embarrassed, it frequently happens that debts for labor, supplies, equipment and improvements are permitted to accumulate, in order that bonded interest may be paid and a disastrous foreclosure postponed, if not altogether avoided. In this way the daily and monthly earnings, which ordinarily should go to pay the daily and monthly expenses, are kept from those to whom in equity they belong, and used to pay the mortgage debt. The income out of which the mortgagee is to be paid is the net income obtained by deducting from the gross earnings what is required for necessary operating and managing expenses, proper equipment and useful improvements. Every railroad mortgagee in accepting his security impliedly agrees that the current debts made in the ordinary course of business shall be paid from the current receipts before he has any claim upon the income. If for the convenience of the moment something is taken from what may not improperly be called the current debt fund, and put into that which belongs to the mortgage creditors, it certainly is not inequitable for the court, when asked by the mortgagees to take possession of the future income and hold it for their benefit, to require as a condition of such an order that what is due from the earnings to the current debt shall be paid by the court from the future current receipts before anything derived from that source goes to the mortgagees. In this way the court will only do what, if a receiver should not be appointed, the company ought itself to do. For even though the mortgage may in terms give a lien upon the profits and income, until possession of the mortgaged premises is actually taken or something equivalent done, the whole earnings belong to the company and are subject to its control. R. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall., 459 [78 U. S., XX., 199]; Gilman v. Telegraph Co., 91 U. S., 603 [XXIII., 405]; Amer. Br. Co. v. Heidelberg, 94 U. S., 798 [XXIV., 144].

The mortgagee has his strict rights which he may enforce in the ordinary way. If he asks no favors, he need grant none. But if he calls upon a court of chancery to put forth its extraordinary powers and grant him purely equitable relief, he may with propriety be required to submit to the operation of a rule which always applies in such cases, and do equity in order to get equity. The appointment of a receiver is not a matter of strict right. Such an application always calls for the exercise of judicial discretion; and the Chancellor should so mold his order that while favoring one, injustice is not done to another. If this cannot be accomplished, the application should ordinarily be denied.

We think, also, that if no such order is made when the receiver is appointed, and it appears in the progress of the cause that bonded interest has been paid, additional equipment provided, or lasting and valuable improvements made out of earnings which ought in equity to have been employed to keep down debts for labor, supplies and the like, it is within the power of the court to use the income of the receivership to discharge obligations which, but for the diversion of funds, would have been paid in the ordinary course of business. This, not because the creditors to whom such debts are due have in law a lien upon the mortgaged property or the income, but because, in a sense, the officers of the company are trustees of the earnings for the benefit of the different classes of creditors and the stockholders; and if they give to one class of creditors that which properly belongs to another, the court may, upon an adjustment of the accounts, so use the income which comes into its own hands as, if practicable, to restore the parties to their original equitable rights. While ordinarily, this power is confined to the appropriation of the income of the receivership and the proceeds of moneyed assets that have been taken from the company, cases may arise where equity will require the use of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property in the same way. Thus it often happens that, in the course of the administration of the cause, the court is called upon to take income which would otherwise be applied to the payment of old debts for current expenses, and use it to make permanent improvements on the fixed property, or to buy additional equipment. In this way the value of the mortgaged property is not unfrequently materially increased. It is not to be supposed that any such use of the income will be directed by the court, without giving the parties in interest an opportunity to be heard against it. Generally, as we know both from observation and experience, all such orders are made at the request of the parties or with their consent. Under such circumstances, it is easy to see that there may sometimes be a propriety in paying back to the income from the proceeds of the sale what is thus again diverted from the current debt fund in order to increase the value of the property sold. The same may sometimes be true in respect to expenditures before the receivership. No fixed and inflexible rule can be laid down for the government of the courts in all cases. Each case will necessarily have its own peculiarities, which must to a greater or less extent influence the Chancellor when he comes to act.

The power rests upon the fact, that in the administration of the affairs of the company the mortgage creditors have got possession of that which in equity belonged to the whole or a part of the general creditors. Whatever is done, therefore, must be with a view to a restoration by the mortgage creditors of that which they have thus inequitably obtained. It follows that if there has been in reality no diversion, there can be no restoration; and that the amount of restoration should be made to depend upon the amount of the diversion. If in the exercise of this power errors are committed, they, like others, are open to correction on appeal. All depends upon a proper application of well settled rules of equity jurisprudence to the facts of the case, as established by the evidence.

In this case no special conditions were attached to the order appointing a receiver in the Circuit Court of the United States; and it is not contended that the intervener has brought himself within the rule fixed by the state court, in respect to the payment of general creditors. He asks to be paid a rent for his cars; but he entered into no express contract with the company which requires such a payment, and there is nowhere to be found any proof of an implied obligation to make such compensation. Two years and more before the appointment of a receiver by the state court, he contracted to sell his cars to the company at an agreed price, payable in installments, secured by what was in legal effect a paramount lien upon the cars. Payments were made according to the contract until October, 1874, when they stopped. The cars remained in use after that, not under a new contract of lease, but under the old contract of sale. The price agreed upon not having been paid in full, the power of reclamation, which was reserved, has been exercised and sustained. The cars were not included in what was sold at the foreclosure sale and, consequently, have contributed nothing directly to the fund now in court for distribution. So far as appears, no moneys growing out of the receivership remain to be applied on the bonded debt; and, if there did, through the rental already paid by receiver Anderson, full compensation has been made for all additions to that fund by means of the use of the cars. There is nothing to show that the current income of the receivership or of the company has been in any manner employed so as to deprive this creditor of any of his equitable rights. In short, as the case stands, no equitable claim whatever whatever has been established upon the fund in court. Prima facie that fund belongs to the mortgage creditors, and the presumption which thus arises has not been overcome. Schall, for the balance, his due, after his own security has been exhausted, occupies the position of a general creditor only.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed so far as it directs the payment of the sum of $14,568.75 to Schall, the appellee, from the fund in court; but in all other respects it is affirmed, and the cause remanded with instructions to so modify the decree appealed from, as to make it conform to this judgment. The costs of the appeal must be paid by the appellee.

Cited—99 U. S., 256, 257, 260, 345, 392; 102 U. S., 9; 107 U. S., 594; 111 U. S., 780, 782, 783; 9 Biss., 331; 3 McCrary, 140, 495-496; 5 Hughes, 383; 7 N. W. Rep., 421.

WILLIAM R. FOSDICK ET AL., Appts.,
v.
THE SOUTHWESTERN CAR COMPANY,
INTERVENER.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 256, 257).

Cars sold, to remain vendor's property until paid for—R. R. mortgage.

1. Where cars were sold and delivered to a railroad company, and the price was secured by the notes of the company on long time, but the title of the cars was to remain in the vendor until the notes were paid, the contract was a valid one, and the cars were not subject to a prior mortgage given on the present and future acquired property of the company.

2. Where such cars were sold as part of the railroad on the foreclosure of such prior mortgage, an order to pay from the fund in court arising from such sale the price of said cars to the vendor thereof, was proper

[No. 630.]

Argued Jan. 7, 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 10, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Henry Crawford and Ashbel Green, for appellants.

Messrs. R. Biddle Roberts, John M. Butler and J. H. Ford, for Southwestern Car Co., intervenor.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal presents another petition of intervention filed in the suit of Fosdick v. R. R. Co. The general facts appearing in that suit are stated in the case of Fosdick v. Schall, just decided [ante, 339].

The claim of this intervenor, like that of Schall, arises out of a contract for the sale of cars, made with the Railroad Company on the 10th of January, 1875, a few days before the appointment of the receivers in the state court. The price was secured by the notes of the Company on long time, but the title of the cars was to remain in the vendor until the notes were paid. The cars all had upon them marks indicating the ownership of the intervenor.

The petition of intervention was filed January 27th, 1876. It set out the particulars of the contract, and asked that the receiver might be authorized to pay the price and keep the cars, as they were necessary for the profitable equipment of the road. Fosdick & Fish and the intervening bond holders answered, and without denying the material averments in the petition, claimed that notwithstanding the conditions of the sale the lien of the mortgages was paramount to the title of the intervenor. The petition was referred to a master to take testimony and report; but before any report was brought to the attention of the court, if, indeed, any had been filed, a decree of sale was entered in the principal cause in such form as to direct a sale of the cars in question as part of the railroad. After the sale had been made and confirmed, a report under the order of reference in the petition of intervention was filed. This report was to the effect that the title of the cars had never passed out of the vendor; that the price agreed to be paid, $12,750, was reasonable; that no part of it had been paid; that the cars had been in use on the road since January, 1875, for which no compensation had been made; and that these cars, or similar ones, were needed for the business of the railroad.

Fosdick, Fish and the intervening bond holders excepted on the ground that the lien of the mortgages was paramount to the title of the intervenor. Upon the hearing the exceptions were overruled; and as the cars had been included in the foreclosure sale, the clerk was directed to pay the purchase price to the intervenor from the fund in court. From this decree the present appeal has been taken.

According to the decision just made in the case of Schall, the lien of the mortgages upon the cars now in question was subject to the paramount claim of the car company for the price. The intervening petition on file when the foreclosure sale was made, was notice to the purchasers that the rights they acquired under the sale would be subject to the claim of the car company, as finally determined in the further progress of the cause. A restoration of the cars might, therefore, have been decreed to the intervenor, notwithstanding the sale. Instead of that, the payment of the price from the fund in court has been ordered. We do not understand that objection is made to this if the claim of the intervenor is superior to that of the mortgages, as we hold it to be.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

FREDERICK W. HUDEKOPER ET AL.,
Appts.,
v.

THE HINCKLEY LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 258-260.)

Contract of sale of locomotives—title reserved—respective rights of vendor and bondholders.

1. Where locomotive engines were sold and delivered to a railroad company, notes to be given for the price, the title to the locomotives to remain in the vendor until the notes were paid, and the receiver of the company subsequently surrendered them to the vendor, the amount due for their use and injured condition when returned is only a general debt of the company, with no special equities in its favor.

2. Such debt is not entitled to be paid from the proceeds of the sale on a prior mortgage as against the claims of the bondholders; the bondholders had a paramount lien on the earnings of the road and the proceeds of the sale.

[No. 573.]

Argued Jan. 7, 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 10, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Henry Crawford and S. P. McConnell (arguments on the questions involved being also filed by Ashbel Green, R. E. Williams and J. Aug. Johnson), for appellants.

NOTE.—The lien of a mortgage on after-acquired property. See note to Pennock v. Coe, 64 U. S., XVI., 436.

Messrs. R. Biddle Roberts, John M. Butler and J. H. Ford, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is also an appeal from a decree upon a petition of intervention filed in the case of Fosdick & Fish against the Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company. On the first of September, 1873, the Hinckley Locomotive Works entered into a contract with the railroad company for the sale of three locomotive engines, and on the 8th of October, 1873, for the sale of two more. By the terms of these contracts, notes were to be given for the price, payable at stated periods, which might be renewed if required. The title to the locomotives was to remain in the vendors until the notes were paid.

On the 8th of October, 1875, Anderson, the receiver in the cause, filed his petition in court, setting forth the contracts between the Railroad Company and the Locomotive Works, with a statement of the notes for the price then outstanding and unpaid; that on account of the peculiar construction of the engines they were not adapted to the business of the road, and could not be economically used, and that the Locomotive Company claimed title to the engines under their contract. He, therefore, asked authority from the court to surrender the engines to the Locomotive Company, and to adjust, settle and pay for their use during and from the date of the receivership. On the same day the necessary authority for the restoration of the engines was granted, and the receiver was instructed, if it was done, to receive the outstanding notes given for the price, and deposit them with the clerk, subject to the further order of the court.

On the 25th of October, the Locomotive Company filed its petition in the cause, setting forth that the engines had been taken back and the notes deposited with the clerk, in accordance with the instructions which had been given the receiver. It then asked that the contracts and notes be referred to a master to ascertain and report the balance due upon them. On the same day the reference was made as asked, and on the 29th of November, 1876, the master reported that the engines were accepted by the Railroad Company under the contracts, and used continuously until the fall of 1875, when they were returned to the Locomotive Company in an injured condition; that they had since been sold to other companies at reduced rates, and were worth when surrendered about one half what they were when put into the possession of the Company. He also stated his inability to ascertain definitely the amount to which the Locomotive Company was entitled, except upon the basis of a suggestion made by the receiver, that a payment should be made by way of compromise of an amount which would be fifty per cent. of the original contract price after deducting the amount received from the sale of the engines to other parties. He thereupon recommended the payment of $18,000 as a compromise settlement of the claim.

On the 14th of December, 1876, which was subsequent to the decree of foreclosure sale, but before the sale, after reading the report of the master, on motion of the solicitor of the Locomotive Company, and with the consent of Fosdick & Fish and the Railroad Company, the court found due from the Railroad Company, "for the use of and repairs to locomotives, the sum of $15,793.75," and ordered the receiver to pay it to the Locomotive Company out of the moneys in his hands as soon as it could be done consistently with the operation of the road and the payment of claims theretofore ordered. At the time this order was made the intervening bond holders had been admitted as parties to the cause, and it does not appear that their consent was obtained. On the 5th of January, 1877, they filed objections to the allowance of the claim on the ground that it was in the nature of a mere claim for money due on an account closed before the appointment of a receiver for the Railroad Company, and that the bond holders had a paramount lien on the earnings of the road and the proceeds of the sale. At the same time they filed a motion to set aside the order made December 14, for the payment of the claim. No payment was made by the receiver under the order, and on the 28th of April, after the sale under the foreclosure and its confirmation, the matter came on again for hearing upon the motion to set aside. This motion was overruled, and a further order made for the payment of the amount which had been found due "out of the proceeds in * * * court." From this last and final decree the intervening bondholders took this appeal.

We think this case is settled by that of Fosdick v. Schall, just decided [ante, 339]. The amount found due the Locomotive Company is not in reality for the use and repairs of the engines, but on account of what was agreed to be paid for the purchase. The Railroad Company contracted to buy the engines and pay a certain price. The Locomotive Company retained a paramount lien to secure the sum to be paid. The debt so incurred was not paid. The lien of the Locomotive Company has been in effect foreclosed, and a balance of the debt still remains due. Whatever may have been the form of the transaction, this is its substance. So far as we can see, no equitable claim upon any fund in court has been established as security for this debt. The Locomotive Company occupies the position of a general creditor with no special equities in its favor. As no question is presented for our consideration except that arising upon the payment of the money decree, that decree is reversed and the cause remanded for such further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as may seem to be proper.

Cited—111 U. S., 783.

WALLACE WILKERSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE TERRITORY OF UTAH.

(See S. C., "Wilkinson v. Utah," 9 Otto, 130-137.)

Utah law as to capital punishment.

The law of Utah provided that whenever any person was convicted of a capital offense, he should suffer death by being shot, hanged or beheaded, as the court should direct. This law was repealed by the Code, which provided that every person guilty of murder should suffer death, but did not provide the mode of executing the sentence, but which devolved a duty upon the court authorized to pass sentence for the crimes declared punishable therein, to determine and impose the punishment prescribed: held, that a sentence for murder, that the prisoner be shot, was within the authority of the court to prescribe the mode of execution.

[No. 686.]

Submitted Jan. 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. E. D. Hoge and P. L. Williams for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., and S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Duly organized Territories are invested with legislative power, which extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. R. S., sec. 1851.

Congress organized the Territory of Utah on the 9th of September, 1850, and provided that the legislative power and authority of the Territory shall be vested in the Governor and Legislative Assembly. 9 Stat. at L., 454.

Sufficient appears to show that the prisoner named in the record was legally charged with the willful, malicious and premeditated murder of William Baxter, with malice aforethought, by indictment of the grand jury in due form of law, as fully set forth in the transcript; and that he, upon his arraignment, pleaded that he was not guilty of the alleged offense. Pursuant to the order of the court, a jury for the trial of the prisoner was duly impaneled and sworn; and it appears that the jury, after a full and fair trial, found by their verdict, that the prisoner was guilty of murder in the first degree.

Regular proceedings followed, and the record also shows that the presiding justice in open court sentenced the prisoner as follows: that "You be taken from hence to some place in this Territory, where you shall be safely kept until Friday, the 14th day of December next; that between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon of the last named day, you be taken from your place of confinement to some place within this district, and that you there be publicly shot until you are dead."

Proceedings in the court of original jurisdiction being ended, the prisoner sued out a writ of error and removed the cause into the Supreme Court of the Territory, where the judgment of the subordinate court was affirmed. Final judgment having been rendered in the Supreme Court of the Territory, the prisoner sued out the present writ of error, the Act of Congress providing that such a writ from this court to the Supreme Court of the Territory will lie in criminal cases where the accused is sentenced to capital punishment or is convicted of bigamy or polygamy. 18 Stat. at L., 254.

Appended to the proceedings is the assignment of error imputed to the court below, which is repeated in the same words in the brief of his counsel filed since the case was removed into this court. No exception was taken to the proceedings in either court prior to the sentence, the assignment of error being that the court below erred in affirming the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction and in adjudging and sentencing the prisoner to be shot to death.

Murder, as defined by the Compiled Laws of the Territory, is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and the provision is that such malice may be express or implied. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 585. Express malice is when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow-creature, and it may be implied when there is no considerable provocation, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned or malignant heart.

Criminal homicide, when perpetrated by a person lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any one of the offenses therein enumerated, and evidencing a depraved mind, regardless of human life, is murder in the first degree. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 586.

Provision is also made that every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or, upon the recommendation of the jury, may be imprisoned at hard labor in the penitentiary for life, at the discretion of the court; and that every person guilty of murder in the second degree shall be imprisoned at hard labor in the penitentiary for not less than five nor more than fifteen years. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 586.

Duly convicted of murder in the first degree, as the prisoner was by the verdict of the jury, it is conceded that the existing law of the Territory provides that he "shall suffer death;" nor is it denied that the antecedent law of the Territory which was in force from March 6, 1852, to March 4, 1876, provided that "When any person shall be convicted of any crime the punishment of which is death, he shall suffer death by being shot, hung, or beheaded, as the court may direct," or as the convicted person may choose. Sess. Law Utah, 1852, p. 61; Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 564.

When the Revised Penal Code went into operation, it is doubtless true that it repealed that provision, as section 40 provides that "All Acts and parts of Acts" heretofore passed "inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be and the same are hereby repealed." Comp. L. Utah, 651.

Assume that section 124 of the prior law is repealed by the Revised Penal Code, and it follows that the existing law of the Territory provides that every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, without any other statutory regulation as to the mode of executing the sentence than what is found in the following enactment of the Revised Penal Code. Section 10 provides that, "The several sections of this Code which declare certain crimes to be punishable as therein mentioned, devolve a duty upon the court authorized to pass sentence to determine and impose the punishment prescribed." Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 567.

Construed as that provision must be in connection with the enactment that every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, and in view of the fact that the laws of the Territory contain no other specific regulation as to the mode of executing such a sentence, the court here is of the opinion that the assignment of error shows no legal ground for reversing the judgment of the court below. Authority to pass such a sentence is certainly not possessed by the Circuit Courts of the United States, as the Act of Congress provides that the manner of inflicting the punishment of death shall be by hanging. R. S., sec., 5325.

Punishments of the kind are always directed by the circuit courts to be inflicted in that manner, but organized Territories are invested with legislative power which extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. By virtue of that power the legislative branch of the Territory may define offenses and prescribe the punishment of the offenders, subject to the prohibition of the Constitution that cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted. Story, Const., 3 ed., sec. 1903.

Good reasons exist for supposing that Congress never intended that the provision referred to, that the punishment of death shall be by hanging, should supersede the power of the Territories to legislate upon the subject, as the congressional provision is a part of the first Crimes Act ever passed by the National Legislature. 1 Stat. at L., 114. Different statutory regulations existed in the Territory for nearly a quarter of a century, and the usages of the army to the present day are that sentences of the kind may in certain cases be executed by shooting, and in others by hanging.

Offenses of various kinds are defined in the Rules and Articles of War, where the offender, if duly convicted, may be sentenced to the death penalty. In some of those cases the provision is that the accused, if convicted, shall suffer death, and in others the punishment to be awarded depends upon the finding of the court-martial; but in none of those cases is the mode of putting to death prescribed in the articles of war or the military regulations. Article 96 provides that no person shall be sentenced to suffer death except by the concurrence of two thirds of the members of a general court-martial, and in the cases specified in the Rules and Articles enacted by Congress. R. S., p. 238.

Repeated instances occur where the death penalty is prescribed in those articles; but the invariable enactment is that the person guilty of the offense shall suffer death, without any specification as to the mode in which the sentence shall be executed, and the regulations of the army are as silent in that respect as the Rules and Articles of War. Congress having made no regulations in that regard, the custom of war, says a learned writer upon the subject, has, in the absence of statutory law, determined that capital punishment be inflicted by shooting or hanging; and the same author adds to the effect that mutiny, meaning mutiny not resulting in loss of life, desertion, or other military crime, if a capital offense, is commonly punished by shooting; that a spy is always hanged, and that mutiny, if accompanied by loss of life, is punished in the same manner; that is, by hanging. Benet, Courts-M., 5th ed., 163.

Military laws, says another learned author, do not say how a criminal offending against such laws shall be put to death, but leave it entirely to the custom of war; and his statement is that shooting or hanging is the method determined by such custom. De Hart, Courts M., 196. Like the preceding author, he also proceeds to state that a spy is generally hanged, and that mutiny, unaccompanied with loss of life, is punished by the same means; and he also concurs with Benet, that desertion, disobedience of orders, or other capital crimes are usually punished by shooting, adding, that the mode in all cases, that is, either shooting or hanging, may be declared in the sentence.

Corresponding rules prevail in other countries, of which the following authorities will afford sufficient proof: Simmons, Courts-M., 5th ed., sec. 645; Griffith, Mil. L., 86.

Capital punishment, says the author first named, may be either by shooting or hanging. For mutiny, desertion or other military crime it is commonly by shooting; for murder not combined with mutiny, for treason and piracy, accompanied with wounding or attempt to murder, by hanging, as the sentence in England must accord with the law of the country in regard to the punishment of offenders. Exactly the same views are expressed by the other writer, which need not be reproduced.

Cruel and unusual punishments are forbidden by the Constitution, but the authorities referred to are quite sufficient to show that the punishment of shooting as a mode of executing the death penalty for the crime of murder in the first degree is not included in that category, within the meaning of the 8th Amendment. Soldiers convicted of desertion or other capital military offenses are in the great majority of cases sentenced to be shot, and the ceremony for such occasions is given in great fullness by the writers upon the subject of courts-martial. Simmons, secs. 759, 760; De Hart, pp. 247, 248.

Where the conviction is in the civil tribunals, the rule of the common law was that the sentence or judgment must be pronounced or rendered by the court in which the prisoner was tried or finally condemned, and the rule was universal that it must be such as is annexed to the crime by law. Of these, says Blackstone, some are capital, which extend to the life of the offender, and consist generally in being hanged by the neck till dead. 4 Bl. Com., 377.

Such is the general statement of that commentator, but he admits that in very atrocious crimes other circumstances of terror, pain or disgrace were sometimes superadded. Cases mentioned by the author are, where the prisoner was drawn or dragged to the place of execution, in treason; or where he was emboweled alive, beheaded and quartered, in high treason. Mention is also made of public dissection in murder, and burning alive, in treason committed by a female. History confirms the truth of these atrocities, but the commentator states that the humanity of the nation by tacit consent allowed the mitigation of such parts of those judgments as savored of torture or cruelty, and he states that they were seldom strictly carried into effect. Examples of such legislation in the early history of the parent country are given by the annotator of the last edition of Arch. Tr. Arch. Crim. Pr. and Pl., 8th ed., 584.

Many instances, says Chitty, have arisen in which the ignominious or more painful parts of the punishment of high treason have been remitted, until the result appears to be that the King, though he cannot vary the sentence so as to aggravate the punishment, may mitigate or remit a part of its severity. 1 Chit. Cr. L., 787; 1 Hale, P. C., 370.

Difficulty would attend the effort to define with exactness the extent of the constitutional provision which provides that cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted; but it is safe to affirm that punishments of torture, such as those mentioned by the commentator referred to, and all others in the same line of unnecessary cruelty, are forbidden by that amendment to the Constitution. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 408; Whart. Cr. L., 7th ed., sec. 3405.

Concede all that, and still it by no means follows that the sentence of the court in this case falls within that category, or that the Supreme Court of the Territory erred in affirming the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction. Antecedent to the enactment of the Code which went into operation March 4, 1876, the Statute of the Territory passed March 6, 1852, provided that when any person was convicted of any capital offense, he shall suffer death by being shot, hanged, or beheaded, as the court may direct, subject to the qualification therein expressed, to the effect that the person condemned might have his option as to the manner of his execution, the meaning of which qualification, as construed, was that the option was limited to the modes prescribed by the statute, and that if it was not exercised, the direction must be given by the court passing the sentence.

Nothing of the kind is contained in the existing Code, and the Legislature in dropping the provision as to the option failed to enact any specific regulation as to the mode of executing the death penalty. Instead of that, the explicit enactment is that every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or upon the recommendation of the jury, may be imprisoned at hard labor in the penitentiary for life, at the discretion of the court.

Beyond all question, the first clause of the provision is applicable in this case, as the jury gave no such recommendation as that recited in the second clause, the record showing that the verdict was unconditional and absolute, from which it follows that the sentence that the prisoner shall suffer death is legally correct. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, p. 586.

Had the statute prescribed the mode of executing the sentence, it would have been the duty of the court to follow it, unless the punishment to be inflicted was cruel and unusual, within the meaning of the 8th Amendment to the Constitution, which is not pretended by the counsel of the prisoner. Statutory directions being given that the prisoner when duly convicted shall suffer death, without any statutory regulation specifically pointing out the mode of executing the command of the law, it must be that the duty is devolved upon the court authorized to pass the sentence to determine the mode of execution and to impose the sentence prescribed. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, p. 567.

Persons guilty of murder in the first degree "shall suffer death," are the words of the territorial statute; and when that provision is construed in connection with section 10 of the Code previously referred to, it is clear that it is made obligatory upon the court to prescribe the mode of executing the sentence of death which the Code imposes where the conviction is for murder in the first degree, subject, of course, to the constitutional prohibition, that cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted.

Other modes besides hanging were sometimes resorted to at common law, nor did the common law in terms require the court in passing the sentence either to prescribe the mode of execution or to fix the time or place for carrying it into effect, as is frequently if not always done in the Federal Circuit Courts. At common law, neither the mode of executing the prisoner nor the time or place of execution was necessarily embodied in the sentence. Directions in regard to the former were usually given by the judge in the calendar of capital cases prepared by the clerk at the close of the term; as, for example, in the case of murder, the direction was "let him be hanged by the neck," which calendar was signed by the judge and clerk, and constituted in many cases the only authority of the officer as to the mode of execution. 4 Bl. Com., 404; Bish. Cr. Proc., 2d ed., secs. 1146-1148; Bish. Cr. L., 6th ed., sec. 935.

Reference is made to the cases of Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y., 95; People v. Hartung, 23 How. Pr., 314; Hartung v. People, 26 N. Y., 154, and Hartung v. People, 28 N. Y., 400, as supporting the theory of the prisoner, that the court possessed no authority to prescribe the mode of execution; but the court here is entirely of a different opinion, for the reasons already given.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES, ex rel. CONCORD SAVINGS BANK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE MAYOR AND COUNCILMEN OF THE CITY OF FORT SCOTT.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 152-161.)

City bonds.

Where a city was authorized to issue its bonds for public improvements, to be paid by assessment upon the property specially improved and benefited, an owner of such bonds who has recovered judgment on them is not confined to a special assessment on the property benefited, but is entitled to have a levy of a general tax on all the taxable property within the city, to pay such judgment.

[No. 829.]

Submitted Jan. 6, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. James D. Campbell, for plaintiff in error:

The Legislature contemplated the issuance of general obligations.

The language of the Act is quite clear and explicit. "But the Mayor and Council shall have the power to issue the bonds of the City for the cost of paving, macadamizing, curbing and guttering streets and alleys, and excavating, grading and filling the same," etc.

The history of cities and towns, as well as that of municipal bonds, furnishes many instances where general public obligations have been issued for particular local improvements. Such, indeed, has been the policy of nearly every State in the Union; certainly of nearly every western State. That it has been the policy of this State of Kansas, this court too well knows. The improvement of particular streets and highways must always be regarded as of general advantage to the whole population. The use of highways is never confined to the owners of property abutting upon them; they are for the general use of the public.

NOTE.—Mandamus to compel city, town or county to levy tax to pay bonds or interest on bonds. See note to The Mayor v. U. S., 76 U. S., XIX., 704.

The latter clause of section 17 of the Act, providing for special assessments for the payment of the principal and interest of these bonds has nothing to do and does not purport to have anything to do with the remedy of the holders of these bonds against the City, and it cannot be extended by interpretation beyond the plain meaning of the words. There is no requirement that this provision shall be incorporated in the bonds, nor is there any requirement that the bonds shall be only payable out of this fund.

The sole object and purpose of the provision under consideration is to provide a fund for the indemnity of the general revenue against the obligations about to be incurred, in case they should be called upon. If the Legislature meant more than that, it should have said so.

The principle laid down by the majority of this court in U. S. v. Clark Co., 96 U. S., 211 (XXIV., 628), is conclusive on this point, that the provision contained in the Act in question, for special assessments for the payment of the bonds, limits neither the obligation of the bond nor the remedy of the holder. The case of the Com., ex rel. Henry Whellen, v. Common Council of Pittsburgh, Sup. Ct. Pa., Nov., 1878 (Pittsburgh Legal News, Nov. 28, 1878), seems also in point.

The bonds are, in form and substance, absolute general obligations.

The recital of the ordinance is a mere reference to its title and does not contain the slightest intimation of the supposed limitation. Here there is no notice of the claim of defendants that the bonds are not general obligations, for they are absolute and unconditional promises to pay.

We admit the propriety, in proper cases, of controlling the operation of the judgment by limiting the execution, but, in all such cases to which our attention has been called, the judgment expressly limits the execution to particular assets.

See, Jordan v. Cass Co., 3 Dill., 194, approved and followed by this court in Cass Co. v. Johnston, 95 U. S., 370 (XXIV., 418).

Mr. J. D. McCleverty, for defendants in error:

The plaintiff in error claims, in effect, that there is no difference in the nature of the liability of the City upon the special improvement bonds, issued under section 17, and upon the general improvement bond, issued under section 19, nor in the kind of tax to be levied to pay them. The language of the two sections is in sharp contrast. Section 17 provides:

"And for the payment of said bonds, assessments shall be made * * * upon the taxable property chargeable therewith, as is provided in the 3d clause of the 2d subdivision of the preceding section (section 16)."

See 9 OTTO.

While section 19 provides: "The Council shall levy taxes on all the taxable property within the City * * * to pay said bonds at their maturity."

As well might a holder of bonds issued under section 19, claim that he was entitled to the levy of the special assessment provided for in section 17.

Another evidence that the law intends a difference between these two classes of bonds, and in the nature of the liability of the City upon them, is the fact that section 19, and every other section of the law governing cities of the second class, which authorizes the issue of bonds creating a general liability and made payable by the levy of general taxes, prohibits so doing, except when authorized thereto by a vote of the People (see sections 19, 46, L. of Kan., 1871, pp. 150, 157), while section 17 does not require the vote of the People.

The City Council, too, has given section 17 the same practical construction, by enacting in the ordinance above quoted, that these bonds "Shall be paid, principal and interest, solely from special assessments to be made upon and collected solely from the lots and pieces of ground fronting," etc.

The question of the general liability of municipal corporations under similar laws has been frequently before the courts, and the uniform ruling has been, that the only liability is, the special liability created by law, and that the creditor must look to that only.

McCullough v. Mayor, etc., of Brooklyn, 23 Wend., 458; Lake v. Trustees of Williamsburgh, 4 Den., 520; Hunt v. Utica, 18 N. Y., 442; Eilert v. Oshkosh, 14 Wis., 586; Whalen v. La Crosse, 16 Wis., 271; Silkman v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis., 555; Finney v. Oshkosh, 18 Wis., 209; People v. Milwaukee, 10 Mich., 274; Goodrich v. Detroit, 12 Mich., 279; Bk. v. Lansing, 25 Mich., 207; see, also, New Albany v. Sweeney, 13 Ind., 245; Casey v. Leavenworth, 17 Kan., 189.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

A statute of Kansas, approved March 2, 1871, confers upon cities of the second class authority to enact ordinances for certain defined purposes. By the 16th section authority is given:

1. To levy and collect taxes for general revenue purposes, not to exceed five mills on the dollar in any one year, on all the real, mixed and personal property within their limits, taxable according to the laws of the State; 2. To open and improve streets, avenues and alleys, make sidewalks and build bridges, culverts and sewers, the cost of which may be met by assessment in the following manner, to wit: first, for opening, widening and grading all streets and avenues, for building bridges, culverts and sewers, and for footwalks across streets, assessments shall be made on all taxable property within the corporate limits of the City, not exceeding five mills on the dollar in any one year; second, for making and repairing sidewalks, assessments shall be made on all lots and pieces of ground abutting on the improvement, according to front feet; third, for paving, macadamizing, curbing and guttering streets, alleys and avenues, and excavating, grading and filling same, and for improvements of the squares and areas formed by the crossing of streets, assessments shall be made on all lots and pieces of ground to the center of the block extending along the street or avenue, the distance improved or to be improved, according to the assessed value of the lots or pieces of ground, without regard to the buildings or improvements thereon, which value must be ascertained by three disinterested appraisers, appointed by the Mayor and Council.

By the 17th section it is declared that assessments made pursuant to the third clause of the second subdivision of the preceding section shall be known as "special assessments for improvements," and, except as thereafter provided, shall be levied and collected as one tax, in addition to taxes for general revenue purposes. But the Mayor and Council are empowered to issue bonds of the City for the costs of paving, macadamizing, curbing and guttering streets and avenues, and excavating, grading and filling for same, to be made payable as follows: one third of the aggregate amount of bonds of any issue in one year, one third in two years, and one third in three years, with interest from date, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable annually. "And for the payment of said bonds, assessments shall be made in each year to pay the principal and interest maturing on said bonds during said fiscal year, upon the taxable property chargeable therewith, as is provided in the third clause of the second subdivision of the preceding section, and such tax shall be certified by the city clerk to the county clerk, and placed upon the tax roll for collection, subject to the same penalties and collected in like manner as other taxes." L. of Kan., 1871, p. 148.

The 18th section provides that "The Council may appropriate money and provide for the payment of the debts and expenses of the City and, when necessary, may provide for issuing bonds for the purpose of funding any and all indebtedness now existing or hereafter created of the City, now due or to become due." And for the payment of any coupons of bonds issued under that section the Council is required to levy taxes, payable in cash, on all the property in the City, in addition to other taxes. L. of Kan., 1871, p. 148.

The 19th section declares that the Council may provide for making any and all improvements of a general nature in the City, and to pay for same may, from time to time, borrow money and issue bonds. In the payment of such bonds, with their interest coupons, at maturity, the Council is required to levy taxes, payable in cash, on all taxable property within the City, in addition to other taxes. Bonds authorized by that section cannot, however, be issued unless the Council is previously instructed to do so by a majority of all the votes cast at an election held for that purpose.

By section 21 the Council is required "To make provision from time to time for a sinking fund to redeem at maturity the bonded indebtedness of the City," the taxes levied for that purpose being payable only in cash.

By section 22 the Council is authorized and required to levy annually, taxes, payable in cash only, on all the taxable property within the City, in addition to other taxes, and in amount sufficient to pay the interest and coupons as they become due "on all the bonds of the City" then (1871) issued or thereafter to be issued by the City.

These sections seem to be the only portions of the Statute of March 2, 1871, which have any direct bearing upon the question presented for consideration.

In the year 1872, the City Council of Fort Scott, being a city of the second class, by ordinance required one of its streets to be graded, paved, guttered and macadamized, within prescribed limits, the cost of the work to be paid for in bonds of the City, to be registered and classified as special improvement bonds, and which might be made payable in New York. The ordinance provides that the bonds "Shall be paid, principal and interest, solely from special assessments to be made upon and collected solely from the lots and pieces of ground fronting upon and extending along the street the distance improved, in the manner provided in sections 16 and 17 of an Act of the Legislature of Kansas relating to the powers and government of cities of the second class, approved March 2, 1871."

In accordance with that ordinance, bonds with coupons attached were issued and negotiated to the amount of several thousand dollars.

Upon the margin of each bond is this statement: "Issued in accordance with sections 16 and 17 of an Act of the Legislature of Kansas, entitled an Act Relating to the Powers and Government of Cities of the Second Class, and to Repeal Certain Sections of Chap. 19 of the General Statutes of 1868, approved March 2, 1871, and in pursuance of an ordinance of the City of Fort Scott, entitled An Ordinance Ordering the Grading, Curbing, Guttering and Macadamizing a Part of Wall Street." Upon each bond also was indorsed the official certificate of the Auditor of the State, to the effect that such bond "had been regularly and legally issued, that the signatures thereto were genuine," and that the bond had been duly registered in his office in accordance with the Statute of March 2, 1872.

The Concord Savings Bank having become the holder and owner, for a valuable consideration and before maturity, of some of these bonds, and failing to obtain payment, sued the City, and recovered judgment for the amount thereof in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas. The judgment is in the ordinary form, except that the court adds: "And it is further ordered and adjudged that the judgment now here rendered be enforced and collected pursuant to law in such case made and provided."

Subsequently, the bank sued out an alternative writ of mandamus, commanding the City Council to levy and collect a sufficient tax upon all the taxable property within the City to pay the judgment, interest and costs. But, upon demurrer, the court below held that the relator was only entitled to a levy of special assessments upon the property benefited and improved, and upon that ground the writ was set aside and the relator's information dismissed, with costs to the City.

The vital question upon this writ of error is, whether the City is under a legal obligation to impose, in satisfaction of the relator's judgment, a tax upon all the taxable property of the City.

If so, the judgment dismissing the information should be reversed; otherwise, it must be affirmed.

It is contended by counsel for the Bank that as the judgment for the debt has never been modified or reversed, the City is estopped, in this proceeding, to say that the relator was entitled only to a levy upon the property specially benefited. A determination of that question does not seem absolutely necessary in view of our conclusions upon other issues presented in the case. We, therefore, waive its consideration, and proceed to an examination of the Statute of March 2, 1871, under which the bonds were issued. We are the more inclined to pursue this course because of the frank concession by counsel of the relator that perhaps the purpose of the learned judge who framed the order of dismissal was to reserve the real question in controversy for determination when proceedings for mandamus should come before him.

In our examination of the Statute of March 2, 1871, we are impressed with a strong conviction that the Legislature intended to confer upon cities coming within its provisions the amplest authority, not only to incur obligations for all legitimate municipal purposes, but to meet promptly every obligation thus incurred. Unusual care seems to have been taken to guard the financial credit of such cities by provisions which, if enforced, would not only give confidence to creditors, but render municipal repudiation impossible. This care is manifested in the section which requires the Council to establish a sinking fund for the redemption, at maturity, of "the bonded indebtedness of the City," that fund to be supplied by taxes, payable only in cash. It is further shown in the section which both authorizes and requires sufficient taxation annually on all taxable property within the City to meet the interest as it matures "on all the bonds of the City." It is still further indicated in the section which declares that the Council "may * * * provide for the payment of the debts and expenses of the City." No express restriction is imposed as to the mode in which such provision may be made, except that, when necessary, "any and all indebtedness of the City" may be met by issuing funding bonds, the interest upon which may be paid by taxation "on all the property of the City, in addition to other taxes." A faithful exertion of the powers thus conferred would seem to be sufficient to secure the prompt satisfaction of any municipal indebtedness incurred in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of 1871. That the bonds for the amount of which the relator obtained judgment constitute a "debt," or a portion of "the bonded indebtedness" of the City, within the meaning of the statute, cannot well be doubted. The ordinance which required the improvements in question, in terms directs that the cost thereof "Shall be paid for in the bonds of the City," to be signed by the Mayor, attested by the City clerk under the corporate seal of the City, and countersigned by the City treasurer. Further, each bond declares upon its face that it is a "Special improvement bond of the City of Fort Scott, Kansas;" and that the City, "for value received, acknowledges itself to owe, and promises to pay to the holder" the amount thereof. Still further, the statute under which the ordinance was framed authorizes the council to pay the cost of such special improvements by issuing "the bonds of the city." Finally, the bonds were negotiated by the city authorities, by whom the proceeds were received and expended under the direction of the Council. They constitute, therefore, in every just sense, debts which the City, in its corporate capacity, is under a statutory and legal obligation to provide for in some effectual, substantial manner.

But, in behalf of the City, it is urged that the holder of these bonds must, by the terms of the statute, and the ordinance of January, 22, 1872, look for payment exclusively to assessments upon the property specially improved and benefited. It is contended that such was the purpose of the City, of which the purchaser had constructive notice in the reference, in the marginal statement upon the bonds, both to sections 16 and 17 of the Act of March 2, 1871, and to the ordinance passed by the Council. To that interpretation of the contract we cannot yield our assent. It is true that section 17 declares that "For the payment of said bonds" assessments shall be made "Upon the taxable property chargeable therewith;" that is, "on all lots and pieces of ground to the center of the block, extending along the street or avenue, the distance improved." But it is neither expressly nor by necessary implication provided that the holder of the bonds may not be paid in some other mode, or that the City will not, under the authority derived from other sections of the statute, comply with its promise to pay the bonds, with interest, at maturity. As between the City and its tax payers, it was certainly its duty, through the Council, to provide, if practicable, payment by taxation upon the property improved, rather than upon all the taxable property within its corporate limits. But the duty to make such distribution of the burden of special improvements did not lessen its obligation, in accordance with its express agreement, to pay the interest and principal of the bonds at maturity. Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S., 341 [XXIV., 659].

The main difficulty comes from the peculiar phraseology of the city ordinance prescribing the source from which the means for the payment of the bonds should be obtained. The statement in the ordinance that the bonds "Shall be paid, principal and interest, solely from special assessments, to be made upon and collected solely from the lots and pieces of ground fronting upon or extending along the street the distance improved," should be regarded only as an expression, in emphatic terms, of the purpose and duty of the City, as between all its tax payers, to impose the cost of the proposed improvements upon the property specially benefited. There is no reason to presume that the ordinance was intended to mean more than the statute under which it was enacted. The general reference, upon the margin of the bonds, to the ordinance under which the improvement was projected should not, in view of the general powers of the Council, as declared in the statute, be held as qualifying or lessening the unconditional promise of the City, set forth in the body of the bonds, itself to pay the bonds, with their prescribed interest, at maturity. The agreement is, that the City shall pay the interest and principal at maturity. There is no reservation, as against the purchasers of the bonds, of a right, under any circumstances, to withhold payment at maturity, or to postpone payment until the City should obtain, by special assessments upon the improved property, the means with which to make payment, or to withhold payment altogether, if the special assessments should prove inadequate for payment. Experience informs us that the City would have met with serious, if not insuperable, obstacles in its negotiations had the bonds upon their face, in unmistakable terms, declared that the purchaser had no security beyond the assessments upon the particular property improved. If the corporate authorities intended such to be the contract with the holders of the bonds, the same good faith which underlies and pervades the Statute of March 2, 1871, required an explicit avowal of such purpose in the bond itself, or, in some other form, by language, brought home to the purchaser, which could neither mislead nor be misunderstood.

In this case, it is alleged by the City that the special assessments required by the 17th section of the Act of 1871 were duly made before the maturity of the bonds, and that all amounts collected in that mode have been promptly paid over by the City to holders of such bonds. But the unquestioned fact remains, that the bonds, with some interest, held by the relator, were not met at maturity as the City agreed that they should be. They are still unpaid. The special assessments made have, from some cause not explained in the answer of the City, proven wholly insufficient. Nor does it appear that they will ever prove sufficient for the payment of the relator's judgment. The corporate authorities repudiate all legal obligation upon the part of the City to provide payment in any other mode or from any other source, a position which we hold to be untenable and in violation of a plain duty imposed by statute. We are of opinion that the Council has the power, under this statute, to provide for the payment of the relator's judgment by taxation upon all the taxable property within the City, and such should have been the judgment of the court below. A discharge of that duty will in no wise interfere with the right of the Council to reimburse the City, if that be now possible, for all amounts thus paid, out of special assessments upon the property primarily chargeable with the cost of the work on account of which the bonds were issued.

The judgment is reversed, with directions for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Cited—112 U. S., 162.

AMELIA MARY TICE AND HENRY T. CHAPMAN, JR., Admsrs. of ISAAC P. TICE, Deceased, Appls.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 286-290.)

Distillers' meters—contract for.

Where the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made a contract for distillers' meters for the Government, and, by the contract, the commissioner had the right at any time to revoke the order adopting the meter and to direct the discontinuance of its manufacture on behalf of the Government, and the power of revocation and discontinuance was exerted by an order of June 8, 1870, reserving the rights of the manufacturer as to all meters in process of construction, not exceeding twenty sets, the Government was not liable to pay for the meters on hand June 8, 1871, when their further use was discontinued.

[No. 1034.]

Submitted Jan. 30, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. J. W. Douglass, for appellants.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

By an Act approved March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L. 481, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to "adopt, procure and prescribe" for use hydrometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters or other means for ascertaining the strength and quality of spirits subject to tax, or for preventing or detecting frauds by distillers of spirits.

On the 18th April, 1867, the Secretary adopted the Tice meter, and prescribed its use in distilleries, upon certain agreed conditions fully set forth in a letter to the inventor. Among those conditions were these:

"The Secretary of the Treasury holds himself at liberty at any time to adopt any improvement or modification of the meter or system, or at any time to revoke the order adopting the meter, and to discontinue their manufacture on behalf of the Government. If the first meter shall prove successful when subjected to the test above set forth, and the Government shall subsequently revoke the adoption of the meter and order a discontinuance of proceedings, you will be paid such sum as may be determined upon in the manner hereinafter stated, for all instruments which you may have completed or have in process of completion at the time of such revocation: Provided, That at no time shall you have more than twenty sets in process of manufacture at any one time, unless directions shall be given hereafter for the manufacture of a larger number."

By Joint Resolution, passed February 3, 1868, 15 Stat at L., 246, Congress directed the appointment, by the Secretary of the Treasury, of a commission which, in connection with the then existing Commission of the Academy of Science, should examine all meters and mechanical contrivances or inventions presented to them which were intended to measure, test and ascertain the productiveness of grain or other articles prepared for distillation, or the actual quantity and strength of distilled spirits subject to tax, produced therefrom, the result of such examination to be communicated to Congress. The Act declared "That pending the action of said commission, and until their report be made, and a meter shall be by law adopted, all work on the construction of meters, under the direction of the Treasury Department, be and is hereby suspended." "And in the meantime no further contract shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury" under the Act of March 2, 1867.

By an Act approved July 20, 1868, 15 Stat.

99 U. S.

at L., 125, power to "adopt and prescribe" meters was conferred upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That officer, on September 16, 1868, decided to adopt and prescribe the Tice meter, and upon certain conditions, to which the inventor assented, he directed the latter "to proceed with their construction." Among the conditions were these:

"Third. The 117 meters now finished will be immediately made ready for delivery, and 36 now in process of manufacture will be completed as soon as possible. The manufacture of others, to the number of 500 in all, is to be proceeded with as rapidly as possible, and thereafter not more than twenty sets are to be in process of construction at one time, unless a greater number is directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Fourth. The Commissioner reserves to himself, or his successor in office, the right at any time to adopt any improvement of the meter or system, or to revoke the order adopting the meter, and to direct on the part of the Government a discontinuance of its manufacture."

On the 7th June, 1870, the Commissioner ordered the discontinuance of that kind of Tice meter known as the second or "credit" meter, and required distilleries to use thereafter the Tice sample meter, and the Tice automatic meters adapted for use as sample meters.

On the succeeding day, June 8, 1870, the Commissioner addressed to Tice a letter, in which, among other things, he gave notice that instructions and regulations in force prior to October 8, 1869, "Relating to the ordering and shipment and payment for the meters invented by you and prescribed for use in distilleries, remain in force only in respect to meters heretofore delivered, and also those you may now have on hand or in process of construction, not exceeding twenty sets." In that letter the commissioner further says: "Any regulations heretofore prescribed, addressed to you by or from this office, directing or authorizing you to construct, or proceed with the construction of, or to furnish, meters, especially those of September 16, 1868, are revoked, except as aforesaid. New rules, regulations and orders have been prescribed, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, it being distinctly understood that neither the Government of the United States, nor any department or officer thereof, is or will be responsible for or on account of any spirit meters, or the attachment or adjustment thereof."

By a formal order made on June 8, 1871, the further use of Tice's spirit meters was finally discontinued, and all existing orders prescribing the same were revoked. At the date of that order Tice had on hand fourteen and one half sets of meters, worth $25,000, for which sum, and for storage up to April 8, 1873, the estate of Tice rendered an account against the Government on the 12th of April, 1873. The amount was approved by the then Commissioner; but payment being refused, this action was brought against the Government for the recovery of the sum claimed.

From the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Government this appeal is prosecuted.

We concur with the learned counsel for appellants in the proposition that the contract made on the 18th of April, 1867, by the Secretary of the Treasury with Tice, was not abrogated by the Joint Resolution of February 3, 1868. By the terms of the Resolution it was only suspended until final action by the commission, whose report was designed as the foundation of a statute which would designate the kind of meters which should be adopted. But express authority to make a new contract was conferred by the Act of July 20, 1868, 15 Stat. at L., 125, upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That officer was empowered to adopt and prescribe for use such hydrometers, saccharometers, weighing and gauging instruments or meters, as he might deem necessary. The extent of the authority intended to be conferred upon him is manifested by the 3d section of the Act of July 20, 1868, which required every owner, agent or superintendent of a distillery to furnish and attach, at his own expense, such meter as the Commissioner might adopt and prescribe for use. It was by virtue of its provisions that the agreement of September 16, 1868, was made. According to any fair construction of its terms, in the light of attendant circumstances, the Government was bound, as under the agreement of September 18, 1867, to pay for such sets, not exceeding twenty, as Tice might have on hand at the time their use should be discontinued. The provision to that effect in the contract of September 18, 1867, is so reasonable and just, that we shall not presume that the contract of September 16, 1868, was intended to establish a different rule of compensation to the inventor. But we do not perceive, however, that all this justifies the conclusion that the Government was under any legal obligation to pay for the meters which Tice had on hand on June 8, 1871, and for the value of which the account in question was presented. By the express words of the agreement of September 18, 1867, the Commissioner had the right at any time to revoke the order adopting the meter, and to direct the discontinuance of its manufacture on behalf of the Government. That power was partially exerted by the order of June 7, 1870, which dispensed with the further use of all Tice meters except the sample meters, or the automatic meters, adopted for use as sample meters. But the power of revocation and discontinuance was fully exerted by the sweeping order of June 8, 1870, which, reserving the rights of Tice as to all meters theretofore delivered, and as to such as were then on hand or in process of construction, not exceeding twenty sets, revoked all previous regulations which directed or authorized the inventor to construct, or proceed with the construction of, or to furnish, meters, and especially the regulation of September 16, 1868. By that order distinct notice was given to the patentee that neither the Government of the United States, nor any department or officer thereof, was or would be responsible for or on account of any spirit meters, or the attachment or adjustment thereof. The order of June 8, 1870, did not, perhaps, discontinue the use of meters altogether, but it clearly furnished notice that the patentee could not look to the Government for protection or re-imbursement as to any meters thereafter constructed by him and used by distilleries. The meters for which the account was rendered were on hand on June 8, 1871, when all existing orders prescribing the same for use were absolutely revoked, and the further use of Tice meters discontinued. Had they been on hand and in the process of construction at the date of the order of June 8, 1870, we would not doubt the liability of the Government for their value. But no such fact is found, and we suppose no such fact could have been established.

While we do not agree with the court below in all the reasons assigned in support of the conclusion reached, we think its judgment is in accordance with the law, and it is affirmed.

SUSAN P. GRIGSBY, Admrx. of J. WARREN GRIGSBY, Deceased, ET AL. Appts.,

v.

C. W. PURCELL, & CO., D. J. SAUNDERS, Receiver, etc., ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 505-508.)

Cause when dismissed—waiver.

1. If a transcript is not filed and the cause docketed during the term to which it was made returnable, or some sufficient excuse given for the delay, the writ of error or appeal becomes inoperative, and the cause will be dismissed.

2. This objection may be taken advantage of by the court upon its own motion, or by the appellee or the defendant in error, at any time before hearing. Mere appearance does not amount to a waiver.

[No. 136.]

Submitted, Mar. 4, 1879. Decided, Mar. 17, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky.

On motion to dismiss.

The case is fully stated by the court. With this case, was argued and decided No. 984. See note hereto appended.

Messrs. W. O. Harris, Linden Kent and H. C. Pindell, for appellees.

Messrs. Hoadley, Johnson & Colston and John W. Stevenson, in No. 136, Jas. B. Beck and H. C. Pindell in No. 984, for appellants.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to enforce the provisions of a trust-deed executed by J. Warren Grigsby to secure "All the debts of the house of Taylor, Shelby, & Co., created since the fourteenth day of July, 1857," for which he was liable. The bill was filed by part of the creditors for themselves and such others as should come in and prove their claims. In the progress of the cause a reference was had to a master, who in due time made his report. At the hearing before the master, the appellant, Susan P. Grigsby, the wife of J. Warren Grigsby, appeared as a creditor and proved her claim. To the report of the master she excepted; and upon the hearing the court decreed in her favor to the amount of $21,753.05, and directed the payment of that amount to her from the fund in court. The remainder of her claim was rejected. This decree was rendered at the February Term, 1875, of the Circuit Court, and on the 15th day of the month of February. On the 23d of the same month, and during the term, an entry was made in the cause granting an appeal prayed by J. Warren Grigsby and Susan P. Grigsby; but it does not appear that any bond for costs or for a superseas was ever executed.

On the 19th of April, 1875, Mrs. Grigsby receipted to the receiver in the cause for the amount of the decree in her favor, and on the 6th of May, still during the February Term, an appeal prayed by W. H. Thomas was granted; but, so far as appears, no bond executed.

The October Term, 1875, of this court closed by adjournment on the 8th of May, 1876. Neither of these appeals were docketed during that term, and the transcript of the record was not filed in court. So far as appears, no attempt was made to do so, and no excuse has been given for the delay; but on the 12th of August, 1876, before the commencement of the next term, the transcript was filed by Mr. and Mrs. Grigsby, and their appeal docketed. That of Thomas was not docketed until during the present Term. Nothing further was done in the case by either party until December 14, 1878, when the appellees moved to dismiss the appeal of Grigsby and wife because it was a joint appeal, the appellants not being united but opposed in interest. Printed briefs for and against this motion were filed by the respective parties, and on the 23d of December the motion was overruled. The attention of the court was not called to the delay in filing the transcript and docketing the appeals until Jan. 19, 1879, when the causes were reached in their regular order on the docket. The counsel for the appellees then suggested the delay, and moved to dismiss on that account.

Section 997 of the Revised Statutes, which is a substantial re-enactment of a similar provision in section 23 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 84, requires that "There shall be annexed to and returned with any writ of error for the removal of a cause, at the day and place therein mentioned, an authenticated transcript of the record, an assignment of errors, and a prayer for reversal, with a citation to the adverse party." Appeals are subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as are prescribed by law in cases of writs of error. R. S., sec. 1012; 2 Stat. at L., 244.

Under this legislation it has long been held that if the transcript was not filed and the cause docketed during the term to which it was made returnable, or some sufficient excuse given for the delay, the writ of error or appeal became inoperative, and the cause might, on that account, be dismissed. Hamilton v. Moore, 3 Dall., 371; Blair v. Miller, 4 Dall., 21; The Virginia v. West, 19 How. 182 [60 U. S., XV. 594]; Castro v. U. S., 3 Wall., 47 [70 U. S., XVIII. 163]; U. S. v. Gomez, 3 Wall., 752 [70 U. S., XVIII. 212]; Mesa v. U. S., 2 Black, 721 [67 U. S., XVII. 350]; Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall 355 [73 U. S., XVIII. 810]; Edmonson v. Bloomshire, 7 Wall., 306 [74 U. S., XIX., 91].

After the cases of Hamilton v. Moore and Blair v. Miller, an attempt seems to have been made in Wood v. Lide, 4 Cranch, 180, to adopt a less stringent rule, but the uniform current of decisions since is all the other way; and in Edmonson v. Bloomshire we considered the practice so well established as to make it better "To resort to the Legislature for its correction, than that the court should depart from its settled course of action for a quarter of a century." There are, however, exceptions to the rule, as in U. S. v. Gomez, supra, where there was fraud, and in U. S. v. Booth, 21 How., 506 [62 U. S., XVI., 169], where the State Court to which the writ was directed ordered the clerk to disregard the writ and make no return; but in all such cases it must appear that the appellant or the plaintiff in error has not himself been guilty of laches or want of diligence.

These appellants bring themselves within none of the exceptions which have ever been recognized. There has been no fraud or circumvention, and the whole difficulty arises from their own negligence alone. It does not appear that the clerk was called upon to make the transcript until after the term of this court to which the appeal was returnable had closed. No security for costs ever was given, and in fact nothing was done towards the prosecution of the appeal until it had become inoperative by lapse of time, except to obtain an order of the court for its allowance. To entertain the cause under such circumstances would be to encourage an addition to the already burdensome delay necessarily attendant upon litigation in this court on account of the crowded state of the docket. Instead of this, we should, as we do, insist on promptness and activity by all who come here to obtain a re-examination of judgments and decrees against them.

It by no means follows, as seems to be supposed by counsel who resist this motion, that if parties appear and without objection go to a hearing in a cause docketed after the return term, our judgment will be void for want of jurisdiction. The real objection is not that this court has no jurisdiction, but that the plaintiff in error, or the appellant, as the case may be, has failed to duly prosecute his suit; and this objection may be taken advantage of by the court upon its own motion, or by the appellee or the defendant in error, at any time before hearing. Mere appearance does not amount to a waiver. In this case the objection was taken in time.

The appeal is dismissed.

NOTE. Thomas v. Purcell, No. 984. This appeal is also dismissed, for the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion.

Cited—105 U. S., 451; 108 U. S., 168; 109 U. S., 117; 110 U. S., 401; 111 U. S., 784.

DAVID L. YULEE, Piff. in Err.,

v.

FRANCIS VOSE.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 539-546.)

Removal of causes—time of—by one defendant.

1. Under the Act of 1866, a cause may be removed from a State Court to the Circuit Court at any time before trial.

2. When the cause was called for trial and after the jury was sworn in the State Court, the counsel of defendant directed the attention of the court to the petition for removal, and asked that the complaint be dismissed for want of jurisdiction: held, that the application was in time.

3. Where Y., a citizen of Florida, had been sued with other defendants by a citizen of New York, in the courts of the State of New York, and a part of the other defendants with whom he had been joined were then citizens of that State, and the controversy, so far as it concerned Y., had been by judicial determination, separated from that of the other defendants; it gave Y. a right to the transfer of his part of the suit to the Circuit Court, and required the State Court to proceed no further.

[No. 166.]

Argued Jan. 30, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Edward N. Dickerson and Wm. M. Merrick, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. P. Phillips, E. W. Stoughton and Theron G. Strong, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit commenced February 16, 1868, in the Supreme Court of New York, by Francis Vose against the Florida Railroad Company, David L. Yulee, Edward N. Dickerson, Marshall O. Roberts and Isaac K. Roberts. The prayer of the complaint was that Edward K. Dickerson, Marshall O. Roberts and all other associates of Edward N. Dickerson, who, when discovered, should be made parties, might be required to pay a judgment which had been rendered in favor of Vose against the Florida Railroad Company, in the Supreme Court of New York, on which there was due $136,534.63, and interest from February 1, 1867; that Dickerson, Yulee, Marshall O. and Isaac K. Roberts, and their associates, who it was alleged held all the franchises and property of the company, might be required to hold the income of the railroad, in trust for the payment of the amount of the judgment; that certain securities alleged to be in the hands of Yulee might be also subjected to the payment of the debt; and for other relief. It further appeared from the averments in the complaint, that Yulee was liable as indorser on part of the notes on which the judgment was rendered; and this allegation was not denied in his answer, but no judgment was specifically asked against him on that account.

On the trial of the cause, the complaint was dismissed as to all the defendants. This judgment was affirmed in all respects by the Supreme Court in General Term; but in the Court of Appeals it was reversed as to Yulee, and the cause remanded for a new trial as to him, on account of his liability as indorser of the notes. As to all the other defendants and all other relief asked there was an affirmance.

On the 6th of June, 1873, after the mandate came down from the Court of Appeals, Yulee filed in the trial court his petition, accompanied by the necessary bond, for the removal of the suit as against him to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, under the Act of July 27, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 306. That statute provides that if in any suit already commenced, or which might thereafter be commenced, in any State Court, against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought, against a citizen of another State, a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought is or shall be a defendant; and if the suit, so far as it relates to the alien defendant, or to the defendant who is the citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, is one in which there can be a final determination of the controversy so far as it concerns him, without the presence of the other defendants as parties, "Then and in every such case the alien defendant, or the defendant who is a citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, may, at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, file a petition for removal of the cause as against him into the next Circuit Court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, * * * and it shall thereupon be the duty of the state court * * * to proceed no further in the cause as against the defendant so applying for its removal." The petition for removal set forth, in sufficient form and with sufficient particularity, the citizenship of Vose in New York, and of Yulee in Florida, both then and at the time of the commencement of the suit; but it made no mention of the citizenship of the other defendants. In all other respects the petition met fully the requirements of the statute. The accompanying bond was also correct in form, and no objection was made to its sufficiency. Notice of an intention to make the application for the removal was served on the attorneys of Vose on the 17th of April, 1873. Accompanying the petition was an affidavit of Dickerson, under date of June 4, 1873, to the effect that he, Dickerson, and the defendants Roberts, were citizens of the State of New York.

The cause came on for trial June 9, 1873, and a jury was sworn, when the counsel for Yulee called the attention of the court to the proceedings which had been taken for the removal, and moved to dismiss the complaint for want of jurisdiction. This motion was overruled, and the trial proceeded, resulting in a verdict, by order of the court, against Yulee for $168,589.30 on which judgment was rendered. Exception to the ruling of the court on the question of removal was duly taken. Upon this state of the record, the case was taken by proper proceedings to the Court of Appeals, where the judgment was affirmed, on the ground that the suit was not removable under the Act of 1866 when the petition for removal was filed, because the defendant Yulee was then the only defendant. This ruling of the Court of Appeals is now assigned for error.

When this suit was commenced in the state court, Vose, the sole plaintiff below, was a citizen of New York, and Yulee a citizen of Florida. If there had been no other defendant but Yulee, he could then have removed the cause to the circuit court, under section 12 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 79, on filing his petition to that effect, and giving the necessary security at the time of entering his appearance. His joinder with other defendants, however, prevented this at that time; and as the suit then stood, it was impossible for him to proceed under the Act of 1866, because, although his liability as indorser, in which his co-defendants had no interest, was shown, he was united with them in respect to other matters where there could be no final determination of the controversy, so far as it concerned him, without their presence. When the Court of Appeals decided that there could be no relief in the action, except so far as it related to the liability of Yulee as indorser of the notes, the other parts of the case were disposed of, and that which related to Yulee alone left for final determination. This action of the Court of Appeals separated the controversy in which Yulee was alone concerned as defendant from the rest of the case, and put him for the first time in a condition to invoke the aid of the Act of 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 306. It is true he was then the sole remaining defendant, but it was in a suit which had been commenced against him and others, and which was still pending undisposed of as to him. Under these circumstances, we are clearly of the opinion that the case was removable, notwithstanding the final judgment in favor of all the other defendants in respect to all the other matters in controversy.

This disposes of the question on which the Court of Appeals based its decision; but as the state court was not bound to surrender its jurisdiction until a case had been made which, upon its face, gave Yulee a right to the transfer, it remains to consider whether the record shows that what was done had that effect.

The petition and accompanying affidavits and bond were filed in court June 5, 1873. This was before the trial and thus in time, under the Act of 1866, which in this respect differs from the Act of 1789. When the cause was called for trial and after the jury was sworn, the counsel of Yulee directed the attention of the court to the petition for removal, and asked that the complaint be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. This was in effect asking the court to proceed no further in the cause, as it had been withdrawn from the jurisdiction by reason of the proceedings for removal. As no objection was made specifically to the bond which was offered, we are to presume that the security was satisfactory, and that the court refused to withhold further proceedings because a case for removal had not been made.

We think the application was made in time. The trial had not commenced. The most that can be said is that preparations were being made for a trial.

The petition and the affidavits which accompanied it are to be taken together as part of the same instrument. They are also to be considered in connection with the other parts of the record to which they belong.

The evident purpose of the Act of 1866 was to relieve a person sued with others in the courts of a State of which he was not a citizen, by one who was a citizen, from the disabilities of his co-defendants in respect to the removal of the litigation to the courts of the United States, if he could separate the controversy, so far as it concerned him, from the others, without prejudice to his adversary. In view of the fact that sometimes in the progress of a cause circumstances develop themselves which made such a transfer desirable, when at first it did not appear to be so, the right of removal in this class of cases was kept open until the trial or final hearing, instead of being closed after an entry of appearance, as was the rule under the Act of 1789. We think this gives such a party the right of removal at any time before trial, when the necessary citizenship of his co-defendants is found to exist, and the separation of his interest in the controversy can be made. There is nothing in the Act to manifest a contrary intention, and this construction does no more than give the party to whom this new privilege is granted an opportunity of availing himself of any circumstances that may appear in his favor previous to the time when he is called upon finally to act. In Ins. Co. v. Pechner, 95 U. S., 183 [XXIV., 427], we held that the Act of 1789 clearly had reference to the citizenship of the parties when the suit was begun, because the party entitled to the removal was required to make his election when he entered his appearance. But here a party otherwise entitled to a removal is embarrassed by the presence of those whom he cannot control. In view of this, the time of making his election is extended until he is brought to trial; and it is not at all in conflict with Pechner's case to say that he may avail himself of his release from the operation of the disabilities growing out of his joinder in the action with other defendants, whenever that release occurs, if before trial or final hearing as to him.

When the application for removal was made it appeared on the face of the record that Yulee, a citizen of Florida, had been sued with other defendants by Vose, a citizen of New York, in the courts of the State of New York, and that a part of the other defendants with whom he had been joined were then citizens of the State of New York. It also appeared that the controversy, so far as it concerned Yulee, not only could be, but actually had been, by judicial determination, separated from that of the other defendants. This, as we think, gave Yulee a right to the transfer of his part of the suit to the circuit court, and required the state court to proceed no further. Inasmuch as the Court of Appeals has sustained the judgment given after the refusal to permit the transfer to be made, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed and the cause remanded for such further action in accordance with this opinion as may be necessary.

Cited—100 U. S., 474; 16 Blatchf., 317; 42 N. J. L., 318; 5 N. W. Rep., 749; 9 N. W. Rep., 320.

THOMAS R. HARTELL ET AL., Appls.,

v.

BENJAMIN C. TILGHMAN.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 547-560.)

Patent laws—jurisdiction of action.

*1. A suit between citizens of the same State cannot be sustained in a Circuit Court of the United States, as arising under the patent laws, where there is no denial of the validity of plaintiff's patent, where its use is admitted and where a subsisting contract is shown governing the rights of the parties in the use of the invention.

2. Relief in such an action is founded on the contract, and not on the patent laws of the United States.

[No. 172.]

Argued Mar. 4, 5, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. M. D. Connelly and William Henry Rawle, for appellants:

When the conflict between the parties grows out of their contract relating to a patent, or out of their license, or the terms of a license to be thereafter granted to use a patent, and does not arise from the patent itself, the Federal Courts will not entertain jurisdiction of the suit.

Slemmer's Appeal, 58 Pa., 164; Wilson v. Sandford, 10 How., 99, 100; Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How., 211 (60 U. S., XV., 605); Goodyear v. Rubber Co., 4 Blatchf., 63; Blanchard v. Sprague, 1 Cliff., 288; Goodyear v. Day, 1 Blatchf., 565; Mersevole v. Paper Collar Co., 6 Blatchf., 357; Burr v. Gregory, 2 Paine (C. C.), 426; Hill v. Whitcomb, 1 Holmes, 317, 822; Pulte v. Derby, 5 McLean, 328, 336; Curt. Pat., sec. 496.

Nor does the case of Brooks v. Stolley, 3 McLean, 523, conflict with these views. It is expressly stated in the report, that "The defendant admitted his failure to make payment," and defended on the ground of the invalidity of the patent.

Mr. Geo. Harding, for appellee:

In the case under consideration, the complainants have licensed the defendant to use the patented right on certain conditions. If the use go beyond these conditions, there is an infringement, which must stand upon the general ground, unaffected by the contract.

Brooks v. Stolley, 3 McLean, 525, 529.

In Bloomer v. Gilpin, 4 Fish., 50, it is said by Judge Levitt: "But if an infringement is proved, jurisdiction is conferred; and, having power to protect the right of a party under a patent, the court will take cognizance of other matters as incidental to the infringement."

"An action which raises a question of infringement, is an action arising under the law, and one who has the right to sue for the infringement, may sue in the circuit court. Such a suit may involve the construction of a contract as well as the patent; but that will not oust the court of its jurisdiction. If the patent is involved it carries with it the whole case."

Littlefield v. Perry, 21 Wall., 222 (88 U. S., XXII., 579).

In Hartshorn v. Day (supra), the case of Brooks v. Stolley, is cited and distinguished without interrogatory comment. In all reported cases where it is in point, Brooks v. Stolley, is cited approvingly and built upon.

The rule, then, upon which all these cases may be harmonized, is so plain that it cannot be mistaken, and it is one by which the state courts as well as those of the United States have uniformly governed themselves, viz: that where the main issue in the suit relates to a contract between the parties, the circuit court has no jurisdiction, although the subject-matter of the contract may be a patent-right, but that where a question of contract arises incidentally in a suit for infringement, the court is not ousted of its jurisdiction, but may pass upon such collateral issue.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, in which Tilghman, the appellee, describes himself in his bill as a citizen of that State, and the defendants as citizens of the same State. It thus appears affirmatively that, if the court had jurisdiction of the case, it was for some other reason than the citizenship of the parties; and it is argued by appellants that there is no such other ground for the jurisdiction.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

The counsel for appellee, however, insists that it is "a case arising under the patent laws of the United States" and, therefore, cognizable in the Circuit Courts of the United States, on account of the subject-matter of the suit.

Subdivision 9 of section 629 of the Revised Statutes, which section is devoted to a definition of the powers of that court, gives it original jurisdiction "Of all suits at law or in equity arising under the patent or copyright laws of the United States."

This section of the revision is founded on section 55 of the Act of July 8, 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 206, which declares that all actions, suits, controversies and cases arising under the patent laws of the United States "Shall be originally cognizable, as well at law as in equity, in the Circuit Courts of the United States;" and that those courts shall have power to grant injunctions according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable; and on a decree for infringement complainant shall be entitled, in addition to profits, to the damages he has sustained thereby. The language of the Act of 1836 is substantially the same, except as to the damages to be recovered. We are, therefore, to decide whether this suit is one arising under the patent laws of the United States, within the meaning of the clause we have cited.

If a man owning a tract of land, his title to which is a patent from the United States, should sell or lease that land, and a controversy should arise between him and his vendee or lessee as to their rights in the premises, it could not be said that any suit brought by the vendor to assert his rights was a suit arising under the land laws of the United States; and this would be beyond question if the defendant, admitting the title of plaintiff to the land, should make no other defense than such as was founded in rights derived from plaintiff by contract. That is the case before us, with the variance that plaintiff's title is to a patent for an invention instead of a patent for land.

His bill begins by a statement that he is the original inventor and patentee of a process for cutting and engraving stone, glass, metal and other hard substances. It is the one known as the sand-blast process.

He then sets out what we understand to be a contract with defendants for the use by the latter of his invention. He declares that defendants paid him a considerable sum for the machines necessary in the use of the invention, and also paid him the royalty which he asked, for several months, for the use of the process, which he claims to be the thing secured to him by patent. He alleges that after this defendants refused to do certain other things which he charges to have been a part of the contract, and thereupon he forbade them further to use his patent process, and now charges them as infringers.

The defendants admit the validity of plaintiff's patent. They admit the use of it and their liability to him for its use under the contract. They set out in a plea the contract as they understand it, and the tender of all that is due to plaintiff under it, and their readiness to perform it.

What is there here arising under the patent laws of the United States? What controversy that requires for its decision a reference to those laws or a construction of them? There is no denial of the force or validity of plaintiff's patent, nor of his right to the monopoly which it gives him, except as he has parted with that right by contract.

The complainant's view of the case is that there was a verbal agreement that he should prepare and put up in defendants' workshop, ready for use, such parts of the machinery as were of special use in his invention, for which defendants were to pay him at all events. That after this was done defendants should take a license for the use of his invention; that this license was to be the same in its terms as that given to all other persons who used the process, and among these were the right on the part of the patentee to visit the works of the defendants at all times, as well as to inspect their books, with a view to ascertain the amount of work done on which royalty was due. Also, that once every year the complainant had a right to fix the tariff of rates to be paid by defendants, by increasing it if he so determined, with no other limitation than that the increase of rates should apply equally to all licensees of the patent.

It is established by evidence of which there is no contradiction that complainant did furnish and put in place the machines, for which defendants paid him $649. That complainant also furnished a schedule of the rates of royalty to be paid on the different kinds of work to which the patented process was to apply, and that defendants made monthly returns and monthly payments according to this schedule, which were received by plaintiff without objection. That besides the machinery purchased of plaintiff, the defendants had expended about $3,000 in erecting a blower for the use of the sand-blast of complainant's process.

At this stage of the affair complainant tendered to defendants two blank forms of license to be signed by both parties, containing the two conditions we have mentioned. After some fruitless negotiations, defendants refused to sign these papers, and complainant thereupon, as we have said, forbade them to use the process, and on their disregard of this admonition brought his bill in chancery for an injunction, and for an account of profits and additional damages.

The argument of counsel is that defendants, having refused to sign the papers tendered them, are without license or other authority to use his invention, and are naked infringers of his rights under the Acts of Congress.

The defendants say that they never agreed to accept a license with the conditions we have mentioned in them; that they never agreed to permit complainant's agents to inspect all the processes of their own works, some of which were valuable secrets, nor, after they had expended thousands of dollars in preparations for the use of his process, to place themselves under his arbitrary control as to the prices they should pay for the use of his invention. And they say that when the machines were in full operation and paid for, and the schedule of rates had been furnished by complainant and accepted by them, the contract was complete, and needed no such written agreement as the one tendered them for signature.

Such were the pleadings and the principal conceded facts on which the court was called to act, and we pause here to consider the question of jurisdiction on the case thus stated.

One of the earliest cases on this subject was decided by Mr. Justice Thompson in the New York Circuit. It was a bill to procure a decree that the assignment of a patent by Burnap to Gregory was to the extent of three fifteenths for the benefit of complainant, Burr, and to have a conveyance executed accordingly. The court said that if the validity of the patent or of the assignment could be drawn in question, the circuit court might have jurisdiction. But as it was a matter which grew out of the contract, and there was no averment of citizenship, the amount prayed for, growing out of the profits, did not vary the case so as to give jurisdiction. Burr v. Gregory, 2 Paine, 426. This decision was made before the Act of 1836, but is indicative of the sound doctrine that controversies arising out of contracts concerning patent-rights did not necessarily belong to the Federal Courts.

The next case in chronological order was founded on the Act of 1836, 5 Stat. at L., 117, the language of which, as we have seen, was on this point preserved in the Act of 1870, and is embodied in the Revised Statutes. It is the only authoritative construction of the statute on that point made by this court, except Littlefield v. Perry, 21 Wall., 205 [8 U. S., XXII., 577], which is in accord with it, and we think it covers the case under consideration. It is the case of Wilson v. Sandford, 10 How., 99, and the opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Taney.

The complainant was assignee of the Woodward planing-machine patent, and had licensed the defendants to use one machine upon payment of $1,400, of which $250 was paid down, and notes payable in nine, twelve, eighteen and twenty-four months given for the remainder. This license contained a provision that if either of the notes was not punctually paid at maturity, all the rights under the license ceased and reverted to "Wilson, who became re-invested in the same manner as if the license had never been made." Upon failure to pay the first two notes, Wilson brought his bill, charging that, notwithstanding this, the defendants were using the machine and thus infringing his patent. He prayed an injunction, an account, etc.

The bill was dismissed in the court below, and on appeal to this court the appeal was dismissed because the amount in controversy did not exceed $2,000. If, however, it had been a case arising under the patent laws of the United States, no sum was necessary to give jurisdiction.

The precise question, therefore, to be decided was, whether the suit arose under the patent laws of the United States; and the Chief Justice, after reciting the clause in the Act of 1836 which gives the circuit courts jurisdiction in all such cases, proceeds to discuss that question in this manner; "The peculiar privilege," he says, "given to this class of cases was intended to secure uniformity of decision in the construction of the Act of Congress in relation to patents. Now, the dispute in this case does not arise under any Act of Congress, nor does the decision depend upon the construction of any law in relation to patents. It arises out of the contract stated in the bill, and there is no Act of Congress providing for or regulating contracts of this kind. The rights of the parties depend altogether upon common law and equity principles. The object of the bill is to have this contract set aside and declared to be forfeited; and the prayer is, 'that the appellant's re-investiture of title to the license granted to the appellees, by reason of the forfeiture of the contract, may be sanctioned by the court,' and for an injunction. But the injunction he asks for is to be the consequence of the decree of the court sanctioning the forfeiture. He alleges no ground for an injunction, unless the contract is set aside. And if the case made in the bill was a fit one for relief in equity, it is very clear that whether the contract ought to be declared forfeited or not in a court of chancery depended altogether upon the rules and principles of equity, and in no degree whatever upon any Act of Congress concerning patent-rights. And whenever a contract is made in relation to them, which is not provided for and regulated by Congress, the parties, if any dispute arises, stand upon the same ground with other litigants as to the right of appeal."

Let us see how closely these remarks and the case to which they related apply to the present case. In that case a contract was made under which the defendant entered on the use of the invention. This is also true of the case before us. In that case it is charged that an act to be performed by the defendant and licensee under the contract was not performed, to wit: payment of the notes. In the case before us it is alleged in like manner that the defendants failed to perform part of the contract, to wit: to sign a license.

In that case plaintiff asserted, as in this, that all right under the contract had ceased, and he was remitted to his original rights under the patent, and could, therefore, sue in the Federal Court under the statute; but the court held this to be erroneous, and that the rights of the parties depended on the contract and not on the statute. Why does not the same rule apply to the present case? Wilson's case was stronger than Tilghman's case, for two reasons:

1. Because the contract was all in writing, and there was no dispute about its meaning. Here it was in parol, and there is not only dispute about its meaning, but the rights of the parties depend almost wholly upon the points in dispute, which have no relation to the patent laws of the United States.

2. In Wilson's case there was an express provision in writing that a failure to pay any note when due, forfeited the license and re-invested Wilson with all his original rights. No such provision is set up in the contract between Tilghman and defendants.

In this case, as in that, the defendants had bought the machine and paid for it and used it. In this case, as in that, the right to its further use depended upon the contract, and was to be determined by its construction and effect. In this, as in that, the case in Judge Taney's language, "Does not arise under an Act of Congress, nor does the decision depend upon the construction of any law in relation to patents. The rights of the parties depend altogether upon common law and equity principles."

In Goodyear v. India rubber Co., where the

licensees had neglected for three years to pay the royalty which they had agreed to pay, and refused to permit their books to be inspected, and where one of the prayers of the bill was that until they had so accounted and paid the royalty due they should be enjoined from the use of the invention, Judge Ingersoll held that the bill stated no case arising under the patent laws of the United States, but did make a case for relief on the contract. 4 Blatchf., 63. And Judge Blatchford stated the doctrine still more strongly in Mersevole v. Paper Collar Co., 6 Blatchf., 356.

In the case of Blanchard v. Sprague, decided by Mr. Justice Clifford in 1859, he said: "No dispute arises in the case under any Act of Congress, nor does the decision depend in any respect on any law of Congress in relation to patents. On the contrary, it arises entirely out of the agreement, express or implied, for a license, and the rights of the parties depend altogether upon the ordinary rules of law. * * * What the complainant really claims is, that he terminated or revoked the license under the agreement which previously existed between the parties, by giving the notice, and that the defendant subsequently continued the use of the machine without any stipulation as to the rate of tariff." How precisely descriptive of the case under consideration, in which Tilghman, claiming that he has terminated at his own option the arrangement under which the defendants had been operating, can now sue in the Federal Court for an infringement in violation of the Acts of Congress. In the case mentioned Judge Clifford held otherwise. 1 Cliff., 288.

To the same purport is Hill v. Whitcomb, decided by Judge Shepley, and reported in 1 Holmes, 317.

It may be conceded that the case of Brooks v. Stolley [3 McLean, 523], decided that Mr. Justice McLean on the circuit prior to the Act of 1836, is, in some respects, opposed to the authorities we have cited. But in them it stands alone, and is not supported by the better reason.

We may be asked, if we concede the complainant's statement of the verbal agreement to be correct, what remedy has he on it? The answer is very easy. He can establish his royalty once every year, and sue plaintiff at law and recover every month or every year for what is due. If he desires to assert his right of examining defendants' works, he can, in a proper case made, compel them to submit to this examination. If he desires to enforce the agreement for executing a written contract of license, he can bring a suit in equity for specific performance, and with or without that specific relief he can ask the court to enjoin defendants from using the patented process until they execute the agreement and comply with its requirements. All these and perhaps other remedies are open to him to enforce the contract. He may also file a bill in chancery to have it annulled or set aside because of the difficulties placed in the way of its fair execution by defendants.

Not content, however, with all these remedies, complainant assumes that he has, under the condition of things he has proved, the right in himself to abandon the contract, to treat it as a nullity, and to charge the defendants as infringers, liable as trespassers under the Act of Congress to pay both profits and damages.

The analogy of an action of ejectment to recover possession of land in cases of a broken contract of sale is referred to. The analogy, however, is imperfect and deceptive. That action is one at law, depending on the existence of the strict legal title to land in plaintiff, and the doctrine that the right of possession follows the title. It is a peculiar action, founded on a peculiar doctrine limited to real estate, and liable to be defeated in equity by a bill for specific performance and an injunction.

In the case of a patent, plaintiff does not recover any specific property, real or personal. He recovers damages or compensation for the use of his monopoly; and if he has made a bargain with the defendant, his right to rescind or annul it must depend on all the equitable circumstances of the case.

Here, where he has sold and received a considerable sum for a machine of no use for any other purpose: where the defendants have spent several thousand dollars on other machinery, which is also valueless except in connection with the use of this process; where defendants have paid and plaintiff received for many months the royalty which plaintiff established, and are still ready and willing to continue payment; and where the contract being in parol the parties differ about one or two of its minor terms, we do not agree that either party can of his own volition declare the contract rescinded, and proceed precisely as if nothing had been done under it. If it is to be rescinded, it can be done only by a mutual agreement, or by the decree of a court of justice. If either party disregards it, it can be specifically enforced against him, or damages can be recovered for its violation. But until so rescinded or set aside, it is a subsisting agreement, which, whatever it is, or may be shown to be, must govern the rights of these parties in the use of complainant's process, and must be the foundation of any relief given by a court of equity.

Such a case is not cognizable in a court of the United States by reason of its subject-matter, and as the parties could not sustain such a suit in the circuit court by reason of citizenship, this bill should have been dismissed.

The decree of that court is, therefore, reversed, with directions to dismiss the bill without prejudice.

Mr. Justice Bradley, dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion of the court in this case. I cannot see the slightest room for doubt as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court. The suit is a bill in equity, which sets up letters patent issued to the complainant for a new and useful improvement in cutting and engraving stone, metal and glass; and complains that the defendants are infringing said patent by using the said process without any license therefor, and praying an injunction, and decree for profits and damages. The bill also states the fact that negotiations had passed between the complainant and the defendants for a license to use the said invention, but that the defendants had failed to comply with the conditions, and hence had no right to continue the use, but persisted in doing so. This is the substance of the bill. It is a clear case, it seems to me, "arising under the patent laws of the United States," and is, therefore, properly cognizable by the Circuit Court of the United States under the 629th section, article 9, and sections 4919 and 4921 of the Revised Statutes, and the laws from which that article and those sections were compiled. The cause of action, or ground of relief, is the infringement of the patent. The plaintiff chooses to place himself on that ground alone. By doing so he runs the risk of any defense which would show a right to use the invention, whether license from himself, invalidity of the patent, non-infringement, or any other proper defense to a suit on a patent. He states in his bill, as he had a right to do by the rules of equity pleading, what the supposed defense would be, and answers it. This anticipation of the defense does not change the nature of the suit in the least. Perhaps he need not have anticipated the defense, but might have left the defendants to develop it in their answer. Certainly in that case the character of the defense would not have ousted the court of its jurisdiction. If a cause of action is cognizable by the United States Court, the defendant cannot oust that jurisdiction by his defense to the action. He may defeat the action, but he cannot destroy the jurisdiction.

It will not do to say that the remedy of the plaintiff was a bill for a specific performance of the parol agreement that the defendants would take a license. Perhaps the plaintiff had such a remedy. But he did not choose to pursue it. He waived it by suing as for an infringement. He chose to take the responsibility of having a right to put an end to the agreement without juridical aid. Having done this, his only remedy was to sue on the patent as for an infringement. He certainly had a right to do this. He was not bound to sue for specific performance. Nor was he bound to sue for the avoidance of the supposed agreement. It may be that it would have been his better remedy. It may be that the result of the negotiation is to create a defense to the suit for infringement, amounting to a parol leave and license, or a license in law. If so, the plaintiff has only made a mistake in suing as for an infringement of his patent, and may fail in his action. How that may be it is unnecessary now to inquire, since the majority of this court has decided the case on the question of jurisdiction. But whether it be so or not, the character of the present suit is not changed, as a suit for injunction and damages for the alleged infringement.

How, I would ask, could a state court have determined this suit? Suppose the defense of license, express or implied, had failed, what would the state court have done? Could it have taken an account of profits? Could it have assessed damages for the infringement? Could it have granted an injunction to restrain the defendants in the use of the invention? This would have been a new branch of jurisdiction and inquiry for a state court to have assumed. It is too obvious for argument, as it seems to me, that no state court has, or could rightfully take, jurisdiction of the suit.

It is perfectly well settled, I admit, that where a suit is brought on a contract, of which a patent is the subject-matter, either to enforce such contract, or to annul it, the case arises on the contract, or out of the contract, and not under the patent laws. But where infringement of the patent is the ground of action, and redress is sought therefor, the case does arise under the patent laws, and is cognizable in the Federal Court, no matter what collateral issues may be raised by the defendant. He may set up that the patent is void, that he does not infringe, that he has a license, or a release, or what not; the Federal Court is fully competent to try any of the issues thus made.

The case principally relied on by the majority of the court is that of Wilson v. Sandford, 10 How., 99. But there the bill prayed to have the license declared void. The Chief Justice said: "The object of the bill is to have this contract set aside and declared to be forfeited, and the prayer is that the appellant's re-investiture of title to the license granted to the appellees, by reason of the forfeiture of the contract, may be sanctioned by this court, and for an injunction." In such a case it may be that relief is properly to be sought in the state court. But if the question were a new one, I should think that where the complainant seeks damages for infringement and an injunction against the use of the invention, making that the basis of his suit, it would not be improper, nor oust the jurisdiction of the Federal Court, to join in such a bill, as ancillary to the principal relief sought, an application to avoid an inequitable license held by the defendant. I see nothing incongruous in the joinder of such matters in the bill. It seems to me that the views of Mr. Justice McLean on this subject as expressed in Brooks v. Stolley, 3 McLean, 523, are perfectly sound and just. There the complainant had given a license to use a patented invention, determinable on non-payment of the royalty. On failure to pay he filed his bill for an injunction and damages, at the same time stating the granting of the license and the failure to perform the conditions of it. Mr. Justice McLean said: "It is suggested that, as the whole controversy in the case arises under the contract of license, the parties to which being citizens of this State, the Federal Court cannot take jurisdiction. This objection would be unanswerable, if no right were involved in the controversy except what arises out of the contract, as, for instance, the circuit court could take no jurisdiction under the contract of an action, merely to recover the sums agreed to be paid by the defendant; but in the present aspect of the case, it is not limited to the contract. The complainants set up their right under the patent, and allege that the defendant is infringing that right; that the license affords no justification whatever to the defendant. The right, then, of the complainants to an injunction is not founded by them on the contract, but on the assignment of the patent. If the object of the bill were merely to enforce the specific execution of the contract, the Circuit Court of the United States could exercise no jurisdiction in the case." See, also, Curt. Pat., sec. 496, to the same purpose, citing this opinion.

It seems to me, with all due submission, that if we are to have regard to "the better reason," we shall find it expressed in these remarks of Justice McLean.

It may be laid down, I think, as a general principle, that where a case necessarily involves a question arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and cannot be decided without deciding that question, it is a case arising under said Constitution and laws, and may be brought, as the law now stands, in the Circuit Court of the United States, although other questions may likewise be involved, which might be tried and decided in the state courts. I do not believe in the doctrine that the presence of a question of municipal law in a case which necessarily involves federal questions can deprive the Federal Courts of their jurisdiction. It is too narrow a construction of the judicial powers and functions of the Federal Government and its courts.

But in this case the complainant asks no relief in relation to the supposed agreement between him and the defendants. He places himself solely on his rights accruing under the patent and on the defendant's infringement of those rights. I think, therefore, the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of the United States was undoubted. I am authorized to say that the Chief Justice and Justice Swayne concur in this opinion.

Mr. Justice Strong and Mr. Justice Hunt did not sit in this case, nor participate in its decision.

Cited—106 U. S., 619; 16 Blatchf., 467.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN ST. LOUIS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN NEW YORK.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 608-610.)

Amending writ of error—new citation.

1. This court may allow a writ of error to be amended in its return day. The fact that thirty days could not elapse between the date of the writ and the return day presents no objection.

2. Where the return day of the writ is changed, a new citation should issue to notify the defendant in error of what has been done.

Submitted Mar. 3, 1879. Decided Mar. 17, 1879.

ON motion to amend writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. P. Phillips, in support of motion.

No counsel appeared in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment below was rendered October 5, 1878, and the present Term of this court commenced October 15. A writ of error returnable on the "second Monday in October next" was sued out and served the day the judgment was rendered. A citation returnable on the same day with the writ was duly signed and served before the first day of the Term.

Rule 8 of this court provides that in cases when the judgment is rendered less than thirty days before the first day of the next term of this court, the writ of error and citation may be made returnable on the third Monday of the term, and be served before that day. By section 1005 of the Revised Statutes this court is authorized at any time, in its discretion and upon such terms as it may deem just, to allow an amendment of a writ of error when it is made returnable on a day other than the day of the commencement of the term next ensuing the issue of the writ, provided the defect has not prejudiced, and the amendment will not injure, the defendant in error. Section 999, R. S., provides that the adverse party shall have at least thirty days' notice of a writ of error by citation.

The plaintiff in error now moves to amend the writ so as to make the return day the first day, or the third Monday of the present Term; for the issue of a new citation to conform to the amended writ, and for leave to file the transcript and docket the cause.

We think the motion should be granted. Section 1005 clearly authorizes us, in our discretion, to allow the amendment of the writ, and we cannot see that the defect has prejudiced, or that the amendment will injure, the defendant in error. The fact that thirty days could not elapse between the date of the writ and the return day presents no objection. Section 999 of the Revised Statutes is but the re-enactment of a similar provision in section 22 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 84, and until the promulgation of the present rule at the December Term, 1867 [Book XX], all writs of error were made returnable on the first day of the term next after their date, no matter how short the time between the day of the issue and that of the return. The citation followed the writ, and service was required before the return day. By a rule entered as early as the February Term, 1803, if the writ issued within thirty days before the meeting of the court, the defendant in error was at liberty to enter his appearance and proceed to trial, or otherwise the cause was continued. Rule 16, Feb. Term, 1803. 1 Cranch, xviii. At the same Term, in Lloyd v. Alexander, 1 Cranch, 365, the reason for the adoption of the rule is stated, and in Welsh v. Mandeville, 5 Cranch, 321, the court decided that when the citation was not served thirty days before the term, defendant in error would not be required to go to a hearing without his consent. The meaning of the statute is not that the citation shall be served thirty days before the return day, but that the defendant in error shall have at least thirty days' notice before he can be compelled to go to a hearing. We do not understand that the case of Yeaton v. Lenox, 7 Pet., 220, holds otherwise. Certainly there was nothing in the facts to require any such decision.

As the return day of the writ is changed, a new citation should issue to notify the defendant in error of what has been done. This is clearly within the rule as stated in Dayton v. Lash, 94 U. S., 112 [XXIV., 33].

The transcript may be filed and the cause docketed upon a compliance by the plaintiff in error with the rules in that particular.

An order will be entered allowing the plaintiff in error to amend the writ by inserting the third Monday of the present Term as the return day, in lieu of the "second Monday in October," and requiring him to cause a new citation, returnable on the first Monday in May next, to be issued and served on the defendant in error.

WILLIAM H. HACKETT ET AL., EXRS. OF

WILLIAM H. Y. HACKETT, Deceased, Plffs.in Err.,

v.

CITY OF OTTAWA.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 86-96.)

City bonds—recitals in—estoppel.

1. Where a city, when instructed by a majority of its voters, had authority by its charter to borrow money and to issue its bonds therefor, and bonds issued by it by their recital of the titles of the ordinances under which they were issued, in effect, assured the purchaser that they were to be used for municipal purposes, with the previous sanction, duly given, of a majority of the legal voters of the city; the city is estopped to say, as against a bona fide holder of the bonds, that they were not issued or used for municipal or corporate purposes.

2. A corporation is held to a careful adherence to truth in its dealings, and cannot, by its representations or silence, involve others in onerous engagements, and then defeat the calculations and claims which its own conduct had superinduced.

[No. 880.]

Submitted Jan. 6, 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case, which arose in the court below, is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Frank W. Hackett and George S. Eldredge, for plaintiffs in error:

The City is estopped by the recitals upon the face of the bonds, as against the plaintiffs, to deny that they are valid obligations and issued for proper purposes under its charter.

Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 (62 U. S., XVI., 208); Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 24 How., 287 (65 U. S., XVI., 664); Van Hook v. Madison, 1 Wall., 291 (68 U. S., XVII., 538); Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 (68 U. S., XVII., 548); St. Joseph Township v. Rogers, 16 Wall., 644 (83 U. S., XXI., 328); Superior v. Schenck, 5 Wall., 772 (72 U. S., XVIII., 556); Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall., 356 (82 U. S., XXI., 170); Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S., 434 (XXIII., 579); Marcy v. Osuego, 92 U. S., 637 (XXIII., 748); Moultrie Co. v. Bk., 92 U. S., 631 (XXIII., 631); see, also, Cromwell v. Sac Co., 96 U. S., 51 (XXIV., 681); Comrs. v. Bolles, 94 U. S., 104 (XXIV., 46); Warren Co. v. Marcy, MS. Op.; San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S., 313 (XXIV., 817); Dill. Mun. Bonds, p. 33; see, Nicolay v. St. Clair Co., 3 Dill., 163; Aller v. Cameron, 3 Dill., 198; Mygatt v. Green Bay, 1 Biss., 292.

Messrs. C. B. Lawrence, Campbell & Lawrence and Charles Blanchard, for defendant in error:

There is no question in this case, of municipal purchasers of negotiable paper, for two reasons: first, the bonds were issued without statutory authority, and for a purpose for which no statute authority would have been availing; and second, the bonds showed this defect on their face.

E. Oakland v. Skinner, 94 U. S., 258 (XXIV., 126); S. Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S., 260 (XXIV., 154); Marsh v. Fulton Co., 10 Wall., 683 (77 U. S., XIX., 1042); McClure v. Oxford, 94 U. S., 432 (XXIV., 129); Harshman v. Bates Co., 92 U. S., 575 (XXIII., 748).

NOTE.—Recitals in negotiable bonds or securities evidence of the facts recited; estoppel by; recitals in. See note to Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 68 U. S., XVII., 548.

See 9 OTTO.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is upon certain bonds issued by the City of Ottawa, Illinois, in the year 1869, and of which the testator of plaintiffs in error became the holder and owner, for value, before maturity. They are in the usual form of municipal bonds, and, besides pledging the faith of the City irrevocably for their payment, contain these recitals:

"This is one of one hundred and twenty bonds of like amount and even date herewith, numbered one to one hundred and twenty respectively, issued by the City of Ottawa by virtue of the charter of said City; wherein it is provided that the City Council shall have power to borrow money on the credit of the City, and to issue bonds therefor, and pledge the revenue of the City for the payment thereof, provided that no sum or sums of money shall be borrowed at a greater interest than ten per cent. per annum."

Art. V., sec. 3.

"No money shall be borrowed by the City Council until the ordinance passed therefor shall be submitted to and voted for by a majority of the voters of said City attending an election for that purpose. Art. X., sec. 20. And also in accordance with a certain ordinance passed by the City Council of said City on the 15th day of June, A. D. 1869, entitled 'An Ordinance to Provide for a Loan for Municipal Purposes,' which ordinance was ratified by a majority of all the qualified voters of said City at an election holden on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1869, and in conformity with an ordinance passed by the City Council of said City on the 30th day of July, 1869, entitled 'An Ordinance to carry into Effect the Ordinance of June 15, 1869, entitled An Ordinance to Provide for a Loan for Municipal Purposes.'

Witness the signatures of the mayor and clerk of said City, and the corporate seal thereof, this 20th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

[SEAL] HENRY A. SCHULER, Mayor.
R. N. WATERMAN, Clerk."

The City, upon grounds which will sufficiently appear in the course of the opinion, denied all liability upon the bonds, and to its pleas a demurrer was interposed. The demurrer was overruled; and the plaintiffs in error electing to stand by the demurrer, judgment was rendered for the City. From that judgment the present writ of error is prosecuted.

The Illinois Constitution of 1848 declares that "The corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes." Art. 9, sec. 5.

The charter of the City of Ottawa, granted in 1853, confers upon its Council the power to establish hospitals; to provide the City with water; to open, widen, extend and otherwise improve and repair streets and other public highways; to establish, erect and keep in repair bridges; to erect market-houses; to provide all needful public buildings for the use of the City; and various other municipal powers, the exertion of which necessarily involves the raising and disbursement of large sums of money. Laws of Ill., 1853, p. 296.

Among the powers expressly delegated to the Council, is the power "To appropriate money and provide for the payment of the debts and expenses of the City," and, with the sanction of a majority of voters attending at an election for that purpose, "To borrow money on the credit of the City, and to issue bonds therefor, and pledge the revenue of the City for the payment thereof."

The bonds in suit upon their face import: 1. That the faith of the City is irrevocably pledged for their payment. 2. That they were issued in pursuance of the power which the Council possessed to borrow money on the credit of the City and issue bonds therefor, and also in accordance with certain ordinances which provided for a loan for municipal purposes. The recitals of the bonds, in themselves, furnish no ground whatever for the supposition that the Council in issuing them transcended its authority, or issued them for other than municipal or corporate purposes. They justify the opposite conclusion.

The City, however, claims that they were not issued for municipal purposes, but as a simple donation to a private corporation, formed for business ends solely, and in nowise connected with or under the control of the City; all of which, it is further claimed, appears from the ordinances, whose date and title are given in the face of the bonds.

The ordinance of June 15, 1869, authorizes the mayor to borrow, in the name, for the use, and upon the bonds of the City, the sum of $60,000, "to be expended in developing the natural advantages of the City for manufacturing purposes," and provides "That no application shall be made of the proceeds of the said bonds except for the purpose aforesaid, and in pursuance of an ordinance to be duly passed for that purpose by the City Council, nor until the faithful application of the proceeds of such bonds to the purpose aforesaid shall be fully secured to the City." It further provides that a sufficient sum to pay interest on the loan should be annually provided by taxation, and set apart as a separate fund, to be applied solely to payment of the interest on the bonds. That ordinance was ratified at an election held on the 20th of July 1869, by a majority of all the legal voters of the City. The ordinance of July 30, 1869, was to carry into effect the one of June 15, 1869. It directed the mayor to deliver the bonds to one Cushman, "To be used by him in developing the natural resources of the surroundings of the City, and that the said Cushman is authorized and directed to expend the sum in the improvement of the water-power upon the Illinois and Fox Rivers within the City and in the immediate vicinity thereof, under the franchises and powers which have been granted for that purpose, in the manner which, in his judgment, shall best secure the practical and permanent use of said water-power in the City and its immediate vicinity." It provided that Cushman should execute and deliver to the mayor his obligation that he would, with out unreasonable delay, and by proper appliances, bring into use all the available water of the two rivers at Ottawa, as fast as it might be required for actual use, and as fast as it could be leased at fair and reasonable rates—"The intent of this ordinance being to secure the improvement and development of said water-power in this City by appropriating the loan obtained under the ordinance aforesaid for that purpose, or pro rata so far as said water-power shall be made available for practical use." The ordinance of July 30, 1869, further provided that Cushman should bind himself to return the bonds, and save the City harmless from all loss if the work shall not be constructed.

The City avers that the franchises and powers referred to in the ordinance of July 30, 1869, were those granted to the Ottawa Manufacturing Company by an Act approved February 15, 1851, and by an Act amendatory thereof, approved February 16, 1865. The first Act created certain persons therein named a corporation under the style of "The Ottawa Manufacturing Company," with authority to erect a dam across Fox River at a designated point, "For the purpose of creating a water-power," and to "use, lease or otherwise dispose of the same, and construct such other works, buildings and machinery as may be deemed necessary or proper to use such water-power to promote the interests and objects of the company." The second Act conferred the additional right to build a dam across the Illinois River, and to construct races so as to introduce the water into the pool of the dam authorized to be erected across the Fox River. And for all the purposes indicated in the original and amendatory Act the company was authorized to "take and use such portion of any highway, street, alley or public ground as may be deemed necessary." But neither of the ordinances, it will be observed, designates, by name, that or any other private company. Nor is it distinctly alleged by the City, nor asserted in argument, that the plaintiff understood the ordinances as referring to that company, or that he read them or had any actual knowledge of their terms at the time of his purchase. If the Council intended the general public and, particularly, purchasers of its bonds to know that the proposed development of the natural advantages of the City for manufacturing purposes was to be made under the franchises and powers, or for the benefit of that or any other private corporation, common fairness required that it should have so declared in the ordinances, and thereby distinctly informed all who should examine them, of what it now avows was its real purpose, viz.: by a simple donation to give aid to a particular private corporation, established for business ends exclusively. If by reason of the general reference, in the bonds, to the two ordinances of June and July, 1869, the purchaser is chargeable with notice of their provisions (a proposition to be hereafter examined), the utmost which the City in view of the indefinite language of the ordinances, can claim is that he had notice that the bonds were issued for the purpose of "Developing the manufacturing resources of the City for manufacturing purposes." Nothing more. This brings us to a question which counsel have discussed with some elaboration in their printed arguments.

We have seen that the charter of the City confers upon the Council power to borrow money, upon the credit of the City, and to issue bonds therefor. No limitation is prescribed as to the amount which may be borrowed. Nor is any express restriction imposed as to the objects or purposes for which bonds may be issued. It is clear, therefore, that the Council, having secured the assent of the requisite majority of voters, might rightfully borrow money upon bonds of the City for every purpose which could fairly be deemed municipal or corporate. But the specific contention of the City is that the development of the natural resources of the City for manufacturing purposes is not, upon principle or within the meaning of the Illinois Constitution of 1848, a corporate purpose. After a careful examination of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois to which our attention has been called, we find this question by no means free from difficulty. The leading case, Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill., 9, involved the question whether a tax levied, under the authority of an Act of the Legislature passed in 1865, upon the property of a township, to pay bounties to persons who should thereafter enlist or be drafted into the Army of the United States, was for a corporate purpose, within the meaning of the State constitution. The person who complained of the tax, in that case, was a non-resident of the township, but he owned taxable property within its limits. The Supreme Court of Illinois, through Judge Lawrence, in an opinion of marked ability, sustained the validity of the tax, defining the phrase "corporate purposes" to mean "a tax to be expended in a manner which shall promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levies it." It is suggested, by learned counsel for the City, that that and similar decisions, rendered during the late civil war, were exceptional, and were made almost ex necessitate, because the courts were unwilling to cripple the power of the government to raise troops by denying to counties, cities and towns the right to offer bounties when authorized by the Legislature. An answer to this suggestion is found in the fact that the same court reaffirmed the doctrine of Taylor v. Thompson in the cases of Briscoe v. Allison, 43 Ill., 293; Misner v. Bullard, 43 Ill., 470; and Johnson v. Campbell, 49 Ill., 317. In the subsequent case of R. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill., 268, decided in 1871, the court referring to the definition of corporate purpose as given in Taylor v. Thompson, announced their acceptance of it. In People v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill., 651, the same definition was referred to without disapproval. The court, declaring that it had gone far enough in upholding that tax, said: "It may be difficult to determine with precision what is a corporate purpose, in the sense of the Constitution, but it is less difficult to determine what is not such a purpose. The true doctrine is, such purposes, and such only, as are germane to the objects of the welfare of the municipality, at least such as have a legitimate connection with these objects, and a manifest relation thereto." Again; in Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill., 455, Ch. Justice Breese, the court sustained a tax imposed by the City in support of the Southern Illinois Normal University, to which the people of that City had voted a tax and, referring to Taylor v. Thompson, said that a corporate purpose was there "held to mean a tax to be expended in a manner which should promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levied it. But in that case a vote of the people authorizing the tax was first to be taken, and the people, in fact, voted the tax. This was an important fact in determining that case. We thought it difficult to determine with precision what was a 'corporate purpose,' in the sense of the Constitution, but came to the conclusion that it was such a purpose, and such only, as might have a legitimate connection with objects and purposes promotive of the welfare of the municipality, and a manifest relation thereto."

In view of the course of decisions in Illinois, we should hesitate to declare that money borrowed by the City of Ottawa and expended in developing its natural resources for manufacturing purposes, was not, in the sense of the Illinois Constitution of 1848, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of that State, expended "To promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality."

But a direct decision of that question does not seem to be essential to the disposition of this case. We content ourselves with stating the propositions which counsel have urged upon our consideration, and without expressing any settled opinion as to what are corporate purposes within the meaning of the Illinois Constitution, we pass to another point, which, in our judgment, is fatal to the defense. It is consistent with the pleas filed by the City that the testator of plaintiffs in error purchased the bonds before maturity for a valuable consideration, without any notice of want of authority in the City to issue them, and without any information as to the objects to which their proceeds were to be applied, beyond that furnished by the recited titles of the ordinances. For all corporate purposes, as we have seen, the Council, if so instructed by a majority of voters attending at an election for that purpose, had undoubted authority, under the charter of the City, to borrow money upon its credit and to issue bonds therefor. The bonds in suit, by their recital of the titles of the ordinances under which they were issued, in effect, assured the purchaser that they were to be used for municipal purposes, with the previous sanction, duly given, of a majority of the legal voters of the City. If he would have been bound, under some circumstances, to take notice, at his peril, of the provisions of the ordinances, he was relieved from any responsibility or duty in that regard by reason of the representation, upon the face of the bonds, that the ordinances under which they were issued were ordinances "providing for a loan for municipal purposes." Such a representation by the constituted authorities of the City, under its corporate seal, would naturally avert suspicion of bad faith upon their part, and induce the purchaser to omit an examination of the ordinances themselves. It was, substantially a declaration by the City, with the consent of a majority of its legal voters, that purchasers need not examine the ordinances, since their title indicated a loan for municipal purposes. The City is, therefore, estopped, by its own representations, to say, as against a bona fide holder of the bonds, that they were not issued or used for municipal or corporate purposes. It cannot now be heard, as against such holder, to dispute their validity. Had the bonds, upon their face, made no reference whatever to the charter of the City, or recited only those provisions which empowered the Council to borrow money upon the credit of the City and to issue bonds therefor, the liability of the City to a bona fide holder could not be questioned. Much less can it be questioned, in view of the additional recital in the bonds that they were issued in pursuance of an ordinance providing for a loan for municipal purposes; that is, for purposes authorized by its charter. Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall., 772 [72 U. S., XVIII., 556]. It would be the grossest injustice, and in conflict with all the past utterances of this court, to permit the City, having power under some circumstances to issue negotiable securities, to escape liability upon the ground of the falsity of its own representations, made through official agents and under its corporate seal, as to the purposes with which these bonds were issued. Whether such representations were made inadvertently, or with the intention, by the use of inaccurate titles of ordinances, to avert inquiry as to the real object in issuing the bonds, and thereby facilitate their negotiation in the money centers of the country, in either case, the City, both upon principle and authority, is cut off from any such defense. What this court declared, through Justice Campbell, in Zabriskie v. R. R. Co., 23 How., 381 [64 U. S., XVI., 488], as to a private corporation, and repeated, though Mr. Justice Clifford, in Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 24 How., 287 [65 U. S., XVI., 664], as to a municipal corporation, may be reiterated as peculiarly applicable to this case: "A corporation, quite as much as an individual, is held to a careful adherence to truth in their dealings with mankind; and cannot, by their representations or silence, involve others in onerous engagements, and then defeat the calculations and claims their own conduct had superinduced." What we have said disposes of the second plea filed by the City. As to the third plea, it is scarcely necessary to say that it does not present a defense to the action. The questions raised by that plea have not been alluded to or discussed in the printed arguments of counsel.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the second and third pleas, and for such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

I, James H. McKenney, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the opinion of the court in the case of Wm. H. Hackett et al., Exrs., etc., Plffs. in Err. v. The City of Ottawa, No. 880, October Term, 1878, as the same remains upon the files and records of said Supreme Court.

In testimony whereof I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of said [L. S.] Supreme Court, at the City of Washington, this 5th day of May, A. D. 1885.

JAMES H. MCKENNEY,
Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Cited—103 U. S., 260; 105 U. S., 343; 108 U. S., 115, 118.

JOSEPH GRAFTON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STEPHEN H. CUMMINGS.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 100-112.)

Statute of Frauds—requirement of memorandum.

*The memorandum in writing, necessary to make a valid contract within the meaning of the Statute

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Statute of Frauds, what is sufficient note or memorandum under. See note to Barry v. Coombe, 26 U. S. (1 Pet.), 640.

of Frauds, though signed by the defendant and describing with sufficient distinctness the property sold and the consideration to be paid, is not sufficient to sustain an action, unless the other party to the agreement is either named in the memorandum or so designated in some paper signed by the defendant that he could be identified without parol proof.

[No. 179.]

Argued Mar. 12, 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. A. J. Vanderpoel and James W. Gerard, for plaintiff in error:

The paper relied on as the agreement was invalid, for that no vendor was named in it.

Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H., 157; Boyce v. Greene, Batty, 608; Williams v. Lake, 2 El. & El., 349; Williams v. Byrnes, 9 Jur. (N. S.), 363; Privy Council; Potter v. Duffield, L. R., 18 Eq., 4; Champion v. Plummer, 1 B. & P., N. R., 252; Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10.

The memorandum of the auctioneer, to bind the purchaser, must be contemporaneous with the sale.

Smith v. Arnold, 5 Mas., 414; Potter v. Duffield, supra, A. D. 1870.

The case of Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How., 446, is commented on in Browne on Frauds, section 875, and the author shows how, on its special facts, it is saved from conflict with the general rule.

In Rossiter v. Miller, 48 L. J. Ch. (N. S.), at p. 17, Lord Chancellor Cairns, commenting on the maxim, Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, says, a writing, "I enter into a contract," "on behalf of my client," "on behalf of my principal," "on behalf of my friend," "on behalf of those whom it may concern," has no such certainty, and in none of those cases would the note satisfy the requirement of the Statute of Frauds.

Parol testimony will be received only for the purpose of interpretation or explanation, where technical terms are employed, or to identify papers which, by a reference to the signed memoranda, are made parts of it.

Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L., 344; Boydell v. Drummond, 11 East, 142; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves., 250; Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & L., 22; Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 Johns. Ch., 273; 1 Smith L. C., 465; Dovell v. Hutchinson, 3 Ad. & El., 355; First Bap. Ch. v. Bigelow, 16 Wend., 28-31; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me., 158; Peek v. N. Staffordshire R. R. Co., 10 H. L. Cas., 472; Knox v. King, 36 Ala., 367.

A contract, as originally entered into, cannot at law be altered by evidence of a parol variation, in favor of either plaintiff or defendant.

Dart, Vend., 451; Sugd. Vend., 171; Goss v. Nugent, 2 Nev. & Man., 33; Emmet v. Dewhurst, 8 Eng. L. & E., 88; Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wend., 68; Sanderson v. Graves, L. R., 10 Exch., 234.

Messrs. Henry Heywood, Thomas H. Hubbard and Wm. Allen Butler, for defendant in error:

It seems to us that the case of Sal. Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How., 446, is conclusive upon this point. There it was held that it was competent to show that Mason signed for the firm of Mason & Lawrance, and that that house was acting as agent for the plaintiffs. In that way the sellers' name was shown in the memorandum relied upon in that case, which is carrying the rule far beyond anything claimed by it. The case arose upon the Massachusetts statute in relation to the sale of goods. The statute of New Hampshire under which our case comes up, is, in every material particular, the same as the Massachusetts statute.

The cases of Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 412, and Lerned v. Johns, 9 Allen, 419, are directly in point. Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436.

The case of Gowen v. Klous, 101 Mass., 449, is upon a contract of the same form as that in the case at bar, and in our view is, in all respects, a parallel case with this.

Hunter v. Giddings, 97 Mass., 41.

It is sufficient if the memorandum, taken in connection with the evidence of the surrounding circumstances, shows the seller. In the advertisement the names of James W. Weeks and S. H. Cummings appear, and the evidence properly admitted shows them to be the sellers of the property.

Neuell v. Radford, L. R., 3 C. P., 52; Beckwith v. Talbot, 95 U. S., 289 (XXIV., 496).

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 16th day of May, 1871, the hotel known as the Glen House, at the foot of the White Mountains in New Hampshire, together with its furniture, was bid off at an auction sale by Grafton, the plaintiff in error, at the price of $90,000. At the end of the ten days allowed by the terms of the sale for examination of the title, three deeds were tendered him which were supposed to convey the title. He refused to accept the deeds, or pay the purchase money, or otherwise complete the contract of purchase. The property was again advertised for sale and sold for $61,000; and the present suit was brought to recover the difference in the amounts for which the property sold at these two sales, as damages for failure to perform the first contract.

The suit was brought in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, and a verdict and judgment recovered against Grafton, to which he prosecutes this writ of error.

The bill of exceptions is voluminous, containing, apparently, everything said and done on the trial. Sixty-one errors are assigned in this court.

We shall confine ourselves to the examination of one of them. That one presents the question, as it occurs in various forms in the record, whether there was a sufficient memorandum of the contract in writing, under the Statute of Frauds of New Hampshire, to sustain the action.

That Statute is in these words: "No action shall be maintained upon a contract for the sale of land, unless the agreement upon which it is brought, or some memorandum thereof, is in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, or by some person by him thereto authorized by writing." The agreement given in evidence on the trial by Cummings, the sole plaintiff, consisted of a paper in writing signed by Grafton, certain printed matter on the margin of that writing, and the advertisement mentioned in the writing so signed. They are as follows:

"I, the subscriber, do hereby acknowledge myself to be the purchaser of the estate known as the Glen House, with furniture belonging to it, in Green's grant, New Hampshire, and sold at auction, Tuesday, May 16th, 1871, at 11 o'clock A. M., and for the sum of $90,000, the said property being more particularly described in the advertisement hereunto affixed; and I hereby bind myself, my heirs and assigns, to comply with the terms and conditions of the sale, as declared by the auctioneer at the time and place of sale.

JOSEPH GRAFTON."

Upon the margin of said agreement were written and printed the following:

"TERMS OF SALE.

"Ten days will be allowed to examine the title, within which time the property must be settled for. Five thousand dollars will be required of the purchaser on the spot, which will be forfeited to the seller if the terms and conditions are not complied with; but the forfeiture of said money does not release the purchaser from his obligation to take the property. Fifteen thousand dollars to be paid on the delivery of the deed, and one half of the purchase money to be paid Sep. 1, 1871, the remaining balance to be paid Sep. 1, 1872.

"The property is sold subject to the conditions of the sale of the stage-route, stages, etc., which are that the proprietors of the route shall have the exclusive business of the house."

The advertisement referred to in the foregoing paper as being thereunto affixed was as follows:

"GLEN HOUSE AT AUCTION.

"The famous summer resort at the foot of Mount Washington, known as the Glen House, together with the land, furniture, mill and out-buildings, will be sold at public auction at Gorham, N. H., Tuesday, May 16, 1871, at 11 o'clock A. M.

May 2, 1871.

"VALUABLE HOTEL PROPERTY FOR SALE.

"The favorite summer resort known as the Glen House, situated at the foot of Mount Washington and at the commencement of the carriage road to the summit, will be offered for sale, together with the land, containing about one thousand acres (well timbered), all the out-buildings, stables and mill on the same, also the furniture, staging, mountain carriages, horses, etc. The house contains some two hundred and twenty-five rooms, capable of accommodating between four and five hundred guests. The whole property, if not disposed of at private sale previous to the first of May, will be sold at public auction to close the estate of the late J. M. Thompson. Notice of the time and place of sale will be given hereafter. Any person desirous of seeing the property, which is in thorough repair, or wishing to make any inquiries, can do so by applying to J. W. Weeks, administrator, Lancaster, N. H., or S. H. Cummings, Falmouth Hotel, Portland, Maine."

The bill of exceptions adds, that when this paper was put in evidence it was indorsed "A. R. Walker, auctioneer and agent for both parties." It is not satisfactorily shown when this indorsement was made, and there is some evidence to show that it was not there at the time the deeds were tendered and Grafton refused to accept them. The court, however, instructed the jury that if it was done at any time before the commencement of this action it was sufficient.

Evidence was admitted to show that at the time of the sale another paper was read by the auctioneer, affecting the terms of the sale; but as this was not among the papers subscribed by defendant, we will first consider whether these were sufficient to sustain the action.

It is proper to observe that the objection to these papers is not that they were not signed by Grafton, the party charged, for he signed himself the principal instrument and the reference to the others, and their annexation to that are sufficient to make them a part of the paper which he did sign. We shall, also, for the purpose of this inquiry, take it that Walker was the auctioneer, and that his name indorsed on the instrument gives it all the value which it could have if signed at any time necessary for that purpose.

The distinct objection to the instrument, as so presented, is, that the other party to the contract of sale is not named in it, and can only be supplied by parol testimony.

The statute not only requires that the agreement on which it [the action] is brought, or some memorandum thereof shall be signed by the party to be charged, but that the agreement or memorandum shall be in writing. In an agreement of sale there can be no contract without both a vendor and a vendee. There can be no purchase without a seller. There must be a sufficient description of the thing sold and of the price to be paid for it. It is, therefore, an essential element of a contract in writing, that it shall contain within itself a description of the thing sold, by which it can be known or identified, of the price to be paid for it, of the party who sells it, and the party who buys it. There is a defect in this memorandum in giving no indication of the party who sells. If Grafton was bound to purchase, it was because somebody was bound to sell. If he was bound to pay, somebody was bound to receive the money and to deliver the consideration for the price so paid.

There can be no bargain without two parties. There can be no valid agreement in writing without these parties are named in such manner that some one whom he can reach is known to the other to be bound also. No one is bound in this paper to sell the Glen House, or to convey it. No one is mentioned as the owner, or the other party to this contract. Let it be understood that we are not discussing the question of mutuality in the obligation, for it may be true that if a vendor was named in this paper, the offer to perform on his part would bind the party who did sign. But Grafton did not agree to buy this property of anybody who might be found able and willing to furnish him a title. He was making a contract which required a vendor and a vendee at the time it was made, and he is liable only to that vendor. The name of that vendor, or some designation of him which could be recognized without parol proof extraneous to the instrument, was an essential part of that instrument to its validity.

It is alleged that Stephen H. Cummings, the plaintiff in this action, was the vendor, and that this sufficiently appears in the papers, of which we have given copies.

The first ground on which it is sought to maintain this proposition is, that Walker's indorsement is sufficient for that purpose.

It is very clear that Walker did not intend to hold himself out as the vendor in this case, because he describes himself as auctioneer and agent for both parties. If he had been sued on this contract by Grafton for failing to tender sufficient deeds of conveyance, it would have been a good answer to the action that he describes himself in the paper on which he was sued as merely an auctioneer in the matter, and in that sense as agent, and not principal. He could not in the act of signing that paper be the agent of Grafton, for Grafton signed it for himself. The statement, therefore, did not mean that he signed for both parties, because he did not, and could not, sign as agent for Grafton.

What did he mean by putting his name there? It can have no other fair meaning than simply to say, as he does, I was the auctioneer who struck off this property.

But concede that he meant to represent the other party in that contract, a contract in which he takes care not to bind himself, who is that other party. What light does the writing of his name as auctioneer and agent throw on that question? Literally none. An anxious reader of the whole paper and its attachments would know as little who sold, or for whom Mr. Walker was selling, after his signature as he did before. To say agent for both parties may show he was agent for the one party whose name is not there, but it does not show who was that party. The paper without Walker's indorsement shows who was the purchaser, but neither with nor without it does it show who was the seller.

It is next argued that the reference to Cummings's name in the advertisement annexed to the paper signed by defendant is sufficient for this. The statement is that the sale is made to close out the estate of the late Mr. Thompson; and "Any person desirous of seeing the property, which is in thorough repair, or wishes to make any inquiries, can do so by applying to J. W. Weeks, administrator, Lancaster, N.H., or S. H. Cummings, Falmouth Hotel, Portland, Maine." Three persons are here mentioned. One, Mr. Thompson, was dead and could not be the vendor. Another, Mr. Weeks, though not mentioned as a party selling, it may be inferred had some interest in the sale as administrator of Thompson. But Weeks does not sue, and if his name had been inserted in the contract as vendor, it would not have sustained the present action. But the true intent of that advertisement was not to describe the vendors, or even the owners of the land, but to designate persons who might give any information about the property, which one thinking of purchasing would need. This did not require that the person referred to should be the owner of the land or the party selling it. Such inquiries could as well be answered by a lawyer, a real estate agent, the latest keeper of the hotel, or one who had been his clerk, as by the owner. There did not arise, therefore, any implication from the reference to Mr. Cummings that he was owner, or even part owner, or that he was holding himself out as the party selling.

The next effort to sustain the instrument sued on as valid, may be said to be a vague effort to show, by the verbal history of the transaction, that defendant recognized Cummings as vendor by subsequent interviews and negotiations with him on the subject of the sale. And special importance in this part of the case is attached to a letter written by Davis, a lawyer, to Cummings.

The letter is liable to three objections, as a recognition by defendant of Cummings as the party of whom he had purchased.

1. No such recognition is to be found in the letter. It consists of suggestions on the part of Davis of what had better be done with the property; that Cummings, Mrs. Thompson and Grafton ought to take it; and that Grafton really don't wish to have anything to do with it. It is not even a recognition of the validity of the purchase, and nowhere speaks of Cummings as the vendor, but he might rather be supposed to be a purchaser with Grafton.

2. Davis does not profess to be speaking or acting for Grafton. He writes in his own name. It is shown by other evidence that, either as attorney or for himself, he controlled the larger part of the debts against Thompson's estate, which made the sale necessary, and it may be fairly inferred that it was in this character he spoke.

3. There is no satisfactory evidence that he was authorized to act for Grafton in that transaction, and none whatever that he was authorized by him to write that letter. The New Hampshire statute requires that the authority of an agent to charge a party shall be in writing, and there is no pretense that Davis had any such authority from Grafton.

These views of the proper construction of the statute are amply sustained by authority.

In the leading case of Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10, decided by Lord Ellenborough under the English statute, the same as that of New Hampshire on the point in question, that eminent judge said: "The question is, whether that word (agreement) is to be understood in a loose, incorrect sense in which it may be sometimes used as synonymous to promise or understanding, or in its more correct sense of signifying a mutual contract on consideration between two or more parties." He held the latter to be the true construction, and that all its essential elements must appear in the memorandum, including the consideration, which in that case was absent. This has been held to be the law in England ever since.

In the case of Williams v. Byrnes, before the Privy Council, reported in 9 Jur. N. S., 363, decided in 1863, the defendant had, in a letter to one Hardy, told him that he would furnish the funds to pay for a steam-engine, if the latter would find and purchase a suitable one. Hardy made a verbal contract for the engine, and the vendor sued defendant on this memorandum. Jessel, M. R., in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said: "The language of the statute cannot be satisfied unless the existence of a bargain or contract appear in evidence in writing; and a bargain cannot so appear unless the parties to it are specified, either nominally or by description or reference;" and the ruling of the Chief Justice that this could be done by extrinsic proof as to who was the vendor, was reversed. It is precisely in point with the one before us.

The case of Sule v. Lambert, Law Rep., 18 Eq., 1, was a sale of real estate, in which the See 9 OTTO.

party charged was the vendor. The memorandum was signed by Sale, the purchaser, for himself, and by George Jackson, the auctioneer, for the vendor. This memorandum was indorsed on a bill of particulars of the conditions of the sale, in which it was said that the property was sold by the proprietor. The court held that the word proprietor sufficiently described the vendor, and ascertained who was the party for whom the auctioneer signed. But in the very next case in the volume, Potter v. Duffield, the same court, by the mouth of the same judge, held that the words "confirmed on the part of the vendor," and signed "Beadels," did not sufficiently designate who the vendor was, and that a suit against the owner could not be sustained on the memorandum. The Master of the Rolls said: "If you could go into evidence, as to the person who is described as vendor, the answer would be that Polly was that person. But that is exactly what the Act says shall not be decided by parol evidence."

In the case before us, Mr. Walker, the auctioneer, does not even say that he signed for the vendor, as Beadels did in the last case cited.

But the case which should have most weight in informing our judgment is that of Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H., 157, because it is an authoritative construction of the statute of the State where this contract was made, and where the land is situated, to which the contract relates, made by the highest court of that State sixty years ago and never overruled. The case is so perfectly parallel to the one under consideration that its circumstances need not be repeated. It is sufficient to say, that the want of the vendor's name in the memorandum was held fatal to any right of action, though the auctioneer's name was signed to a memorandum otherwise sufficient. The concluding language of the court is, that "The written evidence which hath been offered to prove the contract declared on, as it fails to give any intimation that plaintiffs were one of the parties to that contract, must itself be considered fatally defective and inadmissible."

The same doctrine is laid down in the excellent work of Mr. Browne on the Statute of Frauds, secs. 372-375, and the authorities fully cited. He also speaks of the case of Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, decided by this court and reported 14 How., 446, as one which might be saved from conflict with the general rule, on the ground that a bill of parcels detailing the purchase was made out and sent to the purchaser, and accepted by him as such. In that case Mr. Justice Curtis, Mr. Justice Catron and Mr. Justice Daniel dissented in an able opinion by the judge just named. It may be doubted whether the opinion of the majority in all it says in reference to the case of parol proof in aid of even mercantile sales of goods by brokers is sound law. It certainly furnishes no rule to govern us in the exposition of the statutes of New Hampshire, concerning contracts of sale of real estate within its own borders, where it conflicts with the decisions of the courts of that State on the subject.

Defendant in error relies mainly on that case and the later one of Beckwith v. Talbot, 95 U. S., 289 [XXIV., 496]. The latter case, however, affords no support to the argument of counsel. The defendant in that action was charged, it is true, on a memorandum in which his name was not found. But he produced that memorandum from his own possession on the trial, and letters of his written to plaintiff while the agreement was so in his possession were given in evidence, which referred to the agreement and acknowledged its obligatory force on himself, in terms that required no parol proof to identify it as the agreement to which he referred. This was within all the cases a sufficient signing of the memorandum, though found in another paper, written by the party to be charged, to comply with the Statute of Frauds, and so this court held.

We are of opinion that there was no sufficient memorandum in writing of the agreement on which this suit was brought to sustain the verdict of the jury.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is, therefore, reversed and the case remanded to that court, with instructions to set aside the verdict.

I, James H. McKenney, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the opinion of the court in the case of Joseph Grafton, Plff. in Err., v. Stephen H. Cummings, No. 179, October Term, 1878, as the same remains upon the files and records of said Supreme Court.

In testimony whereof, I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of said [L.S.] Supreme Court, at the City of Washington, this 7th day of May, A. D. 1884.

JAMES H. MCKENNEY,
Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

FRANK F. CASE, RECEIVER OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS, Appt.,

v.

GUSTAVE T. BEAUREGARD ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 119-129.)

Partnership debts—relief—creditor's equity.

1. So long as a partner retains an interest in the firm assets, as a partner, a court of equity will allow the creditors of the firm to avail themselves of his equity, and enforce through it, the application of those assets primarily to payment of the debts due them.

2. It is indispensable, however, to such relief, when the creditors are simple contract creditors, that the partnership property should be within the control of the court and in the course of administration.

3. If, before the interposition of the court, the property has ceased to belong to the partnership; if by a bona fide transfer, it has become the several property, either of one partner or of a third person, the equities of the partners are extinguished, and consequently the derivative equities of the creditors are at an end.

[No. 167.]

Argued Jan. 31. 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The bill in this case was filed in the court below by the appellant. The partnership property which it was filed to reach, consisted of a lease of a certain horse railroad with its equipments, and also of certain real estate bought with partnership funds, but held in the name of Beauregard.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. Chas. Case and J. D. Rouse, for appellant:

Mr. Justice Strong said in Bank v. Carrollton R. R. Co., 11 Wall., 628 (78 U. S. XX., 83): "It has repeatedly been determined, both in the British and American courts, that the property or effects of a partnership belong to the firm, and not to the partners, each of whom is entitled only to a share of what remains after payment of the partnership debts, and after a settlement of accounts between the partners;" therein following West v. Ship, 1 Ves., 239, and Field v. Taylor, 4 Ves., 396.

That the creditors of a firm are entitled to the preference of having their debts paid out of the partnership funds before the private creditors of either of the partners, is a doctrine well settled by courts of chancery. 1 Story, Eq., 675.

And any transfer or sale of the property or the effects of a firm, which defeats and destroys the preference, cannot be sustained in equity.

Collins v. Hood, 4 McLean, 186; see, also, Murrill v. Neill, 8 How., 414.

Said Lord Eldon in Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves., 119, "a bona fide transmutation of the property, is understood to be the act of men, acting fairly, winding up the concern, and binds the creditors."

But where there has been no bona fide transmutation of partnership property into separate property, the equitable right of the partners to have the partnership funds applied to the joint debts still exists, and enures to the benefit of the joint creditors.

Story, Part. secs. 97, 261, 326.

That partnership assets constitute a trust fund in cases of insolvency, for the payment of partnership debts, and the substitution of the joint creditors, to the equities of the partners, as being the ultimate cestui que trust, is expressly recognized in Allen v. Center Valley Co., 21 Conn., 130; Witter v. Richards, 10 Conn., 37; see, also, Brewster v. Hammet, 4 Conn., 540; Ex parte Elton, 3 Ves., 238; 3 Kent, Com., p. 59, n. 2; Collins v. Hood, 4 McLean, 188.

The Louisiana Code, art., 2823, provides that the partnership property is liable to the creditors of the partnership in preference to those of the individual partner.

Morgan v. His Creditors, 8 Mart. N. S., 606.

Nor can this privilege be defeated by the acts of the partners. Herein the law of Louisiana differs from the common law. Says Chief Justice Merrick in Succession of Beer, 12 La. Ann., 698: "On general principles, we think it ought not to be in the power of the partners by arrangements among themselves, to defeat the rights of their creditors."

The case of Priestley v. Bisland, 9 Rob. (La.), 425, enforces this view with great vigor.

The doctrine recognized by the 2794th Article of the Civil Code, is fully developed by Pardessus, Droit Commercial, Vol. 4, No. 1089, whose opinion on this subject is in accordance with that of Troplong, Privileges et Hypothèques, Vol. 2, No. 434.

A conveyance of partnership property by a partner, in payment of his separate debt, is a fraudulent conversion thereof, and the separate creditor, whether he has notice or not, takes no title.

Rogers v. Batchelor, 12 Pet., 221; Shirriff v. Wilks, 1 East, 48; Dwight v. Simon, 4 La. Ann., 496.

Where real estate is purchased for partnership purposes and on partnership account, it is wholly immaterial in a court of equity, in whose name or names the legal title is taken; whether in the name of one partner or all the partners, it is equally deemed partnership property.

2 Story's Eq. Sec., 1207; 5 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 120; Clagett v. Kilbourne, 1 Black, 349 (66 U. S., XVII., 213); Fairchild v. Fairchild, 64 N. Y., 471.

Equity will give the complainant a remedy.

Said Chief Justice Marshall, in Russell v. Clark's Exrs., 7 Cranch, 69, "It is also true, that if a claim is to be satisfied out of a fund, which is accessible only by the aid of a court of chancery, application may be made in the first instance to that court, which will not require that the claim should be first established in a court of law."

O'Brien v. Coulter, 2 Blackf., 423; Lawton v. Levy, 2 Edw. Ch., 201; Russell v. Hammond, 1 Atk., 13; Taylor v. Jones, 2 Atk., 600.

It is well settled that the creditor of a deceased debtor may, in the first instance, resort to equity and assail a fraudulent conveyance, without having recovered a judgment at law, especially when the debtor's estate is insolvent.

Hagan v. Walker, 14 How., 33; Frazer v. Western, 1 Barb. Ch., 223. See also, Offutt v. King, 1 MacArthur., 312; Hills v. Sherwood, 48 Cal., 386.

The real object of requiring judgment at law and execution returned unsatisfied, in any case, preliminary to a creditor's bill, is to show that the creditor is without legal remedy.

The fact may be established as well by other evidence.

Terry v. Tubman, 92 U. S., 160 (XXIII., 539).

Even after judgment, if it appears that the judgment debtor is insolvent, and that the issuing of the execution would be of no practical utility, it may be dispensed with.

Turner v. Adams, 46 Mo., 95; Postlewait v. Houses, 3 Ia., 365; Payne v. Sheldon, 63 Barb., 169.

The following cases hold that a creditor may, without having first obtained a judgment at law, come into a court of equity to set aside fraudulent conveyances of property or other devices resorted to for the purpose of hindering or delaying creditors, and subject the property, by sale or otherwise, to the satisfaction of his debt.

Thurmond v. Reese, 3 Ga., 449; Croone v. Bivens, 2 Head (Tenn.), 339; Cornell v. Radway, 22 Wis., 260; Sanderson v. Stockdale, 11 Md., 563; Cook v. Johnson, 12 N. J., Eq. (1 Beas.), 51; Innes v. Lansing, 7 Paige, Ch., 583.

Messrs. J. A. Campbell and Henry C. Miller, for appellees, and Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., in behalf of the United States:

The partners were not liable in solido, but only for their individual shares respectively.

Beauregard v. Case, 91 U. S., 134 (XXIII., 263).

The conveyances by May to the Treasury Agent in 1867, was a dissolution of the partnership.

Bank v. Carrollton R. R. Co., 11 Wall., 624 (78 U. S., XX., 82).

The principle that the creditors of a partnership have a privilege or preference of payment out of the effects of a firm in the course of liquidation, to the exclusion of the creditors of the several members of the firm, is acknowledged.

When the property ceases to belong to the partnership, the privilege is extinguished for the want of a subject.
See 9 OTTO.

C. C., 3277; Skillman v. Purnell, 3 La., 494; Baca v. Ramos, 10 La., 418; Lallande v. McRae, 16 La. Ann., 193; 40 Dalloz Jurisp. Gen., tit. Société, No. 632, p. 498.

But it cannot be denied that the conveyance of Beauregard, May & Graham would transfer the property to any bona fide purchaser, discharged from any claim of any general creditor of the partnership, or of the partnership itself.

McNutt v. Strahorn, 39 Pa., 269; Beer's Succession, 12 La. Ann., 698; Backus v. Murphy, 39 Pa., 397; Skillman v. Purnell, 3 La., 494; Ketchum v. Durkee, 1 Barb. Ch., 480; Reese v. Bradford, 13 Ala., 837; Lallande v. McRae, 16 Ann., 193; Pars. Comm., 503; Sage v. Chollar, 21 Barb., 596; 3 Kent Comm. side p. 65, 12th ed; Young v. Parsons, 2 Met. (Ky.), 499; Ely v. Hair, 16 B. Mon., 237.

In Louisiana, a commercial partnership is limited to personal property, and land is not a partnership asset. The partners hold it by distinct and separate titles.

Skillman v. Purnell, 3 La., 497; Poydras v. Laurans, 6 La. Ann., 771; Thomas v. Scott, 3 Rob. La., 256; Willey v. Carter, 4 La. Ann., 56; Lee v. Ferguson, 5 La. Ann., 532.

There is no foundation for this claim.

Stroud v. Guyer, 28 Beav., 130; Willett v. Blanford, 1 Hare, 353; Simpson v. Chapman, 4 De Gex M. & G., 154.

It was a question among French jurists, whether one partner in an ordinary partnership can use a credit belonging to another, in compensation of a debt claimed against the partnership. The decisions in Louisiana are that he may employ it for the purpose.

Dick v. Byrne, 7 Rob. La., 465; Bliss v. Patrick, 6 La. Ann., 546.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The object of this bill is to follow and subject to the payment of a partnership debt property which formerly belonged to the partnership, but which, before the bill was filed, had been transferred to the defendants. There is little if any controversy respecting the facts, and little in regard to the principles of equity invoked by the complainant. The important question is, whether those principles are applicable to the facts of the case.

No doubt the effects of a partnership belong to it so long as it continues in existence, and not to the individuals who compose the firm. The right of each partner extends only to a share of what may remain after payment of the debts of the firm and the settlement of its accounts. Growing out of this right, or rather included in it, is the right to have the partnership property applied to the payment of the partnership debts in preference to those of any individual partner. This is an equity the partners have as between themselves, and in certain circumstances it inures to the benefit of the creditors of the firm. They are said to have a privilege or preference, sometimes loosely denominated a lien, to have the debts due to them paid out of the assets of a firm in course of liquidation, to the exclusion of the creditors of the several members of the firm. Their equity, however, is a derivative one. It is not held or enforceable in their own right. It is practically a subrogation to the equity of the individual partner, to be made effective only through him. Hence, if he is not in a condition to enforce it, the creditors of the firm cannot be. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt., 479; App. of York Co. Bk., 32 Pa., 446. But so long as the equity of the partner remains in him, so long as he retains an interest in the firm assets, as a partner, a court of equity will allow the creditors of the firm to avail themselves of his equity and enforce, through it, the application of those assets primarily to payment of the debts due them, whenever the property comes under its administration.

It is indispensable, however, to such relief, when the creditors are, as in the present case, simple-contract creditors, that the partnership property should be within the control of the court and in the course of administration, brought there by the bankruptcy of the firm, or by an assignment, or by the creation of a trust in some mode. This is because neither the partners nor the joint creditors have any specific lien, nor is there any trust that can be enforced until the property has passed in custodiam legis. Other property can be followed only after a judgment at law has been obtained and an execution has proved fruitless.

So, if before the interposition of the court is asked the property has ceased to belong to the partnership, if by a bona fide transfer it has become the several property either of one partner or of a third person, the equities of the partners are extinguished and, consequently, the derivative equities of the creditors are at an end. It is, therefore, always essential to any preferential right of the creditors that there shall be property owned by the partnership when the claim for preference is sought to be enforced. Thus, in Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves., 119, where from a partnership of two persons one retired, assigning the partnership property to the other, and taking a bond for the value and a covenant of indemnity against debts, it was ruled by Lord Eldon that the joint creditors had no equity attaching upon partnership effects, even remaining in specie. And such has been the rule generally accepted ever since, with the single qualification that the assignment of the retiring partner is not mala fide. Kimball v. Thompson, 13 Met., 283; Allen v. Centre Val. Co., 21 Conn., 130; Ladd v. Griswold, 9 Ill. (4 Gilm.), 25; Smith v. Edwards, 7 Humph., 106; Robb v. Mudge, 14 Gray, 534; Baker's Appeal, 21 Pa. 76; Sigler v. Bk., 8 Ohio St., 511; and [Wilcox v. Kellogg], 11 Ohio, 394.

The joint estate is converted into the separate estate of the assignee by force of the contract of assignment. And it makes no difference whether the retiring partner sells to the other partner or to a third person, or whether the sale is made by him or under a judgment against him. In either case his equity is gone. These principles are settled by very abundant authorities. It remains, therefore, only to consider whether, in view of the rules thus settled and of the facts of this case, the complainant, through any one of the partners, has a right to follow the specific property which formerly belonged to the partnership, and compel its application to the payment of the debt due from the firm to the bank of which he is the receiver.

The partnership, while it was in existence, was composed of three persons, May, Graham and Beauregard, but it had ceased to exist before this suit was commenced. It was entirely insolvent, and all the partnership effects had been transferred to others for valuable considerations. None of the property was ever within the jurisdiction of the court for administration.

On the 8th of May, 1867, Graham, one of the partners, assigned all his right and interest in any property and effects of the partnership, and whatever he might be entitled to under the articles thereof, together with all debts due to him from the partnership or any member thereof, to the Fourth National Bank of the City of New York. By subsequent assignments, made on the 14th and 16th of May, 1869, May, the second partner, transferred all his interest in the partnership property to the United States, and by the same instruments transferred to the United States, by virtue of a power of attorney which he held, the interest of Graham. On the 21st of August, 1867, the United States sold and transferred their interest obtained from May and Graham in all the partnership property, including real estate, to Alexander Bonneval, Joseph Hernandez and George Binder. On the 15th of October next following, an act of fusion was executed between the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company, Beauregard, Bonneval, Hernandez and Binder, by which the rights of all the parties became vested in the railroad company, subject to the debts and liabilities of the company, whether due or claimed from the lessee or the stockholders.

The effect of these transfers and act of fusion was very clearly to convert the partnership property into property held in severalty, or, at least, to terminate the equity of any partner to require the application thereof to the payment of the joint debts. Hence if, as we have seen, the equity of the partnership creditors can be worked out only through the equity of the partners, there was no such equity of the partners, or any one of them, as is now claimed, in 1869, when this bill was filed. No one of the partners could then insist that the property should be applied first to the satisfaction of the joint debts, for his interest in the partnership and its assets had ceased. Baker's Appeal [supra]. That was a case where a firm had consisted of five brothers. Two of them withdrew, disposing of their interest in the partnership estate and effects to the other three, the latter agreeing to pay the debts of the firm. Some time after, one of the remaining three sold his interest in the partnership property to one of the remaining two partners. The two remaining, after contracting debts, made an assignment of their partnership property to pay the debts of the last firm composed of the two; and it was held that the creditors of the first two firms had no right to claim any portion of the fund last assigned, and that it was distributable exclusively among the creditors of the last firm. So in McNutt v. Strayhorn, 39 Pa., 269, it was ruled that though the general rule is that the equities of the creditors are to be worked out through the equities of the partners, yet where the property is parted with by sale severally made, and neither partner has dominion or possession, there is nothing through which the equities of the creditors can work, and, therefore, there is no case for the application of the rule. See, also, Coover's

App., 29 Pa., 9. Unless, therefore, the conveyances of the partners in this case and the Act of fusion were fraudulent, the bank of which the complainant is receiver has no claim upon the property now held by the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company, arising out of the facts that it is a creditor of the partnership, and was such when the property belonged to the firm.

The bill, it is true, charges that the several transfers of the partners were illegal and fraudulent, without specifying wherein the fraud consisted. The charge seems to be only a legal conclusion from the fact that some of the transfers were made for the payment of the private debts of the assignors. Conceding such to have been the case, it was a fraud upon the other partners, if a fraud at all, rather than upon the joint creditors, a fraud which those partners could waive, and which was subsequently waived by the act of fusion. Besides, that Act made provision for some of the debts of the partnership. And it has been ruled that where one of two partners, with the consent of the other, sells and conveys one half of the effects of the firm to a third person, and the other partner afterwards sells and conveys the other half to the same person, such sale and conveyances are not prima facie void, as against creditors of the firm, but are prima facie valid against all the world, and can be set aside by the creditors of the firm only by proof that the transactions were fraudulent as against them. Kimball v. Thompson, 13 Met., 283; Flack v. Charron, 29 Md., 311. A similar doctrine is asserted in some of the other cases we have cited; and, see, Allen v. Center Val. Co. [supra]. In the present case we find no such proof. We discover nothing to impeach the bona fides of the transaction, by which the property became vested in the railroad company.

Thus far we have considered the case without reference to the provisions of the Louisiana Code, upon which the appellant relies. Article 2823 of the Code is as follows: "The partnership property is liable to the creditors of the partnership in preference to those of the individual partner." We do not perceive that this provision differs materially from the general rule of equity we have stated. It creates no specific lien upon partnership property, which continues after the property has ceased to belong to the partnership. It does not forbid bona fide conversion by the partners of the joint property into rights in severalty, held by third persons. It relates to partnership property alone and gives a rule for marshaling such property between creditors. Concede that it gives to joint creditors a privilege while the property belongs to the partnership, there is no subject upon which it can act when the joint ownership of the partners has ceased. Article 3244 of the Code declares that privileges become extinct "by the extinction of the thing subject to the privilege."

What we have said is sufficient for a determination of the case. If it be urged, as was barely intimated during the argument, that the property sought to be followed belongs in equity to the bank, or is clothed with a trust for the bank, because it was purchased with the bank's money, the answer is plain. There is no satisfactory evidence that it was thus purchased. It cannot be identified as the subject to the acquisition of which money belonging to the bank was applied.

The bank has, therefore, no specific claim upon the property, nor is there any trust which a court of equity can enforce; and it was well said by the Circuit Justice, that, without some constituted trust or lien, "A creditor has only the right to prosecute his claim in the ordinary courts of law, and have it adjudicated before he can pursue the property of his debtor by a direct proceeding" in equity.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Cited—106 U. S., 655; 16 N. W. Rep., 509; 3 McCrary, 371.

FRANCIS A. KING ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 229-234.)

Collector and sureties, liability of—assessment—bond.

*1. Where taxes long past due to the United States are paid to the Collector of Internal Revenue, he and his sureties are liable on his bond for the amount so paid, though it had not then been returned to the assessor's office, or passed upon by him, nor the return, handed to the collector by the tax payer, sworn to.

2. The case of Bk. v. U. S., 19 Wall., 227 [36 U. S., XXII., 80], decides explicitly that the obligation to pay the tax on dividends or interest does not depend on an assessment by any officer and a suit for such tax can be sustained without it. That case governs the present. The tax so paid is public money covered by the terms of the bond.

[No. 161.]

Argued Jan. 30, 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Richard Waite, E. T. Waite, Haynes, Potter & Beckwith, and Bissell & Gorrell, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the circuit court against Harry Chase and his sureties on his official bond as Collector of Internal Revenue for the Tenth District of Ohio.

The sureties alone join in the writ, and the case having been submitted to the court below without a jury, the principal error assigned is that on the facts found by that court the judgment should have been in their favor.

The substance of the facts so found is, that while Chase was in office as collector, and while the defendants were liable on his bond for his official acts, he received from the treasurer of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad Company, as and for the tax on interest paid on their mortgage bonds, the sum of $24,923.87, which he did not pay into the Treasury of the United States, and of which he neglected to render any account to the Government. As it is on the particular circumstances of this payment to Chase that the defendants rely, it is necessary to state them with some care as they appear in the findings of the court.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

It thus appears that on the first day of June, 1868, the railroad company was indebted to the United States, for the five per cent. tax on interest paid by it on its mortgage bonds, the sum of $112,778, which was on that day paid to Chase in three checks of the treasurer of the railroad company on two different banks of Toledo, on which the money was paid to Chase by the banks.

The taxes for which this sum was paid, included the whole amount of the taxes for the years 1865, 1866 and 1867. Of this sum there was due:

For the year 1865, - -	$19,422.50
For the year 1866, - -	44,821.25
For the year 1867, - -	48,534.75

This entire sum, as we have said, was paid at the same time by two different checks of that date.

At the time of this payment there was delivered to Chase six separate returns of the taxes so due in the form prescribed by law to be made to the assessor of taxes, which were subscribed by the treasurer of the company, but not sworn to, and which had not then been filed with or delivered to said assessor, but all of which were delivered by Chase to the assessor, except the returns for the months of August, September and October, 1867, which were the latest returns so delivered to Chase at the time the money was paid. These returns he did not deliver to the assessor, nor did he make any mention of them in his report to the Government at any time, and he retained the amount of them out of the money received from the treasurer of the company.

It was five years after this before the officers of the Government discovered that he had received this sum above what he had accounted for, and in the meantime he had become insolvent.

The proposition of defendants' counsel is, that because this money was not received by Chase on any return made to the assessor, or on any assessment made by him or by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for such taxes, and because the return delivered to Chase was not verified by oath, it was a voluntary deposit of the money in his hands by the treasurer of the company, and was not received by him in his official character. That it was not his duty to receive it for the Government under such circumstances, and his sureties are not liable because it was an unofficial act. The argument has been pressed with great ingenuity and skill, and with many illustrations; but in all its forms it amounts to the averment that Chase had no legal authority as Collector of Internal Revenue to receive the money for the Government under the circumstances named, and the payment was not a lawful or valid payment.

There can be no question that Chase understood himself as receiving the money for the Government, and in payment of the taxes due. Nor is there any question that the treasurer of the railroad company intended it as payment to Chase in his official character as collector, and supposed he had paid the taxes by so doing; for Chase gave him three separate receipts in which the taxes for each of the years we have mentioned are set out, and also the months of the year in which they accrued, which he signed officially as collector, and declared in each receipt that it was in full of the account. Nor can there be any doubt that these taxes were owing and then due to the United States; for the blank form used by the treasurer in making these returns shows that such returns were, by law, to be made to the assessor on or before the 10th day of the month following that in which the interest became due and payable, and were to be paid to the collector on or before the last day of that month. The latest of the taxes in the case before us had long been due. Part of them had been detained by the railroad company over two years. All of them over six months. The company, by the returns which were handed to the collector, acknowledged the sums therein stated to be due, and tendered him the money. There can be no question raised as to the validity of the tender (because it was in bank checks indorsed good by the bank instead of money), unless objection had been made to the character of the tender.

The narrow question, then, is, whether, when a corporation presents to the collector a statement of taxes long past due, which taxes must in the end be paid to him, and tenders him the full payment of said taxes, he may not receive them and give a valid acquittance for the amount so received.

It is not necessary to decide that such transaction would bar a recovery by the United States of any sum in excess of that paid, which might afterwards be found to be owing for the same period and for the same tax. The simple question is: was it a valid payment for that amount, and to that extent, which the collector might lawfully receive and be bound to pay to the Government.

To hold the contrary is to decide that a debt long past due and acknowledged to be due by the debtor cannot be paid, when he is willing to pay, and the proper officer of the Government ready to receive it, because the debtor has neglected to report the same facts to some other officer, or that officer has neglected to make report of the facts. Of the duty of the railroad company to pay the money as speedily as possible there can be no doubt. When it admitted the obligation and offered to pay it, was there no one to whom it could pay it?

Section 3142, Revised Statutes, then in force, provides for the appointment of a Collector of Internal Revenue for every collection district. Section 3143, in prescribing the conditions of his official bond, makes it his duty to account for and pay over to the United States all public money which may come into his hands or possession, and this condition is in the bond which is the foundation of the present suit. Money paid for taxes past due and received by the collector as such, and for which he gives a receipt as collector, specifying with precision the taxes for which it is paid, is public money. If it is not, whose money is it? The tax payer has parted with it, in voluntary payment of a debt due the United States. The collector appointed by the United States has received it as money paid to the United States on a debt due the United States. It is not, therefore, his money. It is the property of the United States, and within the meaning of the bond it is public money.

The answer made to this by counsel is that the debt was not due, or, at least, not payable, until the assessor had received and acted on the return made by the corporation. There is nothing in the statute which says this in terms. If it be sound it must be an implication, and we do not not see how such an implication can arise. That such an assessment was not made long before was owing to the neglect of the company to make proper returns. Did that neglect make the taxes, which should have been paid a year before, any less a debt from that time? And can it be said they were not due at the time the statute says they should be paid, because the company failed to make the report which it was its duty to make?

If there could be any doubt upon this point, it was set at rest by the decision of this court in Bk. v. U. S., 19 Wall. 227 [86 U. S., XXII., 80], where the same objection was taken to a suit to recover the tax. The court held explicitly that the obligation to pay the tax did not depend on an assessment made by any officer whatever, but that the facts being established on which the tax rested, the law made the assessment, and an action of debt could be maintained to recover it though no officer had made an assessment. So that, both on principle and authority, we are of opinion that the judgment, for the sum received by the collector and not paid over, with interest, is right and must be affirmed. See also, U. S. v. Ferrary, 93 U. S., 625 [XXIII., 832].

Section 825, Revised Statutes, enacts that "There shall be taxed and paid to every district attorney two per centum upon all moneys collected or realized in any suit or proceeding arising under the revenue laws, and conducted by him, in which the United States is a party, which shall be in lieu of all costs and fees in such proceeding."

The court in this case, after a motion for re-taxation, ordered that this two per cent. on the sum recovered, amounting to $712.77, be taxed against defendants. In this we think there was error.

1. The section applies only to cases where the money is collected or realized. This cannot be told until it is done, and the sum cannot, therefore, be taxed in the judgment against defendant. Suppose in the present case half the judgment is realized and no more, then the sum taxed is twice as much as the law allows.

2. This two per cent. is to be in lieu of all costs and fees in such proceeding. If it be costs taxable against defendants, then where, after a long litigation, the defendant is adjudged to pay $10 and costs, he escapes by paying $10.20 in full. This is obviously not the purpose of the statute, but must be its results if the word "taxed" in the section means taxed in court against the defendant.

The section was no doubt intended to establish a rule of compensation as between the Government and its attorney, by which, when he has been successful, he gets a commission of two per cent. for collection, but leaves him his ordinary statutory fee where nothing is realized.

So much of the judgment, therefore, as relates to this sum taxed in the costs is reversed, and the remainder of the judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite did not sit in this case, nor participate in its decision.

Cited—107 U. S., 130; 1 McCrary, 7; 7 N. W. Rep., 706.

See 9 OTTO.

MARY R. MONTGOMERY, by ROSELLA MONTGOMERY, her Tutrix, Next Friend and Guardian, Plff. in Err.,

v.

HENRY SAMORY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 482-491.)

Decision by court—Louisiana law—judicial sale—supersedes.

1. A court does not err in not submitting a case to a jury where the issues to be tried are issues of law, or where the parties waived a jury trial.

2. In Louisiana, definitive judgments, where the court has jurisdiction and due notice is given to the defendant, bear the force of res judicata and are conclusive of the rights of the parties.

3. A judgment confirming and homologating a judicial sale has the force of res judicata and operates as a bar against all persons.

4. A devolutive appeal never operates as a superseas.

[No. 178.]

Argued Mar. 11, 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Thomas Hunton, for plaintiff in error.
Messrs. Henry C. Miller and P. Phillips, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Courts and jurists everywhere agree that the title to real estate is governed by the laws of the place where it is situated; the universal rule being that the title to such property can only be acquired, passed, or lost according to the lex loci rei sitæ. Story, Conf. L., 6th ed., sec. 424; Wharton, Conf. L., sec. 273.

Enough appears in the record to show that the father of the minor plaintiff owned the property in controversy, and that he being indebted to the defendant in the sums expressed in the four promissory notes referred to in the transcript, executed to his creditor the two mortgages under which the defendant claims that he ultimately acquired his title to the premises. Under the law of the State, where the property is situated, the mortgages imported a confession of judgment for the amount which they were executed to secure, less what should be paid before breach of condition.

Default of payment having subsequently been made, the mortgagee filed his petition in the third district court, praying that the mortgagor might be summoned to answer and that he should be decreed to pay the amount of the debt secured, with mortgage privilege upon the property described in the mortgages. Process was issued, and the sheriff returned "Not found," and that the mortgagor was out of the State. Due proceedings followed, which were, that the mortgagee filed a supplementary petition setting forth the return of the sheriff, and prayed that a curator ad hoc might be appointed, and that he should be served with a proper citation. Pursuant to the prayer of the petition, the court made the requested appointment, and the curator having been duly served, appeared and filed an answer. Hearing was had, and judgment was entered for the mortgagee in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

NOTE.—Conclusiveness of judgment. See note to Bank of U. S. v. Beverly, 42 U. S. (1 How.), 134.

Two years later the mortgagor filed his petition in the court, complaining that the judgment had been rendered against him without his having been previously cited to appear, as the law directs, and prayed for a devolutive appeal, which was seasonably granted by the court. Both parties appeared in the Supreme Court of the State, and the appellant having suggested the death of the mortgagor and that his widow had been confirmed as natural tutrix of her minor child, she, the tutrix, was made a party to the appeal.

More than a year had elapsed from the date of the judgment before the petition for an appeal was filed, but it was obtained under that provision of the Code which makes an exception in favor of absentees, to whom a delay of two years is granted. Lambert v. Conrad, 18 La. Ann., 145.

Record proof showed that the mortgagor was an absentee, and the appeal was taken to enable the appellant to contest the point that the service on the curator ad hoc was sufficient to put the rights of the absentee in issue in the foreclosure proceedings. All matters of the kind were necessarily in issue and, the parties having been fully heard, the court affirmed the judgment of the subordinate court.

Pending the appeal, which was devolutive only, the property was sold under an execution issued on the judgment rendered in the court of original jurisdiction, and the mortgagee became the purchaser at the sheriff's sale. By the record it also appears that on the 10th of March of the next year, and before the appeal was determined, the mortgagee and purchaser at the sale applied to the same district court for a monition to protect his title thus acquired, as he was authorized to do under the law and jurisprudence of the State. R. S. La., 469. Publication as required by law was duly made, and such regular proceedings followed as terminated in a judgment in favor of the mortgagee and purchaser, that the said sale be confirmed and homologated according to law.

Seven years subsequently, to wit: on the 29th of March, 1871, the widow of the mortgagor, as tutrix of the minor plaintiff, filed her petition in the Circuit Court of the United States, praying the court to enter a decree that the title to the property acquired by the "mortgagee and purchaser at the sheriff's sale is null and void." Due process was served; and the respondent appeared and filed an exception to the jurisdiction, which having been overruled by the court, the respondent filed an answer, setting up several defenses.

Eight peremptory exceptions were also filed by the respondent at a later period. Testimony was not taken by either party, and they, having waived a trial by jury, submitted the cause to the court. Arguments of counsel followed the agreement to submit the cause; and the court, the District Judge presiding, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, holding that the judgment of the third district court of the city is null and void. Immediate application for a new trial was made, and the same court at a subsequent session, the Circuit and District Judges presiding, granted the application. Leave being granted, the plaintiff filed an amended and supplemental petition, in which she alleged two other grounds of claim: (1) That the property, at the date of the judgment in favor of the mortgagee and at the time of the sale, was in possession of the United States as abandoned property. (2) That there never was any valid or legal seizure of the property.

Four peremptory exceptions were filed by the defendant to the supplemental and amended petition: (1) That it changes entirely the cause of action and the demand set forth in the original petition. (2) That it alters the plaintiff's pleadings and the basis and foundation of the suit. (3) That it is vague and general, without any clear and precise statement of the claim. (4) That it changes the substance of the demand, the ground of claim, and the defense.

Those exceptions were heard separately from the other questions in the case, and having been overruled by the court, the defendant filed what is denominated in the record an exception and answer to the supplemental and amended petition, as follows: (1) That the petition sets forth no cause of action. (2) That the cause of action is barred by the prescription of five years. (3) That the exceptions pleaded to the original petition are a bar to the supplemental petition. (4) That it is not true that the property was in the possession of the United States, as alleged. (5) That the sheriff did legally seize the property, and that the title of the defendant is just and legal.

Formal application was made to set aside the agreement to waive a trial by jury, but it does not appear that it was pressed, and it was never granted. Instead of that, the record shows that the questions involved were reargued by the counsel on each side, and that the court entered judgment that the exceptions filed by the defendant be sustained, and that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs. Exceptions in the usual form as at common law were filed by the plaintiff to the rulings and decisions of the court, and she sued out the present writ of error. Two errors are formally assigned, to the effect as follows: (1) That the court, in view of the facts alleged in the pleadings, erred in deciding the cause without the intervention of a jury. (2) That the court erred in maintaining the peremptory exception of res judicata, and the peremptory exception that the judgment of the third district court confirming and homologating the sale made to the defendant operate as a complete bar to the plaintiff's claim.

Beyond question, both of these peremptory exceptions were filed before the new trial was ordered; but, inasmuch as they were subsequently sustained by the circuit court, and are embodied in the bills of exceptions exhibited in the record, they are properly here for re-examination under the present writ of error.

Viewed in that light, it follows that there are three questions presented for decision: (1) Whether the court erred in not submitting the case to a jury. (2) Whether the court erred in holding that the judgment of the third district court is conclusive that the sale was made according to law, and that such a judgment cannot be incidentally and collaterally attacked or annulled. (3) Whether the court erred in holding that the judgment of the third district court pursuant to the process of monition, operated as a complete bar to the present suit.

Other questions were litigated in the progress of the suit; but, inasmuch as these three are the only ones included in the formal assignment of errors, none other will be much considered.

Peremptory exceptions, in the jurisprudence of that State, are of two classes, of which the first is equivalent in import to a demurrer at common law, and of course must in all cases be adjudged by the court. Somewhat different rules apply in the second class, which, without going into the merits of the cause, show that the plaintiff cannot maintain the action either because it is prescribed or because the cause of action has been destroyed or extinguished. Code, Pr., 1870, art. 345. Such an exception may be pleaded in every stage of the litigation previous to the definitive judgment, but the rule is that it must be pleaded specially, and that sufficient time must be allowed to the adverse party to make defense. Code, Pr., 1870, art. 346.

Nothing can be plainer in legal decision than the proposition that the two exceptions mentioned were well pleaded in the circuit court, as appears by the sixth and seventh articles of the answer which the defendant filed to the suit of the plaintiff. Conclusive support to that proposition is also found in the opinions of the Supreme Court of the State, set forth in the transcript and officially reported. Samory v. Montgomery, 19 La. Ann., 333; S. C., 27 La. Ann., 50.

Much discussion of the first assignment of error is unnecessary, for two reasons: (1) Because the issues presented under the peremptory exceptions were issues of law for the determination of the court. (2) Because the parties waived a jury trial by consent, and stipulated that the case should be tried by the court.

Two judgments properly certified were introduced by the defendant in support of his peremptory exceptions, of which the first was the judgment of the third district court foreclosing the mortgages, as affirmed in the Supreme Court. Attempt is made to assail that judgment upon the ground that the absence of the mortgagor under the circumstances did not justify the appointment of a curator ad hoc and the subsequent proceeding which followed that appointment.

Good reasons exist to conclude that the question argued here is the exact question which was presented to the Supreme Court of the State to which the case was appealed from the third district court. In disposing of the case, the Supreme Court said that the only question presented was whether the mortgagor, at the time the service was made, was an absentee in legal contemplation, to whom a curator ad hoc could be appointed, and contradictorily with whom a suit might be prosecuted and a valid judgment obtained against the absent person. Such is the statement of the Judge who gave the opinion, and the facts disclosed confirm the statement and show to a demonstration that the exact question presented here was fully and expressly decided by that court. Samory v. Montgomery [supra.]

2. Proof of a conclusive character is exhibited in the record to show that the parties in this case waived a trial by jury; but it is not necessary to rest the case upon that proposition, as it is clear that the issue presented by the peremptory exception was one of law and not of fact; nor does it make any difference that the parties stipulated that the court should find the facts, as the record shows that the Judge presiding when the first judgment was rendered complied with that part of the stipulation. His finding of facts was before the two Judges when the new trial was granted, and constituted the foundation of the court's action.

New pleadings were subsequently filed by both parties, which presented issues of law for the determination of the court, arising out of the duly certified copy of the judgment rendered in the third district court foreclosing the mortgage as affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State, and the motion judgment of the same court, from which no appeal was ever taken.

Viewed in any light, it is clear that the first assignment of error must be overruled.

Res judicata, as pleaded in the sixth peremptory exception of the defendant, is, in substance and effect, the same as the plea in bar of a former recovery at common law, in respect to which, in order that it may be a valid defense and incapable of collateral attack, it must appear that the opposite party had notice of the suit, and that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of the case. Judgments, in the jurisprudence of that State, as well as elsewhere, are open to inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the court and notice to the defendant. Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall., 290 [72 U. S., XVIII., 475]; Webster v. Reid, 11 How., 437.

Definitive judgments, where the court has jurisdiction and due notice is given to the defendant, bear the force of res judicata and, of course, are conclusive of the rights of the parties. Civ. Code, art. 539.

Jurisdiction of the third district court is admitted, and sufficient has already been remarked to show that the defendant was an absentee, and that the notice given to the curator ad hoc was a sufficient compliance with the requirement of law. Decisive proof of that proposition is found in the fact that he went voluntarily out of the jurisdiction, under circumstances that show that he cannot complain of legal proceedings regularly prosecuted against him in his absence. Ludlow v. Ramsey, 11 Wall., 581 [78 U. S., XX., 216]; University v. Finch, 18 Wall., 106 [85 U. S., XXI., 818].

3. When judgment was rendered for the mortgagee in the third district court, the mortgagor appeared and filed a petition for a devolutive appeal to the Supreme Court, which was granted for the reasons set forth in the petition, which plainly showed that the prior action of the court in appointing the curator ad hoc was correct.

Such an appeal does not operate as a superseas, and the mortgagee and purchaser of the property, in the meantime applied to the clerk of the court, in whose office the deed of sale was recorded, for a motion or advertisement in conformity to an Act of Legislature of the State, entitled "An Act for the Further Assurance to Purchasers at Judicial Sales," and praying that the process might be granted requiring all parties alleging any informality or irregularity in the said sale to show cause, if any they had, why the sale should not be confirmed and homologated. Advertisements as required were duly published; and, no opposition appearing, the court rendered judgment that the said sale be confirmed and homologated according to law, as authorized by the legislative Act, from which judgment no appeal was ever taken, and the record shows that the said judgment is in full force and unreversed. Mc Waters v. Smith, 25 La. Ann., 515.

Purchasers at judicial sales may protect themselves from eviction of the property so purchased, or from any responsibility as possessors of the same, by pursuing the rules prescribed in that enactment. They must sue out the monition and advertise as required, calling on all persons who set up any right to the property in consequence of any informality or irregularity in the order, decree or judgment, or in the appraisal, advertisement or proceedings of the sale, or any defect whatsoever, to show cause within thirty days why the sale so made should not be confirmed and homologated.

Monitions of the kind must state the judicial authority under which the sale took place, and must contain the same description of the property purchased as that given in the judicial conveyance to the buyer, and must also state the price at which the object was bought. Buyers may apply for the process; and the judges of the courts from which the orders, decree or judgment were issued may grant the same in the name of the State, and affix to it the seal of the court. Thirty days having expired, the party may apply to the judge of the court out of which the monition issued, to confirm and homologate the sale; and, if no cause is shown to the contrary, it shall be the duty of the judge to enter such a judgment or decree.

Provision is also made that the judgment of the court shall be in itself conclusive evidence that the monition was regularly made and advertised; nor shall any evidence be received thereafter to contradict the same, or to prove any irregularity in the proceeding. Evidence to prove any such irregularity is declared to be inadmissible; and the further provision is that the judgment of the court confirming and homologating the sale shall have the force of res judicata, and that it shall operate as a complete bar against all persons, whether of age or minors, whether present or absent, who may thereafter claim the property in consequence of any illegality or informality in the proceeding, whether before or after judgment. Appended to that is the further provision that the judgment of homologation shall in all cases be received and considered as full and conclusive proof that the sale was duly made according to law, in virtue of a judgment or order legally and regularly pronounced in the interest of parties duly represented. R. S. La., 1870, 469, arts. 2370-2376, inclusive.

Irregularities in the suit of foreclosure under which property is sold for breach of condition may be conclusively validated by such proceeding, if the court which rendered the decree had jurisdiction of the case and the record shows that the party defendant was duly notified of the suit; but the better opinion is, that if the court had no jurisdiction in such a case, or if the process was not duly served, the proceeding under the statute authorizing the monition will not cure the defect. Willis v. Nicholson, 24 La. Ann., 545; Fitz v. Dierker, 30 La. Ann., 175; Frost v. McLeod, 19 La. Ann., 69.

Concede that, and still the concession will not change the conclusion in this case, as the jurisdiction of the court in the foreclosure proceeding is beyond question, and the decisions of the state court prove incontestably that the notice to the curator ad hoc was sufficient to support the judgment or decree against the defendant as an absentee from the State.

Apply those rules to the case before the court, and it is clear that the judgment in the monition proceeding affords conclusive proof that the judicial conveyance of the property vested a complete title in the purchaser at the sheriff's sale. Should it be suggested that the judgment rendered in the monition proceeding was subsequent to the appeal from the third district court, the conclusive answer to the objection is that the devolutive appeal never operates as a supersedeas. Arrowsmith v. Durell, 21 La. Ann., 295; Walker v. Hays, 23 La. Ann., 176; Samory v. Montgomery, 27 La. Ann., 50; Code of Pr., arts. 578, 595; R. S. La., art. 3392.

Tested by these authorities, it is clear that the appeal constituted no legal obstacle to the subsequent jurisdiction of the subordinate court in rendering the judgment in the monition proceeding, from which it follows that there is no error in the record brought here by the present writ of error.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley did not sit in this case, nor participate in its decision.

WILLIAM MCBURNEY ET AL., Appts.,

v.

CAROLINE CARSON.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 567-573.)

Parties to action—objection as to—payment in confederate currency—executor and trustee—sureties.

1. The Act of June 1, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 198, sec. 13, applies to a suit pending when it was passed as to parties sought to be brought into the case after its passage.

2. An objection as to parties, not taken in the court below, cannot be taken here.

3. A valid payment could not be made to an agent in the Confederate States during the rebellion, in anything but lawful money of the United States, or bank-notes of the current value of their face, without the consent of the creditor.

4. An executor guilty of a devastavit and a trustee guilty of a breach of trust, are held liable upon the same principle and to the same extent.

5. Where a trust is created by a will and no trustee appointed, the executor is bound to act as such trustee. In such case the sureties in the bond of the executor are liable for his defaults, whether in one sphere of duty or the other.

[No. 780.]

Submitted Jan. 20, 1879. Decided Mar. 24, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina.

The case is fully stated by the court.

The decision of this court upon this case, as presented at a former term, is reported in 86 U. S., XXII., 178.

Messrs. Edward McCrady and Edward McCrady, Jr., for appellants:

The rule in South Carolina is, that where an executor has authority to sell, a purchaser is not bound to see to the proper application of the proceeds of sale.

Laurens v. Lucas, 6 Rich. Eq., 226.

The same rule is held by this court. Potter v. Gardner, 12 Wheat., 498.

The executors had power to sell on such terms as they deemed judicious and, having sold on credit, they had authority to receipt, in payment of the credit, part of the purchase money when paid.

More than a hundred and fifty years ago it was held by Sir Joseph Jekyll, M. R., that where one possessed of a term, devises it to A, and makes B. his executor, and leaves some debts, if the executor sells the term, the purchaser shall hold it against the devisee.

Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. Wms., 148; Court v. Jeffery, 1 Sim. & St., 105; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim., 152; Pierce v. Scott, 1 Y. & Col. Eq. (Ex.), 257; Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 652.

In the case of Charlton v. Earl of Durham, L. R., 4 Ch. App., 438 (which is a case remarkably similar to this, in many particulars), Lord Hatherly, L. C., says: "The persons with whom the executors are dealing are not bound to know the state of the testator's assets, and it may be many years before all his debts are paid and his estate wound up.

There are good reasons why the receipt of one executor should suffice, as he may be called upon to pay debts, and this rule, therefore, prevails until you can fix the debtor with much more precise notice than we have here, that the estate has been all administered."

In Lowry v. Com. & Farmers' Bank, Camp. (Taney), 332, Ch. J. Taney says: "Undoubtedly this stock, although thus specifically bequeathed, was yet liable to be sold, if necessary, for the payment of the debts of the testator, and if the bank did not know, or had no reasonable ground for supposing that the executor was misapplying the assets, it would not be responsible, notwithstanding its implied knowledge of the will."

Mr. Perry, in his work, commenting on the case of Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G., 652, says, sec. 797: "This rule thus stated proceeds upon the ground that in all cases where a testator has given his trustees a power of sale to pay debts generally, or to pay particular debts, or to pay legacies only, he has reposed a special confidence in the trustees for those purposes, and has declared that they shall execute the trusts, and that purchasers have nothing to do with its execution, and need not look to the application of the purchase money, whether it is to pay debts generally, or debts and legacies, or particular debts named, or legacies only."

"A release of a debt by one of several executors is valid and shall bind the rest. So a grant or a surrender of the term by the executor shall be equally available. So the attornment of one shall be the attornment of the other." See authorities cited. 2 William's Exrs., 310.

Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Mad. Ch., 616; Am. ed., 327, at p. 330, 331; Bogert v. Hertell, 4 Hill, 504.

The case of Charlton v. Earl of Durham (L. R., 4 Ch. App., 438), above quoted, is identical with this case in all its essential particulars.

But, says the complainant, granting that

Robertson and Blacklock were still to be regarded as executors, and that one of them could receipt for the debts due the estate, they paid but Confederate currency, which was not a lawful payment.

It will be observed that, in point of fact, no confederate currency passed between the appellant and Ball. They gave their checks to Ball for the purchase money; one of these checks was for $84,207.56, and the other for $16,000. The first was deposited by Robertson and Blacklock to their credit in the same bank. Now, suppose that Robertson and Blacklock had left their money on deposit in bank. They would then have had a credit at the end of the war in that bank to the amount of the value of the confederate currency reduced to the value of United States currency as of the date of deposit; Whaley v. Bank of Charleston, 5 Rich. (N. S.), 199, and, by the rule of computation, adopted in Mayer v. Mordecai, 1 Rich. (N. S.), 383, the $100,000 estimated in confederate currency at the time of this transaction was worth $33,333.33.

When these proceedings were commenced, it was supposed that the court would refuse to recognize or to sanction any transaction whatever which had been based on confederate currency; but in the cases of Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall., 1 (75 U. S., XIX., 361); Delmas v. U. S., 14 Wall., 661 (81 U. S., XX., 757), and Planter's Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall., 483 (83 U. S., XXI., 473), the court refused to set aside contracts made upon such a consideration.

The language of Mr. Justice Field, in the Confederate Note Case, 19 Wall., 555 (86 U. S., XXII., 199), is most appropriate to our position: "Contracts thus made, not designed to aid in insurrectionary Government, could not, therefore, without manifest injustice to the parties, be treated as invalid between them."

Hanauer v. Woodruff, 15 Wall., 448 (82 U. S., XXI., 227).

Subsequent to these cases two others have been decided, upon which the complainant greatly relies:

Horn v. Lockhart, 17 Wall., 570 (84 U. S., XXI., 657), and Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall., 198 (89 U. S., XXII., 769).

These decisions might be applicable to the liability of Robertson and Blacklock, if the complainants had them before the court, answering and admitting that they had drawn in confederate currency the checks which the appellee had given Ball, and had invested the proceeds in confederate bonds. But in the present pleadings they have made no answer, and the court is left to conjecture. But if it had been proved, so as to conclude the appellants, that Robertson and Blacklock had drawn the checks in question in confederate currency and invested in confederate bonds, the court is asked to go a step further than Horn v. Lockhart and Fretz v. Stover. It is asked to say that it would hold the purchasers from Lockhart responsible for paying him in currency he was willing to receive. It is asked to say that if Stover had sold the farm covered by the mortgage to Fretz, had produced Chilton's power of attorney from Fretz to receive payment, and Chilton's receipt and discharge of the mortgage, as such attorney in fact, that this court would not only have held Stover liable on his bond but would have also held the farm in the hands of the purchaser, still subject to the mortgage so satisfied by Fretz's attorney. We do not think that this court is prepared to go to this extent.

The distinction which we take has been declared as law in South Carolina, by a court by no means indulgent towards confederate investments: the case of Mayer v. Mordecai, 1 Rich. (S. C.), N. S., 383.

Messrs. Edward M. Shepherd, Clarence A. Seward and James Lowndes, for appellee:

I. It is a preliminary question, whether Robertson and Blacklock were, in 1863, trustees or executors. Their accounts show that they had then paid the debts and transferred the bonds to themselves as trustees. Without this act they were trustees by presumption of law on the payment of the debts.

Gray v. Brown, 1 Rich. L., 351; Lewin, Trustees, 246.

If Robertson and Blacklock were trustees, these consequences follow:

1. Robertson alone could not in equity discharge the mortgage.

Lewin, Trusts, 297; Hill, Trust., 307, 308; Mayrant v. Guignard, 3 Strob. Eq., 128; Lee v. Sankey, L. R., 15 Eq., 204.

2. The trustees had under the will no power of sale, the power being attached by the will solely to the office of the executors.

The difference is not of practical importance, for if Robertson and Blacklock were executors in 1863, what they did was not an exercise of the power of sale; because

1. Surrender of a security by the creditor to the debtor, is not a sale.

2. A sale is the transfer of the title for money. But if the transaction had been technically a sale for confederate notes, it would have been as much a breach of trust as acceptance of those notes by way of payment.

Whether they were executors or trustees, their only power was to accept payment in money.

II. The trustee, Robertson, committed a breach of trust in accepting payment of the bonds in confederate treasury notes.

There have been so many decisions on this point, that it is unnecessary to argue it on principle.

Mayer v. Mordecai, 1 S. C., 383; Creighton v. Pringle, 3 S. C., 96; Dunn v. Dunn, 1 S. C., 350; Workman v. Bolling, 2 S. C., 458; Blackwell v. Tucker, 7 S. C., 387; Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall., 207 (89 U. S., XXII., 771); Horn v. Lockhart, is a case of executors; Fretz v. Stover, of trustees.

It is clear from these authorities, that Robertson's discharge of the bond and mortgage was in breach of his trust and void in equity.

III. McBurney not only had notice that the trustee had discharged the bonds for confederate treasury notes, in breach of his trust, but furnished Ball with notes before Ball's conveyance to him, to enable Ball to get the bonds discharged. Having purchased Dean Hall, with full knowledge of the breach of trust and of the complainant's equities, he took Dean Hall subject to those equities.

The general principle of the liability of property in the hands of a purchaser, with notice of an equity, is too familiar to need argument.

It would indeed be an anomaly in equity jurisprudence to refuse to enforce this principle against a purchaser, with notice of this particular equity, while enforcing it in all other cases. Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall., 165 (82 U. S., XXI., 142).

The principal question involved in this suit is res judicata in this court. In Fretz v. Stover, supra, it was held that a lien on land was not discharged by the payment to the trustee of confederate treasury notes.

Under the principle of that decision, the bond and mortgage would be valid and subsisting against Ball.

It is perfectly plain that they are equally so as against McBurney, he being a purchaser from Ball with notice.

The cestui que trust is not bound, as argued, to go first against the trustee.

Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How., 333.

Nor, as argued, is there a question of seeing to the application of purchase money. Mrs. Carson is not seeking to charge McBurney's lands because he paid the trustee money which the latter misapplied, but because McBurney did not pay the trustee any money at all.

IV. The assignments of William and James Carson to their mother, the complainant, give her the right to bring her bill as to their shares.

Such assignments, evidently made for the benefit and support of the mother by sons, in fulfillment of their natural duty to support her, do not stand on the footing of a voluntary assignment, but should be encouraged. But voluntary assignments will be enforced in equity. Lewin, 93, 600.

The distinction is between enforcing a voluntary assignment against the assignor at the suit of the assignee, and enforcing it as between assignee and third parties.

The cases cited by the appellants all belong to the former class. The case of Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall., 184 (88 U. S., XXII., 485), has no bearing on the subject; that of The Mohawk, 8 Wall., 162 (75 U. S., XIX., 408), confirms the appellee's views of the question.

In Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 You. & C., 481 and Hill v. Boyle, L. R., 4 Eq., 260, no points were made on the consideration, but on the nature of the right assigned. In the former case, Lord Abinger distinguished between the assignment of a mere right of action and of an equitable interest; and held that the right to call one to account for a fraud was not assignable. In Hill v. Boyle, the right assigned was to bring suit against the trustees to make them account for profits made out of a trust fund. That, like the assignment in Prosser v. Edmonds, was simply the transfer of a right of action in equity. The assignment here is of an equitable title, and is not within the principles of these cases.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was before us at a former time. It will be found reported in Robertson v. Carson, 19 Wall., 94 [86 U. S., XXII., 178]. The decree of the circuit court was reversed and the cause was remanded for further proceedings. Such proceedings have been had, and it is again before us by appeal. A brief statement of the facts and of the further history of the case are necessary.

William Carson, of South Carolina, died in August, 1856, leaving a widow, Caroline, and two minor sons, William and James. He left considerable personal property, and a plantation known as Dean Hall. By his will he appointed Robertson and Blacklock his executors, and directed all his estate to be sold on such terms as they should deem proper. The proceeds, after the payment of his debts, were to be divided into three parts, to be held in trust by his executors. The interest of one third was to be paid to the widow. The interest of the other two thirds was to be devoted to the education and support of the two sons until they should come of age. The principal was then to be paid over to them.

The executors sold Dean Hall to Elias N. Ball, and took his bonds and mortgage for a part of the purchase money. In 1863, Ball sold the property to Hyatt, McBurney & Co., a firm consisting of Hyatt, McBurney, Gillespie, Hazletine and McGhan. The conveyance was made to Gillespie and McBurney. The firm paid for the property in confederate treasury notes. Out of the proceeds Ball paid his bonds to Robertson, and took them up and discharged the mortgage. Blacklock, the other executor, was then absent from the country, and upon his return refused to recognize the transaction. Hyatt sold his interest in the plantation to the other members of the firm, and Gillespie and McBurney gave him a lien upon it to secure the payment of the purchase money. When the executors sold this property to Ball, they sold to him also a considerable amount of personal property on credit, and took his bond, with W. J. Ball as surety, for the price.

As the sons of the testator came of age they transferred their entire interest in the estate of their father to their mother. She filed the bill to set aside the cancellation of the mortgage upon Dean Hall as fraudulent and void, and to charge Elias N. Ball and his surety with the amount due upon their bonds given for the personal property. The bill did not make any member of the firm of McBurney & Co. a party, except McBurney. Hyatt, it appeared, was a resident of New York, of which State the complainant was also a resident and citizen. Elias N. Ball was made a party, but was not served with process. The circuit court decreed in favor of the complainant. This court held that Hyatt was not an indispensable party, as the decree would not affect his rights; but that Ball and Gillespie were such parties. The decree was therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

After the cause was re-instated in the circuit court, the complainant filed an amended bill. In the meantime, Elias N. Ball had removed to the State of New Jersey, had there gone into bankruptcy, and Elias N. Miller had been appointed his assignee. Ball afterwards received his discharge and died. The defendants named in the bill were Robertson and Blacklock, the executors, McBurney, McGhan, Gillespie and Hazletine, being all the members of the firm of Hyatt, McBurney & Co., except Hyatt and Elias N. Miller, the assignee in bankruptcy of Ball. We hold, as we held before, that Hyatt is not an indispensable party. Hazletine could not be found. He was thereupon notified pursuant to the Act of Congress of June 1, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 198, sec. 13. It is objected that the Act could not apply to a suit pending when it was passed. It was not applied retrospectively, but only as to parties sought to be brought into the case more than a year after its passage. Such a result is consistent with its terms. There is no reason why it should not be so applied. It is a remedial statute, and should be liberally construed to accomplish the end in view. This construction is abundantly supported by well considered authorities. Southwick v. Southwick, 49 N. Y., 510; Ex parte Lane, 3 Met., 213; Holyoke v. Haskins, 9 Pick., 259; Rader v. Southeasterly Road, etc., 36 N. J. L., 273; Tilton v. Swift, 40 Iowa, 78; People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal., 114; Cooley, Const. Lim., 381.

But as we held before and still hold, that Hazletine was not an indispensable party, we forbear to pursue the subject further. He is sufficiently represented by his copartners, Gillespie and McBurney, in whom is vested the legal title of the Dean Hall property. Both of them appeared and answered. Miller, the assignee in bankruptcy of Ball and Gillespie, was ordered to appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill. Both acknowledged service of the order. This brought them effectually before the court. In McBurney's answer he insisted that Miller, as assignee, and the facts of Ball's bankruptcy, discharge and death, could be brought into the case only by a supplemental bill. The court thereupon ordered such a bill to be filed for that purpose, and it was filed accordingly. It made Miller alone a defendant. Here it has been insisted that all the other defendants to the amended bill should have been made parties to the supplemental bill also. To this objection it is a sufficient answer that it does not appear to have been taken below. It cannot, therefore, be taken here. Were we to hold otherwise, we should in this respect exercise original instead of appellate jurisdiction. There are other answers equally conclusive, but it is needless to consume time by adverting to them.

It is also objected that William Carson and James Carson, the sons of William Carson, deceased, had only a right of action, and that this right could not be transferred to the complainant. This is an inverted view of the subject. The bill charges fraud, conspiracy and spoliation. If the charge is untrue, the bill should be dismissed. If otherwise, there is a recoil upon the wrong-doers, and those intended to be despoiled are unaffected. Their rights are just what they would have been if the scheme had been neither conceived nor executed. A different result would be a legal solecism.

All the obstructions are thus removed from our way to the examination of the merits of the case.

The last amended bill is silent as to the sale of the personal property, and the decree relates only to the bonds of Ball for the purchase money of the plantation and the mortgage securing them upon that property. The decree charges upon the property the amount due on the bonds, and directs the mortgage to be enforced in all respects as if the bonds had not been surrendered and the mortgage had not been canceled. McBurney and McGhan are the only appellants. Our further remarks will be confined to the subject of the decree.

The executors sold the property to Ball in the spring of 1857 for $50,000. He paid $15,000 down, and gave his bonds for the balance, secured by a mortgage upon the premises, as before stated. The property was valuable, and the amount due was well secured. The debt was payable only in lawful money of the United States, and the executors had no right to take anything in payment but such money or its equivalent. Such was the condition of things in the spring of the year 1863.

The civil war was then flagrant in South Carolina. McBurney says that, having a large quantity of cotton on hand and the city being blockaded, his firm "were willing to change some of their investments into real estate until peace should be restored." This was shrewd and wise. The sole currency there was confederate money. The Dean Hall property lay invitingly before them, but was incumbered by a heavy mortgage for the benefit of the widow and the orphans. The plan was conceived of acquiring the title and getting rid of the mortgage, both by means of confederate currency. They thus executed it: they gave Ball $100,000 in confederate notes for the property, and took a conveyance from him. They placed a part of the confederate money in his hands, as McBurney says, "to enable him to pay off his bonds to said executors and to satisfy said mortgage." Robertson received payment in this paper and thereupon gave up the bonds, and as soon as he could get access to the record entered satisfaction of the mortgage. He invested the notes in confederate bonds which became utterly worthless at the close of the war.

McBurney & Co. and the Carsons thus changed places. The former still hold the broad acres, while the latter have lost every dollar of their investment, so well secured at the outset, upon the property. They became, as it were, the insurers of the fate of battles and of the result of war. There was evidently a plot. McBurney & Co. were its contrivers, Ball was their instrument, Robertson was their dupe, and the Carsons were the victims.

If the case stopped here we could not hesitate as to what our judgment should be. But in its strictly legal aspect it is equally free from doubt.

In Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall., 451 [74 U. S., XIX., 209], this court held that a valid payment could not be made to an agent in the Confederate States during the rebellion in anything but lawful money of the United States or banknotes of the current value of their face, without the consent of the creditor.

In Horn v. Lockhart, 17 Wall., 570 [84 U. S., XXI., 657], an executor had sold property, invested the proceeds in confederate bonds, and his conduct had been approved and ratified by a decree of the probate court. It was held by this court that the investment was void, that the decree of the probate court was a nullity, and that the executor was liable to the distributees in good money for the full amount involved.

Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall., 198 [89 U. S., XXII., 769], in its most prominent features is not unlike the case before us. There, a citizen of Pennsylvania, just before the breaking out of the war, took the bond of a citizen of Virginia, secured by a deed of trust upon real estate. The attorney of the creditor was the trustee in the deed. During the war the attorney received payment in confederate notes, and Virginia banknotes of no greater value, the entire capital of the bank having been converted into confederate bonds. After the close of the war the creditor sued for his debt. This court adjudged that the transaction between the attorney and the debtor was illegal, fraudulent and void, and decreed the enforcement of the bond and deed of trust.

The question has been raised whether Robertson acted, touching the bonds and mortgage of Ball, as executor or trustee. The matter is immaterial in this case. An executor guilty of a devastavit, whereby assets are diverted from their proper application, and a trustee guilty of a breach of trust, and their accomplices, if they have any, are held liable upon the same principle and to the same extent. Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch., 150; Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves., 152.

There can, however, be no doubt upon the point suggested. "Where the will contains express directions what the executors are to do, an executor who proves the will must do all which he is directed to do as executor, and he cannot say that though executor he is not clothed with any of those trusts." 3 Wms. Exrs., 1796.

Proving the will is an acceptance of the trust. Mucklow v. Fuller, Jacob, 198. Where a trust is created by a will and no trustee appointed, "the executor is bound to act as such trustee." Holbrook v. Harrington, 16 Gray, 102. In such case the sureties in the bond of the executor are liable for his defaults, whether in one sphere of duty or the other. Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Met. (Mass.), 525; Prior v. Talbot, 10 Cush., 1; Dorr v. Wainwright, 13 Pick., 328; Towne v. Ammidown, 20 Pick., 535.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

THE EASTERN TRANSPORTATION LINE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

HOBART COOPER, as Admr., etc.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 78, 79).

Passenger barge.

A canal-boat laden with coal for transportation, having on board the wife and children of the captain, is not "a barge carrying passengers," within the meaning of sec. 4492, Rev. Stat., which requires such a barge, while in tow of a steamer, to be provided with "fire-buckets, axes, life-preservers and yawls."

[No. 1089.]

Submitted Mar. 31, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

On motions to dismiss and to affirm.

Judgment was obtained in the court below by the defendant in error, for the loss of the life of Mary Ann Cooper, his wife, caused by a certain collision. The collision occurred off the Battery in the Port of New York, while the plaintiff with his wife and daughters were upon a canal-boat, of which plaintiff was captain, and which was there in tow of a steam-tug. The plaintiff in error now claims that the canal-boat was, under such circumstances, "a barge carrying passengers," and was, therefore, in fault in not being supplied with the life-saving apparatus required of such barges by Act of Congress.

Messrs. Childs & Hull, and William Stanley, for defendant in error.

Messrs. Benedict, Taft and R. D. Benedict, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite announced the judgment of the court:

The only federal question presented in this case is one upon which we are not inclined to hear an argument. A canal-boat laden with coal for transportation, having on board the wife and children of the captain, is not "a barge carrying passengers," within the meaning of section 4492, Revised Statutes, which requires such a barge, while in tow of a steamer, to be provided with "fire-buckets, axes, life-preservers and yawls." The motion to dismiss is denied, but that to affirm is granted.

Judgment affirmed.

MARY C. GORDON, wife of WILLIAM ALEXANDER GORDON, Appl.,

v.

JAMES H. GILFOIL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 168-179.)

Mortgage debt—Louisiana law—setting aside proceedings—prescription—action—heir.

1. If seizure and sale of mortgaged property do not result in full satisfaction of the debt, suit may be brought on the primary security in order to recover the balance.

2. In Louisiana, an order for seizure and sale, served on the debtor, is a judicial demand, the same as an ordinary suit; and it continues in operation as such until it has been rendered effective by a valid sale.

3. The setting aside of the sale for irregularity does not affect the order of seizure and sale; but a new writ may issue upon it.

4. Proceedings on an order of seizure and sale interrupt the prescription of the personal action for the same debt.

5. Although proceedings in the order of seizure and sale were pending in the state court, the debt could be prosecuted in the Circuit Court of the United States. The pendency of a suit in a state court is no ground even for a plea in abatement to a suit upon the same matter in a Federal Court.

6. Under the Louisiana Code, an heir by taking possession of his father's undivided half of the mortgaged property, did not make himself liable for the mortgage debt.

[No. 1050.]

Submitted Jan. 6, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Henry B. Kelley, Henry L. Lazarus and W. Alex. Gordon, for appellant.
Mr. Samuel R. Walker, for appellee.

NOTE.—Plea of another suit pending in abatement; when good. See note to Cook v. Burnley, 78 U. S., XX., 29.

See 9 OTTO.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

In January, 1867, Patrick Gilfoil, of Madison Parish, La., being indebted to Gordon & Castillo, of New Orleans, in the sum of $4,500, or thereabouts, gave them his promissory notes therefor, payable on the 1st of January, 1868, and 1st of January, 1869, secured by a mortgage on his cotton plantation in the Parish of Madison. The property was in fact community property, and Gilfoil's wife had died the year preceding this transaction, leaving a minor son, James H. Gilfoil, as her only heir at law. The notes not being paid, Mary Cartwright Gordon, the holder thereof, in February, 1869, filed a petition in the District Court for the Parish of Madison for an order of seizure and sale of the mortgaged premises, and executory process was issued accordingly, and on the 3d of July, 1869, the sheriff sold the property to Mrs. Gordon for the sum of $600, and executed to her a deed thereof; but no possession was delivered.

In January, 1872, Mrs. Gordon instituted a suit in the District Court of the Parish against Patrick Gilfoil, to recover the land, and the rent thereof from the time of the sheriff's sale. This suit was known as No. 772.

To the petition in this suit Patrick Gilfoil filed an answer containing a general denial, and specially denying that the plaintiff had any good and valid title. By a supplemental answer, he particularized the cause of nullity of plaintiff's title to be, that the executory proceeding was in every respect illegal; that no service of notice of the order of seizure and sale, nor any notice of seizure, nor any appraisal, was legally made, nor any of the forms of law observed by the sheriff in making the sale; and that no due and valid advertisement was made.

Patrick Gilfoil died October 2, 1872. Before his death, in May, 1872, his son, James H. Gilfoil, by petition intervened in the suit, claiming that the property was community property, and that he was the legal owner of one undivided half thereof by inheritance from his deceased mother; and praying judgment accordingly.

In April, 1874, Mrs. Gordon filed an amended and supplemental petition, alleging the death of Patrick Gilfoil, and that James H. Gilfoil had possessed himself of the property, claiming to be the legitimate heir of Patrick, and refused to deliver possession thereof. Wherefore the petitioner prayed that James H. Gilfoil be made a party to the suit; and that petitioner recover of him judgment as prayed for in her original petition, and the rents since the death of Patrick Gilfoil; and for general relief. She also filed an answer to James H. Gilfoil's petition of intervention.

James H. Gilfoil filed an answer to the supplemental petition, as well as to the original petition, denying all the allegations thereof, and specially denying any legal sale of the land. By a further answer he pleaded prescription of three and five years, and prescription generally; alleging that the debt was prescribed when Patrick Gilfoil acknowledged it.

The case having gone to trial in November, 1874, the district court decided in favor of the plaintiff, Mrs. Gordon, as to one half of the property, and as to the other half, decided in favor of the defendant; but on appeal to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was reversed, the court deciding that the sale by the sheriff under the executory process was void, because the sheriff at no time had the mortgaged property in his possession. They held that an actual corporal possession of property seized must take place in order to make a sheriff's sale valid, and to render a compliance with the law complete; that the sheriff must have the property in his own possession and under his own control, or in the possession and under the control of some person duly authorized by him. The judgment in favor of the defendant was affirmed, and judgment was given in his favor generally. The case is reported in 27 La. Ann., 265.

This judgment of the Supreme Court was rendered March 8, 1875.

Thereupon, on the 19th of October, 1876, the present suit was commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States, against James H. Gilfoil, charging him on the notes, as universal heir of Patrick Gilfoil, and praying judgment for the amount of the debt, with mortgage lien and privilege out of the mortgaged premises.

The defendant pleaded as follows: "1. That the said petition discloses no cause of action against this respondent. 2. That this court is without jurisdiction, for the reason that said plaintiff, having elected to sue in the court of the State of Louisiana, the 13th district court, in and for the Parish of Madison, and jurisdiction of this cause has already vested in the said state court. 3. That the obligations sued on are prescribed by the lapse of more than five years."

The court, upon argument, ordered that the plea of prescription be referred to the merits, and that the plaintiff be allowed to amend her petition, by setting up the facts upon which she relied to interrupt prescription.

This she did by setting up the order of seizure and sale; and she claimed that James H. Gilfoil was liable for the debt, because he, as heir of Patrick Gilfoil, took possession of his estate and property.

The defendant filed an answer, denying the supplemental petition generally, denying the plaintiff's ownership of the notes, and setting up the order of seizure and sale as a merger of the original debt; and further, that as said proceedings had never been discontinued, the circuit court was without jurisdiction.

By a supplemental and amended answer he set up his ownership in one undivided half of the mortgaged property as heir of his mother; and as to the other half he averred that, as administrator and sole beneficiary heir of his father (Patrick Gilfoil), he became possessor thereof as belonging to his father's succession; but denied that he had taken such possession as would make him liable personally for any debt or mortgage claim against the property, or for any of the rents and revenues thereof. He again set up the order of seizure and sale as a merger of the debt; and averred that the said executory proceedings were still pending in the district court. He also set up and annexed to his answer the proceedings and judgment in the suit No. 772, by virtue of which he insisted that the matters in controversy in this suit had become res judicata; and the cause came on for trial upon the issues thus presented by the pleadings.

The proceedings on the order of seizure and sale, and in the suit No. 772 in the district court and in the Supreme Court of Louisiana, as also the mortgage and sheriff's deed, were either admitted or proved. Certain evidence taken in the latter case, and certified with the other proceedings, was also admitted by stipulation of the parties. This was all the evidence adduced at the trial in the circuit court.

The evidence admitted by stipulation was to the effect, amongst other things, that James H. Gilfoil resided with his father on the property in question at the time of the latter's death, and still resided there in November, 1874, and had possession of the said property; that Patrick Gilfoil died October 2, 1872; that Catharine, his wife, died April 13, 1866, that the defendant was her son and only heir; that he was fifteen years of age in 1867; but that he was emancipated before his intervention was filed in the suit No. 772 (being a minor).

The circuit court gave judgment for the defendant, but on what ground does not appear. The ground taken in this court by the appellee in support of the judgment is, first, the point of res judicata; and, second, the prescription of five years. The appellant attempts to controvert these grounds of defense by showing, as to the first, that the question presented in the present suit is not the same question which was decided between the parties in the suit No. 772, and that the order of seizure and sale is no merger of the original debt; as to the second, that the alleged prescription was interrupted and suspended by the order of seizure and sale, and the subsequent proceedings in reference thereto.

The first matter to be considered, therefore, is, whether the question endeavored to be raised in this suit was or was not passed upon or necessarily involved in suit No. 772.

The object of the present suit is to charge the defendant, as universal heir of his father, Patrick Gilfoil, with the entire debt, on the ground that the defendant as such heir possessed himself of his father's interest in the plantation. Was this question passed upon or necessarily involved in suit No. 772? From the recital of the pleadings in that case it is apparent that the primary and main object was to maintain the plaintiff's title to, and to recover, the land itself under the sheriff's sale, made by virtue of executory process in 1869. The defense of Patrick Gilfoil, prior to his death, was that the sale was absolutely void by reason of non-compliance with the forms of law required in such cases. The defense of James H. Gilfoil, as intervener, was, as to one undivided half of the land, that it belonged to his mother by right of community, and was inherited by him from her; and as to the other undivided half, that the sheriff's sale was void for want of possession, and that the debt for which it was sold was prescribed. The decision of the Supreme Court was with the defendant on both points, namely: first, that the defendant was owner of one undivided half of the land by virtue of his inheritance from his mother, who was decreed to have been the undivided half owner or partner in community with her husband; secondly, that the sheriff's sale was void for want of actual service and possession. From all that appears by the record, there was no adjudication on the question of defendant's liability as arising from his taking and keeping possession of one undivided half of the property as heir of his father, unless such adjudication is to be implied from the pleadings. A more particular examination of these is necessary to determine this matter.

The original petition simply claimed ownership of the property, alleged that Patrick Gilfoil was in unlawful possession of it as a trespasser, and prayed that the petitioner's title might be recognized, that she might have judgment for the property, and a judgment against Patrick Gilfoil for the rents and revenues. It was almost the exact equivalent of the common law action of ejectment, or rather of a real action involving the question of title only.

After the intervention of James H. Gilfoil, and the death of Patrick, the plaintiff answered the intervenor's claim by denying that he was the legal heir either of Patrick or his wife, and denying any right of community in the latter, alleging that the property was the separate property of Patrick; but if there was any community, alleging that the debt for which the property was sold was a community debt, and as such the property was liable for it, and was properly and legally sold to pay the same.

And by her supplementary petition against James, the plaintiff alleged that he was then in possession of the property, and claimed to be the legitimate heir of Patrick, and refused to deliver the possession; and that if Patrick left any succession at his death, it was taken possession of by James without any process of law, and used for his own purposes, whereby he became an intermeddler; thereby rendering himself liable for all the debts of the succession, and especially personally bound for the rents and revenues of the property in question from the date of the unlawful possession thereof by Patrick. But the prayer was only that the petitioner might recover, of James, judgment as prayed for in the original petition, and the rents and revenues since the death of Patrick. The petition contained no prayer for a personal judgment against him; and the debt itself was not set up as a ground of claim or action, in either the original or supplemental petition.

It seems plain, therefore, that the character of the suit was consistently maintained throughout as a petitory suit for the property, and for an account of its rents and revenues. No judgment was sought by the plaintiff against the defendant for the debt. His supposed liability for the debts of the succession, on account of possessing himself thereof without any process of law, was only stated incidentally, by way of rebutting his pretension of being other than a mere trespasser on the property. His liability for the debt was not put in issue by the pleadings, and was not considered by the court. The question of the title alone was the burden of the action, and was all that was decided in the judgment.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the plea of res judicata is not maintained.

We are also of opinion that the order of seizure and sale effected no merger of the debt. That order was made upon the act of mortgage as an authentic instrument importing confession of judgment. Code of Pr., arts. 732, etc. The order was a mere award of executory process, and did not affect in the slightest degree the nature or dignity of the primary securities for the debt. If seizure and sale of mortgaged property do not result in full satisfaction of the debt, suit has to be brought on the primary security in order to recover the balance. Harrod v. Voorhies, 16 La., 254; Humphries v. Brown, 19 La. Ann., 158.

The next question is, whether the plea of prescription has been sustained in this case. Five years is the regular time of prescription against bills of exchange and promissory notes payable to order or bearer. Civ. Code, art. 3540. And this prescription runs against minors and interdicted persons. Art. 3541. The last of the notes upon which the defendant is sought to be made liable matured on the 1st of January, 1869. The claim, therefore, became prescribed on the 1st of January, 1874, unless the prescription was interrupted by some lawful cause. A legal interruption takes place by a judicial demand made upon the debtor. The plaintiff alleges that prescription in this case was interrupted by service of notice of the order of seizure and sale upon Patrick Gilfoil, on the 25th day of March, 1869, and that such interruption continued at least until the death of Patrick Gilfoil, October 2, 1872, because the plaintiff could at any time, after the writ had expired, or after the sale under it had been set aside, issue an alias writ without a new order. The plaintiff contends, in other words, that an order for seizure and sale, served on the debtor, is a judicial demand, the same as an ordinary suit; and that it continues in operation as such until it has been rendered effective by a valid sale. This position seems to be sustained by several decisions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana. Stanborough v. McCall, 4 La. Ann., 322; Fortier v. Zimpel, 6 La. Ann., 53; Rhea v. Taylor, 8 La. Ann., 23; Walker v. Lee, 20 La. Ann., 192; D'Ile Roupe v. Carradin, 20 La. Ann., 244; Hebert v. Chastant, 22 La. Ann., 152; Williams v. Douglass, 23 La. Ann., 687. In D'Ile Roupe v. Carradin, the note matured in January, 1858, and an order of seizure and sale was made and served in June, 1858, a writ was issued and a levy was made, but no sale took place. In 1867, nine years afterwards, a new writ was issued, on which an injunction was obtained on two grounds: first, a claim of homestead; second, prescription. Both of these grounds were overruled. As to the latter, the court say: "The plea of prescription cannot avail; it was interrupted by the order of seizure and sale, duly notified to the plaintiff, as we have recently decided in Walker v. Lee."

Numerous authorities also show that the setting aside of a sale for irregularity does not affect the order of seizure and sale, but a new writ may issue upon it. In Bk. v. Dixey, 21 La. Ann., 32, the court say: "This is an appeal from an order of seizure and sale. It is well settled that on such an appeal the only question is, whether there was before the judge a quo sufficient evidence to authorize the fiat. The order cannot be set aside on appeal, on account of subsequent irregularities in the execution of it, as by not notifying the proper parties or otherwise. Dodd v. Crain, 6 Rob. (La.), 60." In Fortier v. Zimpel, 6 La. Ann., 54, there were three successive writs issued upon the same order. The first was stayed by the plaintiff, and an alias issued. This was annulled, on the ground of being issued for too large a sum. Plaintiff, considering the original petition still in court, then applied for a pluries writ, which was granted. A sale made under this writ, though strenuously contested, was homologated and confirmed. In Riddell v. Ebinger, 6 La. Ann., 407, the sale was sought to be annulled. The court, amongst other things, say: "The writ under which the sale was made was an alias, and it is contended that the order of seizure was a judgment only so far as the original writ was concerned; that it expired when the writ was returned, and that no other writ could issue without a new order of court. This objection has so often been held unfounded by our predecessors and ourselves, that we deem it unnecessary to do more than to refer to some of the cases in point." The court then refers to Ursuline Nuns v. Depassau, 7 Mart. (N. S.), 646; Mader v. Fox, 15 La., 132; Harrod v. Voorhies, 16 La., 254; Portier v. Zimpel, 6 La. Ann., 53. In Stanborough v. McCall, 4 La. Ann., 327, the court explain the reason why proceedings on an order of seizure and sale interrupt the prescription of the personal action for the same debt. They say: "The rule harmonizes with the theory of prescription, which has its basis in the presumption of renunciation on the part of him who neglects his rights, and which presumption cannot be entertained against a party who is struggling to collect a debt, and is not sui juris contemptor. The interruption, then, created by the institution of one species of action must also be considered as continuous, and as preserving the personal action while the hypothecary action is in course of prosecution.

These cases, with others that might be cited, seem fully to establish the position of the plaintiff, and we think that the position is clearly applicable to the present case. In 1869, soon after the debt became due, the plaintiff filed her petition for an order of seizure and sale. The order was granted and served on the debtor, then in possession of the mortgaged premises, and the property was sold. From that time to the debtor's death in October, 1872, and afterwards, until judgment was given against her in March, 1875, she was engaged in a continuous struggle in the courts to obtain the fruits of that order and sale. The sale was held to be void by the irregular proceedings of the sheriff; and according to the decisions of the state courts, her petition and the order made thereon were still in force and, if she pleased, she could have applied for the issue of another writ thereon. It may be that it would have been necessary to have the petition and order amended; but that would not disaffirm the pendency of the proceedings or the jurisdiction of the court.

We think, therefore, that the proceeding for seizure and sale interrupted the prescription of the personal action on the notes; and that this interruption continued up to the time when the final judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana was rendered against the plaintiff. The present action was commenced about a year and a half afterwards; and, therefore, in our judgment, the plea of prescription must fail.

It may be proper here also to observe, although the point was not pressed in the argument, that the exception to the jurisdiction of the circuit court is destitute of foundation. The suggestion was, that, as the proceedings in the order of seizure and sale were still pending in the district court, the debt could not be prosecuted in the Circuit Court of the United States. But it has been frequently held that the pendency of a suit in a state court is no ground even for a plea in abatement to a suit upon the same matter in a Federal Court. What effect the bringing of this suit, via ordinaria, may have had on the order of seizure and sale, it is not necessary to determine. It is possible that it superseded it. But the pendency of that proceeding, when the suit was commenced, cannot affect the validity of the proceedings in this suit, nor the jurisdiction of the court in respect thereof.

The only remaining question is, whether the defendant has rendered himself liable for the notes by taking possession of the plantation and receiving to his own use the rents and revenues thereof. At the time of his father's death the defendant was only nineteen, or, at most, twenty years of age. Article 977 of the Civil Code declares that "It shall not be necessary for minor heirs to make any formal acceptance of a succession that may fall to them; but such acceptance shall be considered as made for them with benefit of inventory by operation of law, and shall in all respects have the force and effect of a formal acceptance." Heirs having the benefit of inventory are called beneficial heirs, and are not personally liable for the debts of the succession. This shows that the defendant, though he took possession of his father's property, did not thereby make himself personally liable for the notes in suit, unless the fact that he was emancipated before his father's death, and while yet a minor, renders him so liable. Article 370 of the Code declares that "The minor who is emancipated has the full administration of his estate, and may pass all acts which are confined to such administration, grant leases, receive his revenues and moneys which may be due him, and give receipts for the same." But article 371 adds, that "He cannot bind himself legally by promise or obligation for any sum exceeding the amount of one year of his revenue." The position of the plaintiff is, that the defendant, by taking possession of his father's undivided half of the mortgaged property, made himself liable for the whole debt in suit. It seems to us that this would be in contravention of the spirit, if not the letter, of articles 371 and 977 of the Code.

Besides, the defendant was owner of one undivided half of the property as heir of his mother; and he could not possess himself of his own property without, at the same time, possessing himself of the other half. Under these circumstances, considering his status as a minor at the time of his father's death, the sort of possession which he assumed ought not to be turned to his disadvantage as any evidence of an intention to accept his father's succession as universal heir.

The conclusion to which we have come is, that the plaintiff cannot have any personal decree against the defendant for the amount of the debt; but that he is entitled to a decree for the foreclosure and sale of one undivided half part of the plantation covered by the mortgage.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to render a decree in accordance with this opinion. Each party should be decreed to pay his and her own costs, both in this court and in the Circuit Court.

THE NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY,

Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE PEOPLE, ex rel. HENRY B. MILLER, COUNTY TREASURER, COOK COUNTY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 309-325.)

Illinois University—exemption from taxation.

*An Act of the Illinois Legislature passed in 1855, declared that all the property of the Northwestern University should be forever free from taxation of all kinds. A subsequent statute of 1872, conforming taxation to the new Constitution of 1870, limited this exemption to land and other property in immediate use by the school, as it was construed by the assessors and by the Supreme Court of the State. Held, 1. That the latter Act impaired the obligation of the contract of exemption found in the Act of 1855. 2. That whether the Act of 1855 was a valid contract, or was void by reason of conflict with the State Constitution under which it was made, is a question on which this court can review the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State. 3. That lots and lands, and other property of the university, the annual profits of which, by way of rent or otherwise, are devoted to the object of the institution as a school, could, within the meaning of the Constitution of 1848, be exempt from taxation by the Legislature, and the power of exemption was not limited to real estate occupied or in immediate use by the University.

[No. 184.]

Argued Mar. 26, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois.

The case arose in the County Court of Cook County, Illinois, upon the application of the relator, Miller, for judgment for certain taxes. Judgment having been given, and affirmed upon appeal by the Supreme Court of the State, the plaintiff in error sued out this writ.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Matt. H. Carpenter (on question of jurisdiction) and Wirt Dexter, for plaintiff in error:

Where the plaintiff relies upon certain facts as constituting a contract, but the court below, dealing only with general principles of law, holds the supposed contract, no contract—as, for instance, holds the attempted contract void as against public policy—this court acquires no jurisdiction, even though this court may think the contract valid which the court below thinks void. In other words, this court acquires no jurisdiction based upon its differing from the court below in opinion as to the validity of a supposed contract depending upon general principles of law applicable to a conceded state of facts. To this effect are the cases:

Railroad Co. v. Rock, 4 Wall., 177 (71 U. S., XVIII., 381); Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall., 379 (79 U. S., XX., 414).

But it is equally well settled that where it is claimed in a state court that an Act of the State Legislature, under which one party is proceeding, is void, as impairing the obligations of a contract contained in a former Act of the same Legislature and the decision of the state court is in favor of the subsequent Act, upon the ground that the former Act did not create a contract, this court has jurisdiction.

* Head note by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Exemption from taxation, whether a contract or not; not implied. See note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S., XXII., 805.

See 9 OTTO.

Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436 (66 U. S., XVII., 173); Bridge Proprs. v. Hoboken Company, 1 Wall., 116 (68 U. S., XVII., 571).

This is an exception to the general rule upon the subject, and this case falls within the exception.

A general law may impair the obligation of a contract, as well as a special law aimed directly at the contract.

Bank v. Skelly (supra); Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall., 431 (75 U. S., XIX., 495); Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall., 439 (75 U. S., XIX., 498); Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall., 50 (76 U. S., XIX., 594).

A general law to the extent that it is unconstitutional, is void, although other and distinct provisions of the law may be valid.

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 316.

It is enough, if it appear from the whole record, that a federal question was involved in the decision of the state court.

Bridge Proprs. v. Hoboken Co. (supra).

Even the opinion may be referred to, to show whether a federal question was involved.

Moore v. Mississippi, 21 Wall., 639 (88 U. S., XXII., 654); Bolling v. Lersner, 91 U. S., 594 (XXIII., 366).

The Constitution conferred discretion upon the Legislature to exempt such property as they might deem necessary for school purposes, and their judgment exercised in making the exemption under consideration, is conclusive and cannot be reviewed by the courts.

A State Constitution, being a limitation upon the legislative power, is to be construed liberally.

Cooley, Const. Lim., 173; Commonwealth v. Hartman, 17 Pa., 119; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128.

The court (Marshall, Ch. J.) says:

"The opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other."

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 270; Twitichell v. Blodgett, 13 Mich., 162.

In Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, 31, an Act of Congress of 1795, provided that "Whenever the United States shall be invaded or be in imminent danger of invasion, etc., it shall be lawful for the President, etc., to call forth such number of the militia, etc., as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion."

This court held, that his decision was conclusive.

Mosier v. Hilton, 15 Barb., 657; State v. Co. Ct. of Boone Co., 50 Mo., 817; Bridge and Turnpike Co. v. Norfolk Co., 6 Allen, 353; Carpenter v. Montgomery, 7 Blackf., 415; Franklin v. State Bd. of Exam., 23 Cal., 173.

It is admitted that the income of the property is applied, and the property itself is held, solely for the educational purposes of the institution. The explicit language of the charter prevents its diversion to any other purpose, under the penalty of forfeiture of the charter itself. If, under the power granted by the charter, this property is leased, the income must go to the support of the institution; if it is sold, the proceeds must be applied to the same purpose. No private individual has derived or can derive, any personal benefit from the property thus exempted.

The words "school purposes" have no technical or special meaning; they are common and familiar words whose meaning cannot be made clearer than it is by definition. Property thus held, and irrevocably devoted to the purposes of this institution, as defined by its charter, is for school purposes.

Messrs. James K. Edsall, George O. Ide, C. H. Willett, J. M. Rountree and C. F. Peck, for defendants in error:

This court will not entertain jurisdiction of a case from a state court merely because the judgment of that court impairs or fails to give effect to a contract.

R. R. Co. v. Rock, 4 Wall., 177 (71 U. S., XVIII., 381); Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall., 379 (79 U. S., XX., 414); R. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall., 511 (77 U. S., XIX., 997).

The federal question if any exists, must be disclosed by the record and proceedings as sent here from the state court, otherwise jurisdiction will not be entertained.

Warfield v. Chaffe, 91 U. S., 690 (XXIII., 383); Moore v. Mississippi, 21 Wall., 636 (88 U. S., XXII., 653); Smith v. Adst, 23 Wall., 368 (90 U. S., XXIII., 114); Parmelee v. Lawrence, 11 Wall., 36 (78 U. S., XX., 48); Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S., 432 (XXIV., 760); Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall., 590 (87 U. S., XXII., 429).

The state court correctly held that, under the Constitution of 1848, the General Assembly could not exempt from taxation the property of colleges not necessary for "school purposes."

Constitution of Ill. of 1848, art. IX., sec. 2; Rev. Stat. of Ill. (of 1874), p. 52.

As to educational, religious and charitable corporations, the courts of the State have uniformly held that the power was confined to such property as was used directly for the purposes for which the corporations were created, and did not extend to property leased for other purposes or held for profit merely, although the rents and profits were applied to the proper purposes of the corporation.

N. W. University v. People, 80 Ill., 333; Baptist Theo. Union v. People (see MS. copy of opinion on file); First M. E. Church v. Chicago, 26 Ill., 482; Ill. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Irvin, 72 Ill., 452.

In these rulings the Supreme Court of Illinois has followed the general current of authority upon analogous questions.

Pierce v. Inhabitants of Cambridge, 2 Cush., 611; Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110; Washburn's College v. Comrs. of Shawnee Co., 8 Kan., 344-348; Kendrick v. Farguham, 8 Ohio, 197; Orr v. Baker, 4 Ind., 86; Trustees M. E. Church v. Ellis, 38 Ind., 3; State v. Newark, 2 Dutch., 519; State v. Flavell, 4 Zab., 370; State v. Comr's Mansfield, 3 Zab., 510; Railroad v. Berks Co., 6 Pa., 70; Wyman v. St. Louis, 17 Mo., 335; Proprietors, etc., v. Lovell, 1 Met., 538.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Illinois, bringing before us a judgment of that court, deciding that certain property of the plaintiff was liable to taxation, which was resisted, on the ground that it was exempt by a legislative contract.

The University was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, approved January 28, 1851, which contained the powers necessary to its usefulness as an institution of learning, and, among other provisions, authorized it to purchase and hold real estate to the extent of two thousand acres of land, and receive gifts and devises of land above that amount, which must be sold within ten years. In 1855, the Legislature, by an amendment to this charter, appointed three additional trustees, and enlarged its powers, in some respects not very important. But the 4th section of that Act is the one supposed to contain the contract on which this case must be decided. It was this: "That all property, of whatever kind or description, belonging to or owned by said corporation, shall be forever free from taxation for any and all purposes."

The State Constitution of 1848, in force when the charter and amended charter above cited were enacted, declares that "The property of the State and counties, both real and personal, and such other property as the General Assembly may deem necessary for school, religious and charitable purposes, may be exempt from taxation."

The record shows a very large list of lots and lands in Cook County which the plaintiff asserted to be free from taxation under this law, but which were listed for taxes of the year 1874, and about to be sold for their non-payment. By proper judicial proceedings the question arose before the Supreme Court of the State, which held that they were liable to be so taxed.

A motion was made, some time before the case was reached for argument in this court, to dismiss it for want of jurisdiction, and was overruled; but the Attorney-General of Illinois renews the objection now in connection with the main argument.

This question of jurisdiction to review the judgments of state courts is so frequent, and the principles which govern it so well settled, that we need not be very elaborate in our opinion on that point. The argument is that the judgment of the state court is limited to a construction of the 4th clause of the amendatory charter of 1855, as it is affected by the Constitution under which it was enacted, and that whether that statute was a contract or not, or whether it was properly construed or not it is still but the decision of a court construing a contract or a statute, and there is no law of the State impairing the obligation of that contract, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

If this were true in point of fact, the conclusion would be sound, as we have repeatedly held in this court. R. R. Co. v. Rock, 4 Wall., 177 [71 U. S., XVIII., 381]; R. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall., 511 [77 U. S., XIX., 997]; Knox v. Bk. 12 Wall., 379 [79 U. S., XX., 414].

But the premises assumed are not justified by the facts. The general Revenue Law of Illinois, prior to the Amendment of 1855 to plaintiff's charter, contained nothing which exempted its property from taxation. When that Act was passed, it became a part of the law of the State governing taxation as applicable to the property of the University. The law remained in this condition until the State adopted a new Constitution, in 1870, the part of which relating to this subject is in these words:

"The property of the State, counties and other municipal corporations, both real and personal, and such other property as may be used exclusively for agricultural and horticultural societies, for school, religious, cemetery and charitable purposes, may be exempted from taxation; but such exemption shall be only by general law."

In order to conform the law of the State on the subject of taxation to this provision of the new Constitution, the Legislature revised its revenue laws in 1872, and in this statute the exemption established was:

"First. All lands donated by the United States for school purposes, not sold or leased. All public schoolhouses. All property of institutions of learning, including the real estate on which the institutions are located, not leased by such institutions or otherwise used with a view to profit.

Second. All church property actually and exclusively used for public worship, when the land (to be of reasonable size for the location of the church building) is owned by the congregation."

It was under this law the local officers proceeded in assessing plaintiff's land for taxation, and it was their construction of the law which was sustained by the Supreme Court. If, therefore, the legislation of 1855 was a contract which exempted the property in question from taxation, and by the Law of 1872, as construed by the Supreme Court, it is held liable to taxation, it is manifest that it is the Law of 1872 and the Constitution of 1870 which impairs the obligation of that contract, however the court, by an erroneous construction of that contract, may be led to hold otherwise. It is strenuously insisted that these provisions of the Constitution of 1870 and the Revenue Law of 1872 do not repeal the exemption as established by the 4th section of the amended charter of 1855, because that section was in excess of the authority conferred by the Constitution of 1848. But this depends on the construction of that contract as affected by the Constitution under which it was enacted. If, by virtue of that Constitution, the Legislature of that day could only exempt plaintiff's real estate so far as it was in immediate use for school purposes, as was held by the Supreme Court, then it may not repeal that statute or impair that contract, for the exemption will probably amount to the same thing under either statute. But if it is a contract, as is contended for by plaintiff's counsel, which, under a true construction of the Constitution of 1848, exempts all the property of plaintiff which is held by it for appropriation to the purposes of the University as a school, as an institution for teaching, and which is held for no other purpose whatever, and which can as effectually promote the purpose by leases, of which the rent goes to support the school, as in any other way, then the Law of 1872 and the Constitution of 1870 do, to the extent of the difference arising from these two constructions, impair the obligation of the contract of 1855.

Whether that contract is such as to be impaired by these later laws is one of the questions of which this court always has jurisdiction. See 9 Otto.

U. S., Book 25.

tion. Bk. v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436 [66 U. S., XVII., 173]; Bridge Props. v. Hoboken Co., 1 Wall., 144 [68 U. S., XVII., 576]; Delmas v. Ins. Co., 14 Wall., 668 [81 U. S., XX., 759].

The Supreme Court of Illinois, in its opinion found in the record, appears to concede that the Act of 1855, to the extent that it was authorized by the State Constitution, was a contract.

"It is not claimed," says the court, "that appellant is in any sense a public corporation; but it is claimed that the purpose for which it is created is so far beneficial to the public that it affords a sufficient consideration for the grant of exemption from taxation in the amendment, and that when the amendment was accepted and acted on by the corporation it must be held a vested right which cannot be withdrawn by subsequent legislation, because of the provision of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits a State from passing a law impairing the obligation of a contract. If it was competent for the General Assembly to make the exemption, we are not disposed to contest the correctness of their position; but if it was not competent to make the exemption, the attempt was a nullity, and the case is not affected by the Constitution of the United States."

The court thus concedes that there was a contract so far as the legislative power extended.

It is possible, if that question had been fully investigated, and all the facts necessary to decide it were before the court, it might not appear that all the lands subjected to taxation by the judgment of the Supreme Court were bought after the date of the amended charter, or donated on the faith of that exemption.

But it does appear, by a stipulation made for that purpose, that since the granting of said amended charter the Corporation "Has expended, in the erection and purchase of buildings, apparatus, and other facilities and appliances for education, and for the promotion of the objects stated in and contemplated by the Act of incorporation, over $200,000, realized from donations and the sale of lots and lands, and has built up a University, with several departments of learning, in which more than five hundred students are taught the higher branches of learning."

It is, perhaps, a fair inference from this statement, and in deference to the holding of the Supreme Court, that there was such acceptance of this Act of 1855, and such investments made on the faith of it, that at least some portion of the property now in question is protected by contract, if the exemption clause lawfully covers it.

It will readily be conceded that the language of the 4th section of the Act of 1855 is broad enough for that purpose: "All property, of whatever kind or description, belonging to or owned by said Corporation, shall be forever free from taxation for any and all purposes." But the argument is, that since the Constitution then in force only permitted the Legislature to exempt from taxation the property, real and personal, used by the University, in immediate connection with its function of teaching, the statute must be limited to property so used. This was the view taken by the Supreme Court of the State. "By the language of the Constitution," says the court, "while a discretion is conferred on the General Assembly whether to exempt or not and, if it shall determine to exempt, the amount of the exemption, it is clearly restricted in the exercise of this discretion to property for schools and religious and charitable purposes; property for such purposes, in the primary and ordinary acceptation of the term, is property which in itself is adapted to and intended to be used as an instrumentality in aid of such purposes. It is the direct and immediate use, and not the remote or consequential benefit to be derived through the means of the property that is contemplated."

Though the court is here construing the Constitution of its own State and is, therefore, entitled to our consideration on that ground, as well as for its character and standing for learning and ability, we find ourselves, in the performance of the duty of reviewing this case, compelled to differ with that court in the nature and extent of the constitutional limitation of this contract, as made by the Legislature of the same State. For this Constitution necessarily becomes a part of the contract which is said to be impaired by subsequent legislation.

The first observation we have to make is that the Constitution does not say "property used for schools," as the opinion of the court implies. Neither the important word use or schools is found in the section of the instrument on that subject. If the language were that the Legislature might "exempt property for the use of schools," we should readily agree with that court. Indeed, that would be the appropriate language to convey the idea on which the court rests its decision.

The makers of the Constitution, however, used other language because they had another meaning, and did not use that because they did not mean that. They said that the Legislature might exempt from taxation "such property as they might deem necessary" (not for the use of schools, but) "for school purposes." The distinction is, we think, very broad between property contributing to the purposes of a school, made to aid in the education of persons in that school, and that which is directly immediately subjected to use in the school. The purposes of the school, and the school, are not identical. The purpose of a college or university is to give youth an education. The money which comes from the sale or rent of land dedicated to that object aids this purpose. Land so held and leased is held for school purposes, in the fullest and clearest sense.

A devise of a hundred acres of land "to the president of the University, for the purposes of the school," would be not only a valid conveyance, but, if the president failed to do so, a court of chancery would compel him to execute the trust; but if he leased it all for fair rent and paid the proceeds into the treasury of the Corporation to aid in the support of the school, he would be executing the trust.

When the Constitution, in 1870, came to be reconstructed, its framers had learned something about exemption from taxation, as we shall see by placing the provision in that Constitution alongside that of 1848 on the same subject:

1848.

"The property of the State and counties, both real and personal, and such other property as the General Assembly may deem necessary for school, religious and charitable purposes may be exempt from taxation."

1870.

"The property of the State, counties, and other municipal corporations, both real and personal, and such other property as may be used exclusively for agricultural and horticultural societies, for school, religious, cemetery and charitable purposes, may be exempted from taxation; but such exemption shall be only by general law."

Here it is only such property as may be exclusively used for school purposes that may be exempted, and this only by a general law.

The general law passed in 1872 to give effect to the change in the Constitution exempted only "The real estate on which the institutions of learning are located, not leased by such institutions or otherwise used with a view to profit." This is what the Supreme Court says was meant by the Constitution of 1848; but if it was it took a deal of change in the language when the framers of the new Constitution and of the new tax law came to express the same idea. We cannot come to the conclusion that they were intended to mean the same, but that the later law was designed to limit the more enlarged power of the earlier one.

If our construction of the Constitution of 1848 is sound, the judgment of the Supreme Court must be reversed; for the stipulation of facts on which the case was tried says that "It is admitted that all the lots and lands mentioned and described in the objections filed in said proceeding for judgment, whereon said taxes are levied, excepting improvements on the same, are leased by said University to different parties for a longer or shorter period, and that all said lots and lands are held for sale or lease, for the use and support of said institution and the objects contemplated by said charter."

We are of opinion that such use and such holding bring the lots within the class of property which by the Constitution of 1848 the Legislature could, if it deemed proper, exempt from taxation, and that the Legislature did so exempt it.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the State is reversed, and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Cited—95 Ill., 568.

THE CANAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS, THE CRESCENT CITY BANK, THE UNION BANK, THE LOUISIANA STATE BANK, J. MARSH DENMAN ET AL., Appts.,

v.

WILLIAM B. PARTEE ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 325-334.)

Repudiation of contract—judgment against married woman—separate estate.

1. A married woman cannot, any more than an unmarried one, be permitted to retain the benefits of a transaction which she has solicited, and at the same time to disavow it.

2. A personal judgment against a married woman, in an action of assumpsit against her on her promissory note, is a nullity under the laws of Mississippi.

3. In that State, unless a married woman has a separate estate, she is subject, as to her contracts, to the disability of coverture, and a creditor suing her must, in his bill in equity, or declaration at law, aver that she has such an estate, and that the debt is a charge upon it or ought to be paid out of it.

[No. 122.]

Argued Jan. 10, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

The case which arose in the court below, is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips, W. A. Maury and Edward Janin, for appellants:

It is an essential allegation in every action against a married woman, that she has a separate property subject to the debt, and this must be made in the declaration, or in replication to the plea of coverture. It is also necessary to allege and prove, that the consideration of the contract sued on was such as is expressly authorized by statute. Every suit against her takes the shape and direction of reaching a particular fund. The enforcement of her contracts in Mississippi is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and no general judgment can be rendered. She cannot execute a valid promissory note jointly with her husband, or separately, so as to impose any liability upon her or her estate. A judgment against a married woman is a nullity.

Choppin v. Harmon, 46 Miss., 304; Pollen v. James, 45 Miss., 129; Mallett v. Parham, 52 Miss., 921; Nelson v. Miller, 52 Miss., 410; Griffin v. Ragan, 52 Miss., 78; Bank of Louisiana v. Williams, 46 Miss., 618.

The case of Cary v. Dixon, 51 Miss., 593, was on all fours with this, and the title derived at execution sale under the judgment in that case was held to be a nullity.

For aught that appears, all the complainants did accept the terms of settlement within the ninety days as a matter of fact. They surrendered the old notes and took the new, and they are now endeavoring to enforce the deed.

Sarah D. Partee and her husband accepted the old notes and permitted the creditors to repose upon their security until the Statute of Limitations had barred their right of action on the old notes, and never once notified them that the deed was revoked because of a failure to accept it in writing within ninety days. It would, therefore, seem that their acquiescence in what was done by their agents, Hayams & Jonas, would operate as a complete equitable estoppel.

Mr. Justice L. Nugent, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

In July, 1866, the defendant, Sarah D. Partee, wife of William B. Partee, then a resident of Mississippi, being indebted in the sum of $125,000, and unable to pay the amount, submitted to her creditors a proposition in writing for settlement. She represented that the late war had caused her a loss of over $300,000, leaving her indebted as mentioned, with no resources except lands, which would not then sell for half of their value, or for half of her indebtedness. In order, therefore, to place all her creditors on the same footing, some of them having brought suits for sums amounting to about $14,000, she offered to pay one half of her indebtedness in lands in Tallahatchie and Sunflower Counties, Mississippi, at $10 per acre; and, for the remaining half, to give her notes in equal sums, payable in January, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870 and 1871, with interest at eight per cent. per annum, secured by a mortgage on the residue of her lands in Yazoo County, then under cultivation. This proposal was afterwards modified so as to postpone for one year the maturity of the several notes.

See 9 OTTO.

To secure confidence in the papers to be drawn, to close the transaction, she selected gentlemen well known in Yazoo City to see to a proper execution of a deed of trust, and to act as trustees, or to select proper persons for that position. And she stated that Messrs. Hyams and Jonas, lawyers of high character in New Orleans, would attend to any of the business which the creditors might choose to place in their hands, and to the distribution of the new notes after they were executed. Accordingly, in November, 1866, a deed was executed by Mrs. Partee and her husband to one Robert Bowman, conveying to him the lands mentioned, upon the following trusts: 1, to hold the lands in Tallahatchie and Sunflower Counties for the benefit of such creditors as should accept the same at $10 an acre in payment of one half of her indebtedness to them, or if a majority of the creditors should desire it, to sell the same and divide the proceeds, or to convey to each of such creditors his proportion of the lands; and, 2, in case of default in the payment at maturity of the notes executed upon the settlement, to sell the lands lying in Yazoo County, or so much as might be necessary to pay them, and apply the proceeds to their payment.

The deed contained a clause providing that if any of the creditors should fail within ninety days from its date "to signify in writing their acceptance of the terms of settlement and payment of their claims or debts," they should "be considered as refusing the same," and be debarred from the benefits of the deed.

The instrument was properly executed, stamped and registered. After its registration, it was delivered with the new notes, signed by Mrs. Partee and her husband, to Messrs. Hyams and Jonas, for the purpose of carrying out the proposed settlement and securing the acceptance of its terms. Many of the creditors had previously assented to its terms, and after the deed was executed they surrendered their old notes for the new notes. Other creditors came in afterwards, and in a similar way gave up their old notes and took the new paper. It does not appear, however, that any of them signified in writing their acceptance of the terms of the settlement within the ninety days mentioned in the deed.

It appears, also, that before the deed was executed, namely: in April, 1866, one James Stewart had brought suit against Mrs. Partee and her husband on a promissory note made by her, and in June following had obtained judgment by default against them for a sum exceeding $6,000. Upon this judgment execution was issued, and in January, 1869, the lands in Yazoo County embraced by the trust-deed were sold and purchased by Stewart and a son of Mrs. Partee. When the settlement was proposed, the existence of this judgment was concealed from Messrs. Hyams and Jonas, who acted, as already stated, for Mrs. Partee in securing the assent of creditors. The representation then made was that the lands were incumbered only by a small annuity.

The present suit is brought to set aside this judgment of Stewart, or to obtain leave to redeem the land sold under it; to remove the trustee, who is charged with certain fraudulent practices in connection with the trust property, and to have a new trustee appointed; and to enforce the trusts of the deed. It is unnecessary for the disposition of the present appeal to state in detail the various allegations of the bill or of the several answers of the defendants, as the case appears to have been decided upon the supposed impediment to the relief prayed by reason of the provision excluding creditors from the benefits of the deed, who failed, within ninety days from its date, to indicate in writing their acceptance of the terms of settlement; and by the sale of the property in Yazoo County under the judgment of Stewart. Our consideration is limited, therefore, to the effect of that provision upon the rights of the complainants, and to the validity of that judgment.

1. With reference to the provision, it is to be observed that it was not mentioned in the proposition for settlement made in July, 1866. That prescribed no period within which its terms should be accepted; and before the execution of the deed, as already stated, and as recited in it, many of the creditors had assented to them. To such creditors, and they embrace the complainants in this suit, the provision could not have been intended to apply. No purpose could have been subserved in requiring from them any further expression of assent to the settlement. As to them nothing further was necessary to complete the transaction than the surrender of the old notes and the acceptance of the new notes in their place; and this, as stated, was done.

As to the creditors who had not then acceded to the proposed settlement, it was important to fix some period within which they should come in. To quicken their action the provision was inserted. Their acceptance in writing was not a condition precedent to the vesting of the property in the trustee for their benefit, nor was it a condition upon which the trust was to be executed. It was at best only a condition subsequent in the nature of a penalty against creditors not assenting in the prescribed way, and could be waived by the grantors; and was in fact waived by them. Long after the lapse of the period prescribed they expressed to their agents a hope that all the creditors would come in; and they authorized them to receive from creditors their old notes and to deliver in exchange new notes in their place for one half of their amount; and when this was done they permitted the creditors to repose upon the new security furnished until the Statute of Limitations had barred a right of action upon the old notes, without any suggestion that the deed was inoperative because of their failure to accept in writing the terms of the proposed settlement within ninety days. Their approval of or, at least, acquiescence in the conduct of their agents estops them in equity from enforcing the provision as to the acceptance in writing, so as to debar from the benefits of the deed any of the creditors who accepted the settlement by surrendering the old notes and taking the new ones. A married woman cannot be permitted, any more than an unmarried one, to retain the benefits of a transaction which she has solicited, and at the same time to disavow it. She cannot in this case retain the surrendered notes and repudiate the consideration upon which their surrender was made. 2 Story, Eq., sec. 1536.

2. As to the Stewart judgment, it is to be observed that the record shows it was rendered in an ordinary action of assumpsit upon a promissory note of Mrs. Partee, without mention in the pleadings of any separate property belonging to her, or, indeed, of her being a married woman. The plaintiff Stewart knew that she was not a feme sole and, therefore, neither he nor her son, who were the purchasers under the judgment, can claim any advantage from the omission. The judgment is simply a personal one; and a judgment of that character against a married woman is a nullity under the laws of Mississippi.

At common law, a married woman is incapable, except in a few special cases, of contracting a personal obligation. Her disability in this respect, by reason of her coverture, cannot be overcome by any form of acknowledgment or mode of execution, or by her uniting with her husband in the contract. The special cases in which the disability does not exist are those where she is compelled from necessity to act as a feme sole, as when her husband is imprisoned for life or for years, or has fled the country or been exiled. In such cases the husband is considered as civilly dead, and the wife as in a state of widowhood. Her disability also ceases when she is permitted to act as a sole trader, as in England by the custom of London; and in this country by special legislation. Equity, too, will sometimes impose as a charge upon her separate estate a debt incurred by her for its benefit, or for her benefit on its credit; but this is a different matter from a contract by which a personal obligation is created. Except in the cases mentioned, the general rule is that she cannot be personally bound; nor can she be subjected on her contract to a personal judgment. Various reasons are assigned for this latter exemption, some of which would be destitute of force under our altered laws. Reeves, in his treatise on Baron and Feme, says, "That no action at law can be maintained against her, for the judgment in that case would subject her person to imprisonment; and thus the husband's right to the person of his wife would be infringed, which the law will not permit in any case of a civil concern." "And for the same reason," he adds, "there can be no personal decree against her in chancery. It must be one which reaches her property only." P. 171. This doctrine, whatever reasons may be assigned for it, has, with few exceptions, been recognized in the several States; and, in many instances, personal judgments against married women upon their contracts, rendered upon defaults or by confession, have been held void. Griffith v. Clarke, 18 Md., 457; Morse v. Toppin, 3 Gray, 411; Dorrance

v. Scott, 3 Whart., 309; see, also, Wallace v. Rippon, 2 Bay, 112, and Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy., 620-624.

The doctrine of the common law has, however, been greatly modified in most of the States by legislation, and the extent to which a married woman may contract, and the manner in which her contracts shall be authenticated and enforced, are definitely prescribed. In Mississippi such modification has been made. The Code of 1857 enacted that the property owned by a woman at the time of her marriage, or which shall subsequently come to her, shall be her separate property, and not be subject to the debts of her husband, but shall be liable for her own debts contracted before marriage. At the same time, it authorized a married woman, either by herself or conjointly with her husband to contract with reference to her separate property, for its lease, use and improvement, and the construction of buildings upon it; also, for the support of herself and children, and for many other things; and provided that such contracts shall be binding on her, and that satisfaction for them may be had out of her separate property. It also declared that, in addition to the remedies then existing by the common law by and against married women, "The husband and wife may sue jointly, or if the husband will not join her, she may sue alone for the recovery of her property or rights, and she may be sued jointly with her husband on all contracts or other matters for which her individual property is liable; and if the same be against husband and wife, no judgment shall be rendered against her unless the liability of her separate property be first established." Code of 1857, p. 335.

In several cases which have arisen under these provisions, it has been held by the Supreme Court of Mississippi that unless a married woman has a separate estate she is subject, as to her contracts, to the disability of coverture, and that a creditor suing her must, in his bill in equity, or declaration at law, aver that she has such an estate, and that the debt is a charge upon it or ought to be paid out of it. It was so held in Choppin v. Harmon, decided in 1872, when the court added that every suit in the State, whether in law or in equity, founded upon her contracts, "takes the shape and direction of reaching a specific fund." 46 Miss., 307. And in Bk. v. Williams, 46 Miss., 629, decided in the same year, the court said, speaking of a suit against a married woman, "The condition precedent to a right of recovery, either at law or in equity, is that there be a separate estate out of which satisfaction may be had. Our jurisprudence does not realize the possibility of a personal judgment against a married woman." In Cary v. Dixon, 51 Miss., 593, decided in 1875, a personal judgment was rendered against a married woman and her husband, and her land sold under execution issued upon the judgment. The purchaser at the sale brought ejectment for the premises. It was held that the judgment was void and the sale under it invalid; the court saying, citing language used in a previous case not then reported, that in order to authorize a judgment against a married woman, her liability must be shown by averment and established by evidence; that a married woman is incapable of being bound either by contract or judgment, except in the special cases authorized by law; and that by the Code of the State, if the suit is against her and her husband, no judgment can be rendered against her, "unless the liability of her separate property be first established."

In Mallett v. Parham, 52 Miss., 921, also decided in 1875, the court, speaking of the power of a married woman to contract for supplies for her plantation, said: "It is only in consequence of the existence of her separate estate that the statute authorizes her to make the contract, and that the separate estate alone is bound by the contract. The enforcement of the contract is in the nature of a proceeding in rem. No general judgment can be rendered against her so as to reach on execution any other property."

There are other adjudications of the Supreme Court of Mississippi to the same purport. Those cited are sufficient to establish the invalidity of the Stewart judgment. The allegation essential under those decisions in every suit against a married woman, that she has separate property which is liable for the debts alleged, is wanting in its record. That discloses no ground of action upon which a personal judgment can be rendered against her under the law of the State. The coverture of Mrs. Partee at the time the judgment was rendered is averred in the bill and is admitted. That fact going to the jurisdiction of the court could be shown by competent proof. There was no question of innocent purchasers without notice in the case, the judgment creditor and the son of Mrs. Partee being the purchasers.

The decree of the court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings; and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Miller, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case, and especially from that part of the opinion which holds that the judgment against Mrs. Partee and her husband, under which the land in question was sold, was absolutely void.

It is to be remembered that the question is not whether such a judgment would be held erroneous on an appeal from that judgment, but whether it can be held absolutely void when assailed collaterally in another action, where it is relied upon as the foundation of a title based on a sale under execution issued on the judgment.

Mrs. Partee was sued jointly with her husband. Both by the common law and by the law of all the States, a married woman could sue or be sued by joining her husband with her. The statutes of Mississippi, where this judgment was rendered, largely increased the liability of married women to be sued beyond what it was at common law. It made her liable, out of her separate estate, for supplies to the farm owned or cultivated by her, for any debt contracted with reference to her own property, whether the contract was made with the consent of her husband or not. In the case in which the judgment is held void, she signed a joint note with her husband, her name being signed before his; and she was sued with him on that note, and personally served with process. She has never denied the validity of that judgment, or sought to set it aside or vacate its force. Other persons, not parties to that suit, now come into court and say that all that was done was void because it does not appear affirmatively, by the record, that the note on which the suit was brought was a contract concerning her private property. That was a matter which, if it were true, should have been pleaded as a defense. She was subject personally to the jurisdiction of the court. Her contracts were subjects of which the court had jurisdiction. It had jurisdiction to enforce those contracts by sale of her individual property. The note on which she was sued had every indication that it was her individual contract, as it no doubt was, and that her husband's name was placed there to show his consent.

To hold that persons not interested in that contract, nor parties to the suit, can now come in and treat the judgment as absolutely void, on its face, is such a departure from all the principles on which the jurisdiction of the court is determined, that even the authority of the courts of Mississippi should not, in my opinion, control us in the matter.

Cited—111 U. S., 67.

RUSSELL SAGE, JAMES BUELL AND N.
A. COWDREY, INTERVENERS, Appts.,

v.

THE CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY OF IOWA ET AL.,

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 334-348.)

Purchase by trustee, of railroad at mortgage sale—agreement enforced by court—new corporation—terms of sale—sale subject to rights of others—notice.

1. Where a mortgage of a railroad contained a covenant that the trustee named therein should, at the request of a majority of the bondholders, purchase the premises at a sale thereunder for the benefit of the bondholders and organize a new company; on a foreclosure of said mortgage, it was not error to decree that the trustee should be authorized and directed to bid at the sale, as trustee for the first-mortgage bondholders, at least the amount of the principal and interest of the first-mortgage bonds.

2. Under the prayer in the bill for such other and further relief as the nature of the case should require, and as might seem meet to the court, it was proper for the court, in the decree, to enforce the agreement contained in the deed, into which the railroad company, the trustee, and, through the trustee, all the bondholders, had entered.

3. The decree could direct the trustee, if he became the purchaser, to convey the property to a new corporation organized by, and for the benefit of, the bondholders, according to the priority of their interests, giving the controlling interest and power of management to the first-mortgage bondholders.

4. It was no error in the decree, to require any other person than the trustee under the first mortgage, if he became the purchaser at the sale, to pay at once, in cash, a part of his bid, as earnest money.

5. It was proper to make a decree of sale subject to the rights and equities of parties to the suit under liens or judgments claimed by them, and to reserve such rights for further adjudication.

6. Where the name of a newspaper was changed after an order to advertise in it, if the identity of the newspaper remained, it was proper to advertise in it under such order.

[Nos. 175, 570.]

Argued Mar. 10, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. N. A. Cowdrey, M. H. Carpenter and J. Coleman, for appellants.

Messrs. C. C. Cole, Herbert B. Turner, B. F. Lee, R. L. Ashurst, J. C. Bullitt and J. H. B. Latrobe, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding was commenced by a bill filed at the suit of Charles Alexander and others, holders of bonds secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust of the Central Railroad Company of Iowa, praying for an account, for the appointment of a receiver, and for a foreclosure of the mortgage. The bill was filed to October Term, 1874, in the Circuit Court. It made the Railroad Company and the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York, who were the trustees named in the mortgage, parties defendant. Subsequently, at the same Term, the trustees, who were also trustees under second and third mortgages, filed their original bill, as well for the benefit of the complainants in the first bill, as for all other bondholders, praying also for an account, for a receiver and for a foreclosure. By order of the court, these two bills were consolidated, and the hearing of the case proceeded until the 22d of October, 1875, when a final decree was made, directing inter alia, a sale of the mortgaged premises. On the 15th of January, 1876, the present appellants, on their petition, representing themselves to be holders of some of the mortgage bonds secured by the first mortgage, were permitted to intervene as parties, to prosecute an appeal to this court, for the protection of their several interests, against the decree of October 22, 1875. They have accordingly appealed; and as their appeal was not made a supersedeas, and the decree was executed by a sale, they have entered a second appeal from the confirmation of that sale.

Directing our attention first to the appeal from the decree of October 22, 1875, it is observable that it raises no question respecting the validity or amount of the debts due by the mortgagors and secured by the several mortgages, nor any respecting the order in which they are entitled to payment. There is some complaint that the court, before the final decree was entered, directed certain payments to be made by the receiver for locomotives and rental of cars used upon the road, either by the receiver, or before his appointment. Whether these orders were correct or not, we will consider hereafter. The appellants do not complain that the decree of the court has not determined correctly the amounts due upon the several mortgages, and marshaled them in their proper order of priority. Nor do they insist that it was not proper for the court, in view of the facts as they appeared, to order a sale of the mortgaged property. Their complaint is rather respecting the disposition which the court decreed to be made of the property, in case the trustees of the mortgage should become the purchasers. To understand those dispositions, and the reasons why they were ordered, it is necessary to observe carefully the provisions of the deed upon which the bill was founded and which, therefore, properly affected the decree. Some of them are quite peculiar. The first mortgage was given to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York, to secure the payment of bonds of the Railroad Company to the amount of $3,776,000, with interest thereon. It covered the entire corporate property of the mortgagor, constructed or to be constructed, and all its franchises and privileges; all its property that might thereafter be acquired, including machinery, locomotives, rolling stock, tools and supplies, as well as the net income of the mortgagor. It contained also the usual stipulation made in railroad mortgages, that in case of default in the payment of interest the principal should fall due; that the trustee, on the written request of a majority of the holders of the bonds, should be authorized and empowered to take possession of the property, and sell it at public auction. It is unnecessary to refer to the other provisions, except the following, which are special and unusual, and have a material bearing upon the decree of which the appellants complain. These we quote at large:

NOTE.—Strict foreclosure of mortgages. See note to Clark v. Reyburn, 75 U. S., XIX., 354.

"And it is further covenanted and agreed by and between the parties hereto, that in case of any judicial foreclosure sale, or other sale of the premises embraced in this mortgage, under the decree of any court having jurisdiction thereof, based upon the foreclosure of this mortgage, and the holders of a majority of the then outstanding bonds secured by this mortgage, shall, in writing, request the said trustee or their successor, they are authorized to purchase the premises embraced herein for the use and benefit of the holders of the then outstanding bonds secured by this mortgage." "And having so purchased said premises, the right and title thereto shall vest in said trustees, and no bondholder shall have any claim to the premises or the proceeds thereof, except for his pro rata share of the proceeds of said purchased premises, as represented in a new company or corporation to be formed for the use and benefit of the holders of the bonds secured hereby, and that said trustee may take such lawful measures as deemed for the interest of said said bondholders, to organize a new company or corporation for the benefit of the holders of the bonds secured by this mortgage." "Said new company or corporation shall be organized upon such terms, conditions and limitations, and in such manner, as the holders of a majority of said outstanding bonds secured by this mortgage shall, in writing, request or direct, and said trustee so purchasing shall thereupon reconvey the premises so purchased by them to said new company or corporation."

It was a mortgage containing these stipulations that the circuit court was called upon to enforce. And the several bondholders claiming under the mortgage held their interests subject to this controlling power given to the majority of all the holders.

There were two subsequent mortgages of the same property, given by the Railroad Company to the same trustee, to secure the payment of other bonds. These were set forth in the bill; and when the consolidated case was ripe for a decree, it appeared that there was due from See 9 Otto.

the Company for principal and interest of the first mortgage debt the sum of $4,623,334.99 in gold, with interest from October 15, 1875; upon the second mortgage, $1,136,246.86; and that there were $420,000 of bonds, secured by the third mortgage, outstanding. The court, therefore, decreed that the mortgagors should pay within ten days the sum due to the bondholders under the first mortgage; and if they failed to pay, that the mortgages under the second and third mortgages and the judgment creditors, or any of them, in the order of their respective liens, should pay the same, and that in default of said payment by any of said parties, their equity of redemption in the premises should be foreclosed.

Had this been all, the result would have been a strict foreclosure. The master to whom the case had been referred had found and reported that the property would not sell at the date of his report (October 11, 1875) for more than forty cents on the dollar of its indebtedness, and this report had been confirmed. It was, therefore, manifest that neither the Railroad Company nor any of the lien creditors subsequent to those holding under the first mortgage could or would pay the $4,620,334.99 secured by that mortgage. But a strict foreclosure was undesirable for all the parties. Not only would it have cut off entirely the bondholders secured by the second and third mortgages, whose interests were before the court, and which it was bound to protect as far as possible, but it would have made the large number of bondholders under the first mortgage practically tenants in common of the railroad property. The inconveniences of such a result are obvious enough. A sale, therefore, was for the interest of all, and to that no one objected. Indeed, it was contemplated as possible in each of the three mortgages. The bondholders, through their trustee, had made arrangements in view of such a contingency. They had agreed what should be the effect and consequence of a judicial sale. All of them had taken their bonds with knowledge of the agreement and subject to it. What that agreement was, what purpose it was intended to subserve, against what mischief it was proposed to guard, and by what mode it was stipulated the object intended should be accomplished, it is very important to consider. By the agreement, the entire body of the bondholders consented to place their interests, to a certain extent, under the control of a majority of their number. Their trustee was authorized to purchase the property at the judicial sale, should one be ordered, and convey it to a new corporation, to be formed for their benefit, provided a majority of them should, in writing, request such a purchase. They had agreed to more than this. They had consented that the new corporation should be organized upon such terms, conditions and limitations, and in such manner, as the holders of a majority of the outstanding bonds secured by the mortgage should, in writing, request or direct. This consent and agreement, this deposit of power in the majority, was contained in the mortgage under which the appellants claim.

The purposes sought to be accomplished by it are manifest.

First. It was designed for protection against the perils of a forced sale for cash of an unsalable property. It was well known that at judicial sales of railroads for cash there is little likelihood of obtaining a bid for a sum at all commensurate with the value of the property sold, or with the amount of incumbrances upon it. The amount required is so large, usually, that it is beyond the reach of ordinary purchasers. In such a case as the present, the first-mortgage bondholders are the only party that can become the purchasers, and they only, because they need not pay their bid in cash.

Second. The agreement looked further. It provided for the contingency of a purchase by bondholders under the mortgage. But such a purchase could not inure equally to the benefit of all, unless all were parties to it. There is almost a certainty that in foreclosure sales of a railroad, especially when the mortgage debts exceed the market value of the property, as in this case, the purchaser will be an association of some of the bondholders secured by the mortgage, who buy with the intention of organizing a new company to hold the property for their interests. Where the bondholders are numerous, diversities of views respecting the new organization may be expected, and they generally arise. Very rarely do all the bondholders unite in making the purchase. Frequently there is more than one combination, and a strife between them to secure the advantage hoped for from the purchase and consequent control of the property. The consequence is that those who do not belong to the successful combination are excluded from those advantages, and are not placed upon an equal footing with the others.

Third. Another evil, which observation shows to be very frequent, is that a small minority of the bondholders resist arrangements for the purchase of the mortgaged property and the organization of a new company, desired by the majority—arrangements which would be for the equal benefit of all, but which are resisted unless they, the minority, are paid in full, or unless superior advantages are conceded to them, at the expense of their fellows.

It was in view of all this that the first-mortgage bondholders entered into the agreements contained in the mortgage—the agreements which we have quoted. They provided that there should be no judicial sale for cash, unless the amount bidden at the sale should equal the sum due and secured by the mortgage. Instead of such a sale they provided a method by which all the bondholders with equal rights might effect a re-organization of the indebted corporation, and become the owners of the franchises and property mortgaged. This mode was the creation of a new corporation in which the property should be vested, for the equal benefit of all the holders of the bonds, thus preventing any minority, or any bondholders from demanding that their wishes and interests should be given a preference to those of others in like condition, or that they should be paid in whole, or in part, in cash. So the evils resulting from the want of unanimity among those whose rights were exactly the same, and the possible necessity of raising money to pay off non-assenting holders of the bonds against which the agreement was in part intended to guard. It was to secure the common interests of all the bondholders, in such a manner that none should obtain an advantage over the others, that it was agreed the purchase might be made by the trustee on account of all, and that the subsequent disposition of the subject of the purchase should be for the common benefit of all. To carry out these intentions a majority of the bondholders was empowered to act controllingly for the entire body, in matters respecting the purchase and disposition of the property purchased, subject to the limitation that the purchase, if made by the trustee, should be for the use and benefit of the outstanding bonds; that the property should be conveyed to a new company organized for their benefit, and that the new company should be organized on such terms, conditions, and limitations as the holders of a majority of the outstanding bonds should request or direct. The agreement, though unusual, was a reasonable one. While it prevented a small minority of the bondholders from forcing unreasonable and inequitable concessions from the majority, it did not empower that majority to crush out the rights of the minority, or put them to any disadvantage. It authorized only such arrangements as would inure equally to the benefit alike of the majority and the minority.

Such was the contract and such the power conferred upon a majority of the bondholders. It was such a contract which the bills brought before the circuit court for a decree. In view of its provisions we cannot think it was error to decree, as the court did, that the mortgaged property should be sold to the highest and best bidder, and that the trustee should be authorized and directed to bid at the sale, as trustee for the first-mortgage bondholders, at least the amount of principal and interest of the first-mortgage bonds.

The decree went further. At the time when it was made it appeared that a large majority of the first-mortgage bondholders had, in writing, requested and directed the trustee, if becoming the purchaser, to convey the property to a new corporation, organized substantially on the terms, conditions and limitations prescribed in the decree which the court made. The request was an attempted exercise of the power conferred upon that majority by the mortgage. The trustee, the cestui que trust, and the trust itself were before the court, and the court undertook a complete execution of the trust. It decreed as follows:

"That if said trustee, as aforesaid, shall become the purchaser of said property at such sale, the title shall pass absolutely to said trustee, subject, however, to the trusts herein indicated on behalf of the several parties in interest, being the first, second and third mortgage bondholders, creditors and stockholders of the Central Railroad Company of Iowa; and said property shall be conveyed by said trustee to a corporation organized, or to be organized, for the purpose of acquiring said property, under the provisions of said first mortgage, and of this decree, and to be approved by a majority of said first-mortgage bondholders, in which said corporation the controlling interest and power of management shall be given to the first mortgage bondholders in such manner as the majority of such first-mortgage bondholders shall indicate and provide, and in which the second mortgage bondholders shall receive a second class of stock for the full amount, principal and interest, of said second-mortgage bonds; and in which corporation the third-mortgage bondholders and general creditors shall receive common stock at par for the respective amounts due them; and in which the stockholders of the defendant shall receive common stock at the rate of one dollar in the new corporation for every three dollars of stock held by them in the defendant corporation."

Against this part of the decree the appellants present several objections. They urge that it was unauthorized by the prayer in the bill of complaint, and was not responsive thereto. It is true the bill contained no specific prayer for such directions; but beyond there lief specifically asked the complainants prayed for such other and further relief as the nature of the case should require, and as might seem meet to the court. The specific relief sought was a strict foreclosure; but under the prayer for general relief, it is not questioned that the decree for a sale was appropriate. And as the deed of trust was made a part of the bill, and provided what should be done in case the trustee became the purchaser at the sale, it does not appear to be going outside of the case to enforce the agreement contained in the deed, into which the Railroad Company, the trustee and, through the trustee, all the bondholders had entered.

A second objection is that in this part of the decree the court attempted to force inconsistent duties and trusts upon the trustee, different from those the parties had established by contract under seal, viz.: by the mortgage deed. The meaning of this is, as we understand it, that the decree directs a disposition of the property variant from the one stipulated for in the deed of trust. At first sight this objection seems to be not without merit. But after a careful examination of the deed, bearing in mind also the purposes sought to be accomplished by it, the mode prescribed for the accomplishment of those purposes, the powers vested in the majority of the bondholders, and the subordination of the trustee to those powers, we are unable to say that the decree was unwarranted. We cannot say that the majority transgressed the power they possessed, in their arrangement for the organization of the new company and, consequently, that the decree of the court carrying out that arrangement directed a disposition of the property different from that to which all the bondholders had assented. The primary object of the deed was to secure to the bondholders a prior right to the entire property—the subject of the trust—so far as it was needed for the full payment of the bonds. This right the decree preserves in all its entirety. It directs that in the new corporation to which the trustee is ordered to convey, the controlling interest and power of management shall be given to the first-mortgage bondholders in such manner as the majority of them shall indicate and provide. It subordinates to the rights of these holders all the interests of the second and third-mortgagees, as well as those of the general creditors and the stockholders of the Railroad Company, foreclosing entirely the equity of that Company.

The agreement in the deed of trust (a similar one being also in these second and third-mortgages) contemplated a substantial reorganization. It was for this that the power was given to the majority of the bondholders. The power was coupled with a large discretion. The majority was authorized to define the "terms, conditions and limitations" under which the new company should be organized. What those should be was thus left to the discretion of the donees of the power. "Terms, conditions and limitations" are broad words. Let it be conceded that the new organization must be for the benefit of the holders of the first-mortgage bonds, how can we say it is not for the benefit of those holders that entirely subordinate interests are conceded to junior lien creditors and to the stockholders of the former corporation? How can we say that such a concession was beyond the discretion with which the agents of the bondholders, that is to say, the majority, were clothed? Such concessions are generally made in reorganizations of railroad companies, and they are regarded as beneficial to the joint lienholders. They prevent delay and expenditure arising out of litigation between creditors, which are sometimes almost ruinous, and they lessen the risk of redemptions. The majority were empowered to direct the terms and conditions under which the new corporation should exist, and hold the property conveyed to it, as well as the limitations within which it might act. It is not intended that the majority could postpone the rights of any minority of the bondholders to those of other creditors, or allow any interference with those rights. Nothing of the kind has been done. Under the agreement the appellants, as well as the other bondholders, had, in case of a purchase by the trustee, no claim to the property purchased or to the proceeds thereof, "except for their pro rata share of the proceeds as represented in a new company," to be formed in the manner, and upon such terms and conditions and with such limitations as a majority of their associates may direct.

Upon the whole, therefore, we think the decree of the court, in the particular we are now considering, is consistent with the agreement of the bondholders contained in the deed of trust and, therefore, that this objection of the appellants should not be sustained.

We see no error in the decree, so far as it required any other person than the trustee under the first mortgage, if he became the purchaser at the sale, to pay at once in cash a part of his bid, as earnest money. Such other purchaser, of course, must be a cash purchaser, at least to the extent of the sum due on the first mortgage. It was, therefore, no hardship to require an immediate payment by him of a part of his bid, and the order that he should make such payment was a protection against false or unreal bids. That the same requirement was not made of the trustee was very proper, for the reason that a purchase by the trustee required no payment of money, beyond a sum sufficient for costs, unless the bid exceeded the sum due on the first mortgage, the purchase being made for the first-mortgage bondholders.

The appellants further object to certain orders made by the court for payment by the receiver to John S. Newberry et al., to Isaac M. Cate et al., to Mowery Car Company, and to Haskell, Barker & Co., for rolling stock, furnished under lease or otherwise, for the railroad. These orders were no part of the decree of October 22, 1875. These orders were made prior to that time, when the appellants were not parties to the suit, except through their trustee. They did not intervene and become parties until after the decree of Oct. 22 was made. Then they were permitted to become parties "so far as to prosecute, if they so elected, for the protection of their several interests therein, an appeal to the Supreme Court from the decree entered October 22, 1875." They asked for nothing more. They prayed for no appeal from any prior orders, and certainly they cannot be permitted now to object to orders made prior to that decree; orders from which they have not appealed. But if this was not so, it would be sufficient to say that the orders were not erroneous. They were within the rules we announced in Fosdick v. Schall, a case decided at this Term [ante, 339], and it is sufficient to refer to that case for their justification.

The appellants further object that the 8th paragraph of the decree was erroneous. That paragraph is as follows:

"Eighth. That the right of the several parties to this suit claiming liens by judgment or otherwise upon the property of defendants, and of the several parties claiming rights or equities in and to said property, or any property in the use of said Railroad Company, or any part thereof, by virtue of contracts, or cases whereby material, labor or property has been furnished for or placed upon said defendant's road, shall not be affected by this decree, the same being taken subject to the rights and equities of said parties as the same may be established and declared hereafter by this court."

This order relates to the effect of the decree, and not to the effect of a sale made under it, as the appellants seem to think. It reserves certain rights claimed for further adjudication. It cannot well be understood without reference to the nature of the claims and their condition when the decree was made. This appears in the report of the master, to which there was no exception in these particulars. The claims were judgments amounting in the aggregate to about $13,000, recovered against the railroad company for injuries to persons and property, and which were liens prior to the mortgages. From some of these, appeals had been taken. There were also judgments inferior to the liens of the three mortgages, and other judgments not claimed to be liens at all, and there was a floating debt. It was impossible to determine definitely the extent of the rights of these various claimants, when the sale was ordered, and no one could have been injured by reserving them for subsequent adjudication. This objection, therefore, has no weight.

One other remains. The appellants assign for error that the decree is in one particular illegal, incongruous and contradictory, in this: that while in the first paragraph the right of redemption is barred as to the railroad company, the defendant, the second and third-mortgage bondholders, and the judgment creditors, it is given in the seventh paragraph to the second and third-mortgage bondholders, the general creditors and the stockholders of the defendant company, "Thus apparently denying the right of redemption to the railroad company and to the judgment creditors." The assignment does not complain that a right of redemption was given to those to whom it was accorded. It rather complains that it was denied to the railroad company and to the judgment creditors. If such be the meaning of the decree, how can the appellants complain of it? To them it works no injury, and those who might complain have not appealed. Besides, if the other portions of the decree are correct, as we have endeavored to show, redemption by anybody is, to say the least, extremely improbable, if not impossible. We cannot avoid the conviction that this assignment of error is not the assertion of a real grievance.

The appellants are the holders of about six per cent. of the first-mortgage bonds. They are endeavoring to overturn an arrangement agreed to by a large majority of the bondholders appointed by themselves to make an arrangement for the reorganization of the debtor company, an arrangement sanctioned by the court, which does not lessen their security or postpone them to any other bondholders, but which preserves to its fullest extent all the rights assured to them by the mortgage. They ought not to succeed without the most substantial reasons. We do not find such reasons in the record, and the decree of the circuit court is affirmed.

Of the second appeal, that taken from the decree of August 31, 1877, confirming the master's report of the sale, little need be said. The errors assigned to it are substantially the same as those we have considered in the former case, and held to be insufficient to justify a reversal of the decree of October 22, 1875. There are two or three other objections, only one of which, however, requires any notice. The others are wholly without merit.

It is objected that the decree and order required notice of the sale to be advertised in a newspaper printed in the City of New York, called The Financier, as well as in other newspapers; that the master did not advertise the sale in that newspaper, nor report his inability to find any such newspaper to this court, in which the former appeal was then pending and, therefore, did not comply with the order of the court. At the time when the sale was made there was no supersedeas in existence and, before the sale was advertised, it was represented and made to appear to the Circuit Judge that The Financier had been merged into The Public, or that its name had been changed to The Public. He therefore, on the 8th of January, 1877, ordered that the notice of sale be inserted in The Public with the same effect as if the name of the paper had not been changed, and he directed the order to be entered of record. The sale was thus accordingly advertised.

Now, whether the Judge had authority to make such an order in a recess of the court, it is not worth the while to inquire for, if he had not, advertisement in The Public was a substantial compliance with the original order. If the name of Financier was merely changed, the identity of the newspaper remained, and the order was to advertise in that newspaper. And so if The Financier was merged into The Public, its subscribers and readers, to whom the advertisement was addressed and required to be addressed, were reached by it, as they would have been had there been no merger or change of name. The purpose of the order to advertise in that newspaper was publicity, and to reach those persons who saw the paper. That purpose was not defeated by a change of name or a union with another newspaper. This objection, therefore, is formal rather than substantial. The case requires nothing more.

The decree in each case is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Clifford, Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Harlan.

NOTE.—See 93 U. S., XXIII., 936; 96 U. S., XXIV., 641.

JAMES H. ALVORD ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 593.)

Practice in hearing causes—counsel.

1. The rules of this court, requiring causes to be ready for hearing when reached, will be rigidly enforced.

2. Counsel who enter their appearance under Rule 9, will be held responsible until they relieve themselves from the obligation they assume, by substitution or otherwise.

[No. 68.]

Submitted Mar. 31, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

Motion to re-instate cause dismissed under Rule 16.

This case having been previously dismissed for lack of appearance on the part of the plaintiffs in error, when called, this motion is now made to re-instate.

Messrs. Chas. G. Williams, J. W. Denver and S. S. Penn, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite announced the judgment of the court:

This application comes directly within the rule laid down in Hurley v. Jones, decided at the last Term and not yet reported [97 U. S., 318, XXIV., 1008]. As we took occasion to say in that case, "Our rules requiring causes to be ready for hearing when reached are and will continue to be rigidly enforced." We recognize no "pro forma" attorneys of record. Counsel who enter their appearance under the requirements of Rule 9 must understand that the court will hold them responsible for all that such an entry implies until they relieve themselves from the obligation they assume, by substitution or otherwise.

The motion is denied.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in err.,

v.

BURTON M. FORD ET AL.

SAME v. SAME; SAME v. ONE STILL AND OTHER PROPERTY, BURTON M. FORD ET AL. Claimants. SAME v. FIFTY BARRELS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS, BURTON M. FORD ET AL. Claimants. SAME v. THREE HUNDRED AND NINETEEN BARRELS OF WHISKY AND OTHER PROPERTY, JOSEPH ROELLE ET AL. Claimants. SAME v. FOUR HUNDRED BARRELS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS, JOSEPH ROELLE ET AL.

See 9 OTTO.

Claimants. SAME v. FOUR HUNDRED PACKAGES OF DISTILLED SPIRITS, ROWELL C. MERSEREAU, Claimant. SAME v. ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY BARRELS OF WHISKY, JOSEPH ROELLE ET AL. Claimants.

(See S. C., "Whisky Cases" 9 Otto, 594-606.)

Accomplices as witnesses—right to pardon—authority of district attorney.

1. Accomplices, though admitted as witnesses for the prosecution, are not of right entitled to a pardon, but have only an equitable right to a recommendation to the executive clemency.

2. Prisoners, under such circumstances, cannot plead such right in bar of an indictment against them, nor avail themselves of it as a defense on their trial, though it may be made the ground of a motion for putting off their trial, in order to allow time for an application to the pardoning power.

3. The district attorney has no authority to make an agreement, that if a person charged with an offense would testify against his accomplices, he should be exempt from prosecution, and from certain assessments made against him.

[Nos. 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 975.]
Argued Mar. 21, 24, 25, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error:

The alleged agreement, being without warrant of law, is void, and could not be made the foundation of any order or judgment of the court.

The power to pardon and thereby grant immunity for the consequences of crime committed, is given by the Constitution to the President alone. The courts cannot exercise the power, or trench in any manner or to any extent upon this prerogative of the President. There cannot be immunity before pardon.

The leading case on this subject is that reported in Rex v. Rudd, 1 Cowp., 331, also reported in 1 Leach. C. L., 115, and known as Rudd's Case.

Lord Mansfield, said, Rex v. Rudd, 1 Cowp., 334:

"It can only come before the court by way of application to put off the trial, in order to give the prisoner time to apply elsewhere."

The doctrine of this case has been followed to this day both in England and in this country.

Rex v. Gariside, 2 Ad. & El., 266; Ex parte Wells, 18 How., 307 (59 U. S., XV., 421); U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet., 159; in People v. Whipple, 9 Cow., 707, it is said by Duer, Chief Justice, 9 Cow., 716, that the authority of the court extends no further than the recommendation to mercy. It must after all rest with the Executive, whether that recommendation be complied with or not.

See, also, U. S. v. Lee, 4 McLean, 103.

Messrs. Edward Jussen and Chas. H. Reed, for defendants in error:

When an accomplice turns State's evidence, or becomes a witness for the Government in criminal or quasi criminal cases, he thereby becomes ipso facto entitled to full immunity from prosecution for any and all offenses to which he was a party with the accomplices against whom he testifies.

U. S. v. Lee, 4 McLean, 103; 4 Bl. Com., 331;

Rudd's Case, 1 Cowp., 336; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow., 707.

It is lawful for the Government to accept an accomplice as a witness. If an accomplice is thus accepted, and testifies fully, fairly and truthfully, the law gives him an implied promise of protection from prosecution or punishment for the offense concerning which he thus testifies.

We are unable to find any reported case where such an agreement has been interposed as a defense and passed upon by the court.

We suppose the reason why no such case can be found, is because no such agreement has ever been questioned.

There are, however, two cases where this question was presented to some extent by insufficient pleas.

See, Commonwealth v. Brown, 103 Mass., 422; Commonwealth v. Woodside, 105 Mass., 594.

The plain inference from the decisions in those cases is, that the court would have decided such an express agreement a good defense.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Accomplices in guilt, not previously convicted of an infamous crime, when separately tried are competent witnesses for or against each other; and the universal usage is that such a party, if called and examined by the public prosecutor on the trial of his associates in guilt, will not be prosecuted for the same offense, provided it appears that he acted in good faith and that he testified fully and fairly.

Where the case is not within any statute, the general rule is that if an accomplice, when examined as a witness by the public prosecutor, discloses fully and fairly the guilt of himself and his associates, he will not be prosecuted for the offense disclosed; but it is equally clear that he cannot by law plead such facts in bar of any indictment against him, nor avail himself of it upon his trial, for it is merely an equitable title to the mercy of the Executive, subject to the conditions before stated, and can only come before the court by way of application to put off the trial in order to give the prisoner time to apply to the Executive for that purpose. Rea v. Rudd, 1 Cowp., 332.

Sufficient appears to show that the following are the material proceedings in the several cases: (1) That the first two were actions of debt commenced in the circuit court to recover the double internal revenue tax imposed, as fully set forth in the respective declarations. (2) That the other six cases are informations filed in the district court to forfeit the properties therein described for acts done in violation of the internal revenue laws.

Service was made in the first two cases, and the defendants appeared and plead the general issue and the special plea set forth in the transcript. Issue was joined upon the first plea, and the United States demurred to the special plea. Hearing was had, and the court overruled the demurrer and gave judgment for the defendants. Like defenses in the form of answers or pleas were filed in the other six cases commenced in the district court, to which the United States demurred; but the district court overruled the demurrers, and finally rendered judgment in each case for the defendants.

Prompt steps were taken by the district attorney to remove the cases into the circuit court, where the respective judgments rendered by the district court were affirmed.

Suffice it to say in this connection, without entering into detail, that the United States sued out a writ of error in each case and removed the same into this court. Both parties agree that the questions presented for decision are the same in each case, in which the court here fully concurs.

Two errors are assigned as causes for reversing the judgment, which present very clearly the matters in controversy as discussed at the bar. (1) That the plea or answer set up as defense is bad because it is too general and does not set forth the supposed agreement in traversable form. When filed, the first assignment of error also objected to the plea or answer that it did not designate the officer who made the alleged agreement, which was plainly a valid objection to it; but that was obviated at the argument, it being conceded by the United States that the plea or answer should be understood as alleging that the supposed agreement was made by the district attorney. (2) That the plea or answer is bad because the officer representing the Government in these prosecutions had no authority to make the agreement pleaded, and that the court cannot enforce it, as it is void.

As amended, it requires no argument to show that the plea or answer cannot be understood as alleging that the President was a party to any such agreement, as the distinct allegation is that it was made by the district attorney; nor could any such implication have arisen even if the pleading had not been amended, as it is settled law that suits of the kind to recover municipal forfeitures must be prosecuted in the subordinate courts by the district attorney, and in this court, when brought here by appeal or writ of error, by the Attorney-General. Confiscation Cases, 7 Wall., 454 [74 U. S., XIX., 196]. Suppose the plea to be amended as stipulated at the argument, the first question is, whether as amended it sets up a good defense to the several actions. Taken in that view, it alleges in substance and effect that the district attorney promised the defendants that if they would testify in behalf of the United States frankly and truthfully when required, in reference to a conspiracy among certain government officials in the internal revenue service, and other parties then known to exist, whereby the honest manufacture of distilled spirits and the collection of the tax thereon had been rendered practically impossible, and would plead guilty to one count in an indictment then pending against them in said district court, and would withdraw their pleas in certain condemnation cases then pending against their property in said district court, for the purpose only of insuring their good faith in so testifying on behalf of the United States, then the United States would recall any and all assessments under the internal revenue law made against them; and that no more assessments under said law should be made against them, that no more proceedings against them should be commenced on account of violations of the internal revenue laws then passed; and that no penalties or forfeitures should in any manner be enforced or recovered against them or their property; that all suits for penalties and for forfeitures then pending against them and their property should be dismissed, and that full and complete indemnity should be granted to them as the said claimants.

Complete performance on their part is alleged by the claimants, and they allege that the pending suits are for the condemnation and confiscation of their property, which was seized by the United States on the ground of the alleged violation of the internal revenue law, prior to entering into the said agreement. Assessments made against the claimants or their property are to be recalled, and they and their property are to be free of internal revenue taxation. Proceedings pending against them for violations of the internal revenue laws are to be dismissed and no more are to be instituted, and the claimants are promised full and complete indemnity, civil and criminal, if they will consent to testify.

Considering the scope and comprehensive character of the supposed agreement, it is not strange that the district attorney deemed it proper to demur to the plea. He took two objections to it; but the court will examine the second one first, as if that is sustained, the other will become immaterial.

Waiving, for the present, the question whether the district attorney may contract with an accomplice of an accused person on trial, that if he will testify in the case his taxes shall be abated, or that he and his property shall be exempt from internal revenue taxation, the court will consider in the first place whether the district attorney, as a public prosecutor, may properly enter into an agreement with such an accomplice, that if he will testify fully and fairly in such a prosecution against his associate in guilt he shall not be prosecuted for the same offense; and if so, whether such an agreement, if the witness performs on his part, will avail the witness as a defense to the criminal charge in case of a subsequent prosecution.

Considered in its full scope, the agreement is that, in consideration of the defendants testifying against their co-conspirators who were indicted for defrauding the revenue, they, the defendants, should have a full and complete discharge, not only from all criminal liability, but from all penalties and forfeitures they had incurred, and from liability for their internal revenue taxes which they had fraudulently refused to pay, giving them full and complete indemnity, civil and criminal, for all their fraudulent and illegal acts in respect to the public revenue.

Courts of justice everywhere agree that the established usage is that an accomplice duly admitted as a witness in a criminal prosecution against his associates in guilt, if he testifies fully and fairly, will not be prosecuted for the same offense, and some of the decided cases and standard text writers give very satisfactory explanations of the origin and scope of the usage in its ordinary application in actual practice. Beyond doubt, some of the elements of the usage had their origin in the ancient and obsolete practice called approvement, which may be briefly explained as follows: when a person indicted of treason or felony was arraigned, he might confess the charge before plea pleaded, and appeal, or accuse another as his accomplice of the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. Such approvement was only allowed in capital offenses, and See 9 OTTO.

was equivalent to indictment, as the appellee was equally required to answer to the charge; and if proved guilty, the judgment of the law was against him, and the approver, so called, was entitled to his pardon ex debito justitiæ. On the other hand, if the appellee was acquitted, the judgment was that the approver should be condemned. 4 Bl. Com., 330.

Speaking upon that subject, Lord Mansfield said, more than a century ago, that there were three ways in the law and practice of that country in which an accomplice could be entitled to a pardon: First, in the case of approvement, which, as he stated, then still remained a part of the common law, though he admitted it had grown into disuse by long discontinuance. Second, by discovering two or more offenders, as required in the two Acts of Parliament to which he referred. Third, persons embraced in some royal proclamation, as authorized by an Act of Parliament, to which he added, that in all these cases the court will bail the prisoner in order to give him an opportunity to apply for a pardon.

Approvers, as well as those who disclosed two or more accomplices in guilt and those who came within the promise of a royal proclamation, were entitled to a pardon; and the same high authority states that besides those ancient statutory regulations there was another practice in respect to accomplices who were admitted as witnesses in criminal prosecutions against their associates, which he explains as follows: where the accomplice has made a full and fair confession of the whole truth and is admitted as a witness for the crown, the practice is, if he act fairly and openly and discover the whole truth, though he is not entitled of right to a pardon, yet the usage, the lenity, and the practice of the court is to stop the prosecution against the accomplice, the understanding being that he has an equitable title to a recommendation for the King's mercy.

Subsequent remarks of the court in that opinion showed that the ancient statutes referred to were wholly inapplicable to the case, and that there remained even at that date only the equitable practice which gives a title to recommendation to the mercy of the Crown. Explanations then follow which prove that the practice referred to was adopted in substitution for the ancient doctrine of approvement, modified and modeled so as to be received with greater favor. As modified it gives, as the court said in that case, a kind of hope to the accomplice that if he behaves fairly and discloses the whole truth, he may, by a recommendation to mercy, save himself from punishment and secure a pardon, which shows to a demonstration that the protection, if any, to be given to the accomplice rests on the described usage and his own good behavior; for if he acts in bad faith, or fails to testify fully and fairly, he may still be prosecuted as if he had never been admitted as a witness. Rex v. Rudd, 1 Cowp., 332; S. C., 1 Leach, C. C., 115.

Great inconvenience arose from the practice of approvement, in consequence of which a mode of proceeding was adopted in analogy to that law, by which an accomplice may be entitled to a recommendation to mercy but not to a pardon as of legal right, nor can he plead it in bar or avail himself of it on his trial. 2 Hawk. P. C., n. 3, p. 532; 3 Russ. Crimes, 9th Am. ed., 596.

In the present practice, says Mr. Starkie, where accomplices make a full and fair confession of the whole truth, and are in consequence admitted to give evidence for the Crown, if they afterwards give their testimony fairly and openly, although they are not of right entitled to a pardon, the usage, lenity and practice of the court is to stay the prosecution against them and they have an equitable title to a recommendation to the King's mercy. 2 Stark. Ev., 4th Am. ed., 15.

Participes criminis in such a case, when called and examined as witnesses for the prosecution, says Roscoe, have an equitable title to a recommendation for the royal mercy; but they cannot plead this in bar to an indictment against them, nor can they avail themselves of it as a defense on their trial, though it may be made the ground of a motion for putting off the trial in order to give the prisoner time to present an application for the executive clemency. Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 9th Am. ed., 597.

Authorities of the highest character almost without number support that proposition, nor is it necessary to look beyond the decisions of this court to establish the correctness of the rule. Ex parte Wells, 18 How., 307 [59 U. S., XV., 421].

Special reference is made in that case to the three ancient modes of practice which authorized accomplices, when admitted as witnesses in criminal prosecutions, to claim a pardon as a matter of right; and the court having explained the course of such proceedings, remarked that, except in those cases, accomplices, though admitted to testify for the prosecution, have no absolute claim or legal right to executive clemency.

Much consideration appears to have been given to the question in that case, and the court held that the only claim the accomplice has in such a case is an equitable one for pardon, and that only upon the condition that he makes a full and fair disclosure of the guilt of himself and that of his associates, that he cannot plead it in bar of an indictment against him for the offense, nor use it in any way except to support a motion to put off the trial in order to give him time to apply for a pardon.

Three quarters of a century before that, ten of the twelve Judges of England decided in the same way, holding that the accomplice in such a case cannot set up such a claim in bar to an indictment against him, nor avail himself of it upon his trial, that such a claim for mercy depends upon the conditions before described, and that it can only come before the court by way of application to put off the trial in order to give the party time to apply for a pardon. Rev v. Rudd, 1 Leach, 125; 1 Chit., Cr. L., ed. 1847, 82; Mass. Cr. L., 175.

An attempt was made sixty years later in the same court to convince the Judges then presiding that some of the remarks of the Chief Justice in Rev v. Rugg, before cited, justified the conclusion that the accomplice in such a case was by law entitled to be exempted from punishment; but Lord Denman replied that the organ of the court on that occasion was not speaking of legal rights in the strict sense, nor of such rights as would constitute a defense to an indictment or an answer to the question why sentence should not be pronounced, saying, in substance and effect, that the right mentioned was only an equitable right, and that the court would postpone the trial or any action in the case to the prejudice of the prisoner, in order to give him an opportunity to apply to the Crown for mercy. Rev v. Garside, 2 Ad. & Ell., 275; Rev v. Lee, Russ. & R., 361; Rev v. Bruntton, Russ. & R., 454.

Other text writers of the highest repute, besides those previously mentioned, affirm the rule that accomplices, though admitted as witnesses for the prosecution, are not of right entitled to a pardon; that they have only an equitable right to a recommendation to the executive clemency; and they all hold that prisoners under such circumstances cannot plead such right in bar of an indictment against them, nor avail themselves of it as a defense on their trial.

None of those propositions can be successfully controverted; but it is equally clear that the party, if he testifies fully and fairly, may make it the ground of a motion to put off the trial in order that he may apply to the executive for the protection which immemorial usage concedes that he is entitled to at the hands of the Executive. 3 Russ. Crimes, 9th Am. ed., 597.

Certain ancient statutory regulations, as already remarked, gave unconditional promise to accomplices of pardon and complete exemption from punishment, and in such cases it was always held that the accomplice, if he was called and examined for the prosecution, was entitled as of right to a pardon, provided he acted in good faith, and testified fully and fairly to the whole truth. Instances of the kind are adverted to by Mr. Phillips in his valuable treatise on Evidence; but he, like the preceding text writer, states that accomplices, when admitted as witnesses, under the more modern usage and practice of the courts, have only an equitable title to be recommended to mercy, on a strict and ample performance, to the satisfaction of the presiding judge, of the conditions on which they were admitted to testify, that such an equitable title cannot be pleaded in bar nor in any manner be set up as a defense to an indictment charging them with the same offense, though it may be made the ground of a motion for putting off their trial in order to allow time for an application to the pardoning power. 1 Phil. Ev., ed., 1868, 86.

Offenders of the kind are not admitted to testify as of course, and sufficient authority exists for saying that in the practice of the English court it is usual that a motion to the court is made for the purpose, and that the court, in view of all the circumstances, will admit or disallow the evidence as will best promote the ends of public justice. 1 Phil. Ev., ed. 1868, 87; 3 Russ. Crimes, 9th Am. ed., 598.

Good reasons exist to suppose that the same course is pursued in the courts of some of the States, where the English practice seems to have been adopted without much modification. People v. Whipple, 9 Cow., 707.

Such offenders everywhere are competent witnesses if they see fit voluntarily to appear and testify; but the course of proceeding in the courts of many of the States is quite different from that just described, the rule being that the court will not advise the Attorney-General how he shall conduct a criminal prosecution. Consequently, it is regarded as the province of the public prosecutor and not of the court to determine whether or not an accomplice, who is willing to criminate himself and his associates in guilt, shall be called and examined for the State.

Of all others, the prosecutor is best qualified to determine that question, as he alone is supposed to know what other evidence can be adduced to prove the criminal charge. Applications of the kind are not always to be granted, and in order to acquire the information necessary to determine the question, the public prosecutor will grant the accomplice an interview, with the understanding that any communications he may make to the prosecutor will be strictly confidential. Interviews for the purpose mentioned are for mutual explanation, and do not absolutely commit either party; but if the accomplice is subsequently called and examined, he is equally entitled to a recommendation for executive clemency. Promise of pardon is never given in such an interview, nor any inducement held out beyond what the beforementioned usage and practice of the courts allow.

Prosecutors in such a case should explain to the accomplice that he is not obliged to criminate himself, and inform him just what he may reasonably expect in case he acts in good faith, and testifies fully and fairly as to his own acts in the case, and those of his associates. When he fulfills those conditions he is equitably entitled to a pardon, and the prosecutor and the court if need be, when fully informed of the facts, will join in such a recommendation.

Modifications of the practice doubtless exist in jurisdictions where the power of pardon does not exist prior to conviction; but every embarrassment of that sort may be removed by the prosecutor, as in the absence of any legislative prohibition he may not, pros. the indictment if pending, or advise the prisoner to plead guilty, he, the prisoner, reserving the right to retract his plea and plead over to the merits if his application for pardon shall be unsuccessful. 1 Bish. Cr. Proc., 2d ed., sec. 1076, and n.

Where the power of pardon exists before conviction, well as after, no such difficulties can arise, as the prisoner, if an attempt is made to put him to trial in spite of his equitable right to pardon, may move that the trial be postponed, and may support his motion by his own affidavit, when the court may properly insist to be informed of all the circumstances. Power under such circumstances is vested in the court in a proper case to put off the trial as long as may be necessary, in order that the case of the prisoner may be presented to the Executive for decision.

Centuries have elapsed since the judicial usage referred to was substituted for the ancient practice of approvement, and experience shows that throughout that whole period it has proved, both here and in the country where it had its origin, to be a proper and satisfactory protection to the accomplice in all cases where he acts in good faith, and testifies fairly and fully to the whole truth. Cases undoubtedly have arisen where the accomplice, having refused to comply with the conditions annexed to his equitable right, has been subsequently tried and convicted, it being first determined that he has forfeited his equitable title to protection by his bad faith and false representations. Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick., 477. Such offenders, if they make a full disclosure of all matters within their knowledge in favor of the prosecution, will not be subjected to punishment; but if they refuse to testify, or testify falsely, they are to be tried, and may be convicted upon their own confession.

Nothing of weight by the way of judicial authority can be invoked in opposition to the views here expressed, as is evident from the brief filed by the defendants, which exhibits proof of research and diligence. Decided cases may be cited which contain unguarded expressions, of which the following are striking examples: People v. Whipple, 9 Cow., 708; U. S. v. Lee, 4 McLean, 103.

Neither of those cases, however, support the proposition for which they are cited. Enough appears in the first case to show that it was objected on behalf of the accomplice that the usage gave him no certain assurance of a pardon, inasmuch as the power of pardon was vested in the Governor, and the authority of the court extended no further than the recommendation for mercy; to which the court responded, that the legal presumption was that the public faith will be preserved inviolate, and that the equitable claim of the party will be ratified and allowed.

Public policy and the great ends of justice, it was said in the second case, require that the arrangement between the public prosecutor and the accomplice should be carried out; and the court proceeded to remark, that if the district attorney failed to enter a nolle prosequi to the indictment, "the court will continue the cause until an application can be made for a pardon," which of itself is a complete recognition of the usage and practice established in the place of the ancient proceeding of approvement. More evil than good flowed from that regulation, and in consequence the practice now acknowledged was substituted in its place, under which the accomplice acquires only an equitable right to the clemency of the Executive, which, as Lord Mansfield said, rests on usage and the good behavior of the accomplice, who in a proper case will be bailed by the court in order that he may apply for the pardon to which he is equitably entitled.

Should it be objected that the application may not be successful, the answer of the court must be in substance that given by Lord Denman on a similar occasion, that we are not to presume that the equitable title to mercy which the humblest and most criminal accomplice may thus acquire by testifying to the truth in a Federal Court will not be sacredly accorded to him by the President, in whom the pardoning power is vested by the Federal Constitution.

Having come to the conclusion that the district attorney had no authority to make the agreement alleged in the plea in bar, it follows that the circuit court erred in the two cases instituted there, in overruling the demurrer to it, and that the judgment must be reversed, and the causes remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the court.

Tested by these considerations, it is clear that the circuit court also erred in affirming the judgment of the district court in all the other cases, and that the judgment in each of those cases must be reversed and the causes remanded, with directions to reverse the judgment of the District Court, and for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the court.

TOWN OF ORLEANS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

NATHAN E. PLATT.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 676-683.)

Charge to jury—facts undisputed—promissory notes, as a consideration for sale—certiorari to review county judge's decision for issue of bonds—recitals in—corporation liable for acts of its servant—lis pendens—conclusive judgment.

1. Where the testimony is all one way and is conclusive in its effect, a party has no right to ask a charge which assumes that it is otherwise.

2. If the facts in favor of plaintiff are clearly established and are sufficient and undisputed, it is competent for the court to give charge to find for plaintiff.

3. Negotiable promissory notes of a purchaser of municipal bonds are sufficient consideration for their sale.

4. Where a certiorari was granted to review the order of a County Judge for the issue of county bonds, and before the reversal of the order the commissioners appointed by the County Judges subscribed for the stock of the railroad company and issued the county bonds, they are valid in the hands of a bona fide holder, although the order for their issue be subsequently reversed.

5. Where a corporation has lawful power to issue such securities, and does so, the bona fide holder has a right to presume the power was properly exercised; and where the bonds on their face recite the circumstances which bring them within the power, the corporation is estopped to deny the truth of the recital.

6. A corporation is liable for the acts of its servants while engaged in the business of their employment, to the same extent that individuals are liable under like circumstances.

7. The doctrine of lis pendens has no application to commercial securities.

8. When the county judge was the officer charged by law with the duty to decide whether the bonds could be legally issued, his judgment is conclusive until reversed by a higher court.

[No. 176.]

Argued Mar. 11, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York.

The defendant in error was the plaintiff below where the case arose.

The facts fully appear in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Levi H. Brown, Chas. A. Sherman and H. L. Comstock, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Francis Kernan, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought upon interest coupons belonging to alleged bonds of the Town of Orleans, in the State of New York. There are thirteen assignments of error in the record. Ten of them relate to the admission or rejection of evidence. All these ten have been pressed upon our attention; but we think there is nothing in them. We shall, therefore, pass them by without giving to either of them special consideration. The proceedings of the County Judge touching the issuing of the bonds, and the bonds themselves, were sought to be excluded. This proceeded upon a misconception of the law of evidence. The plaintiff had a right to exhibit his case. These documents, according to his view, were links in his chain of title to recover. To shut them out would have been to condemn him unheard, and to give judgment against him without trial. The admissibility of testimony under such circumstances, and its effect after it is admitted and all the other evidence is in, are very different questions.

The twelfth assignment is, that the defendant asked the court to submit to the jury, as distinct issues to be tried, the propositions whether the two railroad companies which had held the bonds and the plaintiff were bona fide holders, and that the court refused.

Where the testimony is all one way and is conclusive in its effect, a party has no right to ask a charge which assumes that it is otherwise. It would tend to create a doubt where none existed or ought to exist, and might mislead the jury.

Admitting that there could be doubt as to the companies, a concession by no means necessary to be made, there could be none, as the case appears in the record, with respect to the plaintiff. The inquiry was, therefore, immaterial as to them, and wrong as to him. The court properly declined to accede to the request.

The tenth and eleventh assignments charge error in the refusal of the court to direct the jury to find for the defendant. The former relates to a general request and refusal; the latter, to a request upon twelve specified grounds, with the same result.

The last assignment complains that the court directed the jury to find for the plaintiff.

It is well settled in the jurisprudence of this court, that if the facts are clearly established and are undisputed, it is competent for the court to give such a charge.

In one of the cases brought before us, where it had been done, the practice was commended, and it was remarked that "it gives the certainty of applied science to the results of judicial investigation." Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008]. In whose favor the charge should have been given, will appear by the result of our examination of the case.

We have already adverted to the good faith of the defendant in error as a purchaser. When he bought, he gave his negotiable notes, payable at different times for the purchase money.

The consideration was sufficient. 1 Daniel, Neg. Secur., 584. Whether the notes were absolute, presumptive or conditional payment, or only special collaterals to the amount to be paid, are points upon which there is great conflict in the authorities. 1 Parsons, N. & B., 151, ch. VII. We need not consider the subject in this case.

The plaintiff was not bound to allow his paper to go to protest, and take the hazards of the litigation which would have followed. The refusal to pay the note first due, upon the ground of the want of consideration, would, doubtless, have led to the transfer of the other notes, all under due, and as to them, in that case, there could have been no defense. But irrespective of this, there could have been none upon the merits.

NOTE.—When a verdict may be directed by the court. See note to Grand Chute v. Winegar, 82 U. S., XXI., 174.

In Otis v. Cullum, 92 U.S., 447 [XXIII., 496], a county bond issued in Iowa had been sold to the plaintiffs in New York. The Supreme Court of the State adjudged it void. The plaintiffs sued to recover back what they had paid for it. This court held that in such cases there is only an implied warranty of title and genuineness, and that if there were no guaranty, and no fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the vendor in selling, the plaintiffs could not recover. It was said that such instruments pass from hand to hand like bank-notes, and that if invalid, the law would not inflict the hardship of compelling everyone who had passed them to pay back what he had received from his transferee. This case followed Lambert v. Heath, 15 Mees. & W., 486, in which the same point was ruled in the same way.

The important question here is, whether the bonds were wholly void, like a promissory note given for a gaming consideration, and made a nullity by statute; or whether they were of such a character that a bona fide holder could enforce them like any other commercial security, free from infirmity.

It is not denied that the statutory authority to issue them under the circumstances designated was ample and valid. In this respect our attention has been called to no defect; no question has been raised upon the subject.

Parties claiming to be a majority of the tax payers, and to own the main part of the taxable property of the town, petitioned the County Judge for an order that the bonds of the Town, to the amount of $80,000, should be issued to enable it to subscribe and pay for that amount of the capital stock of the Clayton and Theresa Railroad Company. After hearing the petitioners and their opponents at the appointed time, the Judge, on the 1st of July, 1871, ordered the bonds to be issued, and, pursuant to the statute, appointed three commissioners to execute and deliver them. An application was thereupon made by the dissatisfied parties to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari. The writ was allowed on the 30th of September, 1871. It was served upon the County Judge, and he made the proper return. On the 27th of June, 1872, the Supreme Court, at a General Term, affirmed the judgment. In the month of July following, the case was taken to the Court of Appeals, and in February, 1873, that court reversed the previous judgments and ordered the petition to be dismissed.

On the 3d of April, 1872, the commissioners appointed by the County Judge subscribed for 800 shares of the stock of the railroad company, amounting to $80,000, and on the next day issued and delivered in payment 160 of the bonds of the Town of $500 each, and thereupon received from the company scrip for the stock, which the Town still holds. On the face of each bond was a certificate that it had been duly registered in the clerk's office of the county. The coupons in suit in this case were attached to 140 of these bonds. On the 26th of February, 1872, and on the 31st of May, 1873, the Clayton and Theresa Company entered into a contract with the Utica and Black River Railroad Company, and at the date of the second contract delivered all the bonds to Isaac Maynard, as collateral security for the fulfillment of both contracts, and with authority to him to sell the bonds and pay over the proceeds to the latter company. On the 4th of February, 1874, Maynard sold to the plaintiff the bonds here in question, under the circumstances before stated.

The Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the County Judge, solely upon the ground that when the case was before him he had refused to allow tax payers who had signed the petition to withdraw their signatures, although applications for that purpose were made, and if it had been permitted, the numbers and taxable property represented would have been below the standard required by the statute to authorize the judgment that was rendered. It does not appear that any other objection was made by the contestants. People v. Sawyer, 52 N. Y., 296. The previous reported adjudications are said to have been all contrary to this decision; none of them, however, were by the court of last resort. Matter of Tax payers of Greene, 38 How. Pr., 515; Mem. of Decisions of Sup. Court, fols. 281, 282; see, also, People v. Mitchell, 35 N. Y., 555.

The bonds showed no defect upon their face. They purported to be issued by virtue of certain specified Acts of the Legislature, and set forth that the "Commissioners, under the Acts above referred to, for the Town of Orleans, * * * upon the faith and credit and on behalf of said Town, and confirmed by a majority of the tax payers, representing a majority of the taxable property of the same, according to said Acts, for value received, do hereby promise," etc.

When the County Judge appointed the commissioners to issue the bonds, it was made their duty to proceed "with all reasonable dispatch." They were not parties to the proceedings upon the certiorari, and hence were not directly affected by them. The same remarks apply to the corporation that received the bonds in payment for its stock. It is expressly provided by statute that, in case of disagreement of the commissioners touching the issuing of the bonds, the Supreme Court may decide and direct what shall be done, and that "Said court * * * shall have power at any time, by injunction, to prevent the issue of said bonds, or any part thereof, on notice and for good cause shown; and any judge of said court may grant a temporary injunction until such motion can be heard." Laws of 1871, Vol. II., p. 2119, ch. 935, sec. 5. In this case, a preliminary injunction might and should have been procured forbidding the commissioners to issue the bonds, and the railroad company, if it received them, from parting with them, until the case made by the certiorari was finally brought to a close. This would have involved only an ordinary exercise of equity jurisdiction. Ill. v. Delafield, 8 Paige, 527; DeLafield v. Ill., on appeal, 2 Hill, 159. The omission was gross laches. This negligence is the source of all the difficulties of the plaintiff in error touching the bonds. The loss, if any shall ensue, will be due, not to the law or its administration, but to the supineness of the town and the contestants. Ray Co. v. Van Syckle, 96 U. S., 675 [XXIV., 800].

Where one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss, and one of them has contributed to produce it, the law throws the burden upon him, and not upon the other party. Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk., 289; Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk. [supra].

The bonds in question have all the properties of commercial paper, and in the view of the law they belong to that category. Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall., 110 [69 U. S., XVII., 857]. This court has uniformly held, when the question has been presented, that where a corporation has lawful power to issue such securities, and does so, the bona fide holder has a right to presume the power was properly exercised, and is not bound to look beyond the question of its existence. Where the bonds on their face recite the circumstances which bring them within the power, the corporation is estopped to deny the truth of the recital. Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 [68 U. S., XVII., 548]; San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S., 312 [XXIV., 816]; Moultre Co. v. Bk., 92 U. S., 631 [XXIII., 631]; Moran v. Miami Co. Comrs., 2 Black., 722 [67 U. S., XVII., 342]; Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 [62 U. S., XVI., 208]; Royal British Bk. v. Turquand, 6 El. & Bl., 327.

A corporation is liable for the acts of its servants while engaged in the business of their employment, to the same extent that individuals are liable under like circumstances. R. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How., 209 [62 U. S., XVI., 75]; Greene v. Omnibus Co., 7 C. B. (N. S.), 290; L. and F. Ins. Co. v. Mech. F. Ins. Co., 7 Wend., 31.

The doctrine of lis pendens has no application to commercial securities. Murray v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch., 441; Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa., 388; Stone v. Elliott, 11 Ohio, 252; Mims v. West, 38 Ga., 18; Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y., 585; Warren Co. v. Marcy, not yet reported [97 U. S., 96, XXIV., 977]. See, in the case last named, Mr. Justice Bradley's full examination of the subject.

The County Judge was the officer charged by law with the duty to decide whether the bonds could be legally issued, and his judgment was conclusive until reversed by a higher court. Lynde v. County, 16 Wall., 6 [83 U. S., XXI., 272]; Town of Rock Creek v. Strong, 96 U. S., 271 [XXIV., 815]. The plaintiff had no notice, actual or constructive, of the proceedings in the case subsequent to the first judgment, and is in nowise affected by them.

Warren Co. v. Marcy is in effect decisive of the case in hand. There the Board of Supervisors claimed to be authorized by a popular vote to subscribe for the stock of a railroad company, and to pay in county bonds to be issued by themselves. A tax payer filed a bill in the county circuit court, and procured a preliminary injunction prohibiting the issue of the bonds. Before the final hearing this injunction was dissolved; at the final hearing the bill was dismissed. There had been no injunction in force after the preliminary injunction was dissolved of.

The complainant appealed to the Supreme Court of the State. There, in due time, the decree of the lower court was reversed, and the case was remanded with directions to enter a decree in conformity to the prayer of the bill. But between the time of the dissolution of the preliminary injunction and the final hearing in the court below the supervisors subscribed for the stock and issued the bonds.

The same question arose as to the bonds there as here.

This court held that in the hands of a bona fide holder they were free from objection and could be enforced.

Our examination of this case with respect to the bonds here in question constrains us to come to the same conclusion.

There is no difference between the two cases in any material point.

We think the instruction given by the court below to the jury was correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

Cited—99 U. S., 684, 685, 686; 101 U. S., 204; 102 U. S., 290; 1 McCrary, 463; 89 N. Y., 587; 11 N. W. Rep., 192; 16 N. W. Rep., 505.

LAFAYETTE M. FLOURNOY, PRESIDENT OF THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF KENTUCKY,
Plff. in Err.,

v.

ALFRED LASTRAPES.

Sheriff's deed—objection not taken in court below—verdict for defendant—judgment in suit to quiet title.

1. In Louisiana, a sheriff's deed is good, if executed by a deputy-sheriff in his own name, and not in the name of the sheriff.

2. An objection, not made in the court below, cannot be considered here.

3. A verdict of a jury, "for the defendant," is equivalent to a special finding in favor of the defendant upon each and every one of the issues tried.

4. In a suit to quiet title to real property, where the defendant, in his answer, set out his title, and asked that it be recognized and acknowledged, and that plaintiff be adjudged to deliver to him possession, judgment may be rendered in favor of defendant for the property in controversy.

[No. 186.]

Submitted Mar. 27, 1879. Decided Apr. 7, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The plaintiff in error brought suit in the court below, to quiet his title to certain real property. The defendant answered, claiming title and praying to have his title established and possession delivered to him, and that "in default whereof writs of possession issue in due course." Judgment having been given for the defendant, the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Thomas Hunton, for plaintiff in error.
Mr. W. Hallett Phillips, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The first error assigned in this case is to the effect that the court admitted in evidence to prove the title of the defendant, a sheriff's deed executed by a deputy sheriff in his own name, and not in the name of a sheriff. In some States this would be a good objection, but in Louisiana the rule appears to be otherwise. The precise question was raised and directly decided in Kellar v. Blanchard, 21 La. Ann., 41, and we are not advised that the authority of this case has ever been questioned.

The second assignment is, that the sale and adjudication of the property by the deputy-sheriff was null and void, on account of the insufficiency of the bid. No such objection was made below, and it cannot be considered here.

The third assignment is, that the verdict of the jury was too vague and indefinite. The verdict was "for the defendant." This is equivalent to a special finding in favor of the defendant upon each and every one of the issues tried, and authorizes any judgment that could be entered on such a finding.

The only remaining assignment is, that the court gave judgment in favor of the defendant for the property in controversy. It is claimed that this could not be done under the pleadings. The prayer of the petition was that the petitioner might be decreed to be the true and lawful owner of the property; that if the defendant set up color of title he might be required to produce the same; and if it should appear insufficient, that he might be prohibited from claiming ownership. The defendant answered, setting out his title, and asking that it be recognized and acknowledged, and that the plaintiff be condemned to surrender and deliver to the defendant full possession. The judgment followed this prayer in the answer.

Affirmed.

DAVID N. BARROW, Admr. of FERDINAND
M. GOODRICH, Deceased, Appt.

v.

LOGAN HUNTON.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 80-85.)

Removal of causes—jurisdiction.

1. A proceeding in a State Court of Louisiana to procure the nullity of a former judgment of that court, for causes relative to the form of proceeding and not relative to the merits, cannot be transferred to the U. S. Circuit Court.

2. The character of cases is always open to examination for the purpose of determining whether the courts of the United States are incompetent to take jurisdiction thereof.

[No. 201.]

Argued Apr. 3, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. L. Bright and David N. Barrow, for appellant:

The circuit court has no jurisdiction to annul the judgment of a state court, and cannot enjoin its judgment.

2 Story, Const., sec. 1757; see, also, 1 Kent, Com., 7th ed., sec. 19, p. 451; Bank v. Turnbull, 16 Wall., 195 (83 U. S., XXI., 297).

That it was only auxiliary and incidental to the original suit is, we think, too clear to require discussion.

Gwin v. Breedlove, 2 How., 35; Freeman v. Howe, 24 How., 460 (65 U. S., XVI., 752); Dunn v. Clarke, 8 Pet., 1; Williams v. Bryne, Hemp., 472.

In Brooks v. Montgomery, 23 La. Ann., 450, the court decided: "The sale of property which has been seized by the Marshal of the United States, under a writ of fi. facias which has issued from the circuit court thereof, cannot be enjoined by a state court, on the allegation of a third party that the property seized belongs to him, and is not that of the defendant in the suit under which the fi. fa. issued. In all cases of this kind the court which issued the original process by which the seizure was made, has the exclusive right to determine its jurisdiction in the case."

See 9 OTTO.

An action to annul a judgment must be brought before the same court that rendered it. Stevenson v. Weber, 29 La. Ann., 105.

Messrs. T. J. Durant, C. W. Hornor and Thos. Hunton, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 19th of January, 1874, Logan Hunton recovered in the Fourth District Court for the Parish of Orleans, Louisiana, against F. M. Goodrich and one Pilcher, a judgment for $2,500, and interest at eight per cent. per annum from May 1, 1861. On the 28th of January, Goodrich filed a petition in said court, praying for a decree of nullity of the said judgment and for an injunction in the meantime; setting forth as grounds for such relief that the judgment complained of was void, because it was founded on a default taken, and no lawful service of the petition and citation in the suit had ever been made on him, Goodrich; and because the partnership of Pilcher & Goodrich had been dissolved before 1866; and because he, Goodrich, had been discharged as a bankrupt in 1868. An injunction and citation were thereupon issued and served.

On Feb. 3, 1874, Hunton, the defendant in this proceeding, filed a petition for the removal of the action of nullity to the Circuit Court of the United States, alleging that he was a citizen of Missouri, and that Goodrich, the plaintiff, was a citizen of Louisiana; and after a hearing on the subject, an order of removal was made by the district court. The plaintiff moved the Circuit Court of the United States to remand the cause; but this motion was denied, and the suit proceeded in the latter court. After various proceedings had, the plaintiff, by leave of the court, amended his petition to conform to the equity practice of the United States Court, converting it into a bill in equity containing substantially the same averments, and praying the same relief as before. The defendant answered, and the parties went to proofs. Amongst the proofs adduced was an exemplification of the record and proceedings in the original suit in which the judgment was rendered, which the plaintiff in this suit sought to have declared null and void. On the 14th of February, 1876, the circuit court made a final decree, as follows: "This cause came on to be heard upon the bill, answer, replication and proofs, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the injunction herein issued by the state court was wrongfully obtained and is, therefore, dissolved. And it is further ordered and decreed that the plaintiff's bill be dismissed at his costs."

A rehearing having been refused, the decree was confirmed on the 28th of February, 1876.

From this decree the present appeal was taken and it is sought to be reversed on two grounds, upon which errors are assigned, namely:

1. That the transfer was illegally made, and the circuit court was without jurisdiction.

2. That it appears that the fourth district court which rendered the judgment against F. M. Goodrich, was without jurisdiction, and therefore the judgment was null and void.

The question presented with regard to the jurisdiction of the circuit court is, whether the proceeding to procure nullity of the former judgment in such a case as the present is or is not in its nature a separate suit, or whether it is a supplementary proceeding so connected with the original suit as to form an incident to it, and substantially a continuation of it. If the proceeding is merely tantamount to the common law practice of moving to set aside a judgment for irregularity, or to a writ of error, or to a bill of review or an appeal, it would belong to the latter category, and the United States Court could not properly entertain jurisdiction of the case. Otherwise, the Circuit Courts of the United States would become invested with power to control the proceedings in the state courts, or would have appellate jurisdiction over them in all cases where the parties are citizens of different States. Such a result would be totally inadmissible.

On the other hand, if the proceedings are tantamount to a bill in equity to set aside a decree for fraud in the obtaining thereof, then they constitute an original and independent proceeding and, according to the doctrine laid down in Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S., 10 [XXIII., 524], the case might be within the cognizance of the Federal Courts. The distinction between the two classes of cases may be somewhat nice, but it may be affirmed to exist. In the one class there would be a mere revision of errors and irregularities, or of the legality and correctness of the judgments and decrees of the state courts; and in the other class, the investigation of a new case arising upon new facts, although having relation to the validity of an actual judgment or decree, or of the party's right to claim any benefit by reason thereof.

It would seem apparent that the proceeding in the present case was one that affected the mere regularity of the original judgment. In the common law practice, it would have been a motion to set aside the judgment for irregularity, or a writ of error coram vobis.

It will be more satisfactory, however, to take a brief view of the practice of Louisiana on this subject.

The process for procuring nullity of a judgment in that State, is prescribed by the Code of Practice, in which we find the following provisions:

"Article 556. Definitive judgments may be revised, set aside, or reversed: 1, by a new trial; 2, by appeal; 3, by action of nullity; 4, by rescission. The last mode can only be exercised by minors, or persons who were absent when judgment was rendered against them."

"Article 605. The causes for which the nullity of a definitive judgment may be demanded are twofold: those that are relative to the form of proceeding, and those that appertain to the merits of the question to be tried."

Article 606 specifies the vices of form for which a judgment can be annulled; as, when against a minor appearing without a curator, or against a married woman appearing without the authority of her husband; where the defendant is condemned by default without being cited; where the judge was incompetent to try the suit; and where defendant has not been legally cited, and has not entered appearance, and judgment is by default.

Article 607 specifies the grounds of nullity relating to the merits, namely: where the judgment has been obtained through fraud, bribery, forgery of documents, etc.

"Article 608. The nullity of judgment may be demanded from the same court which has rendered the same, or from the court of appeal before which the appeal from such judgment was taken pursuant to the provisions hereafter expressed.

Article 609. The nullity can be demanded on the appeal, only while the appeal is still pending, and when the nullity is apparent on the face of the records.

Article 610. The party praying for the nullity of a judgment before the court which has rendered the same must bring his action by means of a petition; and the adverse party must be cited to appear, as in ordinary suits."

From these extracts it is to be inferred that the action of nullity must be brought in the same court which rendered the judgment, or in the court of appeal when an appeal is pending. And so the Supreme Court of Louisiana has decided. Hennen, Dig., art. Judg., XI. (c), and cases there cited. In David v. Cabouret, 1 La. Ann., 171, the court says: "The settlement made before the notary, under the order of the judge, * * * sought to be annulled in this suit, was made the judgment of the court by a decree, * * * and before that court alone ought the action to annul the act to have been brought." The action of rescission, which is nearly identical with that of nullity, is expressly required to be brought in the court that rendered the judgment. C. Pr., 616.

The fact that an action of nullity can only be brought in the court which rendered the judgment, or in the court to which such judgment is appealed, is entitled to some weight in determining the question now under consideration. It shows that in the estimation of the Legislature of Louisiana there is a manifest propriety in submitting the question of the validity of a judgment to the court which rendered it, or to the court which has the right to revise the judgment by way of appeal. We are not disposed, however, to allow this consideration to operate so far as to make it an invariable criterion of the want of jurisdiction in the Courts of the United States. If the State Legislatures could, by investing certain courts with exclusive jurisdiction over certain subjects, deprive the Federal Courts of all jurisdiction, they might seriously interfere with the right of the citizen to resort to those courts. The character of the cases themselves is always open to examination for the purpose of determining whether, ratione materiae, the Courts of the United States are incompetent to take jurisdiction thereof. State rules on the subject cannot deprive them of it.

The classification of the causes of nullity in the Louisiana Code into causes relative to form and those relative to the merits is nearly coincident with the classification above suggested, of cases which are and cases which are not, cognizable in the courts of the United States. Causes of nullity relating to form would fall in that class of cases which could not be brought in these courts, or be removed thereto. The present case is one of that character. It is precisely described in the 4th division of the 606th article of the Code.

In our judgment, therefore, the case was one of which the circuit court could not take cognizance; and, therefore, the judgment must be reversed and the record remitted, with directions to remand the cause to the state court from which it was removed.

Cited—109 U. S., 503; 111 U. S., 667; 3 McCrary, 312; 10 Biss., 517.

THE NEW ORLEANS CANAL AND BANKING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

NEW ORLEANS.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 97-99.)

Federal question—burden of proof.

Where the question in the state court was whether it sustained the taxation of a bank on its United States legal tender notes, the burden of proof is on the bank to show that it has been unlawfully taxed. The decision of the state assessor must stand, unless it can be affirmatively controverted.

[No. 836.]

Submitted Jan. 10, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Jno. Finney, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Samuel P. Blanc, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, brought to reverse a judgment of that court, affirming the judgment of the Superior District Court for the Parish of Orleans. The judgment of the latter court, which was thus affirmed, was a judgment for $10,500, and interest, being for taxes alleged to be due from the New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, the plaintiffs in error, to the City of New Orleans. In assessing the taxes of the City for the year 1876, the Bank had been assessed, in addition to its real estate, for the sum of $700,000, as its capital, or money at interest; and the rate of assessment being one and a half per cent., the tax amounted to $10,500. This the Bank refused to pay, on the ground that its capital, not invested in real estate, consisted of United States legal tender notes. Whether this was so or not was the question in the cause; for it was not contended, on the part of the City, that it would be lawful to tax United States securities in the hands of the Bank. The question, therefore, was really one of fact; but as the Bank alleges that, under pretense of deciding the question of fact, the state courts have really sustained a taxation of its legal tender notes, it becomes our duty to examine the case.

It seems, from a statement which was admitted in evidence, that from February 1, 1875, to July 1, 1875, the period during which the assessment roll was made up, the Bank, did, in fact, have on hand an amount of currency in the form of legal tender notes, varying from

See 9 Otto.

$1,500,000 to $766,000; the latter being the amount on hand on the 30th of June, 1875; but there was no proof in the cause to establish the fact that these notes constituted the capital of the Bank, any more than that any other equal portion of its assets constituted such capital.

The nominal capital of the Bank was $1,000,000, and estimating its real estate at $200,000, the assessment was still $100,000 less than the balance of the nominal capital; and it was conceded that the Bank had a large amount of assets, independent of the currency in its possession. By a statement put into the case by the Bank, with consent of counsel, it appeared that on the 28th of June, 1875, its affairs stood as follows:

ASSETS.

Real estate.....	$182,516.85
Stocks.....	8,228.35
Taxes paid.....	14,431.65
Suspended debts.....	54,740.80
Foreign and domestic bills protested.....	26,949.73
Notes and bills discounted.....	1,833,146.41
Foreign and domestic exchange..	919,996.51
Interest due on loans on call....	3,349.47
City seven per cent. gold bonds ($50,000).....	25,750.00

Cash items:

Gold.....	$32,419.80
Legal tenders.....	974,777.17
Checks sent to clearing-house.....	172,409.73
	<hr/>
	1,179,606.70
	<hr/>
	$4,248,716.47

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock.....	$1,000,000.00
Profit and loss.....	99,694.00
Dividends unpaid..	46,556.00
Individual depositors.....	3,044,957.19
Foreign banks and bankers.....	48,061.78
Circulation.....	9,447.50
	<hr/>
	$4,248,716.47

An inspection of this statement shows that the Bank had over $4,000,000 of assets, and that the assets were sufficient to pay all its debts, and leave enough balance to return to the stockholders all their capital. Now, does it lie with the Bank to put its finger on a particular item of the assets—its money on hand, for example (which appears to have consisted of legal tenders)—and say that this item and no other item constituted its capital at that time? Does this depend on the mere option of the Bank? Why was not its cash on hand just as applicable to its deposits and other obligations as to its capital? Not a particle of proof was offered, and it is difficult to see how any proof could have been offered, to show that the cash exclusively constituted the capital.

The Bank had probably been in operation for years. It is to be presumed that its original capital, not invested in real estate had been loaned out to its customers, and was rather represented by its discounted bills than by the cash in its drawer. Can it be pretended that the cash on hand was the simple and only representative of that capital? Suppose that this cash had come to the Bank from its depositors—and it is not shown to the contrary—would it be admissible then to say that it constituted the capital? In this suit the burden of proof is on the Bank to show that it has been unlawfully taxed. The decision of the assessor must stand, unless it can be affirmatively controverted.

We cannot perceive that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana invades any right of the plaintiff in error secured to it by the Constitution or laws of the United States, and, therefore, it must be affirmed.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF CALHOUN COUNTY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM B. GALBRAITH.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 214-220.)

County bonds—where may be made payable—assignment in blank—Mississippi Constitution.

1. Where the statute, under which bonds of a county in Missouri were issued, required that they should be made payable to a railroad company, its successors and assigns, and they were made payable to the company, or bearer, held: that the statutory requirement in this particular is only directory, the defect is one of form, and the county is estopped to take advantage of it by the recital in the bonds of conformity to the statutes.

2. Where no place of payment of the bonds was designated by the statute, it was competent for the supervisors to make them payable in New York.

3. The law of the place of performance governs the construction and effect of the contract. By the law of New York, such bonds may be assigned in blank, and after such assignment in blank they pass by delivery from hand to hand, and have all the properties of commercial paper.

4. Where there is no limitation as to the time when or the number of times, the voters might be called upon to decide the question of subscription, such question may be twice submitted to them.

5. The Constitution of the State of Mississippi, of 1869, section 14, is wholly prospective, and does not apply to an Act passed before its adoption.

[No. 197.]

Argued Apr. 2, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Mississippi.

The case, which arose in the court below, is fully stated by the court.

Mr. P. Phillips, for plaintiff in error:

The Act was passed with full knowledge of a long series of decisions by this court, commencing in 1858, declaring county and municipal bonds payable to bearer to be commercial paper, which, in the hands of a bona fide holder, excluded all defenses, however just and equitable, which might exist against the company to which they had been issued. Such a holder was bound only to notice whether the power to issue them was granted.

The Act of 1871 was intended carefully to guard the country against these consequences. If any doubt remained as to the intent of the Legislature, it would be removed by reference to the Act of 1822, passed soon after the State was admitted into the Union, and continued in its statutes to the present time.

The judicial construction of this Act has been long settled. It is declared to be anti-commercial in its character. It lets in the defense to all the classes of paper therein described, and holds that the only kind of paper not included in its provisions is that which is made payable to bearer.

NOTE.—Recitals in negotiable bonds or securities; evidence of the facts recited; estoppel by recitals in. See note to Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 68 U. S., XVII., 548.

Kershaw v. Bank, 7 How. (Miss.), 391.

Obligations payable on their face to bearer, and which need no assignment, are declared not to be within the purview of the statute.

Craig v. Vicksburg, 31 Miss., 244; Mercien v. Cotton, 34 Miss., 64; Winstead v. Davis, 40 Miss., 787; Harrison v. Pike Brothers, 48 Miss., 56.

The only Mississippi case cited by defendant in error to support the ruling on this plea, is Vicksburg v. Lombard, 51 Miss., 111.

The bonds in this case were made payable to "bearer."

The word "assigns," as used in the Acts of 1871 and 1822, has a well defined meaning in Mississippi.

Craig v. Vicksburg, 31 Miss., 247.

In the case of Aspinwall v. County of Daviess, 22 How., 364 (63 U. S., XVI., 296), the question was presented under the Constitution of Indiana.

The phraseology of this proposition differs from that used in the Constitution of Mississippi, but the general legal effect is the same.

Now, the case under the Indiana Constitution presented the fact that, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, the County, by Act of the Legislature, was authorized to subscribe for stock and issue bonds, provided a majority of the qualified voters assented thereto. The election was held and the required vote obtained, but the actual subscription and issue of the bonds was made subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution, and the question was whether the Constitution had not abrogated the power conferred by the prior Act.

It was held not to be a contract, and so the bonds were declared to be void for want of authority to issue them.

The same doctrine was held in Concord v. Savings Bank, 92 U. S., 625 (XXIII., 628).

The bearing of these two decisions is made palpable by the judgment in the case of the County of Moultrie v. Savings Bank, 92 U. S., 632 (XXIII., 632).

Here no popular election was required. The power to subscribe was conferred upon the Board. The Board, by resolution, made the subscription, and this subscription was duly accepted by the railroad. All this was done prior to the adoption of the Constitution, relied on as prohibiting the subscription.

The subscription thus made was held to be a contract which the Constitution could not impair.

And so it was held in Falconer v. R. R. Co., 69 N. Y., 492, in which the constitutional amendment adopted in 1875 prohibited any county from becoming a stockholder in any corporation. The court said:

It is not to be questioned that as soon as the amendment was adopted all action by towns, not finished, towards the issue of bonds in aid of any corporation, at once fell to the ground, unless, by operation of law or in pursuance of some valid agreement, a right had been created to have such action perfected by the issuing of the bonds.

Messrs. Edward Mayes and Wiley P. Harris, for defendant in error:

1. The issuance of bonds payable to the "Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad Company, or bearer," is a substantial and sufficient compliance with the statute, if considered as a matter of mere form.

Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow., 513; Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend., 40; Pitman v. Kintner, 5 Blackf., 250; Forbes v. Marshall, 32 Eng. L. & E., 589; Maddox v. Graham, 2 Met. (Ky.), 78.

2. Neither does the fact that they were so issued, instead of to the "President and directors of, etc., their successors and assigns," invalidate the bonds by making them negotiable instruments, contrary to the intention of the Legislature.

Maddox v. Graham, 2 Met. (Ky.), 78; Moran v. Miami Co., 2 Black, 722 (67 U. S., XVII., 342); Bushnell v. Beloit, 10 Wis., 195.

The whole phraseology of the Act of 1871 and all its provisions show that the Legislature intended negotiable instruments to issue.

See, Vicksburg v. Lombard, 51 Miss., 111.

The authority was ample, both to make the subscription and to issue the bonds, on a majority vote, notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 14, art. 12 of the new Constitution; because,

1. That section does not repeal the Act of 1860, which authorized the subscription.

Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St., 609; State v. Union Township, 8 Ohio St., 398; Code of Mo., p. 43; State v. Sullivan Co., 51 Mo., 531; Kan. City, etc., R. R. Co. v. Aldermen, 47 Mo., 349; State v. Nodaway Co. Ct., 48 Mo., 339; State v. Macon Co., 41 Mo., 453; New Const. of Miss., art. XII., secs. 2, 14, 15, &c.; Callaway Co. v. Foster, 93 U. S., 567, Oct. Term, 1876 (XXIII., 911).

The case of Aspinwall v. Daviess Co., 22 How., 364 (63 U. S., XVI., 296), was different from this. There it was the act of subscription which was prohibited, not the action of laws permitting subscription. So, also, with Concord v. Savings Bank, 92 U. S., 625 (XXIII., 628).

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented for our determination in this case is as to the validity of certain bonds issued and delivered by the Board of Supervisors of Calhoun County, in the State of Mississippi, in payment for stock of the Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad Company, for which the Supervisors subscribed in behalf of the County. In the court below they filed numerous pleas, presenting the points of defense upon which they relied. The pleas were all demurred to, the demurrers were sustained, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. Here the assignments of error are not numerous. We shall respond as far as we deem necessary, without formally restating them.

The Act of February 10, 1860, authorized the subscription, provided a majority of the voters of the County signified their approval. That sanction was given, and the stock was subscribed. The amendatory Act of March 25, 1871, declared that when bonds were issued in payment for such stock they should be "Signed by the President of the Board of Supervisors issuing the same, and be made payable to the President and Directors of the Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad Company, and their successors and assigns; and may be assigned, sold and conveyed with or without guaranty of payment by said president and directors, or may be mortgaged in like manner, at their discretion, as they may deem best for the company." The bonds here in question bore date September 1, 1871, and were payable to "The Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad Company, or bearer, at the agency of said company in the City of New York, two years from date." Each bond was for $500, with interest coupons attached, which matured half-yearly. On their face is this recital:

"This bond is one of a series of bonds issued and delivered to the Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad Company by Calhoun County, to meet and pay off the amount subscribed by said county to the capital stock of the railroad company aforesaid, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, entitled 'An Act to Aid in the Construction of the Grenada, Houston and Eastern Railroad,' approved Feb. 10, 1860, and of an Act amendatory thereof, passed March 25, 1871, and in obedience to a vote of the people of said County at an election held in accordance with the provisions of said Acts."

An objection is made to the form of the bonds. It is said they should have been made payable to the railroad company and "their successors and assigns," and not to the company "or bearer," and it is insisted that this divergence from the prescribed formula is a fatal defect.

To this there are several answers. The statutory requirement in this particular is only directory. R. R. Co. v. Hurst, 93 U. S., 291 [XXIII., 898]; Rock Cr. T. v. Strong, 96 U. S., 271 [XXIV., 815]. The defect is one of form and not of substance. The irregularity was committed by the servants of the County, and the County is estopped to take advantage of it. Bargate v. Shortbridge, 5 H. L. Cas., 297. The recital in the bonds, of conformity to the statutes, is also conclusive. A buyer was not bound to look further. Big. Estop., 266; Knox Co. Comrs. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 [62 U. S., XVI., 208]; Moran v. Comrs., 2 Black, 722 [67 U. S., XVII., 342]. No place of payment of the bonds being designated by the statute, it was competent for the Supervisors to make them payable in New York. Meyer v. Muscatine, 1 Wall., 384 [68 U. S., XVII., 564]. The law of the place of performance governed the construction and effect of the contract. Brabston v. Gibson, 9 How., 263; Cook v. Moffat, 5 How., 295. By the law of New York such bonds may be assigned in blank, and any holder can fill the blank with his own name or otherwise. In the meantime, after such assignment in blank, they pass by delivery from hand to hand, and have all the properties of commercial paper. Hubbard v. R. R. Co., 36 Barb., 286. The result is, therefore, the same that it would have been if they had been drawn in literal conformity to the statute.

The requirement of the statute in this particular is evidently the result of inadvertence. It applies to the securities spoken of the language necessary in a deed intended to vest in a corporation a fee simple title to real estate. They were obviously intended to be made negotiable instruments. Vicksburg v. Lombard, 51 Miss., 111.

It appears by the record that the proposition for subscription was twice submitted to the voters. The first time it was rejected; the second, it was approved by a majority. It is contended that the first submission exhausted the power to submit, and that the second was a nullity. We cannot concur in this view.

The 1st section of the Act of 1861 gave ample power to the proper officers (then the Board of Police, afterwards the Board of Supervisors) to subscribe, upon conditions thus expressed:

"Provided, however, That an election shall be held in the County for and on account of which stock is proposed to be subscribed by the qualified electors thereof, at the regular precincts of said County, twenty days' notice of the time of holding such election, and of the amount proposed to be subscribed, and in what number of installments, being first given by the Board of Police; and if, at said election, a majority of the qualified electors voting shall be in favor of such subscription, then said Board shall make such subscription for and in behalf of the county, for the amount specified, by the president of said Board of Police, subscribing the amount so specified, to the capital stock of said company, but if a majority of those voting shall be opposed to such subscription, the same shall not be made."

The remaining sections provide for the collection of the amount subscribed, by taxation, the mode of collection, etc., if the subscription should be made.

There is no limitation as to the time when or the number of times the voters might be called upon to decide the question of subscription. We cannot recognize any restriction as to the latter, in this respect, without adding to the statute what it does not contain. Our duty is to execute the law, not to make it. Such an interpolation would involve the "judge-made law" which Bentham so earnestly denounces. If authority be needed in support of our construction of the clause, it will be found in Soc. for Sav. v. N. London, 29 Conn., 174.

The present Constitution of the State of Mississippi, ratified Dec. 1, 1869, declares:

"Sec. 14. The Legislature shall not authorize any county, city or town to become a stockholder in or to lend its credit to any company, association or corporation, unless two thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a special election, or regular election, to be held therein, shall assent thereto."

The learned counsel for the plaintiff in error insists that this section abrogated the Act of 1860, and avoids the bonds.

It will be observed that the language of the section is wholly prospective. It is, in effect, that the Legislature shall not, in the future, authorize any county, city or town (without the consent of two thirds of the legal voters) to do either of two things: (1) Become a stockholder in any company, association or corporation. (2) Lend its credit to any company, association or corporation.

The restraint is upon the Legislature. It is forbidden to do thereafter either of the two prohibited things.

The Act which authorized the subscription here in question and under which it was made, was passed more than nine years before the Constitution took effect. As to this Act there is no room for any doubt or question. It provided for the payment of the subscription by a tax equal to the amount subscribed.

The amendatory Act of 1871, as regards the point under consideration, only changed the mode of payment for the stock. Instead of payment by a tax imposed for that purpose, it provides "That it shall and may be lawful" for the Supervisors to issue bonds for such sums as "may be deemed necessary to meet, pay off and discharge the subscriptions" made theretofore or thereafter under the prior Act of 1860.

The 8th section requires the levy and collection of sufficient taxes to pay in due time the amount due upon such subscriptions, or upon the bonds given for their payment.

In neither case was there to be a loan of any kind to the railroad company, and certainly none of "the credit of the county." The constitutional prohibitions do not, therefore, apply in anywise to this case.

The Act of 1871 recognizes the distinction between subscriptions made under it and those made under the Act of 1860. The former permitted subscriptions by towns, which were not authorized by the latter. In relation to such subscriptions the constitutional majority of two thirds of the voters was required.

Our construction of the clause here in question has been given to like language in Constitutions elsewhere, under similar circumstances. There are several adjudications of this court exactly in point touching the Constitution of Missouri. Henry Co. v. Nicolay, 95 U. S., 619 [XXIV., 394]; Callaway Co. v. Foster, 93 U. S., 567 [XXIII., 911]; Scotland Co. v. Thomas, 94 U. S., 682 [XXIV., 219]; Macon Co. v. Shores, not yet reported [97 U. S., 272 XXIV., 889]. See, also, Missouri v. Macon Co. Ct., 41 Mo., 453; State v. Greene Co., 54 Mo., 540; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio, 607.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Miller, Mr. Justice Bradley and Mr. Justice Harlan.

THE WHEELING, PARKERSBURG AND CINCINNATI TRANSPORTATION CO.,
Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF WHEELING.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 273-285.)

Taxes on vessels—enrollment.

1. Taxes levied by a State upon ships or vessels owned by the citizens of the State, as property, based on a valuation of the same as property, are not within the constitutional prohibition against levying duties of tonnage.

2. The enrollment of a ship or vessel does not exempt the owner of the same from taxation for his interest in the ship or vessel, as property, upon a valuation of the same, as in the case of other personal property.

[No. 203.]

Argued Apr. 3, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Montgomery Blair, for plaintiff in error:

In Cooley v. Portwardens of Phila., 12 How., 313, the court held in effect, that any tax which operates as a charge on such vessels, even though indirectly imposed, would be a tonnage duty; and says that a tonnage duty might be levied under the name of pilot dues or penalties, and "that it is the thing, and not the name, which is to be considered." And to the same effect is the case of the Steamship Co. v. The Portwardens, 6 Wall., 31 (73 U. S., XVIII., 749).

The points decided bearing on the question before the court, are, first: that the residence of the owners is immaterial, 12 Wall., 204 (79 U. S., XX., 370); second: that it is not necessary that the duty should be according to the capacity of the vessel; any tax upon a ship, however inconsiderable is a tonnage duty, and is prohibited (6 Wall., 31, supra); and third: it is not the name but the thing that is prohibited. (12 How., 299, supra). Now, the vessels in question are just as much within the description of things taxed by the West Virginia statute as if the statute had specifically taxed vessels by name; for it is as ships that they are assessed, and not as so much timber and iron; hence it is the thing which is prohibited and not the name. The prohibition certainly applies here.

In support of the decision of the state court, there is cited the language of Mr. Justice McLean, in the Passenger Cases, 7 How., 287, and of Mr. Justice Clifford in the case of Cox v. Lott, Coll., 12 Wall., p. 204 (79 U. S., XX., 370); also certain expressions in Hayes v. The P. M. S. S. Co., 17 How., 596 (58 U. S., XV., 254); State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall., pp. 212, 213 (79 U. S., XX., 373); and in Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall., 473 (83 U. S., XXI., 303).

It is undeniable that the language cited tends to sustain the views of the state court; but the questions before this court in those cases did not involve the question now here presented for the first time, and, as we contend, is in conflict with the principles actually decided by the court.

(No counsel appeared for defendant in error.)

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Power to impose taxes for legitimate purposes resides in the States as well as in the United States; but the States cannot, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, nor can they levy any imposts or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing their inspection laws, as without the consent of Congress they are prohibited from exercising any such power. Outside of those prohibitions the power of the States extends to all objects within their sovereign power, except the means and instruments of the Federal Government. State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall., 204 (79 U. S., XX., 370).

Taxes levied by a State upon ships or vessels as instruments of commerce and navigation are within the clause of the Constitution which prohibits the States from levying any duty of tonnage without the consent of Congress; and it makes no difference whether the ships or vessels taxed belong to the citizens of the State which levies the tax or to the citizens of another State, as the prohibition is general, withdrawing altogether from the States the power to lay any duty of tonnage under any circumstances, without the consent of Congress.

Pending the controversy in the subordinate state court, the parties, by consent, filed in the case an agreed statement of facts, from which and the pleadings it appears that the plaintiffs commenced an action of assumpsit against the defendants to recover back certain sums of money which the latter involuntarily paid to the former as taxes wrongfully assessed, as they allege, upon four certain steamboats which they owned, and which for four years or more they employed in carrying passengers and freight between the Port of Wheeling and other ports on the Ohio River.

It appears that the plaintiffs are an incorporated Company organized under the law of the State, and that the defendants are a municipal Corporation chartered as a City under the law of the same State. Authority is vested in the City to assess, levy and collect an annual tax, under such regulations as they may prescribe by ordinance, for the use of the City, on personal property in the City, not to exceed in any one year fifty cents on every $100 of the assessed valuation thereof. By the same law it is provided that personal property shall be deemed to include all subjects of taxation which the assessors, acting under the laws of the State, are or shall be by law required to enter on their books as such property for the purpose of state taxation. Pursuant to that law, taxes were assessed for the several years mentioned, against the plaintiffs for the appraised value of the four steamboats and the furniture of the same, which they owned and used as aforesaid, it appearing that the plaintiff's principal place of business was Wheeling, and that three of the steamboats were usually lying at the wharf or at the bank of the river within the corporate limits of the City.

Throughout the whole period each of the steamboats was duly enrolled and licensed as coasting vessels under the laws of the United States, and the agreed statement shows that the plaintiffs paid for each all dues, fees and charges which were properly demandable under those laws. Payment of the taxes was made under protest and in order to escape the seizure and sale of the steamboats.

Service was made and the parties having waived a jury and filed an agreed statement of facts as before stated, submitted the case to the court of original jurisdiction. Hearing was had, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants. Exceptions were filed by the plaintiffs, and they removed the case into the Supreme Court of the State, called the Court of Appeals, where the judgment of the subordinate court was affirmed. Though defeated in both of the state courts, the plaintiffs sued out the present writ of error and removed the cause into this court.

Since the transcript was entered here, the plaintiffs have assigned for error that the State Court of Appeals erred in holding that the taxes levied are not within the constitutional prohibition that no State, without the consent of Congress, shall lay any duty of tonnage.

Ships or vessels of ten or more tons burden, duly enrolled and licensed, if engaged in commerce on waters which are navigable by such vessels from the sea, are ships and vessels of the United States, entitled to the privileges secured to such vessels by the Act for enrolling and licensing ships or vessels to be employed in the coasting trade. 1 Stat. at L., 287.

Authorities to show that the States are prohibited from subjecting any such ship or vessel to any duty of tonnage is scarcely necessary, as that proposition is universally admitted; the only question which can properly arise in the case presented for decision being whether the tax as imposed by state authority is or is not a tonnage duty, within the meaning of the Constitution. Tonnage duties cannot be levied; but it is too well settled to admit of question that taxes levied by a State, upon ships or vessels owned by the citizens of the State, as property, based on a valuation of the same as property, to the extent of such ownership, are not within the prohibition of the Constitution.

Power to tax for the support of the State Governments exists in the States independently of the National Government; and it may well be assumed that where there is no cession of contradictory or inconsistent jurisdiction in the United States, nor any restraining compact in the Constitution, the power in the States to tax for the support of the state authority reaches all the property within the State which is not properly regarded as the instruments or means of the Federal Government. Nathan v. La., 8 How., 73; Brown v. Md., 12 Wheat., 419; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet., 449.

Beyond question these authorities show that all subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation, the rule being that the sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority or is introduced by its permission, except those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution the powers given by the People to the Federal Government, whose laws, made in pursuance of the Constitution, are supreme. McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat., 429; Savings Soc. v. Coite, 6 Wall., 604 [73 U. S., XVIII., 901].

Annual taxes upon ships and vessels for the support of the State Governments as property, upon a valuation as other personal property, are everywhere laid; nor is it believed that it requires much argument to prove that the opposite theory is unsound and indefensible in principle, as it is contrary to the generally received opinion, and wholly unsupported by any judicial determination. Instead of that, there are many cases in which the courts, in refuting the authority of the States to lay duties of tonnage, have admitted that the owners of ships may be taxed to the extent of their interest in the same, for the value of the property. Assessments of the kind, when levied for municipal purposes, must be made against the owner of the property, and can only be made in the municipality where the owner resides.

Though a ship, when engaged in the transportation of passengers, said Taney, Ch. J., is a vehicle of commerce, and within the power of regulation granted to Congress, yet it has always been held that the power to regulate commerce, as conferred, does not give to Congress the power to tax the ship, nor prohibit the State from taxing it as the property of the owner, when he resides within their own jurisdiction; and he adds, that the authority of Congress to tax ships is derived from the express grant of power in the eighth section of the first article, to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports and excises; and that the inability of the States to tax the ship as an instrument of commerce arises from the express prohibition contained in the 10th section of the same article. Passenger Cases, 7 How., 283, 479.

Support to that view is also derived from one of the numbers of the Federalist, which has ever been regarded as entitled to weight in any discussion as to the true intent and meaning of the provisions of our fundamental law. By that number it is maintained that no right of taxation which the States had previously enjoyed was surrendered, unless expressly prohibited; and that the right of the States to tax was not impaired by any affirmative grant of power to the General Government; that duties on imports were a part of the taxing power; and that the States would have had a right, after the adoption of the Constitution, to lay duties on imports and exports if they had not been expressly prohibited from doing so by that instrument. Federalist, No. 32. From which it follows, if the writer of that publication is correct, that the power granted to regulate commerce did not prohibit the States from laying import duties upon merchandise imported from foreign countries; that the commercial clause does not apply to the right of taxation in either sovereignty, the taxing power being a distinct and separate power from the power to regulate commerce; and that the right of taxation in the States remains over every subject where it before existed, with the exception only of those expressly or impliedly prohibited.

Neither imports nor duties on imports or exports can be levied by a State, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws, nor can a State levy any duty of tonnage without the consent of Congress. State power of taxation is, doubtless, very comprehensive; but it is not without limits, as appears from what has already been remarked, to which it may be added, that state tax laws cannot restrain the action of the national authority, nor can they abridge the operation of any law which Congress may constitutionally pass. They may extend to every object of value not excepted as aforesaid, within the sovereignty of the State; but they cannot reach the means and instruments of the Federal Government, nor the administration of justice in the Federal Courts, nor the collection of the public revenue, nor interfere with any constitutional regulation of Congress.

Power to tax its citizens or subjects in some form is an attribute of every government, residing in it as part of itself; and hence it follows that the power to tax may be exercised at the same time upon the same objects of private property by the State and by the United States, without inconsistency or repugnancy. McCulloch v. Md. [supra]; Bk. v. Billings, 4 Pet., 514.

Such power exists in the State as one conferred or not prohibited by the State Constitution, and in the Congress by express grant. Hence the existence of such powers is perfectly consistent, though the two governments in exercising the same act entirely independent of each other as applied to the property of the citizens.

Legislative power to tax, as a general proposition, extends to all proper objects of taxation within the sovereign jurisdiction of a State; but the power of a State of the Union to lay taxes does not extend to the instruments of the National Government, nor to the constitutional means to carry into execution the powers conferred by the Federal Constitution. Tax laws of the State cannot restrain the action of the National Government, nor can they circumscribe the operation of any constitutional Act of Congress. They may extend to every object of value belonging to the citizen within the sovereignty of the State, not within the express exemptions of the Constitution, or those which are necessarily implied as falling within the category of means or instruments to carry into execution the powers granted by the fundamental law. Day v. Buffinton, 3 Cliff., 387.

Power to levy taxes, said Marshall, Ch. J., could not be considered as abridging the right of the States on that subject, it being clear that the States might have exercised the power to levy duties on imports or exports had the Constitution contained no prohibition upon the subject; from which he deduces the proposition that the prohibition is an exception from the acknowledged power of the States to levy taxes, and that the prohibition is not derived from the power of Congress to regulate commerce. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 201.

States, said Mr. Justice McLean, cannot regulate foreign commerce; but he held in the same case that they may tax a ship or other vessel used in commerce the same as other property owned by its citizens, or they may tax the stages in which the mail is transported, as that does not regulate the conveyance of the mail any more than the taxing the ship regulates commerce, though he admitted that the tax in both instances affected in some degree the use of the property, which undoubtedly is correct. Pasenger Cases [supra].

Enrolled vessels engaged in conveying passengers and freight, which were owned by citizens of the State of New York, entered the Port of San Francisco, and while there were compelled to pay certain taxes. Payment having been made under protest, the owners of the vessels brought suit to recover back the amount, and Mr. Justice Nelson, in disposing of the case here, in behalf of the court, held "That the vessels were not in any proper sense abiding within the limits of California so as to become incorporated with the other personal property of the State; that they were there but temporarily engaged in lawful trade and commerce, with their situs at the home port, where the vessels belonged and where the owners were liable to be taxed for the capital invested, and where the taxes had been paid," which shows to a demonstration that the owners of ships and vessels are liable to taxation for their interest in the same upon a valuation as for other personal property. Hays v. Steamship Co., 17 How., 596 [58 U. S., XV., 254].

Ships, when duly registered or enrolled, are instruments of commerce, and are to be regarded as means employed by the United States in execution of the powers of the Constitution and, therefore, they are not subject to state regulations. Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How., 227 [63 U. S., XVI., 243].

See 9 OTTO.

Such instruments or means are not given by the People of a particular State, but by the People of all the States, and upon principle as well as authority should be subjected to that government only which belongs to all.

Taxation, beyond all doubt, is the exercise of a sovereign power, and it must be admitted that all subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation; but it is equally clear that those objects over which it does not extend are exempt from state taxation, from which it follows that the means and instruments of the general government are exempt from taxation. McCulloch v. Md. [supra].

Tonnage duties on ships by the States are expressly prohibited, but taxes levied by a State upon ships or vessels owned by the citizens of the State as property, based on a valuation of the same as property, are not within the prohibition, for the reason that the prohibition, when properly construed, does not extend to the investments of the citizens in such structures.

Duties of tonnage, says Cooley, the States are forbidden to lay; but he adds that the meaning of the prohibition seems to be that vessels must not be taxed as vehicles of commerce, according to capacity, it being admitted that they may be taxed like other property. Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed., 606.

"Vessels are taxable as property," says the same author; and he adds that "possibly the tax may be measured by the capacity, when they are taxed only as property and not as vehicles of commerce;" which may be true, if it clearly appears that the tax is to the owner in the locality of his residence, and is not a tax upon the ship as an instrument of commerce. Cooley, Taxation, 61.

Whatever more general or more limited view may be entertained of the true meaning of this clause, says Mr. Justice Miller, it is perfectly clear that a duty, tax or burden imposed under the authority of the State, which is by the law imposing it to be measured by the capacity of the vessel, and is in its essence a contribution claimed for the privilege of arriving and departing from a port in the United States, is within the prohibition. Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall., 577 [87 U. S., XXII., 417]; Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall., 581 [86 U. S., XXII., 201]; State Tonnage Tax Cases [supra].

Decided cases of the kind everywhere deny to the States the power to tax ships as the instruments of commerce, but they all admit, expressly or impliedly, that the State may tax the owners of such personal property for their interest in the same. Corresponding views are expressed by Mr. Burroughs in his valuable treatise upon Taxation. He says that vessels of all kinds are liable to taxation as property in the same manner as other personal property owned by citizens of the State; that the prohibition only comes into play where they are not taxed in the same manner as the other property of the citizens, or where the tax is imposed upon the vessel as an instrument of commerce, without reference to the value as property. Burroughs, Tax., 91; Johnson v. Drummond, 20 Gratt., 419.

Property in ships and vessels, say the Court of Appeals of Maryland, before the Federal Constitution was adopted, was within the taxing power of the State; and they held that such property since that time, when belonging to a citizen of the State living within her territory and subject to her jurisdiction, and protected by her laws, is a part of his capital in trade, and like other property, is the subject of state taxation. Hovell v. State, 3 Gill, 14; Perry v. Torrence, 8 Ohio, 522.

Beyond all doubt, the taxes in this case were levied against the owners as property, upon a valuation as in respect to all other personal property, nor is it pretended that the taxes were levied as duties of tonnage. Congress has prescribed the rates of measurement and computation in ascertaining the tonnage of American ships and vessels, and in the light of those regulations Burroughs says that the word "tonnage" means the contents of the vessel expressed in tons, each of one hundred cubical feet. P. 89.

Homan says that the word has long been an official term, intended originally to express the burden that a ship would carry, in order that the various dues and customs levied upon shipping might be imposed according to the size of the vessel, or rather in proportion to her capability of carrying burden. Homan, Dic. Com. and Nav., Ton.

Tested by these definitions and the authorities already cited, it is as clear as anything in legal decision can be, that the taxes levied in this case are not duties of tonnage, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution. Taken as a whole, the contention of the plaintiffs is not that the taxes in question are duties of tonnage, but their proposition is that ships and vessels, when duly enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, are not subject to state taxation in any form, and that the owners of the vessels cannot be taxed for the same as property, even when valued as other personal property, as the basis of state or municipal taxation.

Opposed as that theory is to the settled rule of construction, that the commercial clause of the Constitution neither confers, regulates nor prohibits taxation, it is not deemed necessary to give the theory much further consideration. Gibbons v. Ogden [supra]. By that authority it is settled that the power to tax, and the power to regulate and prohibit taxation, are given in the Constitution by separate clauses, and that those powers are altogether separate and distinct from the power to regulate commerce; from which it follows, as a necessary consequence, that the enrollment of a ship or vessel does not exempt the owner of the same from taxation for his interest in the ship or vessel as property, upon a valuation of the same, as in the case of other personal property.

Judgment affirmed.

Cited—107 U. S., 374; 112 U. S., 74; 93 Ill., 36; 34 Am. Rep., 158; 33 Lea., 649; 39 Am. Rep., 281.

TOWN OF BROOKLYN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE ÆTNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 362-371.)

Town bonds, defenses to—issue and delivery—effect of former suit—immaterial objection.

416

1. A town in Illinois, which has subscribed to the stock of a railroad and issued its bonds therefor cannot, as against a bona fide purchaser, claim exemption from their payment upon the ground that the railroad company disregarded its promise to construct the road, or that its own officers delivered the bonds in violation of special conditions, of which the purchaser had no knowledge or notice, either from the statute or otherwise.

2. Where the bonds were signed, by the officers designated for that purpose by the law authorizing their issue, after the vote and subscription, it was not necessary that the Board of Auditors, or other corporate authorities of the town should have participated in their issue and delivery.

3. Where a suit was commenced in the state court against the holders and owners of bonds and coupons which had been issued in the name of the town and delivered to the railroad company, the decree therein could not bind anyone not personally served with process, or who did not appear, nor affect the rights of non-resident holders of bonds and coupons, proceeded against by constructive service.

4. Where, in this court for the first time, specific objection is made that the jury were sworn to try, and, in fact, tried but one of two issues, and there is no bill of exceptions showing to what point the evidence was directed, this court will assume that all the issues were tried which were presented or which the parties desired should be disposed of.

[No. 177.]

Argued Mar. 11, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

Statement of the case by Mr. Justice Harlan:

This action is upon certain interest coupons issued in the name of the Town of Brooklyn, Illinois. Besides the general issue, the Town filed four special pleas.

The second plea, in substance, avers that the coupons in suit, and the bonds to which they were attached, were issued and delivered by the supervisor and town clerk of the Town, for stock claimed to have been subscribed to the Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company, an Illinois corporation, organized under an Act approved March 24, 1869, and thereby authorized and empowered to locate, construct and complete a railroad from a point on the south side of Rock River, near Stirling, via Amboy, crossing the Chicago and Burlington Railroad, thence to intersect the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, outside of the corporation at Chicago; that the railroad company, in order to induce the Town to subscribe to its capital stock, by its officers and agents, pretended to lay out the line of railroad through the Town and near the Village of Maluguis Grove, thence to its terminus on the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and gave out that it was about to construct and complete its road, and thereby establish a through line to Chicago, wholly independent of and a competing line with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, which passes a few miles south of Brooklyn; that on 20th September, 1869, an election was held to determine whether the Town should subscribe $50,000 to the stock of the company; that the notices for the election expressly stated that no bonds in payment of any subscription should be issued, or draw interest, or be delivered to the company, until the railroad was completed and cars running through Brooklyn; that a majority of the voters at such election voted to make the subscription; that on 23d May, 1870, William Holdren, the acting supervisor of the Town, as such supervisor signed and executed a certain paper, purporting to subscribe $50,000 in the name of the Town to the capital stock of the company, which subscription provided that it was made upon the express understanding set forth in the notices of election, and that no payment was to be made until the road was completed and the cars running through the Town; that the supervisor of the Town had no authority or power to issue any bonds or coupons to said company until the road should be completed, which has never been done; that just before the issuing of the bonds and coupons it was rumored in the Town that the railroad was about to be transferred to the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, and was not to be built and completed as required by the notices of election and the terms of subscription; that thereupon the agents and representatives of the Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company were notified that if the road was not to be built and completed as promised, the bonds and coupons would not be issued and delivered; whereupon said agents and representatives informed the Town and the citizens thereof that the company intended to complete the railroad as promised, and as fast as men and money could do so; that thereupon the supervisor and town clerk, relying upon such representations, but having no power or authority so to do, did, on or about November 7, 1872, sign, issue and deliver, in the name of the Town, to the agents and representatives of the company, bonds to the aggregate amount of $50,000, with coupons attached, part of which are those sued on; that as soon as the bonds and coupons were received by the company it utterly ceased and refused to prosecute the construction of the road, and abandoned the entire work, whereby the Town failed to obtain any railroad to Chicago, or a competing road with that of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad; that the representations aforesaid of the company's agents were knowingly false and fraudulent, but their falsity was unknown to the Town, its supervisor, and clerk when the bonds were issued and delivered, and the issuing and delivery were procured by such false and fraudulent representations; that the bonds and coupons are wholly void and in no wise obligatory upon the Town, because the company had not at the time they were issued complied with the conditions prescribed by the election notices and the subscription; that the Town claims no interest in the stock of the company, which is worthless and has been ever since the work was abandoned, and has received no value whatever for the bonds and coupons.

98 U. S.

The third plea avers that the insurance company "Is not a bona fide assignee of the interest coupons declared upon in said declaration before maturity and without notice of the defenses set up in the second plea."

The fourth plea avers that the bonds and coupons "Were issued by the supervisor and town clerk of said Town of Brooklyn, and delivered without the authority of the Board of Auditors or the corporate authorities of said Town; and the supervisor of said Town, who issued and delivered the same, acted therein fraudulently and in collusion with the parties to See 9 OTTO.

whom the same were delivered; the said supervisor, knowing at the time he had no such authority, and he having been elected supervisor on the express pledge on his part, and with the understanding between him and those who voted for and supported him that he would not issue and deliver said bonds and coupons until said Chicago and Rock River Railroad was completed its entire length to the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central Railroad."

The fifth plea avers that, by a decree of the Circuit Court of Lee County, Illinois, rendered November 14, 1873, in the action of the Town of Brooklyn and others against the Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company and others, "It was ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said pretended bonds and coupons of the said Town of Brooklyn, so issued to the said Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company, and registered as aforesaid in the office of the Auditor of Public Accounts of Illinois, are void and in no wise obligatory on the said Town of Brooklyn, and that the same be surrendered up by the parties holding the same to be canceled," which decree it is averred is in full force and effect; that the said Insurance Company was made defendant in such suit with the other holders and owners of the bonds and coupons issued by the Town, by the name and description of "The unknown owners of certain bonds and coupons issued by Washington J. Griffin, the Supervisor of the Town of Brooklyn, Lee County, Illinois, to the Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company, purporting to be the bonds and coupons of said Town of Brooklyn;" that said Circuit Court of Lee County had then and there jurisdiction of the subject matter and the persons or parties defendant therein, by the issuing and return of process, and by proof of publication made as required by the Statute of the State of Illinois in the case of non-resident defendants.

To the plea of the general issue a joinder was filed, and to the third plea a replication was filed, averring that the Insurance Company became a bona fide assignee of the coupons declared upon, before maturity and for value, without notice of the defenses set forth. To the second, fourth and fifth pleas there was a general demurrer.

Upon the calling of the case for trial, the plaintiff moved the court (quoting from the order) "That a jury come to try the issue joined upon the plea herein. It is thereupon considered by the court that a jury came to try said issue, and thereupon came a jury, etc.," * * * who were * * * sworn, well and truly to try said issue, and after, etc., * * * returned into court the following verdict, to wit: 'We, the jury, find the issue for the plaintiff, and assess its damages to the sum of $5,511.' It is therefore considered, etc." Upon a subsequent day of the term, the Town, by its attorney, moved the court to set aside the judgment and grant a new trial, but filed no grounds therefor in writing. Subsequently the Town failing thereafter to appear and sustain its motion for a new trial, the same was overruled.

The errors assigned are: 1, that the court sustained demurrers to the 2d, 4th and 5th pleas; 2, that the court erred, in rendering judgment on the verdict of the jury.

Messrs. Milton T. Peters and Thos. J. Henderson, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. H. Roberts, O. J. Bailey, Cullom, Scholes & Mather and Francis Fellows, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented for consideration upon this writ of error seem to have been concluded by the former decisions of this court.

1. The facts set out in the second plea do not constitute a defense to this action. It is not averred in that plea that the Insurance Company had, at the time it purchased the coupons in suit, any knowledge or actual notice of the special conditions embodied in the election notice, and repeated in the formal subscription of May 23, 1870. Nor is it therein alleged that the bonds to which these coupons were originally attached contained recitals indicating that the subscription had been voted and made upon any conditions whatever. The defendant in error was, undoubtedly, bound to take notice of the provisions of the statute under which the bonds were issued. But it was under no legal obligation to inquire as to the precise form or terms of the subscription, whether it was absolute or only conditional.

Had the Insurance Company, before consummating its purchase of the coupons, examined the Act incorporating the Chicago and Rock River Railroad Company, it would have ascertained: 1. That the statute made no provision for conditional subscriptions. 2. That, upon the approval by a majority of the legal voters of any incorporated city, town or township along or near the route of the road, at an election called and held for such purpose, in the mode prescribed by law, it was made, by the express words of the statute, the duty of the president of the Board of Trustees, or other executive officer of such town, and of the supervisor of such township, to make the subscription voted for, receive certificates therefor, and execute to the company bonds of the required amount, bearing interest, payable annually, and signed by such president, executive officer, or supervisor, and attested by the clerk of the municipality in whose name the bonds were issued. 3. That, within ten days after the approval of a subscription by popular vote, it was the duty of the clerk to transmit to the county clerk a statement of the vote given, the amount voted, and the rate of interest to be paid; and, within like period, after bonds were issued, to file with the county clerk a certificate showing the amount and number of bonds issued, and the rate of interest to be paid. If it be suggested that the statement thus directed to be transmitted to and filed with the county clerk would inform the purchaser whether the subscription was conditional or absolute, a sufficient response is, that such statement might have been in conformity with the letter of the statute without setting forth the precise nature of the subscription. But a conclusive answer is, that there is no averment that any such statement was prepared, transmitted or filed, or if filed, that it indicated the conditional nature of the subscription, by reference either to the election notice, or to the formal subscription of May 27, 1870. The plea shows that "The Town and the citizens" (to adopt the language of the plea) were assured by the agents and representatives of the railroad company that the latter intended, in good faith, to perform the special conditions annexed to the subscription, and that all rumors to the contrary were without just foundation. These assurances were credited, and, in reliance upon them, the supervisor and clerk executed and delivered the bonds, knowing, at the time, that the conditions imposed by popular vote, as well as by the terms of the subscription, had not been complied with. Thus was faith in the promises of a railroad company substituted for a contract which, had the Town stood upon it, would either have secured the construction of the road, as contemplated, or guarded its people against a burden which has been imposed upon them through the fraudulent conduct of railroad officials, and the violation, by its own officers, of the trust committed to them. By the act of the Town's constituted authorities, who, by the statute, had the right, under certain circumstances, to execute and deliver the bonds and coupons, the railroad company was enabled to put them upon the money market in advance of the construction of the road. It is now too late for the Town to claim exemption, as against bona fide purchasers, upon the ground that the railroad company disregarded its promise to construct the road, or upon the ground that its own officers delivered the bonds in violation of special conditions, of which the purchasers had no knowledge or notice either from the statute or otherwise. The remedy of the Town is against the railroad company, and its own unfaithful officers, who, it is alleged, were in fraudulent combination with the company.

2. For the reasons already stated, the fourth plea must also be held to be insufficient. The bonds were signed by the officers designated for that purpose by the charter of the railroad company, and, after the vote and subscription, it does not seem to have been necessary that the Board of Auditors or other corporate authorities of the Town should have participated in their issue and delivery.

3. The fifth plea is radically defective. The suit commenced and determined in the Circuit Court of Lee County was a proceeding wholly in personam, against the holders and owners of bonds and coupons which had been issued in the name of the Town, and delivered to the railroad company. Upon principle and authority, no decree therein rendered could bind any one not personally served with process, or who did not appear. It could not affect the rights of non-resident holders of bonds and coupons, proceeded against by constructive service. Such service, as to them, was ineffective for any purpose whatever. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S., 714 [XXIV., 565], and authorities there cited.

4. We come now to consider the remaining assignment of error, which need be considered viz.: that the court erred in rendering judgment upon the verdict. This objection rests upon the ground that although there were two issues to try—those arising under the first and third pleas—the jury were sworn to try "the issue," and found only "the issue" for the defendant in error.

We observe, from the record, that after the demurrer to the second, fourth and fifth pleas was sustained, the city failed to appear, by attorney, at the trial before the jury. After verdict, a motion was entered to set aside the verdict and judgment and grant a new trial. But no written grounds were filed in support of the motion. Nor did the Town appear at the hearing of the motion, and urge any reason for its being granted. It was, consequently, denied and, in this court for the first time, specific objection is made that the jury were sworn to try and, in fact, tried but one issue, and that it is impossible from the orders of the court to say what issue was tried. We decline to consider the objection. If the attention of the court below had been called to this matter, the objection might have been obviated. There is no bill of exceptions showing to what point the evidence was directed, and we will assume, under the circumstances of the case, that all the issues were tried which were presented in due form for trial, or which the parties desired to be disposed of. Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall., 565 [74 U. S., XIX., 151].

Our conclusion is that no error was committed in the court below, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

Cited—101 U. S., 92, 129, 413; 105 U. S., 333; 107 U. S., 545; 10 Biss., 467; 2 Flipp., 502; 55 Vt., 497; 45 Am. Rep., 635.

SAMUEL HALE ET AL., Late Partners, as HALE, AYER & CO., AND THE UNION
CAR SPRING MANUFACTURING COM-PANY, INTERVENERS, Appts.,

v.

CHARLES L. FROST, Trustee, ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 389-392.)

Railway mortgage—lien of—machinery used by receiver.

1. A railway mortgage upon the present and future acquired property of a railway company and its incomes and profits, is a prior lien only upon the net earnings of the road, after the payment of all the operating expenses, while the road is in the possession of the company.

2. The net earnings of the road, while in the possession of the court, and operated by its receiver, are not necessarily and exclusively the property of the mortgagees, but are subject to the disposal of the Chancellor in the payment of claims which have superior equities.

3. Persons furnishing to the company supplies for the machinery department, which the receiver after his appointment continued to use, have superior equities to those of the mortgagees, for such supplies, but not for material for construction purposes.

[No. 213.]

Argued Apr. 4, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The appellees were the plaintiffs below. The agreed facts show that the B. C. R. & M. Ry. Co., having made default Nov. 1, 1873, in the payment of its interest, the mortgage bondholders consented to, and did, fund interest coupons on their bonds for eighteen months, and left the railway in the possession of the company; that May 1, 1875, on another default in payment of interest, the plaintiffs caused a receiver to be put in possession: that between Nov. 1, 1873, and May 1, 1875, the gross earnings were about $1,772,249.74, and net earnings about $550,000, which was paid on past floating indebtedness, past operating expenses, etc. That Nov. 1, 1873, the Company owed $150,000, for back wages, taxes and current supplies then on hand and subsequently used. That May 19, 1875, the indebtedness to employees was about $81,250.02, and for current supplies about $60,000. That the net earnings while in the receiver's possession were $337,540.45.

The appellants intervened, claiming priority of payment upon a debt of the railroad to them for current supplies. The points made and claimed by the intervening petitioners upon the pleadings and the agreed facts were these:

1. That the Railway mortgage is a prior lien upon the net earnings of the road after the payment of all operating expenses while in the possession of the Railway Company.

2. That after the default in the payment of interest Nov. 1, 1873, by the Company, the fact that the mortgagees funded their coupons and left the company in possession of the road, constituted the company, the agent and trustee in equity of the mortgagees, and that they are now estopped from objecting to the payment of all legitimate debts, contracted for operating expenses by the R'y Company from the earnings of the road.

3. That the net earnings of the road, while in the possession of the court and operated by its receiver, are not necessarily and exclusively the property of the mortgagees, but are subject to the disposal of the Chancellor in the payment of claims which have superior equities, if such shall be found to exist, and that these intervening petitioners' claims have superior equities to those of the mortgagees.

On these points and each of them, the opinions of the Judges were opposed.

Judgment was thereupon given in favor of Frost, against the interveners, who thereupon appealed to this court.

Messrs. Chas. A. Clark and N. M. Hubbard, for appellants.

Messrs. Jas. Grant and Grant, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite announced the decision of the court:

The first question certified in this case is answered in the affirmative, upon the authority of Fosdick v. Schall, decided at the present Term [ante, 339].

The third question is answered in the same way, upon the same authority. The Union Car-Spring Manufacturing Company is entitled to payment in full, and Hale, Ayer & Co. to payment of so much of their claim only as is for supplies to the machinery department. There is nothing in the case to show any special equities in their favor in respect to that part of their account which is for material for construction purposes.

An answer to the second question is unnecessary.

NOTE.—The lien of a mortgage on after-acquired property. See note to Pennock v. Coe, 64 U. S., XLV., 436.

See 9 OTTO.

The several decrees appealed from are reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter decrees in favor of the appellants for the amount due them respectively from the fund in court, upon the principles settled by the answers which are given to the questions certified.

Cited—9 Biss., 550 ; 5 Hughes, 383.

JOHN W. PENCE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ROBERT B. LANGDON.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 578-582.)

Direction to jury to find verdict—notice given on Sunday—construction of letters—waiver—rescission of contract.

1. A direction to a jury to find a verdict in favor of a party can be properly given only when the state of the evidence is such as to leave no room for doubt that it is the duty of the jury to find accordingly.

2. Notice of rescission of a contract is not void because given on Sunday, without a statutory provision to that effect.

3. Where the construction of letters was left to the jury and they found properly on the question, no harm was done by the omission of the court to construe them.

4. Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge. Current suspicion and rumor are not enough.

5. The wrong-doer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission of a contract. The burden of proving knowledge of the fraud which is the ground of rescission, and the time of its discovery, rests upon the defendant.

[No. 194.]

Argued Apr. 1, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota.

The defendant in error brought suit in the District Court, Hennepin County, Minn., to recover back certain money paid upon the purchase of certain mining stock. The case was removed for trial to the court below, where judgment was given for the plaintiff; whereupon the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. C. K. Davis, M. H. Carpenter, M. Lamphrey and Shaw & Levi, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Wm. Lochren, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

A brief statement of the facts disclosed in the record will be sufficient for the purposes of this opinion, and a few remarks will suffice to dispose of the case.

Langdon lived in Minnesota. Pence lived in California, and was engaged in mining operations. On the 10th of December, 1874, Langdon, by a letter of that date, advised Pence that he had seen Watson, and inquired about their mining interests. He concluded by saying: "If anything can be done that will be satisfactory to all parties, let me know." Pence replied by letter of the 17th of that month. Speaking of the mine in which he and Watson were concerned, he said, amongst other things: "There is an eighth, that is, 7,500 shares, that can be bought if taken at once, at the same I paid and the same Watson paid, after looking and prospecting for five weeks." "The price is * * * $8,368.75, gold." * * * "Should you conclude to buy, you must telegraph me here on receipt of this letter. You can pay," etc. "This will put you on the ground floor with us, or better than I am, as I have spent about $600 to find this mine, prospect it, and have title looked up, etc. Our title is O. K." Langdon bought and paid the price demanded. On the 28th of January, 1875, Pence addressed Langdon another letter from San Francisco, in which he said: "There have been not less than ½ doz. after the 7,500 shares of stock I sold you, and all were astonished to find themselves too late; and still more astonished when I told them there was no more to be had at present, as we have the controlling interest, and propose to run the mine as we think best." * * * "The stock I have deposited in the Nat. Gold Bank and Trust Co. of this city. * * * I would like to have you come out after the roads get good and weather pleasant in the spring." This letter inclosed a bill commencing "Hon. R. B. Langdon, Mina., to J. W. Pence, Dr." The stock was charged and the amount paid was credited. No person other than Pence was named as the seller. Linton and Shepherd were interested with Langdon in the purchase. On the 20th of June, 1875, all of them visited the mine with Pence. They claimed then to have learned for the first time that Pence had sold them his own stock, and to have learned also that the stock was worth much less than they had paid for it. They arrived on Saturday, and on the next day notified Pence that they rescinded the contract, and required what they had paid to be refunded. Shepherd and Linton transferred their interest to Langdon, and he thereupon brought this suit. The Code of Minnesota authorized it to be in his name.

Upon the trial in the court below six exceptions were taken by Pence. Two of them were to the admission of testimony. Both of them are so clearly without merit, that we deem it unnecessary to say more about them. He also excepted to the refusal of the court to direct the jury to find a verdict in his favor.

Such direction can be properly given only when the state of the evidence is such as to leave no room for doubt that it is the duty of the jury to find accordingly. This case was certainly not within that category.

The objection that the notice of rescission was void because given on Sunday is without force. It was given at the mine, which is in Nevada. The result claimed could be produced only by a statutory provision to that effect. The Statute of Nevada relating to the Sabbath in nowise affects the subject. See "An Act for the Better Observance of the Lord's Day," of November 1, 1861, 1 Compiled Laws of Nevada; p. 2, ch. 3.

The stock certificate left at the Gold Bank for Langdon was never in his possession. The affirmation of this judgment will extinguish his claim to it, and Pence can reclaim it whenever he may choose to do so, Langdon was not bound to receive it and tender it back to Pence before bringing suit.

NOTE.—When a verdict may be directed by the court. See note to Grand Chute v. Winegar, 82 U. S., XXI., 174.

The remaining exceptions relate to instructions given to the jury, which are as follows:

"I. In deciding this question of fact, you must take the letters and telegrams and all of them, and looking at them in the light of the previous relations of the parties, and of what each of the writers knew, placing yourselves in the writer's place and situation in order better to ascertain their meaning and purpose, and in the light shed upon this question of fact by these letters and telegrams, and by the history of the whole transaction, you must determine whether the defendant did undertake to act as the plaintiff's agent for the purchase of the stock from others."

Admitting that the court was wrong in not giving a construction to the letters one way or the other, touching the main point in the controversy, as is insisted, a concession, perhaps, not necessary to be made, it cannot avail the plaintiff in error that it was not done. Properly construed, we think the letters show clearly the agency of Pence as claimed by Langdon. The jury found accordingly. No harm was, therefore, done by the omission of the court; and if it were erroneous, the error is one of which Pence certainly has no right to complain. With respect to the duty of the court as to construing the letters, see, Etting v. Bk., 11 Wheat., 59; Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How., 146 [62 U. S., XVI., 86].

"II. It was not enough to charge the plaintiff with knowledge of the malcharacter of the transaction, that the language used was such as might have caused some persons to suspect it. He might in view of previous friendly relations, have no suspicion of bad faith, and might naturally regard expressions as inaccurately used, rather than put upon them a construction which would show bad faith on the part of the defendant, which he had no reason to anticipate."

This, under the circumstances, we think, was exactly right.

"III. Before the plaintiff was required to affirm or rescind the contract, he must be shown to have had actual knowledge of the imposition practiced upon him. It is not enough to show that he might have known or suspected it from data within his reach."

The preceding remark is applicable also to this instruction.

"IV. If the jury believe that the plaintiff had no actual knowledge or belief that defendant had put his own stock upon them, until June, 1875, at the mine, then his repudiation of the transaction, if made then, was sufficient."

There can be no doubt as to the soundness of this proposition.

Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge. The terms import this foundation for such action. One cannot waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. Current suspicion and rumor are not enough. There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. Nothing short of this will do. But he may not willfully shut his eyes to what he might readily and ought to have known. When fully advised, he must decide and act with reason.

See 9 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

able dispatch. He cannot rest until the rights of third persons are involved and the situation of the wrong-doer is materially changed. Under such circumstances he loses the right to rescind and must seek compensation in damages. But the wrong-doer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission. It does not lie in his mouth to complain of delay, unaccompanied by acts of ownership and by which he has not been affected. The election to rescind or not to rescind, once made, is final and conclusive.

The burden of proving knowledge of the fraud and the time of its discovery rests upon the defendant.

Here Langdon was lulled into security by his relations to Pence, and by Pence's letters.

There is no proof that he had the slightest knowledge or even suspicion of any foul play until he visited the mine. His action then was prompt and decided.

The instructions of the court as to the law upon the subject were clear, accurate, and well expressed. The rest was for the jury. With what they did we have nothing to do.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SAMUEL STRINGFELLOW ET AL., Executors of BRIGHAM YOUNG, Deceased, Appts. and Plffs. in Err.,

v.

JOSEPH M. CAIN ET AL.,

SAME

v.

SAME.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 610-619.)

Appeals from territorial courts—statement of facts—Town Site Act—purchase of possessory right—heirs.

1. Under the Act of April 7, 1874, on appeals to this court from the territorial courts, in cases where there has been no trial by jury, instead of the evidence at large, a statement of the facts and the rulings of the court is to be made and transmitted to this court.

2. If the findings of the District Court are sustained by the Supreme Court, and a general judgment of affirmance rendered, the findings of the District Court, thus approved by the Supreme Court, will furnish a sufficient "statement of the facts of the case" for the purposes of an appeal to this court.

3. The Act of March 2, 1867, which provides that the "land so settled and occupied" for a town site may be entered at the land-office, "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof according to their respective interests" created the trust in favor of those who at the time the entry was made, were occupants, or entitled to the occupancy.

4. A non-resident may, by purchase from an occupant, acquire such a right to the occupancy as would entitle him to a judgment for a conveyance under the trust.

5. An inchoate right to the benefit of the town site law descended, under the laws of Utah, to the owner's widow and children, and they might lose their rights by a failure to keep possession.

[Nos. 181, 182.]

Argued Mar. 13, 1879. Decided Apr. 14, 1879.

ERROR to and appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

The cases, which were brought here both by appeal and by writ of error, are fully stated by the court.

Messrs. J. L. Rawlins, Williams & Young, A Sydney Biddle, Geo. W. Biddle and Geo. E. Whitney, for appellants.

Messrs. Robert N. Baskin, J. M. Wilson and Samuel Shellabarger, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court.

By the Act of Congress "Concerning the Practice in Territorial Courts and Appeals Therefrom," approved April 7, 1874, 18 Stat. at L., pt. 3, p. 27, the appellate jurisdiction of this court over the judgments and decrees of the territorial courts in cases of trial by jury is to be exercised by a writ of error, and in all other cases by appeal. It follows that the appeal in this case was properly taken, and that the writ of error must be dismissed.

An important question arising under that part of the Civil Practice Act of Utah which relates to appeals in a civil action from the District Court to the Supreme Court of the Territory has been elaborately discussed in the argument, but in the view we take of the case it need not be decided. This is a special statutory proceeding, instituted in a Probate Court to settle disputes between claimants as to their respective rights under the trust created through the purchase, by the Mayor of Salt Lake City, of the lands on which the city stands, pursuant to the authority for that purpose granted by the Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 541, "For the Relief of the Inhabitants of Cities and Towns upon the Public Lands," and the several Acts amendatory thereof. The territorial statute under which this trust is to be carried into execution, Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 379, requires parties interested to sign a statement in writing containing the particulars of their claim, and deliver it to the clerk of the Probate Court of the County. If there are conflicting claimants, it is made the duty of the Probate Judge to call them before him, "And proceed to hear the proof adduced and the allegations of the parties, and decide according to the justice of the case." The statements filed stand in the place of pleadings. The court is required to cause full minutes of the testimony to be kept, which must be preserved with the papers, and entered on the record with the decision at length. If either party is aggrieved by the decision, he may appeal to the District Court, as in other cases, and upon the perfection of an appeal the Probate Court must "Cause the testimony and written proofs adduced, together with the statements of the parties and the judgment of the court, to be certified to the District Court, to be there tried anew, without pleadings, except as above provided."

This case was heard in the District Court on the record certified up in accordance with these requirements, and in giving its decision the court stated its findings of fact and conclusions of law separately. In this it followed the rule prescribed by the Civil Practice Act, on a trial by the court of an issue of fact in a civil action. After the decision was made, the present appellees moved for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to support the findings. This motion was denied, and appeals were thereupon taken to the territorial Supreme Court, both from the judgment and the order refusing a new trial. Such appeals are allowed by the Practice Act. When an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court of the Territory, the law requires a statement to be settled and signed by the judge who heard the cause, which shall set forth "Specifically the particular errors or grounds" relied on, "and contain so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the particular errors or grounds specified, and no more." This statement is annexed to the copy of the judgment roll or order appealed from and furnished to the Supreme Court. Comp. L. Utah, 1876, 493, 494.

The statement settled and signed in this case, annexed to the copy of the order refusing a new trial appealed from, contained all the "testimony, written proofs and statements of the parties" certified up from the Probate Court, and upon which the trial was had; and it was stipulated that the statement on the appeal from this order might be used, so far as applicable, on the appeal from the judgment. Thus, the proceeding was made to conform to the regulations of the Practice Act in reference to appeals in civil actions, and the court was called upon to decide whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings of fact, and, if it was, whether the facts as found would support the judgment. In short, the Supreme Court of the Territory was called upon to determine whether, according to the justice of the case as shown by the record, the judgment of the District Court was right.

The Act of April 7, 1874, 18 Stat. at L., 27, provides that on appeals to this court from the territorial courts, in cases where there has been no trial by jury, instead of the evidence at large, a statement of the facts of the case in the nature of a special verdict, and also the rulings of the court on the admission or rejection of evidence when excepted to, shall be made and certified by the court below, and transmitted to this court with the transcript of the proceedings and judgment or decree. Under this Act, if the findings of the District Court are sustained by the Supreme Court, and a general judgment of affirmance rendered, the findings of the District Court, thus approved by the Supreme Court, will furnish a sufficient "statement of the facts of the case" for the purposes of an appeal to this court. The same will be true if there is a reversal, for the reason that the facts as found are not sufficient to support the judgment. But if, as in this case, the judgment is reversed because the evidence does not sustain the findings, other findings must be made before the case can be put in a condition for hearing in this court on appeal. Without undertaking to decide what would be the proper practice in an ordinary civil action when a judgment is reversed because a new trial was refused in the District Court, we are clearly of the opinion that in a suit like this, where all the evidence is before the Supreme Court that could be considered by the District Court if the case should be sent back, it is proper for the Supreme Court itself to state the facts established by the evidence and render the judgment which ought to have been rendered by the District Court.

To remand the case for a new trial would be in substance only to direct the District Court to state the facts as found by the Supreme Court and adjudge accordingly. This would make another appeal to the Supreme Court necessary in order to put the case in a situation for a review in this court, the probabilities being that on such an appeal the Supreme Court would be called upon to do no more than affirm its former judgment. There is no statute of the Territory which, in express terms, creates the necessity for such a circuitry of action, and we do not think the Practice Act, when fairly interpreted, requires it. Upon a new trial no new testimony could be introduced. The District Court could do no more than find the facts which, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, should have been found before, and the judgment which should follow from those facts may just as well be settled by the Supreme Court on the first appeal as on a second. We conclude, therefore, that the case is properly here for decision upon the facts stated by the Supreme Court, and this brings us to the inquiry whether, upon these facts, the judgment appealed from was right.

The Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 541, provides that the "land so settled and occupied" for a town site may be entered at the land-office, "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof according to their respective interests," and that the execution of the trust shall "be conducted under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the State or Territory." The Legislature of Utah enacted that the lands so acquired in trust should be conveyed to the "rightful owner of possession, occupant or occupants," or to such persons as might be entitled to the occupancy or possession. Comp. L., 381.

In Copfield v. McClelland, 16 Wall., 331 [83 U. S., XXI., 339], this court decided that the Act of Congress created the trust in favor of those who at the time the entry was made were occupants, or entitled to the occupancy.

At the present Term, in Hussey v. Smith not yet reported [ante, 314], we held that a non-resident might, by purchase from an occupant, acquire such a right to the occupancy as would entitle him to a judgment for a conveyance under the trust. The power of an occupant to sell and convey his possessory rights is clearly recognized by the territorial statute.

It is expressly found that the appellees were not in the actual possession of any part of the lot, except that which was adjudged to them by the District Court, when the entry was made by the corporate authorities. Joseph Cain died in 1857, leaving his widow, Elizabeth Cain, and two minor children, Elizabeth, now Mrs. Crimson, aged nine years, and Joseph M., aged seven. He then occupied the whole of the east half of the lot in question as his homestead. Soon after his death, Brigham Young set up a claim to the north half of the premises, and the widow, without recognizing his right, submitted to his demand. Young afterwards assumed to control the property and deeded a part of it to Jennings, who went into possession, claiming the right of occupancy, and under his occupation improvements were made by himself or his tenants. Young was never himself an actual occupant, but it is found that when the testimony was taken, the Co-operative Company was in possession, paying him rent. It does not, however, distinctly appear from the findings whether either Jennings or the company were occupying the property when the entry was made at the land-office.

At some time after the death of Cain, his widow sold and conveyed to Charles King all "her right of claim, interest and possession" in that part of the south half of the premises in controversy which was claimed by Jennings and adjudged by the district court to him. When the testimony was taken in the case, the Co-operative Mercantile Company was in actual possession of this part of the lot, paying rent to Jennings. It is not stated definitely when this conveyance was made by Mrs. Cain or when the tenants of Jennings went into possession, though it is found that Jennings himself was never an actual occupant of the property.

On the 10th of December, 1869, the Stringfellow Brothers went into the possession of that part of the premises claimed by them, under a sale made by the administrators of Cain to pay taxes assessed upon the property after his death, and to pay debts incurred for improvements also made after his death. They paid for the property its full market value at the time, and were in the actual occupation when the entry was made by the corporate authorities at the land-office. The children of Cain were not made parties to the proceedings in the Probate Court to obtain an order for the sale, but from the time the sale was made until the statements were filed in the office of the clerk of the Probate Court, neither they nor their mother had possession of the premises which were sold.

Upon this state of facts it is apparent that the real question to be settled is, whether the children of Cain retain the benefit of their father's occupancy of that part of the lot in controversy not in their actual possession when the town site was entered at the land-office by the corporate authorities. All the interest their father had in the lot when he died was an inchoate right to the benefit of the Town Site Law in case the property should be purchased from the United States by the corporate authorities under the provisions of that law. All he could do was to maintain his occupancy, and claim the statutory trust in his favor in case that trust should be created. He held the position of one seeking to acquire a title by a possession adverse to all the other inhabitants of the town. His right to maintain this adverse possession descended under the laws of Utah to his widow and children. There can be no doubt that the possession the children thus acquired, if continued, would have ripened into a perfect title under the trust.

The infants could not bind themselves by contract to sell and convey their possessory rights, but they might lose their rights by a failure to keep possession. They need not maintain an actual occupancy, but they must in some form retain control of the property to the exclusion of an adverse entry. When Cain died, the mother became the head of the family and by the laws of Utah the natural guardian of the children. In this way she had by law the control of their persons. If she remained in the possession of the property, she necessarily did so for the benefit of her children and herself in proportion to their respective interests in the inheritance; but if she voluntarily withdrew from the property and gave it up to others, the rights of the children as well as herself, which depended upon keeping the possession, were gone. The adverse possession commenced by the father might in this way be abandoned.

Applying these principles to the facts as stated we think it clear that the rights which the children had as occupants on their father's death were given up by their mother, except as to that part of the lot they had in actual possession when the corporate authorities purchased the land from the government. Soon after the death of the father, the mother yielded up the possession of the north half of the lot on the demand of Mr. Young, the leader of the Mormon Church, to which she and her husband during his life belonged. It matters not for the purposes of this inquiry whether this was rightfully or wrongfully done. In point of fact it was done many years before the purchase from the government. After that, Young assumed the control of the property so surrendered and deeded some part of it away. Subsequently the mother sold and conveyed to King that part of the south half which is now claimed by Jennings. From the facts as stated, it may fairly be presumed that this was done to save or improve the remainder. Her husband when he died owed no debts, and so far as appears had no considerable amount of property except his possessory rights in this lot. To raise the means to pay taxes which accrued after his death, and to pay debts incurred for improvements also made after his death, his administrators sold that part of the south half now claimed by the Stringfellow, and received its full value in money. When these several sales were made, the mother withdrew with her children from the occupancy, and the Stringfellow made an actual entry in December, 1869, which they have kept up until the present time. If the mother was not technically the guardian in socage of the children, she occupied under the circumstances the place of such a guardian, and Mrs. Crimson, who was then unmarried, must have been of full age when the Stringfellow took their possession. We cannot see how there could be an abandonment if this is not, and it seems clear to our minds that it must have been made by the mother in an honest effort on her part to save all she could of that which the father by his original occupancy had endeavored to secure.

We are, therefore, of the opinion, from the facts as they are stated by the Supreme Court:

1. That the surrender of the north half of the lot by Mrs. Cain, on the demand of Young, was such an abandonment of the possession as deprived her and her children of the right to claim title to that part of the lot without a subsequent entry, which is not shown.

2. That the conveyance by Mrs. Cain to King operated in the same way in respect to that part of the south half of the lot embraced in her deed to him.

3. That the administrator's sale had the same effect as to that part of the lot bought by George and Samuel Stringfellow, or one of them.

4. That George and Samuel Stringfellow are entitled to a conveyance of that part of the lot described in the administrator's deed, and claimed by them in their statement filed with the clerk of the Probate Court.

5. That the appellees are entitled to a conveyance of all that part of the south half of the premises not embraced in the deed of Mrs. Cain to King and in that of the administrators to Stringfellow, and no more.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory is, therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded with instructions: 1. To enter or cause to be entered in the proper court a judgment in favor of George Stringfellow and Samuel Stringfellow for that part of the lot purchased by them at the administrator's sale. 2. To enter or cause to be entered a judgment in favor of the appellees, according to their respective interests under their inheritance from Joseph Cain, for that part of the south half of the premises in controversy not sold to the Stringfellow and King, and dismissing their claim as to all the rest and residue of the lot. 3. To rehear the case upon the evidence sent up from the District Court in respect to the claims of Jennings and Young as against the corporate authorities of Salt Lake City, and decide according to the justice of the case.

The appellees will pay the costs of this appeal.

Mr. Justice Strong did not sit in this case, nor participate in its decision.

Cited—99 U. S., 619, 621, 622; 103 U. S., 738; 104 U. S., 429, 619; 105 U. S., 236; 107 U. S., 346; 108 U. S., 13, 14; 111 U. S., 357.

WILLIAM H. PLATT, Appt.,

v.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY AND FREDERICK L. AMES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 48-67.)

Railroad land grant—construction of—mortgage by Company—rule.

* By the 3d section of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, incorporating the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a grant of lands was made to the Company "for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores thereon," and it was enacted that all such lands "not sold or disposed of" by the Company before the expiration of three years after the entire road should be completed should be subject to settlement and preemption, like other lands.

1. Held, that this statute should be construed, if possible, so as to effectuate the object which Congress had primarily in view.

2. Held, that the primary object of the grant was to furnish assistance in and during the construction of the road, and that opening the unsold, or undisposed of lands to settlement and preemption was only a subordinate and secondary object.

3. Held, therefore, that the secondary purpose of Congress did not control or defeat that which was primary.

1. Held further, that the words "or disposed of" are not redundant words, or synonymous with the word "sold" but that they contemplate a use of the lands granted, different from a sale, and that a mortgage is such a use.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice STRONG.

NOTE.—Construction of statute according to purpose for which it was passed. See note to U. S. v. Saunders, XXII., 736.

2. Held, that the Company was authorized to mortgage the land grant, and that the mortgage made in 1887, "for the purpose of raising money necessary to continue and complete the construction of their road," was a disposal of the lands within the meaning of the Act.

3. Held, that the mortgage was a hypothecation of the fee, and not merely of an estate terminable at the expiration of three years next after the completion of the road.

Held, therefore, the mortgage debt not having fallen due, and remaining unpaid, that the lands were not open to settlement and preemption.

Querre. Whether the remnants that may be unsold when the mortgage debt shall be paid, will not then be subject to preemption.

In construing a statute, aid may be derived from attention to the state of things as it appeared to the Legislature when the statute was enacted.

[No. 885.]

Argued Mar. 26, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska.

The appellant was the complainant in the court below, where the case arose upon a bill to enjoin the defendant from proceeding further in a certain action of ejectment against him.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. E. Wakely, James Lowndes, Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen. and E. M. Marble, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellant:

Webster's Dictionary defines the phrase to dispose of, in the sense evidently used in the statute to be, "To exercise finally one's power of control over; to pass over into the control of some one else; to alienate; to bestow; to part with; to get rid of; as to dispose of a house; to dispose of one's time; more water than can be disposed of."

To sell is defined to be, "to transfer to another for an equivalent; to give up for a consideration; to dispose of in return for a consideration, especially money; to exchange; to barter." These definitions are in accord with the common understanding and use of the words. A man sells or disposes of his house, lands, or goods when he bestows, parts with, gets rid of, or exercises finally his control over them.

To accomplish this in respect to the lands in question, was neither the intention of the parties nor the legal effect of the mortgage that is set forth in the answer.

In the first place, by the statutes and laws of Nebraska, and of all the States and Territories in which the granted lands are situated, a mortgage conveys no title, and confers no right of possession, but is merely a lien, and the remedy is confined to an action to enforce it.

Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb., 20; Chick v. Willcuts, 2 Kan., 384; Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan., 223; Drake v. Root, 2 Col., 685; Hyman v. Kelly, 1 Nev., 179; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal., 287; Goodenow v. Euer, 16 Cal., 461; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal., 609; Statutes of Wyoming; Compiled Laws of Utah, 478, sec. 260.

For the effect of any instrument in relation to land, we must look to the law of the State where the land is situated.

U. S. v. Crosby, 7 Cranch, 115; Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat., 577; McGoon v. Scales, 9 Wall., 27 (76 U. S., XIX., 546).

At the present day the debt is everywhere regarded as the principal thing, and the mortgage as mere security. Gilman v. Tel. Co., 91 U. S., 615 (XXIII., 409).

When the mortgage in question was made, however, the Railroad Company expressly stipulated against the loss of control and ownership. The instrument provides "That all the lands herein above conveyed and mortgaged shall be under the sole and exclusive control of the party of the first part;" that when the debt is paid, "the estate granted shall cease and determine," and "the trustees shall reconvey to said party of the first part all and singular the said lands not then sold or disposed of;" that the party of the first part shall have full power and authority to make contracts for the sale of the lands at such prices and upon such conditions as they and the trustees may agree upon.

Thus we see that, by the very terms of the instrument, it was to be simply a lien, and the lands were not in any sense sold or disposed of.

In determining the real meaning of Congress in making the provision in question, as well as in determining what is a fulfillment thereof, we may look to the history of the times, to surrounding circumstances, to the general policy of the government in that respect and to the mischief to be avoided.

Rhode Island v. Mass., 12 Pet., 657, 723; Maryland v. R. R. Co., 22 Wall., 105 (89 U. S., XXII., 713); U. S. v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 91 U. S., 72 (XXIII., 224).

These are well known and are ably pronounced in the case of Railway Co. v. Prescott, 16 Wall., 609 (83 U. S., XXI., 374).

The intention clearly was to obtain an early settlement of the lands. This policy lies at the basis of all legislation affecting the public domain, because lands are sold at nominal prices, preemption and homestead privileges are given, schools fostered, navigation improved, and the construction of railways encouraged.

In pursuance of this uniform and liberal policy, the great grant in question was made upon condition that the lands should be sold or disposed of soon, or opened to the public for settlement and purchase at $1.25 per acre. The phrase "disposed of" was properly used in addition to the word "sold"; for a wise policy might require a disposition of lands other than by sale. It might be good policy to bestow some lands gratuitously to encourage settlement, manufacturing, mining, or in aid of schools or branch roads, and thus add to the business and value of the road and remaining property, and follow the traditional policy of the government and the just expectation of Congress.

If we have given the real meaning and intent of the proviso, a construction must be given it that will not defeat its purpose. It must not be defeated by the transparent pretext that a lien upon it is a "sale or disposition of" the land. The Company will not be allowed by the cunning device of a lien to secure a debt payable twenty or one hundred years hence, to exclude settlers from those vast possessions, and so nullify an important condition of the grant under the vain pretext that they had fulfilled it.

Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson and Sidney Bartlett (a brief also being filed with permission of the court by John P. Usher and Henry Beard), for appellees:

The words of the statute are, "sold or disposed of."

First. It is clear that the leading, primary policy of the Act is, by offers of aid to be utilized as the work progressed, to secure the completion of the road. When it was found that the original grant would be inadequate to effect this policy, government, by the Act of 1874, doubled the grant.

Second. Its secondary, subordinate policy was, that all remnants of the grant which, from any cause (whether because other resources should prove sufficient, or from the impossibility of so disposing of the whole of the grant as to utilize it completely in construction) should, on the ascertainment of the fact, be by future legislation subject, at the will of Congress, to preemption.

Third. Such being the two features of public policy disclosed by the Act, are its provisions to be construed to intend, by a restriction of the powers of disposition, to absolute sales and conveyances, to insure, that all remnants not thus utilized for the purposes of the grant should be and continue in such shape as to be subject to preemption, although such restriction would necessarily impair and might possibly defeat the leading purpose of the grant?

Or was it the design to leave the mode of disposition to the grantee, to be governed by its opportunities and wants, but with the proviso that any remnants not affected by such disposition should, at the will of Congress, be subject to preemption?

Fourth. That it was the purpose of the Act to allow any mode of disposing of the lands which would secure its primary purpose, and not to secure all that could be saved for the purposes of preemption, is clear when it is seen that under its provisions the entire grant might be disposed of by absolute conveyance with warranty, to land companies or associated parties, for the purpose of obtaining means to aid in the construction. Can it be deemed that, with such conceded powers conferred by the Act, it was, nevertheless, the policy of the government to exclude the power of effecting the same ends by mortgage?

Fifth. Was it the policy of the Act to exclude all time contracts for sales in parcels to settlers and others on long credits, with the usual renewed indulgences? It is obvious that the risk to such purchasers, of the ultimate defeat of title at the expiration of three years from the wholly uncertain period of the completion of the road, would entirely exclude that usual mode of disposing of wild lands.

Sixth. It is submitted that if the policy of the Act was, as we contend, to enable the government, by legislation, to subject to preemption the remnants of the grant not used to accomplish its leading purpose; yet, that the mortgage in question does not defeat that policy, or withdraw such remnants from subjection to that preemption.

As will be seen hereafter, this mortgage is a conveyance in trust to sell in parcels, and with the proceeds discharge the mortgage debt. This debt matures in 1887. If the debt shall be satisfied before maturity, by partial sales, the remnants revert to the Company, and may thus be made subjects of preemption. If all shall, however, have been sold and prove insufficient to extinguish the debt, the lands will have been disposed of without remnants for the very purposes contemplated by the Act.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

If it be conceded that the complainant has complied with all the conditions prescribed by the Acts of Congress for the acquisition by a preemptor of an equitable title to a portion of the public lands, the question still remains, whether the land which he claims was open to preemption when his settlement was made. It is confessedly a part of the lands which the United States granted to the Union Pacific Railroad Company by the Act of July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 489.

The 3d section of the Act is enacted as follows:

"That there be and is hereby granted to the said company, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores thereon, every alternate section of public land, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad, on the line thereof, and within the limits of ten miles on each side of said road, not sold, reserved or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a preemption or homestead claim may not have attached, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed: Provided, That all mineral lands shall be excepted from the operation of this Act; but where the same shall contain timber, the timber thereon is hereby granted to said Company. And all such lands so granted by this section which shall not be sold or disposed of by said Company within three years after the entire road shall have been completed, shall be subject to settlement and preemption like other lands, at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre to be paid to said Company."

The section contains words of present grant, but the 4th section enacted that on the completion of each successive forty miles of the railroad and telegraph line, patents should be issued, "conveying the right and title to said lands to said Company, on each side of the road, as far as the same is completed, to the amount aforesaid." The 7th section required the road and telegraph to be completed before the first day of July, 1874. The amending Act of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356, enlarged the grant, but made no change in its terms; and the Secretary of the Interior, as directed by the Act, withdrew the lands within fifteen miles of the designated route of the road from preemption, private entry and sale.

Such was the grant. The railroad and telegraph line were entirely completed before July 1, 1874 (if not in 1869), and patents for all the lands granted were directed to be issued to the Company in November of that year. By force of the grant, however, and by the definite fixing of the route of the road, and the filing the map thereof in the Interior Department, as required by law, together with the completion of the road westward and beyond the tract claimed by the complainant, the title to that tract had become vested in the Company before April 16, 1867. On that day the Company, for the purpose of raising money necessary to continue and complete the construction of their road, issued their coupon bonds for the sum in the aggregate of $10,400,000, bearing seven per cent. interest, and payable in twenty years from their date. On the same day, for the purpose of securing the payment of the bonds, the Company executed a mortgage or deed of trust to trustees of all and several the several sections of land granted to them by the said Acts of Congress, including the tract claimed by the complainant. The instrument, we think, though in form a deed of trust, was substantially a mortgage. It was delivered to the trustees, and duly recorded. The bonds were sold in different markets to bona fide purchasers, and they are now outstanding, about $7,000,000 still remaining unsatisfied. All this was before the entire road was completed, and before the first step was taken by the complainant to obtain his preemption right.

In view of these facts, we are to determine whether the mortgage was a disposition of the lands granted to the Company within the meaning of the last clause of section second of the Act of 1862. If it was, the tract of land claimed by the complainant was not open to settlement and preemption when he entered thereon, nor has it been at any time since. That clause declared that "All the lands granted by the section, which shall not be sold or disposed of by said Company within three years after the entire road shall have been completed, shall be subject to settlement and preemption," etc. Was the mortgage a sale or disposition of the lands as understood by Congress? That the Company had power to mortgage the lands admits of no reasonable doubt. It may be conceded that a railroad company has not power either to sell or mortgage its franchise, or perhaps the road which it has been chartered to build, without express legislative authority, and this has in some cases been decided. The reason is that such a sale or mortgage tends to defeat the purposes the Legislature had in view in the grant of the charter. The adventurers who obtain the charter and who accept it undertake to construct and maintain the public work. Their undertaking is the consideration of the grant, and without legislative consent they cannot throw off the obligation they have assumed. But the reason is inapplicable to a sale or mortgage of property which is not a part of the road and in no way connected with its use. Parting with such property or encumbering it in no degree interferes with the performance of the duties of the Company to the public. Railroad companies are not usually empowered to hold lands other than those needed for roadway and stations, or water privileges. But when they are authorized to acquire and hold lands separate from their roads, the authority must include the ordinary incidents of ownership—the right to sell or to mortgage. Especially is this so when, as in the present case, the lands have been granted to the Company by the Legislature that granted the charter, without any restriction of their use.

Assuming, therefore, as we must, and as has been tacitly conceded in the argument, that the company had the power to make the mortgage of 1867, we need not stop to inquire whether it was a sale or a partial sale. In some of the States, as well as in England, a mortgage is practically, as well as in form, a sale. It passes the legal title to the mortgagee. The more general modern doctrine in this country is, we admit, that it creates merely a lien, without any transmission of title. But if not a sale, was the mortgage made by the Company defendant in this case not a disposition of the lands granted to it by Congress? This question is not to be answered by reference to definitions given in the dictionaries. What did Congress mean in the Act of 1862? That something else than sale, either total or partial, was intended we are required by all the rules of construction to conclude. Congress is not to be presumed to have used words for no purpose. If it was intended that only lands which had been sold before three years had expired after the entire completion of the railroad should be exempted from preemption, the words "or disposed of" were entirely superfluous. But the admitted rules of statutory construction declare that a Legislature is presumed to have used no superfluous words. Courts are to accord a meaning, if possible, to every word in a statute. In Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush., 53-89, it was said that in putting a construction upon any statute every part must be regarded, and it must be so expounded, if practicable, as to give some effect to every part of it. So, in People v. Burns, 5 Mich., 114, it was held that some meaning, if possible, must be given to every word in a statute, and that where a given construction would make a word redundant, it was reason for rejecting it. To the same effect is Dearborn v. Brookline, 97 Mass., 466; and in Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal., 576, it was ruled that no words are to be treated as surplusage or as repetition. The phrase, "or disposed of" must, therefore, have some distinctive meaning, some meaning beyond the word "sold." What that is may be seen very plainly when the whole Act of 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 489, is examined. We are seeking for the intention of Congress, and to discover that we may look at the paramount object which Congress had in view, as well as the means by which it proposed to accomplish that object. Congress addressed itself to the work of securing a railroad from the Missouri River to the western boundary of the Territory of Nevada, and thence to the Pacific Ocean. The work was vast, beyond the reach of private capital or enterprise. It could be accomplished only by the bestowal upon a corporation of very large governmental aid. The proposed road ran over mountains and through what was known to be an uninhabited desert, for more than a thousand miles. The lands through which it must pass were supposed to be almost worthless and quite unsalable until they should be made, by the construction of a railroad, accessible to settlers and to Eastern markets. The construction of a railroad through such a region was most uninviting to private capitalists. To induce them to embark in the enterprise was the overshadowing motive that dictated the Act of 1862. This is apparent in almost every line of the Act. For this reason the grants of land were made, the rights of way and of taking materials were given, and the subsidy bonds were loaned, to be repaid only at the expiration of thirty years, with interest payable only at the expiration of that period. Even this was not enough. No association and no persons were found willing, with all this proffered assistance, to undertake the construction of the road. But so earnest was Congress to induce the corporators to attempt the work, that in 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356, additional aid was proffered, the grant of lands was doubled, and new privileges were conferred. We do not now attempt to portray the earnestness—the all-absorbing earnestness—with which Congress sought to secure the construction of the road by private enterprise. It was well exhibited in the U. S. v. R. R. Co., 91 U. S., 72 [XXIII., 224], to which we refer. Suffice it to say, the purpose of Congress, above all others, was to obtain the construction of the railroad by the corporation it created to undertake the work. For that alone the subsidy bonds were given. Only for that the grants of land were made. All was intended to give the utmost possible assistance to the stupendous and unparalleled enterprise. We do not say that other incidental considerations were not kept in mind, but what we do assert as plainly manifest in the legislation is, that the paramount intention of Congress was to give such assistance to the Company as to induce them to build the road. Every other consideration was subordinate to that.

All will concede that in construing the Act of 1862 we are to look at the state of things then existing and, in the light then appearing, seek for the purposes and objects of Congress in using the language they did. And we are to give such construction to that language, if possible, as will carry out the congressional intentions. For what particular purpose, then, was the grant of lands made? The statute itself answers: "For the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad and telegraph line," and securing governmental transportation, etc. The lands were granted to be used in furtherance of such construction. But Congress and the grantees must have known that, when granted, the lands were of little worth. They were then unsalable at any price. Their value was wholly prospective, dependent upon the construction of the road. Purchasers could not have been reasonably expected, certainly few, for immediate settlement. The obvious mode, therefore, of using the lands for the construction of the road (not for paying debts incurred in the construction, but for immediate need as the construction was progressing) was to hypothecate them as security for a loan. Many persons might be willing to advance money on the faith of the prospective value of the lands, if the railroad was built, who would not be willing to buy when it was doubtful whether the Company would ever be able to raise the money necessary to build the road and thus render the lands salable. Congress must have been blind, indeed, if it did not foresee this, and intend to authorize the use of the lands to raise money by mortgage for the object it had so much at heart. This, we think, was what was intended by the phrase "or disposed of," as distinguished from "sold." Some of the lands might be sold as the work was progressing, and others could be used in aid of the construction only by pledging them to persons who might be willing to advance money on the faith of their prospective value. But whether sold or used as a security for money loaned to advance the construction of the road, they were equally employed for the purpose for which they were granted. The words "disposed of" are, undeniably, apt words to indicate a transfer by mortgage. If land be conveyed to A to enable him to raise money for a particular purpose, nobody would doubt that a mortgage would be a disposition of the land for that purpose; and the grant made by the 3d section of the Act of 1862 was obviously made, as we have suggested, with the intent of giving present assistance to the Company in the construction of the road. It was not intended to be available only after the Company had raised all the money necessary for the work. Then the time of need for the purpose mentioned would have gone by. The Act declares it to have been "To aid in the construction of the road," not to re-imburse expenditures made in the construction. Hence it must have been intended that the Company might use or dispose of the land in some other way than by a sale. But in what other way? Not by gift: for that would not have been in aid of the construction, and the grant was intended for that. Nor by leases. They could have brought little money. And no other mode of disposition except by mortgage has been suggested which could furnish aid for building the road. No other is conceivable. The conclusion would seem, therefore, to be almost inevitable, that Congress, when speaking of a disposition of the lands other than a sale, contemplated making them available for the purposes of the grant by mortgage.

And if so, it is hard to believe that only a limited interest in the lands was allowed to be hypothecated. Twelve years were designated as the period within which the road was required to be completed, and lands not sold or disposed of within three years thereafter were to be open to preemption. Moreover, under the provisions of the Act, the title to the lands could be perfected in the Company only as the work of construction advanced; that is, as each section of forty miles was completed. The Company might not become entitled to some until July 1, 1874. If, therefore, a mortgage could only bind the lands unsold until the expiration of three years after that date, it would have been a hypothecation for a term of years, and as to some of the lands, for a term of only three years. Was that the aid proffered by Congress to stimulate and render possible the completion of an enterprise in which it felt so deep an interest? If so, it was a barren gift. Looking at the character of the lands and their remoteness from settlements, it must have been evident enough that money could not have been raised on the credit of such a mortgage. The power of disposition given for the express purpose of enabling the Company to raise money for the construction of the road, by such an interpretation of the Act is made of no value. The interpretation, therefore, defeats the manifest intention of Congress, and for that reason it cannot be accepted.

If it be suggested, as it has been on behalf of the complainant, that the mortgage contains a provision that has some bearing upon the extent of its lien, it may be well here to notice that provision. The instrument purports to convey to the trustees a fee, and not a limited estate, and it requires in all sales that may be made under it the conveyance of a fee. It contains, however, the following clause: "It is hereby declared by the parties to this indenture that all the provisions of the said Acts of Congress [referring to the Acts of 1862 and 1864], so far as they are applicable, are hereby made and shall be deemed and taken to be a part of this instrument, and the said provisions in all that concerns the sale and disposal of the said lands hereby conveyed to the parties of the second part are to be observed and strictly and faithfully carried out and fulfilled."

What are thus stipulated to be observed and strictly and faithfully to be carried out and fulfilled are the provisions of the Acts in all that concerns the sale and disposal of the lands. They are matters to be carried out and strictly fulfilled—duties to be performed by the Company; and duties which concern the sale or disposal of the lands. Carrying out and performing a provision implies action, and the provision must, therefore, be one relating to action. But the Acts of Congress contain no provision respecting the sale or disposal of the lands that requires action, that is, something to be carried out and fulfilled, except the implied duty of devoting the proceeds of sales or dispositions strictly and faithfully to aid in the construction of the road.

The provision that at the expiration of three years from the completion of the road the unsold or undisposed of lands should be open to preemption, was in its nature not one to be "strictly and faithfully carried out and fulfilled" by the Company. The right to preemption, of whatever might be left for preemption, was a matter with which the Company had nothing to do—in relation to which they had no duties to perform, and only a right to the price paid by the preemptor. The clause of the mortgage referred to seems, therefore, to have been intended only as a stipulation on the part of the Company that whatever money was raised on the mortgage should be strictly and faithfully applied in furtherance of the purpose for which the grant of the lands was made, namely: to aid in the construction of the railroad. Thus understood, it was a valuable stipulation for the mortgagees. It added to their security; for the value of the lands depended principally upon the application by the Company of all its means to the completion of the work.

On the other hand, if a hypothecation of the lands in fee was within the power to "dispose of" them, as we have endeavored to show, and if the granting part of the mortgage made, standing by itself, did hypothecate a fee, it is hard to believe the parties intended by the stipulations referred to to restrict the exercise of the power to the grant of an estate for years, a limitation alike injurious to the mortgagors and the mortgagees. We think, therefore, nothing in the stipulation is repugnant to the granting part of the mortgage which purported a hypothecation of the entire fee.

There is always a tendency to construe statutes in the light in which they appear when the construction is given. It is easy to be wise after we see the results of experience. We may now think it quite possible the lands could all have been sold before July 1, 1877. The unforeseen success of the enterprise and the unprecedented rush of emigration along the line of the railroad have shed new light upon the value of the grants made to the Company. But in endeavoring to ascertain what the Congress of 1862 intended, we must, as far as possible, place ourselves in the light that Congress enjoyed, look at things as they appeared to it, and discover its purpose from the language used in connection with the attending circumstances. Guided by this rule of construction, as well as by others universally recognized, we have been led unhesitatingly to the conclusion that the deed of trust or mortgage executed by this Company in 1867 was a disposition of the lands granted by the 3d section of the Act of 1862, within the meaning of that Act.

See 9 OTTO.

We do not say that any mortgage, however small, or manifestly made to evade a bona fide execution of the purposes for which the grants were made, or made to defeat the policy of the government which encourages the sale of public lands to private settlers, and guards against the accumulation of large bodies in single hands, would be a disposal as understood by Congress. It may be conceded it would not be, for it would be in conflict with the avowed object of the grant. The present is no such case. By the pleadings it appears that the mortgage of 1867 was made "For the purpose of raising money necessary to continue and complete the construction of the railroad, in accordance with the Act of Congress." Nor are we now called upon to decide whether the lands covered by the mortgage will not be open for preemption, if they shall remain unsold after the mortgage shall be extinguished. That question is not now before us.

The principal objection urged against the interpretation we have given to the words "sold or disposed of" is, that it is repugnant to the governmental policy of guarding against monopolies of public lands by large corporations or single individuals. It must be admitted that Congress had that policy in view when it declared that the lands not sold or disposed of within three years after the entire road should be completed should be subject to settlement and preemption, at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre. But this policy was manifestly subordinated to the higher object of having the road constructed, and constructed with the aid of the land grant. No limitation was set to the quantity of land which the Company might sell to single associations, or single persons. It was left at liberty to sell, if it could, to any land association or private purchaser, the entire body of the lands or any lesser quantity, regardless of the general legislative policy. It was allowed to sell or dispose of the grant at its pleasure, for the purpose of raising money to aid in the road construction, provided thus raising the money was done within the limited period. With that power no preemptor was authorized to interfere. Whatever contingent rights he had were postponed and subordinated to it. If, as we think it manifest, the leading primary policy of the Act was to place the lands in the hands of the Company, to be used for the completion of the road, as this work progressed, any secondary policy the government may also have had in view ought not to be allowed to embarrass or defeat that which was primary. It is evident Congress thought there might be remnants of the grant, not used in aid of the construction of the road, either because other resources of the Company might prove sufficient, or because it might be found impossible to dispose of them in time to furnish such aid, and those remnants it undertook to open to settlement and preemption. This appears to us to have been what was intended, and all that was intended. The construction gives full effect alike to the paramount and the subordinate purposes of the Act. Each has its own field of operation. The construction contended for by the appellant restricts the power of disposition, denies the authority of the Company to utilize, except partially, for the purposes of the grant, the land granted, and might have impaired and possibly defeated the leading purpose of the grant. It subjects the paramount to the subordinate, and postpones the primary object to the secondary. On the other hand, utilizing the lands, by raising money upon them through a mortgage, or, in other words, disposing of them by mortgage did not defeat the policy of opening the remnants not used, to preemption.

Thus construing the last clause of the 3d section of the Act, in connection with all the other provisions made by Congress, endeavoring to give effect to every part, and regarding the spirit as well as the letter, we are constrained to hold that the mortgage of 1867 was a disposition of the lands mortgaged within the meaning of the statute, and, consequently, that the tract of land claimed by the complainant was not open to preemption when he undertook to preempt it. He has, therefore, no equitable title to it.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Bradley, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case. In the 3d section of the original charter, after granting to the Company five alternate sections of public land on each side of its line of railroad, to aid in the construction thereof, it was provided that all lands so granted, which should not be sold or disposed of by the Company within three years after the entire road should have been completed, should be subject to settlement and preemption, like other lands, at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre, to be paid to the Company. The appellant, after the three years had expired, settled upon the land in question and claimed preemption of the same; and offered to the Company the price specified in the statute. The latter refused to receive the money or to recognize the plaintiff's right, alleging that it had disposed of the lands in 1867 by executing a mortgage for its entire land grant to secure a loan of $7,000,000. The question is, whether such mortgage is a sale or disposition of the lands within the meaning of the proviso of the 3d section. I think it is not. In my judgment, Congress had in view such a sale and disposition of the lands as would secure a settlement thereof. The object was to encourage a speedy settlement of the country along the line of the road; and hence it was provided, if the Company did not so dispose of them, they should be open to settlers, at the usual prices, reserving to the Company, however, the right to receive the purchase money for the same. If the Company, by one sweeping deed of trust, or mortgage, could cover the whole domain as with a blanket, and thus prevent a settlement thereon until the lands, by advance of prices, would be out of the reach of actual settlers desirous of occupying and improving them, it seems to me it would entirely defeat the objects of the Act.

It is said, however, that if the Company could not mortgage the lands they could not make use of them in aid of the construction of the road, the purpose for which they were expressly granted. I do not think this result would by any means follow. The 4th section provides for granting to the Company patents for a proportionate part of the lands, for every forty miles of railroad which should be completed. As fast, therefore, as the successive forty-mile sections should be completed, it was contemplated by the Act that the Company should have control of the lands to that extent. This would constantly subject to their use large tracts, which, if disposed of, according to the intent of Congress, would have effected a rapid settlement of the adjacent country in all portions of the route which were adapted to cultivation.

The criticism that the words "sold or disposed of" mean something more than "sold," and can only mean a mortgage of the lands, I do not conceive to be just, but rather as sticking in the bark. Reading the whole Act together, I think the only fair construction is that which is above suggested.

The objection that the right of preemption contended for would have prevented the Company from giving a mortgage at all is not tenable. The mortgagees take the mortgage subject to the provisions of the Act. It contains a proviso to this express effect. The lands were mortgaged cum onere, and the mortgagees, if so stipulated, would be entitled to the purchase money receivable from settlers. This view of the subject would effectuate justice between all the parties, preserve the true construction of the Act, and carry out the policy of Congress.

In view of these considerations, I think that the decree should be reversed, and that the appellant, the complainant below, should be declared to be equitably entitled to the land in question.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Clifford and Mr. Justice Miller agree with me in this opinion.

Cited—5 Sawy., 577.

JOHN KLEIN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 149-151)

Lands of municipality—not subject to execution.

1. Lands which are held by a municipal corporation for public purposes, and ground rents which are part of the public revenues, cannot be levied on or sold on execution.

2. A public landing on a navigable river in a city used by the public for wharf and levee purposes, is not subject to seizure and sale on execution.

[No. 204.]

Submitted Apr. 3, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

Certain property having been seized to satisfy a judgment in this case in the court below, upon motion of the defendant in error, the seizure was dissolved; whereupon the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

The case is further stated by the court.

Mr. J. Q. A. Fellows, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. B. F. Jonas, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We must take the facts of this case as they are stated in the bill of exceptions, and cannot look into the evidence. The questions to be settled are: 1. Whether the lands levied on are subject to seizure and sale under execution against the City; and, 2. Whether the ground rents are liable in the same way.

This depends on the facts. If the lands are held by the Corporation for public purposes, and the ground rents are part of the public revenues, it is well settled that they cannot be levied on or sold. Dillon, Mun. Corp., secs. 64, 446. Municipal corporations are the local agencies of the government creating them, and their powers are such as belong to sovereignty. Property and revenue necessary for the exercise of these powers become part of the machinery of government, and to permit a creditor to seize and sell them to collect his debt would be to permit him in some degree to destroy the government itself.

The bill of exceptions shows that the lands consisted of "Two squares of ground which had formerly constituted the easterly bank of the Mississippi River, but which, by the gradual accretion of said easterly bank, had ceased to constitute the bank of the river, but which were now used by the public for wharf and levee purposes, said squares forming a portion of the land known as the 'Batture property.'" From this it must be inferred that they were held for the use of the public. In a city where business is carried on by water, a public wharf is as much a public necessity as a public street or highway. If the land in this case had still continued to be the bank of the river, and used and improved as a public landing, it certainly could not have been subject to sale on execution against the City; but we think a simple extension of its surface does not change its character. If it continues to be used as it was before, it is still public wharf or levee property. It matters not that charges may have been made by the City for wharfage. That would be nothing more than a proper governmental regulation. A street extending to navigable waters and used for wharf purposes does not cease to be public property because a charge is made for its use in that way. The test in such cases is as to the necessity of the property for the due exercise of the functions of the municipality. Upon the facts as stated by the court below, we think the lands levied upon were not subject to seizure and sale.

As to the ground rents, it was decided by the Supreme Court of Louisiana in R. R. Co. v. Municipality No. 1, 7 La. Ann., 148, that "In authorizing the Mayor and City Council (of New Orleans) to sell property on perpetual ground rent, the Legislature established a legal destination of the rents, as a portion of the public revenue of the City, to enable the municipal authority to exercise its powers of police and government. These rents, therefore, cannot be sold under execution against the municipality." There is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that the rents levied upon in this case were in any respect different from those under consideration in that. We must presume, therefore, that they are the same.

Judgment affirmed.

See 9 OTTO.

WELLINGTON GODDEN ET AL., Appts.,

v.

MARY A. L. KIMMELL, Admrx. of ABRAHAM F. KIMMELL ET AL., Deceased.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 201-212.)

Limitations in equity—stale demands.

1. Equity courts, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, usually consider themselves bound by the Statute of Limitations which govern courts of law in like cases.

2. Courts of equity, where no Statute of Limitations governs the case, often act upon their own inherent doctrine of discouraging antiquated demands by refusing to interfere where there has been gross laches in prosecuting the claim, or long acquiescence in the assertion of adverse rights, and where none of the parties to the transaction are alive.

[No. 211.]

Argued Apr. 4, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case fully appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Hanna, James M. Johnston, John Scott, Jr., and W. S. Cox, for appellants.

Messrs. Calderon Carlisle and George F. Appleby, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Statutes of limitation form part of the legislation of every government, and are everywhere regarded as conducive and even necessary to the peace and repose of society. When they are addressed to courts of equity as well as to courts of law, as they seem to be in controversies of concurrent jurisdiction, they are equally obligatory in both forums as a means of promoting uniformity of decision.

Stale claims are never favored in equity and, where gross laches is shown and unexplained acquiescence in the operation of an adverse right, courts of equity frequently treat the lapse of time, even for a shorter period than the one specified in the Statute of Limitations, as a presumptive bar to the claim. Stearns v. Page, 7 How., 819; Badger v. Badger, 2 Cliff., 154.

Time, it is said, is no bar to an established trust, which may be true in cases of concealed fraud, provided the injured party is not guilty of undue laches subsequent to its discovery. Circumstances of the kind form an exception to the rule; but the rule still is, that when a party has been guilty of such laches in prosecuting his equitable remedy as would bar him if his title was solely at law, he will be barred in equity, from a wise consideration of the paramount importance of quieting titles. Michoud v. Girod, 4 How., 561.

It appears that the complainants are, or claim to be, creditors of Edwin Walker, deceased, and that they instituted the present suit in behalf of themselves and other creditors of the deceased to recover a moiety of certain real and personal property, together with the rents and profits of the same, which, as they allege, belonged to their creditor in his lifetime and at the time of his decease. They allege that their creditor owned and held the property described in the bill of complaint in common with one Abram F. Kimmell, of the City of Washington, since deceased, with whom he was carrying on the livery-stable business, under the firm name of Walker & Kimmell, the said property being used for the purposes of said business; that the said Walker being largely indebted to the complainants, their testators and intestates, as well as other parties, dissolved partnership with said Kimmell and conveyed all his real and personal estate, after payment of all partnership debts, to one Voltaire Willett, by deed dated October 8, 1857, in trust to pay off the complainants, their testators and intestates, with the proceeds thereof, the remainder to be paid over to the grantor, his heirs and assigns. Possession of the property at the time was in the junior partner; and the complainants allege that he continued in the possession thereof up to the day of his death, holding the same and applying the proceeds thereof to his own use, without accounting for the rents and profits, either to the grantor, the trustee or to the creditors; and that since his death the property has been in the possession of his widow and children, who have appropriated the same to their own use; and that they utterly deny all right of the complainants to any part or interest in the same.

Sufficient appears from the preceding statement to show what the circumstances were on the first day of February, 1871, when the present bill of complaint was filed against the respondents in the subordinate court. They are Mary A. Kimmell, administratrix of Abram F. Kimmell, deceased, his four children, the heirs of the deceased trustee, and the administrator of the deceased senior partner, who, as alleged, was the debtor of the complainants.

Service was made and the respondents appeared and filed answers, setting up several defenses, the most material of which are contained in the answer of the widow and children of the deceased junior partner. They deny all the material allegations of the bill of complaint, to the effect following:

1. That the complainants or either of them are creditors of the deceased senior partner of the firm, or that the senior partner of the firm, was ever the owner of the real estate described in the bill of complaint, or that he ever owned or possessed any personal property, or that the deceased junior partner ever had in his possession any personal property which belonged either to the deceased senior partner or to the firm.

2. They admit the death of the trustee, but they aver that they are not informed and cannot state whether he ever did anything in discharge of the trusts created by the said deed, and they also admit that the trustee and the deceased junior partner made the alleged conveyance to the brother-in-law of the latter; but they aver that it was made in good faith, and that the moiety of the consideration belonging to the senior partner was appropriated to pay his just debt, as fully explained in the answer.

3. They also allege as a defense that the debtor of the complainants left Washington in the year 1846; that he went to Richmond and entered into business there with a new partner; that he there contracted large debts for which he was liable; that in the latter part of 1857 he conveyed to his new partner a large amount of real and personal property to pay all his debts, including those set up by the complainants; that all these claims were fully satisfied and extinguished either by payment in money or by the acceptance of other securities; and that the supposed debtor of the complainants, at the time of the dissolution of the partnership here, before he went to Richmond, relinquished all interest in the future earnings of the concern, and that the partnership as between the parties was dissolved, though they admit that no formal notice of the dissolution was published.

4. They also admit that besides the real estate there was, at the time, on hand a large stock of horses, vehicles and other property, all of which was taken by the junior partner; but they aver that the junior partner from time to time made payments and advances to the retired partner exceeding in amount the value of his interest in the assets of the partnership, as estimated by himself; and they aver that no formal settlement of accounts ever took place, but they allege that if one could be made, which, as they state, it would be difficult and expensive to accomplish, it would be found that the estate of the debtor of the complainants is largely indebted to the estate of the junior partner.

Finally, they set up as defense to the suit that the claims are stale demands, and of a character that courts of equity will not countenance; because, as they allege, it would now be inequitable and unjust that the complainants should be permitted to enforce an account from the respondents, after having slept upon their rights, if any they have, for so long a time and until all the parties to the transaction are dead.

By consent the cause was referred to an auditor, with instructions to ascertain and report what amount, if any, was due to the respective complainants, and to ascertain and state the partnership accounts and the character of the partnership property at the date of the trust-deed, and the disposition made of the rents and profits by the respondents. Hearing was had before the auditor, and he made the report set forth in the transcript.

Testimony was taken by the complainants prior to the order of reference, and they took further testimony before the examiner subsequent to the appointment of the auditor. By his report it appears that two schedules were attached to the deed of trust, one of which purported to be a list of drafts, notes and bonds due to a third person, and the other to be a list of debts due by the debtor to the complainants. Among other thing, the deed recited that the said debtor, independently of his indebtedness to the firm of which he was a member, owed a large amount to the persons named in the two schedules, and that he desired, after paying all the firm debts, to secure pro rata the debts in the first schedule, and if sufficient was left after that, to pay in full the debts in the second schedule.

It appears that the deed was duly executed, and that the grantor conveyed to the trustee, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever, all of his right, title and interest in and to the real and personal property, debts, effects, credits and assets of every kind whatever and in any manner belonging to the firm, subject to the debts and liabilities of the firm and to the right of the junior partner in winding up and paying off the same, the true intent and meaning of the instrument being only to convey the interest of the senior partner after all the liabilities of the firm have been discharged. Matters of the kind being fully explained, the auditor proceeds to report that he has not stated the claims of the respective complainants; and he gives the reasons for the omission, which appear to be satisfactory, as the report shows that the complainants did not furnish the means to enable him to comply with that direction, except perhaps in the single instance fully set forth in the report.

Directions were also given by the decretal order that the auditor should state the partnership accounts, which he also failed to do, for the satisfactory reason, as he states, that no testimony or other material was furnished by the parties to enable him to perform the required service. Another direction of the decretal order was to state the amount of the property belonging to the firm at the date of the trust-deed: for a compliance with that order, so far as the real estate is concerned, the auditor refers to the deeds introduced in evidence before the examiner, and in respect to the personal property he states that there was no evidence given to show what, if any, belonged to the partnership at that date.

Lots numbered 16, 17, and the west half of 18, in the square numbered 491, were included in the trust-deed. On the 16th of November, 1858, the junior partner and his wife, the trustee of the senior partner joining with them, conveyed the west half of lot 18 and part of lot 17 to the trustee of the sister-in-law of the first named grantor, in respect to which the auditor reports that the deed conveying the same refers to the prior deed of trust given by the senior partner, and he states that the recitals of the deed specify the purpose for which it was executed, and show that the firm owed the cestui que trust the sum of $2,000 money loaned, and that the property was conveyed to her for the sum of $5,000, one half of which went to pay that debt and interest, and the other moiety was paid or secured to the junior partner of the firm.

Six years later the grantee in the deed reconveyed the same to her brother-in-law for $5, as expressed in the consideration of the deed. Complainants charge in the bill of complaint that the junior partner fraudulently procured the conveyance to be made in order to secure the title to himself; but the respondents in their answer deny all fraud and bad faith in the premises, and the auditor reports that no testimony was given touching the conveyance. Instead of that, he states, in response to that charge, that while the circumstances attending the conveyance may be well calculated to cast suspicion upon it, he finds nothing in the case to warrant him in pronouncing it fraudulent and void.

Where the answer of the respondent is responsive to the bill it is evidence in his favor, and is conclusive, unless disproved by more than one witness. Story, Eq. Pl., 7th ed., sec. 875 a; Daniel v. Mitchell, 1 Story, 188.

Two witnesses, or one witness with confirmatory circumstances, are required to outweigh an answer asserting a fact responsive to the bill, the reason for the rule being that when the complainant calls upon the respondent to answer an allegation he admits the answer, if duly filed, to be evidence, and if it is testimony, it is equal to the testimony of any other witness, and as the complainant cannot prevail unless the balance of proof is in his favor, he must have circumstances in addition to his single witness, else he fails to establish the affirmative of the issue. Clark v. Van Riemsdyk, 9 Cranch, 153; Hughes v. Blake, 6 Wheat., 453.

See 9 OTTO.

Chancery courts invariably hold, where the answer is responsive to the bill and positively denies the matters charged, and the denial has respect to a transaction within the knowledge of the respondent, the answer is evidence in his favor; and unless it is overcome by the testimony of two credible witnesses, or of one witness corroborated by other facts and circumstances which give it greater weight than the answer, it is conclusive, so that the court will neither make a decree, nor send the case to trial, but will simply dismiss the bill. Badger v. Badger, 2 Cliff., 154.

Only one witness was examined before the auditor as to the rents and profits received by the respondents, and the report of the auditor states that the annual rental value of the property, excluding that charged to have been fraudulently conveyed, was only $938, and if that be excluded, then the real estate consists only of lot 16 in square 491, with the improvements.

Ten exceptions to the auditor's report were filed by the complainants, alleging for error that he did not report their respective claims as liens against the property in controversy. Pursuant to the order of the court the parties were heard upon the auditor's report and the exceptions thereto, and the court entered a decree that the bill of complaint be dismissed, from which decree the complainants appealed to the General Term, where the decree of the subordinate court was affirmed.

Proceedings in the court below being ended, the complainants appealed to this court, and filed the following assignment of errors: 1. That the court erred in not entering a decree canceling and setting aside as fraudulent the said conveyance to the sister-in-law of the junior partner. 2. That the court erred in not entering a decree that the real estate transferred to the trustee of their debtor should be sold and distributed to his creditors. 3. That the court erred in not entering a decree that the administratrix of the junior partner should account and pay to the trustee to be duly appointed, so much of the personal assets of the firm included in the trust-deed as were held by her intestate in his lifetime. 4. That the court erred in dismissing the bill of complaint. 5. That the court erred in not entering a decree that the representatives of the deceased junior partner should account for the rents and profits of the real estate conveyed to the trustee up to the date of the decree in this cause.

That the partnership existed is not denied; and the proof is clear that the senior partner left Washington in 1846, and that he went to Richmond and there formed a new partnership, and engaged largely in business for twenty years before his death. As before remarked, the right of the complainants, if any, to prosecute the suit sprang from the trust-deed dated October 8, 1857, and executed by their alleged debtor to his trustee for the purpose of paying his debts, including what he owed to the complainants. Annexed as the deed is to the bill of complaint, it may properly be referred to as an exhibit, from which it appears that their debtor and the intestate of the first named respondent were "Engaged as partners in the City of Washington, and in the progress of the business acquired real and personal estate, including horses, carriages, buggies, sulkies and other property," and that they held claims against various persons, and that the senior partner was independently indebted to the persons named in the schedules appended to the deed; that he conveyed all his right, title and interest in the real and personal property, debts, effects, credits and assets of the firm, to the grantee of the trust-deed for the described purposes, subject to the debts and liabilities of the firm, and the right of the junior partner in winding up and paying off the same.

There is no averment in the bill that any interest in the partnership property was ever collected by the trustee, or that he could have made any such collection, nor is it averred that any of the complainants are judgment creditors.

Fourteen years elapsed from the date of the deed to the filing of the bill, and throughout that period none of the complainants, during the lifetime of the partners and trustee or any of them, took any step whatever to ascertain or enforce their rights, if any they had, under that trust-deed. Nothing appears to show that the trustee ever took any beneficial title whatever to the real property. Beyond doubt, he took the legal title by the words of the deed; but there is no proof to show that he ever acquired the possession or the right of possession, it appearing by the deed that the right of possession was secured to the junior partner, for the purpose of winding up the partnership.

Concede that the grantor might have joined the trustee in a suit for an account on his own motion or at the suggestion of the trustee or creditors, still the answer to that suggestion, if made, is that he did not do so; and now the grantee, the trustee and the junior partner all being dead, unless there can first be an account of the partnership property, the complainants can obtain no relief, as there is nothing on which a decree in their favor could operate for their benefit. They do not allege that there was ever any settlement of the partnership affairs, nor do they in terms pray in the bill for an account of the partnership assets. By consent an auditor was appointed to ascertain and state the partnership accounts, but he characterizes the proceedings in the cause as involved in obscurity, and the testimony "as incomplete, vague and indefinite," and reports that there is only one instance in which the amount due to any one of the complainants has been proven with any reasonable degree of certainty. Except the prayer that the administratrix and heirs of the junior partner account with and pay over to the complainants the rents and profits of the estate conveyed to the trustee, the bill of complaint contains nothing which can possibly be construed as a prayer for an account of the assets of the partnership.

Four lots, to wit: 16, 17, 18 and 19, the complainants claim were held and used as partnership property; but the answer of the principal respondents denies that claim, and avers that the firm never owned any of the real estate mentioned, except lot 16 and parts of lots 17 and 18; and the auditor reports that, excluding the property conveyed to the other trustee, the assets consist only of lot 16 with the improvements on the same, and that there is not a particle of testimony to prove that the conveyance to the other trustee was fraudulent. Attempt is made to set aside that conveyance without making either the trustee or cestui que trust parties to the bill, though it is said by the complainants that they are both alive, of which, however, there is no proof in the record.

Exceptions to the auditor's report were taken by the complainants because he did not report as liens against the property described in the cause the claims of each and every complainant, when his report shows that the evidence given did not enable him, except in one instance, to ascertain the amount of the claims, which was much less than the minimum of jurisdiction.

For fourteen years the complainants slept upon their rights, and there is not a single allegation in the bill nor a particle of proof introduced in their behalf to excuse their manifest laches in not seeking an account until all the parties in interest have departed this life.

Equity courts in cases of concurrent jurisdiction usually consider themselves bound by the Statute of Limitations which govern courts of law in like cases, and this rather in obedience to the Statute of Limitations than by analogy.

Wagner v. Baird, 7 How., 234. In many other cases they act upon the analogy of the statutory limitations at law, as where a legal title would in ejectment be barred by twenty years' adverse possession courts of equity will act upon the like limitation, and apply it to all cases of relief sought upon equitable titles or claims touching real estate. Moore v. Greene, 2 Curt., 202; 2 Story, Eq. Jur., 8th ed., 520; Farnum v. Brooke, 9 Pick., 243.

Support to those propositions is found everywhere; but there is a defense peculiar to courts of equity founded on lapse of time and the staleness of the claim where no statute of limitations governs the case. Such courts in such cases often act upon their own inherent doctrine of discouraging, for the peace of society, antiquated demands by refusing to interfere where there has been gross laches in prosecuting the claim, or long acquiescence in the assertion of adverse rights. Badger v. Badger [supra]; Roberts v. Tunstall, 4 Hare, 269; Stearns v. Page [supra].

Authorities to support that proposition are numerous and decisive, nor is it necessary to look beyond the decisions of this court for the purpose. Lapse of time, said Mr. Justice Thompson, and the death of the parties to the deed have always been considered in a court of chancery entitled to great weight and almost controlling circumstances in cases where the controversy grows out of stale transactions. Jenkins v. Pye, 12 Pet., 241; Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves., 96; Humbert v. Rector, 7 Paige, 195.

Few cases can be found more nearly analogous to the case before the court than the one in which the controversy had its origin in this district. It had respect to a deed of trust executed to secure certain creditors named in the schedule annexed to the deed. Enough appears to show that the deed was filed by the trustee himself within twenty years, and that the subordinate court decreed that the amount of debts enumerated in the schedule should be paid. Appeal from that decree was taken to this court, and Taney, Ch. J., in disposing of the case and reversing the decree, remarked as follows: "We do not found our judgment upon the presumption of payment. For it is not merely on the presumption of payment, or in analogy to the Statute of Limitations, that a court of chancery refuses to lend its aid to stale demands. There must be conscience, good faith and reasonable diligence to call into action the powers of the court. In matters of account, where they are not barred by the Statute of Limitations, courts of equity refuse to interfere after considerable lapse of time, from considerations of public policy and from the difficulty of doing entire justice when the original transactions have become obscured by time and the evidence may be lost." McKnight v. Taylor, 1 How., 168.

Corresponding views were expressed by Mr. Justice Story prior to that time, and the Chief Justice referred to the same as having settled the doctrine of the court upon the subject. Piatt v. Vattier, 9 Pet., 416; Smith v. Clay, 2 Amb., 645.

Courts of equity, acting on their own inherent doctrine of discouraging for the peace of society antiquated demands, refuse to interfere in attempts to establish a stale trust, except where the trust is clearly established, or where the facts have been fraudulently and successfully concealed by the trustee from the knowledge of the cestui que trust. Relief in such cases may be sought; but the rule is that the cestui que trust should set forth in the bill specifically what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of the claim, and how he or she came to be so long ignorant of their alleged rights, and the means used by the respondent to keep him or her in ignorance, and how he or she first came to the knowledge of their rights. Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall., 87 [69 U. S., XVII., 836]; White v. Parnter, 1 Knapp, C. C., 227.

When a party appeals to the conscience of the Chancellor in support of a claim, says Mr. Justice Field, where there has been laches in prosecuting it or long acquiescence in the assertion of adverse right, he should set forth in his bill specifically what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of the claim; and if he does not, the Chancellor may justly refuse to consider his case on his own showing, without inquiring whether there is a demurrer or any formal plea of the Statute of Limitations contained in the answer. Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall., 185 [88 U. S., XXII., 485].

Laches and neglect, says Mr. Justice Swayne, are invariably discountenanced in equity and, therefore, there has always been a limitation of suits in such courts from the beginning of their jurisdiction. Limitations of the kind are dictated by experience and are founded on a salutary policy, as the lapse of time carries with it the memory and life of witnesses, the muniments of evidence, and the other means of judicial proof. Brown v. Buena Vista Co., 95 U. S., 161 [XXIV., 403].

Difficulties often arise in controversies of the kind in getting at the truth so as to administer justice with anything like reasonable certainty. That the parties to the original transaction have long since deceased is shown from the proofs in the case, and it is not improbable that many or all of their clerks and agents may be inaccessible as witnesses, for the same or some other reason, or if alive and their attendance as witnesses may be secured, they may not be able to remember anything about the transactions.

Viewed in the light of these authorities and suggestions, the court is of the opinion that the last defense set up in the respondents' answer is fully maintained, and that there is no error in the record.

Decree affirmed.

Cited—4 Hughes, 323.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

DAVID P. RANKIN.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 261-265.)

Affidavit, when not part of record—possession, evidence of title—former judgment—mining rules—statute.

*1. An affidavit for a continuance does not become part of the record, so that the court can take judicial notice of it on the trial, unless properly introduced as evidence by one of the parties.

2. Possession of land by a plaintiff in trespass quare clausum fregit is prima facie evidence of title, and is sufficient for a recovery against a mere trespasser.

3. It is the doctrine of this court that the judgment in a former suit between the same parties is conclusive of every issue decided in that suit, and in the second suit it can be shown by parol evidence what was tried in the first, whenever it becomes necessary to do so.

4. While the local record of a mining community is the best evidence of the rules and customs governing their mining interests, it is not the best or only evidence of priority or extent of actual possession.

5. The Act of Congress of May 10, 1872, section 5, gives no greater effect to the record of such mining claims than is given to the registration laws of the States, and this has never been to exclude proof of actual possession, and of its extent as prima facie evidence of title.

[No. 193.]

Argued Mar. 31, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Montana.

The case arose in the Third Judicial District Court, Meagher County, Montana Territory. Judgment was there given for the defendant, which was affirmed upon appeal by the Supreme Court of the Territory; whereupon the plaintiffs sued out this writ of error.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. J. Hubley Ashton, Nath'l Wilson and J. H. Shober, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Richard T. Merrick and M. F. Morris, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The declaration avers that plaintiffs below, who are also plaintiffs in error, were the owners of a mining claim in Meagher County, known as Claim No. 2, below discovery, in Green Horn Gulch, and that defendant wrongfully entered upon and took possession of a portion of said claim, and took and carried away large quantities of gold-bearing earth and gold-dust, the property of plaintiffs, of the value of $15,000.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Mines, ownership of; U. S. statutes as to; right of support of surface. See note to U. S. v. Castillero, 67 U. S., XVII., 448.

The answer amounts to a general denial of all the averments of the complaint.

Bills of exception taken on the trial show that plaintiffs offered in evidence the record of a judgment in the same court, in which the defendant in this suit was plaintiff, and the present plaintiffs and those under whom they claim were defendants, which was an action for trespass, wherein the same question of conflicting interference of the two mining claims was in issue, and the verdict and judgment were for plaintiffs in this suit. The admission of this record was objected to, and the court sustained the objection.

Plaintiffs then offered to prove that they had been in actual possession of Claim No. 2 in Green Horn Gulch for several years, and that defendant had admitted in conversation the existence of such a claim, and had conceded a dividing line between his claim and that of plaintiffs, which would give to the latter the ground in controversy. The court refused this also.

Plaintiffs then offered in evidence a deed from Harding & Wilson for Claim No. 2, Green Horn Gulch, dated December, 1869, and proof of occupancy and use of it ever since. The court rejected this also. And having rejected all the evidence offered by plaintiffs, it directed the jury to find for defendant, and on that verdict rendered a judgment, which was affirmed on appeal by the Supreme Court of the Territory.

The record sufficiently shows that neither party to this suit had any legal title to the locus in quo from the United States, and that only such possessory right as the Act of Congress recognizes in the locator and occupant of a mining privilege was in controversy.

Since this right of possession was the matter to be decided by the jury, it is almost incomprehensible that proof of prior occupancy, and especially when accompanied by a deed showing color of right, should be rejected.

In actions of ejectment, or trespass on real estate, possession by the plaintiff at the time of eviction has always been held prima facie evidence of the legal title, and as against a mere trespasser it is sufficient. 2 Greenl. Ev., sec. 311. If this be the law, when the right of recovery depends on the strict legal title in the plaintiff, how much more appropriate is it as evidence of the superior right of possession under the Acts of Congress which respect such possession among miners.

If this plain principle of the common law needed support from adjudged cases, as applicable to the one before us, it may be found in the courts of California in Atwood v. Frisot, 17 Cal., 37; English v. Johnson, 17 Cal., 107; and Hess v. Winder, 30 Cal., 355.

The court below erred, therefore, in rejecting this evidence of plaintiffs' prior possession.

Whatever may have been the opinion of other courts, it has been the doctrine of this court in regard to suits on contract ever since the case of the Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 24 How., 333 [65 U. S., XVI., 650], and in regard to actions affecting real estate, since Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall., 35 [69 U. S., XVII., 755], that whenever the same question has been in issue and tried, and judgment rendered, it is conclusive of the issue so decided in any subsequent suit between the same parties; and also, that where, from the nature of the pleadings, it would be left in doubt on what precise issue the verdict or judgment was rendered, it is competent to ascertain this by parol evidence on the second trial. The latest expression of the doctrine is found in Cromwell v. Sac Co., 94 U. S., 351 [XXIV., 195]; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S., 423 [XXIV., 204].

The rejection of the record of the suit of Rankin v. Campbell [1 Mont., 300], was in direct conflict with this doctrine. In that case Rankin had brought an action of the same character as the one he is now defending, against the parties who are now plaintiffs, and had a verdict and judgment against him. The record in that case, as in this, shows that one party claimed under Mining Claim No. 2, in Green Horn Gulch, and the other under Mining Claim No. 8, in Confederate Gulch. The issue in both cases was to which claim did the disputed piece of mineral deposit belong; and if that issue was not clear, it was competent, under the decisions we have cited, to show by parol proof that the controversy was over the same locality, and that the issue had, therefore, been decided against Rankin.

And this proof the plaintiffs offered, in connection with the record of the former suit. The exclusion of this evidence was error.

The principal ground on which the court rejected all this evidence, and all other evidence offered by the plaintiffs, is, that at the same Term of the court, and before the trial, one of the plaintiffs, in support of an application for a continuance, made an affidavit, in which he stated that he expected to prove by an absent witness that he had destroyed the original record and laws of Green Horn Gulch, in which the plaintiffs' claim is located; that said records and laws established the size, lines, boundaries and location of Claim No. 2 below discovery, in said gulch, and that said records showed that the predecessors of the plaintiffs in interest possessed and occupied this claim, in accordance with the local rules.

This affidavit, made in support of an application for continuance, which was overruled, the Judge, of his own motion, treated as part of the record, and as before him on the trial, though not offered by either party; and as well as we can understand it, excluded all other evidence of the possession and location and validity of the plaintiffs' claim, because this lost record was the best evidence, and all other was secondary or inferior.

It is difficult to argue this proposition seriously. The affidavit was in no judicial sense before the court on the trial, and could only be used, if at all, when introduced by one of the parties for some legitimate purpose. It it had been so presented by defendant, it plainly showed that this better evidence was destroyed and could not be produced, and was a sufficient foundation for the use of secondary evidence.

But the local record of a mining community, while it may be and probably is the best evidence of the rules and customs governing the community, and to some extent the distribution of mining rights, is not the best or the only evidence of priority or extent of actual possession. It may fix limits to individual acquisition, the terms and rules for acquiring and transferring mining rights, as the laws of the State do in regard to ordinary property; but such rules and customs no more determine who was the first locator or where he located, than any other competent evidence of that fact.

Whatever may be the effect given to the order of mining claims under section 5 of the Act of Congress approved May 10, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 92, it certainly cannot be greater than that which is given to the registration laws of the States, and they have never been held to exclude parol proof of actual possession and the extent of that possession as prima facie evidence of title.

The Supreme Court of the Territory argue that the trial court can regulate the order of admission of evidence in a case, and because the plaintiffs did not introduce first of all proof of their mining records which were lost, nothing else could be introduced. For want of these, evidence of actual possession, of title-deeds, of the location of the claim, and the record of the former suit determining the rights of the parties to the locus in quo, were all unavailing and inadmissible.

We know of no rule of law which justifies this action.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Montana is reversed and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to order a new trial.

Cited—111 U. S., 393; 6 Sawy., 508; 4 Hughes, 425; 94 Ill., 626.

FRANKLIN C. SMITH, Appt.,

v.

THE FORT SCOTT, HUMBOLDT AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, AND THE COUNTY OF BOURBON ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 398-401.)

Equity jurisdiction of Circuit Court—creditor's bill.

1. The Circuit Court of the United States has full equity jurisdiction, and state legislation cannot affect it. The States, however, may create equitable rights, which those courts will enforce where there is jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter.

2. A creditor's bill must be preceded by a judgment at law establishing the measure and validity of the demand of the complainant, for which he seeks satisfaction in chancery.

[No. 223.]

Argued Apr. 9, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. H. G. Miller & T. G. Frost, for appellant.

Mr. J. E. McKeighan, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was decided by the court below upon demurrer to the amended bill of the appellant. The case made by that bill, so far as it is necessary to state it, may be embodied in a few words.

The appellant and Dunn, under the name of See 9 Otto, U. S. Book 25,

Smith & Co., on the 6th of June, 1871, contracted with a corporation then known as the Fort Scott and Allen County Railroad Company, afterwards the Fort Scott, Humboldt and Western Railroad Company, to grade the line of its roadway, extending from Fort Scott, in Kansas, to Humboldt City, in the same State, and to build all the necessary bridges and culverts, and to complete the work by the 1st of July, 1872.

The Railroad Company, in consideration of the work to be done, agreed to pay and deliver to Smith & Co. certain municipal bonds, amounting, according to their face value, to $275,000, to wit: $125,000 in the bonds of Bourbon County, $25,000 in the bonds of Humboldt City, $75,000 in the bonds of Humboldt Township, $25,000 in the bonds of Salem Township and $25,000 in the bonds of Elsmore Township. Dunn assigned his interest in the contract to Smith. The latter did all the work before the time specified. On the 6th of June, 1872, the Railroad Company passed a resolution accepting the work and acknowledging the fulfillment of the contract.

The bonds of Humboldt Township and Humboldt City, amounting together to $100,000, have been delivered to Smith pursuant to the contract. The bonds of Bourbon County and those of Salem Township and of Elsmore Township have not been delivered.

On the 24th of July, 1869, the commissioners of Bourbon County passed a resolution calling for an election on the 24th of August following, under a statute of Kansas, to decide the question whether the County should subscribe $150,000 to the capital stock of any railroad company then or thereafter organized to construct a railroad on the line specified in the contract of Smith & Co. The election was accordingly held at the time appointed. The result was in favor of the subscription. On the 13th of October, 1870, the Fort Scott and Allen County Railroad Company was duly organized. On the 13th of October, 1871, the commissioners of Bourbon County passed a resolution authorizing Joseph L. Emert to subscribe for $150,000 of the stock. The subscription was made accordingly. The County, from time to time, voted upon the stock. The commissioners resolved to prepare and in part to execute the bonds as soon as the necessary lithographing could be finished. They promised Smith promptly to deliver them upon the completion of the work within the contract time. They were present when the contract was entered into, and made the same promise to Smith & Co. But for their repeated assurances to this effect, and the reliance of both Smith & Dunn upon their good faith, the work would not have proceeded, and would not have been done.

The county bonds have not been issued, and new and burdensome terms have been imposed as conditions of that result. The Railroad Company is hopelessly insolvent. There is no remedy left to the appellant but to procure the bonds still in arrear. The prayer of the bill is that the Railroad Company be decreed to assign its claim for the bonds of Humboldt County to the complainant; that the county commissioners be decreed to issue them, and that process issue against the Fort Scott, Humboldt and Western Railroad Company (formerly the Fort Scott and Allen County Railway Company), and against the County Commissioners of Bourbon County and against that County.

The only question presented for our determination is whether the demurrer was properly sustained.

Our judgment will be confined to a single point.

There is no privity between the County of Bourbon and the complainant. There has been no assignment, legal or equitable, to him by the Railroad Company of its claim against the County. If there had been an assignment, the Circuit Court could not have taken jurisdiction of the case, because the assignor, if there had been no assignment, could not have maintained a suit upon the thing assigned in that forum. R. S., 109; Sere v. Pilot, 6 Cranch, 332. The relationship of the complainant to the Company is that he is its creditor while the County is assumed to be, and perhaps is, its debtor. The complainant has no lien upon the fund he is seeking to reach. His case is, therefore, a common creditor's bill; nothing more and nothing less. There is no statutory provision in Kansas touching such bills. The distinction there between legal and equitable remedies has been abolished. 2 Dassel's Stat. of Kan., p. 643, sec. 3230.

The law of procedure there recognizes but two forms of action: one is designated a civil, the other a criminal action. The former relates to the assertion of civil rights by suit; the latter, to criminal prosecutions. The Circuit Court of the United States of that district has, nevertheless, full equity jurisdiction. The Federal Courts have it to the same extent in all the States, and state legislation cannot affect it. Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet., 648. The States, however, may create equitable rights, which those courts will enforce where there is jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter. Clark v. Smith, 13 Pet., 195; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall., 236 [80 U. S., XX., 624]. This bill, as regards this point, was well filed in the court to which it was addressed. But nothing is better settled than that such a bill must be preceded by a judgment at law establishing the measure and validity of the demand of the complainant for which he seeks satisfaction in chancery. Wiggins v. Armstrong, 2 Johns. Ch., 144; Hendricks v. Robinson, 2 Johns. Ch., 296; Greenway v. Thomas, 14 Ill., 271; Mizell v. Herbert, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.), 550; Gorton v. Massey, 12 Minn., 147; Skeele v. Stanwood, 33 Me., 309; Sexton v. Wheaton, 1 Am. L. Cas., 5th ed., 59.

There are exceptions to this rule, but they do not affect its application to the case in hand. It is, therefore, unnecessary to pursue the subject further.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

THE DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

EBENEZER T. ALLING ET AL.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

THE CAÑON CITY AND SAN JUAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

See (S. C., 9 Otto, 463-482.)

Dismissal of appeal—railroad grant—location—appropriation—use of cañon in common with others.

1. Where appeals are being prosecuted to final judgment by order of the directors or trustees of a corporation, this court will not, upon the suggestion of strangers to the decrees appealed from, go behind the official action of the Board of Directors or Trustees and, in plain disregard of their wishes, dismiss the appeals.

2. By the Act of June 8, 1872, Congress granted to the Denver Company a present beneficial easement in the particular way over which the routes designated in its charter lay, capable, however, of enjoyment only when the way granted was actually located and, in good faith, appropriated for the purposes contemplated by the charter of the Company, and the Act of Congress.

3. Where such location and appropriation were made, the title, which was previously imperfect, acquired precision, and by relation took effect as of the date of the grant.

3. The surveys of the Denver Company of 1871-72, followed by an occupancy of the cañon on the 19th of April, 1873, in advance of the Cañon City Company, for the purpose of constructing its road through that defile, was a final appropriation of the way granted by Congress.

5. When it accepted the benefits of the Act of March 3, 1877, it must be held to have assented to the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1875, whereby it was declared that any other railroad company, duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, might use and occupy the cañon, for the purpose of its road, in common with the road first located.

[Nos. 811, 812.]

Submitted Jan. 6, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. John P. Usher, James Grant, Hanson A. Risley, Wells, Smith & Macon and Lyman K. Bass, for appellant:

That the Act of Congress granting the right of way to the complainant, approved June 8, 1872, was a grant in presenti, will not be questioned, for it is established by a multitude of decisions.

Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44 (88 U. S., XXII., 551); Leavenworth, etc., R. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S., 733 (XXIII., 634).

That the grant is paramount and must override all subsequent grants and dispositions of the public domain, along the designated route, whether to individuals or corporations, is also true. It was so decided by Mr. Justice Field in Nevada, in construing the grant to the Central Pacific Railway Company, which is like this.

Cent. Pac. R. R. Co. v. Dyer, 1 Sawyer, 641.

The question, then, may be said to be controlled by the doctrine of stare decisis, and further argument upon it superfluous.

A right of way acquired by grant or deed, can never be lost by non-user.

Smiles v. Hastings, 24 Barb., 48.

The charter proposed and designated that gorge of the Arkansas for complainant's route. Congress, by the Act of June 8, 1872, expressly approved the charter, and so expressly approved this route, and granted the right of way of two hundred feet in width through that cañon, to the complainant,

That grant covers the adjacent walls of the cañon, to an average width of seventy-five feet on each side, for it is admitted that the cañon is only about forty feet wide.

A grant of land "equal to one half of three sections in width, on each side of the Fox River, and the lakes through which it passes from its mouth to the point where the Portage canal shall enter the same, and on each side of said canal, from one stream to another," was held by the Attorney-General to be a grant defined with reasonable certainty, and with sufficient precision to pass the title to the land without survey.

See Veeder v. Guppy, 3 Wis., 502.

How much more the grant of the Arkansas cañon!

Now, whether this was a grant of the fee as we claim it to be, upon the authority of Coburn v. Coxeter, 51 N. H., 158; or a grant of an easement only, the result is the same; for if it was a grant of an easement, the right to the possession is vested in the complainant.

Bridge Co. v. Kan. Pac. Railw. Co., 12 Kan., 410; S. C., 92 U. S., 316 (XXIII., 515).

These decisions are conclusive upon this question.

It only remains to consider the Act of Congress of March 3, 1875, Stat. at L., 482.

Is it an Act professing to alter, amend or repeal the Act of June 8, 1872?

In terms clearly it is not.

As long ago as 1839, the Supreme Court, in Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet., 498, decided that "Whensoever a tract of land shall have been once legally appropriated to any purpose, from that moment, the land thus appropriated becomes severed from the mass of public land; and no subsequent law or proclamation or sale, would be construed to embrace it or to operate upon it, although no reservation were made of it."

The rule of law for the construction of statutes, is, that the Legislature, in passing an Act, does "not intend to make any alteration other than what is specified, and besides what has been plainly pronounced."

Potter's Dwar. St., 185, to which is appended a note, affirming that this is the rule of interpretation in all our courts, Federal and State.

Messrs. Charles E. Gast, H. M. Teller, Willard Teller, G. B. Reed and E. R. Hoar, for appellees:

"Since a right of way ex vi termini, imports a right of passing in a particular line," (Jones v. Percival, 5 Pick., 485), a grant of right of way must designate some line, to which the grant may apply. It must, as was said by Judge Hallet, of the circuit court, in this case, "come within something less than forty miles of the line of location." The certificate simply indicates the general course and direction of the lines, and was not such a designation or description of its way between the points named, as could either charge the public lands lying between the points named, with an easement, or prohibit the government from granting a right of way over the same tract by subsequent legislation, a subsequent grantee having designated its right of way by survey, plats, etc.

The grant expressed in said Act was merely a license to go upon the public domain and acquire a right of way, and an immunity from See 9 OTTO, action for trespass; and such a likeness was revocable at any time before the right to be acquired had vested.

N. R. R. Co. v. Gould, 21 Cal., 260; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 Mees. & W., 838; Fentiman v. Smith, 4 East, 107; Ricker v. Kelly, 1 Me., 117; Washb. Real Prop., 542; Washb. Eas., 2, 7, 24; Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R., 267; Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass., 533; Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend., 380.

There was no sufficient description of the land to divest the government from granting a right of way to be acquired by another company.

Shipp v. Miller, 2 Wheat., 322; Johnson v. Panel, 2 Wheat., 216; Blake v. Doherty, 5 Wheat., 359.

The government was not divested of its right to the land by the Act of 1872, so as to place the land beyond control of Congress, since the rights are not expressly secured to it, and are not essential to the existence of the corporation.

2 Redf. Railw., 408; Charles Rio. Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet., 420; State v. Noyes, 47 Me., 189.

The Act of 1875 applies as well to companies formed before its passage as those formed afterward, and this right of way could be acquired, after the passage of that Act, by no company or corporation whose line had not been determined, except upon compliance with that law, and the appellant was as much bound by that Act as the appellee.

Not having complied with the Law of 1875, the appellant had no right superior to that of appellees.

If appellant ever had any right of way up the Arkansas, above Cañon City, it abandoned it, as the evidence shows, in 1875; and both on the ground of lack of right, ever had, and abandoned, if had, appellant had no equities in this case, and the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Statement.

These causes involve the conflicting claims of two railroad corporations—the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company and the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company—to the occupancy and use of the Grand or Big Cañon of the Arkansas for railroad purposes. For the sake of brevity, the former will be hereafter designated as the Denver Company, and the latter as the Cañon City Company.

The Denver Company became incorporated in the year 1870, in conformity to the laws of the then Territory of Colorado. Its object, expressed in articles of incorporation filed in the proper office of the Territory, was to locate, construct, operate and maintain certain railway and telegraph lines, viz.: the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, the Denver and Southern Railway, the South Park Railway, the Western Colorado Railway, the Moreno Valley Railway, the San Juan Railway, the Galleto Railway, and the Santa Rita Railway. The general route of each line was designated in the articles of incorporation. That of the main line, the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, was as follows:

"Commencing at Denver, Colorado Territory; thence running up the valley of the South Platte River, on the southeast side thereof, to a point at or near the mouth of Plum Creek; thence up the valley of Plum Creek, to a point at or near the forks of East Plum Creek and West Plum Creek; thence up the main east branch of Plum Creek Valley to the lake in township 11, range 67 west, on the east of the ridge dividing the waters of Plum Creek and Monument Creek; thence down the valley of Monument Creek to a point at or near the junction of the valleys of the Monument and Fountain qui bouille, or to a point in the Fountain Valley, below the mouth of the Monument, if the detailed survey shall determine the latter to be the most eligible; thence by the valley of the Fountain or across its west tributaries to such a point on the Arkansas River at or above Pueblo as may be found upon a detailed survey to be the most eligible for intersecting the same; thence up the valley of the Arkansas to a point at or near Cañon City; thence continuing up the valley of the Arkansas through the Big Cañon of the same to a point at or near the mouth of the Arkansas River; thence by the valleys or the adjoining slopes of the Arkansas River and of Pueblo Creek to the summit of the divide between the waters of the Arkansas and the San Luis Park, known as Poncho Pass; thence by the most eligible route in a general southerly direction down the San Luis Valley to the valley of the Rio Grande del Norte; thence in a general southerly direction, by the particular route which may be determined upon by a detailed survey to be most eligible, down the valley of the Rio Grande to the southern boundary of Colorado; thence continuing down the valley of the Rio Grande, on either side of the river, as may be found expedient, or crossing from one side to the other when desirable, to El Paso, in the State of Chihuahua, with the privilege of consolidating or uniting with and operating any connecting railway in the Republic of Mexico."

The remaining seven roads are, or were intended to be, branches or feeders of the main line.

By an Act of Congress, approved June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 339, "The right of way over the public domain, one hundred feet in width, on each side of the track, together with such public lands adjacent thereto as may be needed for depots, shops and other buildings for railroad purposes, and for yard room and side tracks, not exceeding 20 acres at any one station, and not more than one station in every ten miles, and the right to take, from the public lands adjacent thereto, stone, timber, earth, water and other material required for the construction and repair of its railway and telegraph line," was granted and confirmed unto the Denver Company, its successors and assigns. It is described in the Act as a corporation created under the incorporation laws of the Territory of Colorado. By the Act, all the rights, powers and franchises conferred by those laws on corporations created thereunder for constructing and operating railroad and telegraph lines, were granted, ratified and confirmed to that Company for the extension and operation of its railway and telegraph lines in and through any contiguous territory of the United States, to the northern boundary line of Mexico, subject to the conditions and requirements of the territorial statutes so far as the same were applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States. The Act, also, gave to the Company the rights, powers and privileges conferred upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company by section 3 of the Act of July 2, 1864. But the rights thus granted and conferred were accompanied by the proviso that the Company should complete its railway to a point on the Rio Grande as far south as Santa Fé, within five years after the passage of the Act of Congress, and complete each year thereafter fifty miles additional south of that point.

By an Act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, the Act of June 8, 1872, was corrected by adding thereto a proviso, which was declared to have been omitted by mistake of the copyist from the last named Act. That proviso declares, among other things, that the "Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company is hereby recognized as a lawful corporation from the date of its incorporation under the laws of Colorado, and all the powers, privileges and franchises by said laws conferred upon said Company are hereby expressly ratified, confirmed and legalized as existing from the said date of incorporation." 18 Stat. at L., 516.

On the same day, March 3, 1875, Congress passed an Act granting a "right of way through the public lands of the United States," to any railroad "company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, except the District of Columbia, or by Congress, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of the central line of said road; also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to line of the road, material, etc., necessary for the construction of the road, and grounds for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side tracks, turn-outs, and water stations," etc.

The 2d section provides:

"That any railroad company whose right of way or whose track or road-bed upon such right of way passes through any cañon, pass or defile shall not prevent any other railroad company from the use and occupancy of said cañon, pass or defile, for the purposes of its road, in common with the road first located, or the crossing of other railroads at grade. And the location of such right of way through any cañon, pass or defile shall not cause the disuse of any wagon or other public highway now located therein, nor prevent the location through the same of any such wagon road or highway where such road or highway may be necessary for the public accommodation; and where any change in the location of such wagon road is necessary to permit the passage of such railroad through any cañon, pass or defile, said Railroad Company shall, before entering upon the ground occupied by such wagon road, cause the same to be reconstructed at its own expense in the most favorable location, and in as perfect a manner as the original road; Provided, That such expenses shall be equitably divided between any number of railroad companies occupying and using the same cañon, pass or defile."

Section 4 declares that any railroad company desiring to secure the benefits of that Act shall, "Within twelve months after the location of any section of twenty miles of its road, if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if upon unsurveyed lands, within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land-office for the district where such land is located, a profile of its road; and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, the same was required to be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such right of way passes should be disposed of subject to such right of way." All rights thereby granted to be forfeited as to any section located but uncompleted, within five years after such location. 18 Stat. at L., 482.

On the 15th of February, 1877, Alling, Locke and Megrue became incorporated under the laws of Colorado, as "The Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company," with a capital stock of $100,000, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a railroad from Cañon City; thence up the valley of the Arkansas River through the Grand Cañon thereof; thence, by the most practicable route, following that river to South Arkansas postoffice, in Lake County, Colorado. The articles of incorporation were filed in the office of the Secretary of State of Colorado, on the 19th February, 1877. On the 23d June, 1877, the Secretary of the Interior, in an official communication, declared his approval of the proofs of organization filed by the Cañon City Company, and of the map showing the line of its road for a distance of 20 miles.

On the 3d March, 1877, Congress passed an Act amending that of June 8, 1872, so as to read that the Denver Company should have ten years, from the passage of the original Act, to complete its railway as far south as Santa Fé, in default of which, the rights and privileges granted to it should be null and void as to the unfinished part of said road.

And on 20th April, 1878, the Cañon City Company filed its complaint for injunction and relief against the Denver Company, in the Third Judicial District Court of Colorado, Fremont County, claiming that it had complied, in all respects, with the Act of Congress of March 3, 1875, and had acquired a prior right to construct its road through the Grand Cañon, one hundred feet on each side of its line as surveyed in 1877. It charged that the defendant was interfering with the construction of its road upon that line.

In accordance with the prayer of the bill, an injunction was granted by the state court, restraining the defendant from interfering with its further operations in the cañon. On 22d April, 1878, that action upon the petition of the defendant Company was removed for trial into the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado.

On 27th April, 1878, the Denver Company filed its bill in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, against Alling and others, who are designated in the charter of the Cañon City Company as its trustees for the first year, and against the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway Company, charging that the Cañon City Company was not a legally constituted corporation; that the individual defendants, wrongfully claiming to be such Corporation, had, by force occupied the Grand Cañon, and were proceeding to locate their road upon a line in that cañon which plaintiff had surveyed in 1871-72, and upon which plaintiff had made preparations to resume active work on the 19th April, 1878; that, although plaintiff was in the occupancy of the narrow portion of the cañon, where only one road could be located, the defendants threatened by force to drive away its engineers and servants then working in said cañon, and thereby dispossess plaintiff of its located line and grade in the narrow part of said cañon; that the defendants were aided and abetted in said course by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway Company, who sought to build a road from Pueblo, by the valley of the Arkansas, and through said cañon, and to that end had confederated with the defendants to compel the plaintiff to abandon the extension of its railway as authorized by its charter and the Act of Congress. The plaintiff, by its bill, claimed an exclusive right of way through the Big Cañon, upon the line of its survey, and one hundred feet upon each side of its road, and to that effect relief was asked by final decree. In that suit a temporary injunction was granted against the Cañon City Company, restraining it from occupying or attempting to occupy the Big Cañon, and from, in any way or manner, constructing or attempting to survey, locate or construct their line of railroad through the cañon, which, for the purposes of that suit, was taken and decreed to begin at what is known as the "Point of Rocks," at the mouth of the cañon, and extending to the twelve-mile bridge. That injunction was subsequently modified and limited in its operation to that part of the cañon known as the Royal Gorge, and the defendant was allowed to enter upon that part of the cañon and grade the same for a railroad, but not to lay ties or rails on any part thereof until the future order of the court.

In the action instituted by the Cañon City Company, the Denver Company filed a cross-bill, setting up substantially the same facts as in its original bill against Alling and others. Upon final hearing a decree was rendered in the suit of the Cañon City Company against the Denver Company, which, among other things, recognized the prior right of the former to proceed in the construction and operation of its road through the Grand Cañon, without interference or obstruction, in any way, by the latter Company, but with liberty to the Denver Company to exhibit its bill in any court of competent jurisdiction to compel the Cañon City Company to so change, locate and construct its road as to permit the convenient and proper location by the Denver Company of its own road, or to compel the Cañon City Company to permit the Denver Company to occupy the track and roadway of the former Company, if at any point in that defile it should be impracticable to conveniently lay down or safely operate two distinct lines of railway. From that decree the Denver Company appealed, and it also appealed from the decree in its own suit, whereby the preliminary injunction granted to it was dissolved, and its bill dismissed.

OPINION.

A preliminary question, presented for our consideration, must be first disposed of.

These causes were determined in the circuit court, by final decree, on the 24th August, 1878. Upon stipulation between the parties they were submitted here on 10th of January last. On the 20th January it was represented to this court, in proper form, that the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company owned a railroad which, with its branches and extensions, is a continuation, in the State of Colorado, of the line of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company in the State of Kansas; that since the pendency in this court of these causes, certain contracts and arrangements had been made and executed between the Denver Company, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, and the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, with the consent of the appellees in both suits; that they were made after the filing of the stipulation for the argument of these causes, and completed and in part executed after the filing of the printed arguments herein; that by said contracts and arrangements, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company had taken a lease of all the constructed lines of the Denver Company for 30 years from December 1, 1878, had received, and was then in the possession of and operating said lines; had purchased and received all the railroad supplies and materials of that Company; and had purchased and had transferred to a trustee for its use, a majority of all the shares of its capital stock, with an agreement providing for a further purchase and ownership of the remainder of such stock, and with the further agreement that the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company should have the selection of a majority of the directors of the Denver Company, the other third being selected by the bondholders of the latter Company; that those contracts and agreements were made with the intent and design of ending all controversies, and especially all competitive construction of railroad lines, between the Denver Company on the one part, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company and the roads operated by it, including the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, on the other part; that, by reason of the premises, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, in its own right, and in connection with the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, had become and was equitably the owner and entitled to the control of all the affairs, suits, interests and property of the Denver Company, and especially to the discontinuance of all litigation hostile to the interests of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company and the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company. Upon these grounds, the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company (the present name of the Cañon City Company), and Alling and others, appellees, moved the court that the stipulation for the submission of these causes, upon printed arguments, be canceled and discharged, such printed arguments withdrawn from the files, and the appeals dismissed. Upon the part of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company a motion was submitted that it be allowed to intervene and take charge of these suits in the name of the Denver Company, and appear by its solicitor, on behalf of the appellant, that it may give consent, of record, to the dismissal of the appeals. The trustee referred to in the alleged contracts gave his consent to the motions, and their hearing was set for the 20th March, this court, in the meantime, suspending any action upon the appeals. At that date the Denver Company appeared by its attorneys and resisted each motion.

Upon the hearing of the motions it appeared, among other things, that on the 1st day of March, 1879, the Denver Company had issued 85,000 shares of stock, of which the plaintiffs in the motions claimed to own or control a bare majority—42,510 shares. It was also shown that, at a meeting of the directors of the Denver Company held on 7th February, 1879, a quorum being present, resolutions were unanimously adopted, declaring that these motions were hostile to the interests of that Company; that the claims of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company and the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company were unfounded, and their assertion for the fraudulent purpose of depriving the Denver Company, its stockholders and creditors, of valuable rights, interests and property, without compensation. The resolutions instructed the president and the attorneys of the Company not only to oppose these motions but, by all legal means, prevent the dismissal of these appeals or the intervention herein for any purpose of any company or person not a party to the record. They were also required to prosecute the appeals in this court with the utmost diligence. At the argument of the motions, copies of all the contracts, resolutions, and writings relied upon by the respective parties were submitted for our examination. Upon careful consideration of the suggestions of learned counsel, we do not doubt that our duty is to decline any expression of opinion as to the effect or proper construction of the numerous documents which, it is claimed, give the plaintiffs in the motions the right to have the appeals of the Denver Company dismissed. It is apparent that there are serious differences among the stockholders of that Company, not only as to its general policy in the future, but as to the validity and interpretation of the contracts and writings under which the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company and the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company claim to be equitably the owners, and entitled to the control of the affairs, property and suits of the Denver Company. We cannot now enter that field of controversy. The present appeals are being prosecuted to final judgment by order of the directors or trustees of the appellant Corporation. To them, by law, is committed the management of the property and concerns of the Corporation. In all litigation involving the action of the Corporation they are its representatives in court. In the discharge of their duties they represent not only the stockholders but the bondholders and creditors of the Company. Their right, while in the exercise of their legitimate functions, to manage the affairs and suits of the Company, ought not to be controlled or interfered with by this court, by reason of anything which appears upon the pending motions. Upon their responsibility as directors and trustees they insist that these causes shall proceed to final judgment, in accordance with the stipulation heretofore made by the parties to the appeals. If, in prosecuting them to final judgment, they violate any trust committed to their hands, or any agreement which is binding upon the Corporation and the minority stockholders, remedy may be sought in some court of original jurisdiction, into which, upon proper pleadings, all persons interested may be summoned. No such proceeding has been instituted, so far as we are informed, and we do not feel at liberty, upon the suggestion of strangers to the decrees appealed from, to go behind the official action of the Board of Directors or Trustees, and, in plain disregard of their wishes and their directions to counsel, dismiss the appeals and thereby refuse to consider questions regularly presented for our determination.

The motions are, therefore, denied, and we proceed to an examination of the cases upon their merits, premising that our present duty is limited to a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed when the final decrees were rendered, and as they are manifested in the records before us. If, since these decrees were entered, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, or the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, have, by valid contract, acquired a controlling interest in the property, rights and affairs of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company, that interest can be asserted by appropriate proceedings, and will not be affected by anything we may determine upon the issues presented by these appeals.

The several Acts of Congress upon which the Denver Company and the Cañon City Company rest their respective claims to priority of right in the Big or Grand Cañon have already been referred to. We have also given the history of the organization of both Companies. But there are other facts of an important character to which attention will be called in the course of this opinion.

The first question, upon the merits, necessary to be considered is, as to the proper construction of the Act of June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 339. In its determination, however, we should not overlook what had previously transpired in the history of the Company to which was granted, by that Act, a right of way over the public domain. In January and February, 1871, very shortly after its articles of incorporation were filed in the proper office of the Territory, the Denver Company caused a survey to be made of the route through the Grand or Big Cañon of the Arkansas, for the purpose, as declared by the engineer who conducted it, of retaining control of the cañon for that Company. That survey, extending through the entire length of the cañon, is described by him as a 'close preliminary'; that is, a line very near location, without an actual location of the curves. But the location of the curves, he testifies, could have been made in his office away from the cañon. With that exception, he pronounces it to have been a complete survey. The line thus surveyed was marked by stakes every hundred feet, numbered consecutively, and at points where it seemed necessary, a plus or stake between the hundred feet was added. Of the work then done, a map and profile were made and returned to the chief engineer of the Company, and estimates sent to its general manager. Upon the occasion of that survey, or shortly thereafter, employés of the Company, under the direction of its engineer, graded several hundred feet at the upper outlet of the cañon, and put up a retaining wall ten to fifteen feet high, and about one hundred yards in length. In January, 1872, the survey was continued west of the cañon for a distance of four or five miles. While these surveys were being made, the Company was employed in the construction of its road from Denver to Pueblo, and completed it to the latter place, within a few days after, or about the date of the passage of the Act of June 8, 1872. It may also be stated, in this connection, that it completed its road from Pueblo to Labran, within eight miles of Cañon City, about the 1st of October, 1872, and to Cañon City in July, 1875. All this was consistent with a purpose, upon the part of the Denver Company, to avail itself ultimately, and within the time prescribed by law, of the granted right of way through the Grand Cañon.

Of what the Company had done, prior to the passage of the Act of 1872, towards effecting the objects of its incorporation, Congress, it is fairly to be presumed, was not uninformed. It was aware, we must also presume, of the routes designated in the charter of the Company, for the main road and its several branches, all so connected as to constitute, when completed, an extended railway system for that entire region. That Congress was so informed, is quite clearly indicated by the terms employed in the Act of 1872. That Act must, therefore, receive the same construction which would be adopted had it contained a full or detailed description of the routes of the main line and branches. In this view, and having due regard to all the circumstances and condition of the Company, when the Act was passed, we do not doubt that the intention of Congress was to grant to the Company a present beneficial easement in the particular way over which the designated routes lay, capable, however, of enjoyment only when the way granted was actually located and, in good faith, appropriated for the purposes contemplated by the charter of the Company and the Act of Congress. When such location and appropriation took place, the title which was previously imperfect, acquired precision, and by relation took effect as of the date of the grant. The settled doctrines of this court would seem to justify that conclusion. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 9 Wall., 95 [76 U. S., XIX., 599]; Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44 [88 U. S., XXII., 551]; R. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S., 733 [XXIII., 634]; Mo. Kan. & Texas R. Co. v. Kan. Pac. R. Co., 97 U. S., 491 [XXIV., 1095].

It is here suggested by counsel for the Denver Company that the surveys made in the Grand Cañon in 1871 and 1872 constituted, without further action on its part, a sufficient location and appropriation of at least that part of the designated route. To this proposition we cannot yield our assent. The right of way through that pass was not, in itself, and separate from the right of way along the whole route, of any special value, except the Company surveyed its line and located its road east and west of that defile. The grant was an entirety as to the right of way over all the lands lying on the route designated in the charter of the Company, and it would be unreasonable to say that, as to a particular part of that route, a mere preliminary survey was in itself equivalent to a fixed location of the road and an appropriation of the way granted, while as to another part of the general route a similar survey would not be an appropriation of the way granted, unless followed by actual occupation and use for railroad purposes. Any such construction of the statute must be held altogether inadmissible.

When was there, then, an appropriation by the Denver Company of the Grand Cañon within the principle we have stated? In 1877 and 1878 it became evident that that pass was of vital importance to any company desiring to reach the trade and business of the country beyond it, whether to the west, northwest, or southwest. Discoveries then recently made, of mineral wealth in Western Colorado gave it immense pecuniary value in railroad circles, since as the evidence tends, to establish the occupancy of the Royal Gorge of the Grand Cañon by one line of railroad would practically exclude all other competing companies from using it for like purposes, except upon such terms as the first occupant might dictate. From the date of the survey made in 1872, down to April 19, 1878, the record furnishes no evidence that the Denver Company actually occupied that defile for any purpose whatever. On that day, however, Congress having extended the time to ten years from the date of the original Act within which to complete its road as far south as Santa Fé, that Company did, by its agents, occupy the narrow portion of the cañon known as the Royal Gorge, with the avowed intention of constructing its road upon the line of the surveys made in 1871 and 1872. But during the night of April 19, 1878, the board of directors of the Cañon City Company were convened, and Robinson and Strong, the chief engineer and manager, respectively, of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, were elected to the same positions in the Cañon City Company. They made preparations to take immediate possession of the cañon in behalf of the last named Company. Evidence of their diligence and activity in that direction is found in the fact that on the morning of the 20th, as early as four o'clock, a small squad of their employés, nine or ten in number, under the charge of an assistant engineer, swam the Arkansas River, and in the name of their Company took possession of the cañon. Under the circumstances, it is not material that they failed to find a rival force in the cañon at such an unseasonable hour. That squad was followed the same day by a large and overpowering force of workmen under the control of Robinson. These movements were succeeded by a suit instituted the same day, in the state court, in the name of the Cañon City Company against the Denver Company, in which an injunction was obtained restraining the latter Company from occupying or attempting to occupy the cañon for railroad purposes, or from interfering with the Cañon City Company in the construction of its own road therein.

The last named Company now insists that it has the prior right to occupy and use the cañon for its line of road. In support of this claim, it contends that the other company had lost whatever rights it acquired in the cañon through the imperfect survey of 1871 and 1872, by its long inaction after the construction of the road to Cañon City, and by its failure, within a reasonable period, to follow up those surveys by actual location and occupancy for railroad purposes. The conduct of the Denver Company, it is urged, evinced a settled purpose upon its part to abandon its grant of a right of way through that cañon. The answer to all this seems very obvious.

As to the surveys of 1871 and 1872, although defective in some particulars, and not equivalent to actual location or appropriation of the way, they were quite as complete and extended as the survey which the Cañon City Company caused to be made in 1877. The evidence shows, beyond all question, that when the latter survey was made there was seen in the cañon all or very many of the stakes which the engineer of the Denver Company had put there in 1871 and 1872. Those who made the survey in 1877 undoubtedly knew when, by whom, and for what purpose those stakes had been there placed. Nor had they sufficient reason to suppose that the Denver Company had finally abandoned its purpose of constructing a road through the cañon. We have already referred to the completion of the road from Denver to Pueblo, and from Pueblo to Cañon City, by July, 1875. In 1873, the Denver Company commenced the construction of one of its branches, the Denver and Southern Railway. Commencing at Pueblo, it completed that road to Cucharas, fifty miles from Pueblo, by February, 1876; to Garland, sixty miles from there, by August, 1877; and to the valley of the Rio Grande, by July, 1878. After July, 1875, the Company, it is true, suspended active work upon the line west of Cañon City. But the cause of such suspension, as its officers testify, was the wide-spread depression in business and financial circles, and the belief, shared by all interested in the prosperity of the Company, that the extension of the line southward from Pueblo gave promise of quicker returns and more immediate results in every way. They state that it was the purpose of the Company to resume work upon its line through the cañon as soon as the necessary means therefor could be obtained, and that there was no intention at any time to abandon the route west of Cañon City. Their delay in the construction of the road west of Cañon City and through the Grand Cañon seems to have been in the interest of the stockholders they represented, and not inconsistent with an honest purpose, within the period fixed by law, to meet the objects for which Congress granted to it the right of way. Its surveys of 1871-2, followed by an occupancy of the cañon on the 19th of April, 1878, in advance of the Cañon City Company, for the purpose of constructing its road through that defile, was, in our judgment, a final appropriation of the way granted by Congress. The Denver Company then, if not before, came into the enjoyment of the present beneficial easement conferred by the Act of June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 339, and whatever privileges or advantages belonged to that position, it was entitled to have secured against all intruders.

But the important question remains as to the effect of the Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 516, granting the right of way through the public lands of the United States to any railroad company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, except the District of Columbia, or by the Congress of the United States. The explicit language of that Act leaves no doubt as to its object. It declares "That any railroad company whose right of way, or whose track or road-bed upon such right of way, passes through any cañon, pass or defile, shall not prevent any other railroad company from the use and occupancy of said cañon, pass or defile, for the purposes of its road, in common with the road first located, or the crossing of other railroads at grade." At the date of that Act, the road of the Denver Company, as we have seen, had not been located through the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas. But it had a subsisting grant of a right of way through that defile. According, therefore, to the Act of March 3, 1875, the Cañon City Company, if it belonged to the class described in the 1st section of the Act, might, for the purposes of its road, occupy and use that cañon in common with the Denver Company.

Upon this branch of the case, the first contention of the latter Company is that the Cañon City Company was not "duly organized" under the laws of Colorado and, therefore, by the terms of the Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 482, was not entitled to its benefits. But this objection is not well taken. The articles of incorporation filed by that Company seem to be in substantial compliance with the statutes of Colorado. This objection need not be further considered.

But its right to claim the benefit of the Act of March 3, 1877, is impeached upon the further ground that it was not organized in good faith, for the purpose of constructing a road for itself, but was the mere instrument of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Company, by whom the real work of construction through the cañon was carried on. It is not to be doubted, under the evidence, that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company is the active power behind all the movements made in the name of the Cañon City Company for the occupation of the cañon, and that the former Company, or some of its stockholders, were deeply interested in the success of the movement to drive the Denver Company from the Grand Cañon. But the Cañon City Company is none the less a railroad company, duly organized under the laws of Colorado. It is, therefore, embraced by the very letter of the Act of March 3, 1875. We are unable to perceive upon what sound principle the courts can go behind its regular and lawful organization, and exclude it from the rights granted by that Act, because in the prosecution of its work it derives assistance or accepts aid from another corporation, with which it may choose to share the benefits secured under the Act of Congress.

Our next inquiry is as to the extent to which the rights of the Denver Company were affected or modified by the Act of March 3, 1875. When that Act was passed, its grant of the right of way by the Act of June 8, 1872, had not been acted upon as to the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas. There had not been, on March 3, 1875, an actual location of its line through that defile, nor any occupancy thereof, in good faith, for the purpose of constructing its road. The five years originally given to that Company, within which to complete its railway to a point on the Rio Grande as far south as Santa Fé, expired on the 8th of June, 1877. Before, however, the expiration of that period, the time was extended to ten years from the passage of the original See 9 OTTO.

Act. Now, it is solely by reason of such extension that the Denver Company had the right, on the 19th April, 1878, to take possession of the Grand Cañon, and prepare for the final location and construction of its road through that pass. When, therefore, it accepted the benefits of the Act of March 3, 1877, it must be held to have assented to the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1875, whereby it was declared, in the interest of the public, that any other railroad company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory might use and occupy the cañon, for the purpose of its road, in common with the road first located. At the time of the passage of the Act of March 3, 1875, Congress had become convinced of the importance to the country, and particularly to the Western States, of preserving cañons, passes and defiles in the public domain for the equal and common use of all railroad companies organized under competent state or territorial authority, and to which might be granted by national authority the right of way. We may well presume that the extension of time accorded to the Denver Company by the Act of March 3, 1877, would not have been given except subject to the conditions contained in the Act of March 3, 1875. This conclusion renders it unnecessary that we should, in this case, consider whether Congress might legally have subjected the Denver Company, without its consent, to the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1877, had that Company actually located and constructed its road in or through the Grand Cañon within five years after the passage of the Act of June 8, 1872.

It results from what we have said, that the court below erred in enjoining the Denver Company from proceeding with the construction of its road in the Grand Cañon. The decree, as entered, can only be sustained upon the assumption that the Cañon City Company had by prior occupancy acquired a right superior to any which the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company had to use the cañon for the purpose of constructing its road. But that assumption, we have seen, is not sustained by the evidence, and is inconsistent with the rights given by the Acts of Congress to the Denver Company. The Denver Company should have been allowed to proceed with the construction of its road unobstructed by the other Company. Where the Grand Cañon is broad enough to enable both companies to proceed without interference with each other in the construction of their respective roads, they should be allowed to do so. But in the narrow portions of the defile, where this course is impracticable, the court, by proper orders, should recognize the prior right of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct its road. Further, if in any portion of the Grand Cañon it is impracticable or impossible to lay down more than one road-bed and track, the court, while recognizing the prior right of the Denver Company to construct and operate that track for its own business, should, by proper orders, and upon such terms as may be just and equitable, establish and secure the right of the Cañon City Company, conferred by the Act of March 3, 1875, to use the same road-bed and track, after completion, in common with the Denver Company.

The decrees in these causes are, therefore, reversed, with directions to set aside the order granting an injunction against the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, and also the order dissolving the injunction granted in its favor, and dismissing its bill. By proper orders, entered in each suit, the court below will recognize the prior right of that Company to occupy and use the Grand Cañon for the purpose of constructing its road therein, and will enjoin the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company, its officers, agents, servants and employes, from interfering or obstructing that Company in such occupancy, use and construction. It may be that, during the pendency of these causes in the court below, or since the rendition of the decrees appealed from, the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company has under the authority of the circuit court, constructed its road-bed and track in the Grand Cañon, or in some portion thereof. In that event, the cost thus incurred in those portions of the cañon which admit of only one road-bed and track for railroad purposes may be ascertained and provided for in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the equities of the parties may require.

The court will make such further orders as may be necessary to give effect to this opinion.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment in this case. In my opinion, the grant of the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Company, contained in the Act of June 8, 1872, is no more than a license to enter upon and use such of the public lands of the United States as should be unoccupied and not appropriated to other purposes when the permanent location of its road with a view to actual construction should be made. Words which, in a grant of land to aid in building a railroad, imply a present grant need not necessarily have that effect in a grant of right of way only.

I think, also, the Cañon City and San Juan Company made the first permanent location with a view to actual construction through the pass in controversy. Consequently, it secured the preference of routes, subject to a reasonable use of the route it occupied, if necessary, by the Denver Company in common with itself.

Copy, foregoing opinions, authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court U. S.

Cited—101 U. S., 711.

BENJAMIN D. WHITNEY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ALEXANDER H. COOK ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 607.)

Practice as to dismissal.

Under Rule 6, a motion to affirm may be united with a motion to dismiss, if there appears on the record some color of right to a dismissal.

[No. 901.]

Submitted Mar. 17, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

On motion to affirm.

446

This case was an action upon certain promissory notes, brought by the defendants in error in the Circuit Court of Warren County, Mississippi, and removed thence to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi. The questions of fact, as well as of law were, by stipulation, submitted to the court; the finding of facts by the court to be entered as the verdict of the jury. The defendant pleaded: (1) The general issue; (2) Accord and satisfaction. The general issue was abandoned by the defendant, and the court found that the proof failed to sustain the plea of accord and satisfaction, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs. The defendant then sued out this writ of error.

Mr. P. Phillips, for defendants in error.

Messrs. T. J. Durant and C. W. Hornor and Nathl. Wilson, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite announced the decision of the court:

This is a motion to affirm only. Our amended Rule 6 allows a motion to affirm to be united with a motion to dismiss. This implies that there shall appear on the record at least some color of right to a dismissal. That is not pretended in this case. We are, therefore, compelled to deny the motion. Our experience teaches that the only way to discourage frivolous appeals and writs of error is by the use of our power to award damages, and we think this a proper case in which to say that hereafter more attention will be given to that subject, and the rule enforced both according to its letter and spirit. Parties should not be subjected to the delay of proceedings for review in this court without reasonable cause, and our power to make compensation to some extent for the loss occasioned by an unwarranted delay ought not to be overlooked.

Cited—103 U. S., 785; 106 U. S., 429.

GEORGE Q. CANNON ET AL., Exrs. of BRIGHAM YOUNG, Deceased, Appts. and Plffs. in Err.,

v.

SARAH M. PRATT.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 619-624.)

Supreme Court of Utah—immaterial error.

1. When the Supreme Court of Utah affirms the judgment of the Territorial district court upon findings of fact made by the district court, the Supreme Court in effect adopts such findings as its own, for the purposes of an appeal to this court.

2. A judgment will not be reversed for error in excluding testimony which is cumulative only, if it is apparent that, if received, it would not affect the result.

[No. 183.]

Argued Mar. 14, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

IN ERROR and appeal to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Sheeks & Rawlins, Williams & Young, J. Rodman Paul, George W. Biddle and Geo. E. Whitney, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Robert N. Baskin, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

99 U. S.

This, like the case of Stringfellow v. Cain [ante, 421], was a statutory proceeding begun in the Probate Court of Salt Lake County, Utah, to settle disputes between claimants as to their respective rights to a lot in Salt Lake City, purchased by the mayor of the City from the United States, in trust, under the Town Site Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 541. As doubts were entertained in respect to the proper manner of bringing it here for review, an appeal was taken and a writ of error sued out. For the reasons stated in that case, the appeal is sustained and the writ of error dismissed.

The controversy arises as to the ownership of the south half of lot 5, block 76, plat A, and the first question to be settled is in respect to the jurisdiction of the district court on the appeal from the probate court. The decision of the probate court was given November 28, 1873, and the appeal taken February 3, 1874. The territorial Act of 1869, regulating the execution of town site trusts, Comp. L. Utah (1876), 381, provides that if either party shall feel aggrieved at the decision of the probate court, he may appeal to the district court "as in other cases." In Golding v. Jennings, 1 Utah, 135, it was decided that there could be no appeal from the probate court to the district court in a civil action, because the probate court did not have jurisdiction of such actions. Here the probate court had jurisdiction of the suit, and the right of appeal is expressly given. The difficulty is not as to the right of appeal, but as to the time within which the appeal is to be taken. The Civil Practice Act of Utah, Comp. L. (1876), 492 provides that an appeal may be taken "From a final judgment in an action or special proceedings commenced in the court in which the judgment is rendered, within one year from the rendition of the judgment," and "from a judgment rendered on an appeal from an inferior court, within ninety days after the rendition of the judgment." This, we think, governs the present case. The provision in the territorial Act relating to the judiciary, approved January 19, 1855, fixing the time for appeals from the probate to the district courts at thirty days, is in conflict with the Civil Practice Act in this particular, and comes within the repealing clause of the latter Act.

Upon the appeal from the probate court to the district court, "All the testimony and written proofs adduced, together with the statements of the parties and the judgment of the court," were certified up as required by the territorial Town Site Law. Upon the trial, the district court decided that the execution of a deed from Orson Pratt to Brigham Young, which was sent up as part of the written proofs below, had not been sufficiently shown. For this reason the deed was excluded as evidence. The district court also excluded as evidence the answers of Brigham Young, Jr., to two interrogatories which had been propounded to him, and also the answers of Hamilton G. Park to interrogatories propounded to him. The same thing was done in respect to the answers of Brigham Young, Sr., to five interrogatories. The excluded testimony of Brigham Young, Jr., related to the payment of rent for the premises in dispute to him as agent for his father, Brigham Young, Sr., after the claim of Mrs. Pratt, the appellee, had been filed with the clerk of the probate court.

The testimony of Park related to payment of rent for the lot by one Ellerbach, as agent of Orson Pratt, to him as the agent of Brigham Young, Sr., from the fall of 1867 to the spring of 1869. The testimony of Brigham Young, Sr., related to his purchase of the lot from Orson Pratt in 1861 or 1862, and he also said that he was the owner of the lot with two tenants on it. Objections to all the testimony which was excluded had been taken and entered upon the minutes in the probate court.

Upon the trial in the district court the facts were found, and as a conclusion of law judgment was given in favor of Mrs. Pratt. Brigham Young, Sr., the adverse claimant, moved for a new trial, because the findings were against the evidence. This motion was overruled, and he thereupon appealed to the territorial Supreme Court both from the judgment and the order refusing a new trial. A statement of the case was made on these appeals, which included all the testimony with the exceptions and the entire record of the proceedings in the district court. The Supreme Court affirmed generally the judgment of the district court.

As we held in Stringfellow v. Cain, when the Supreme Court affirms the judgment of the district court upon findings of fact made by the district court, the Supreme Court in effect adopts such findings as its own for the purposes of an appeal to this court. We are, therefore, to consider the case here upon the facts found by the district court. These findings show that Sarah M. Pratt, the present claimant and appellee, and Orson Pratt, settled on the lot in controversy about the year 1854. Mrs. Pratt erected a house and fences upon the lot, and the two lived there until 1861, when they went to the southern part of the Territory. After that for several years Brigham Young, Sr., had possession of the lot by his tenants, but in 1867 or early in 1868 he told Mrs. Pratt she might have back the south half, and accordingly she and her family went into possession on the 12th of March, 1868, and have occupied it as their home ever since. Orson Pratt has not lived with his wife, Sarah M. Pratt, since March 12, 1868, and he has five other families, four of which are residents of Salt Lake City. Mrs. Pratt and her children have supported themselves by their labor and means since March 12, 1868, and have put improvements on the lot by repairing the house, fencing, setting out trees, etc. Mrs. Pratt was the head of her family for ten years previous to November, 1873. No rent has been claimed of or paid by her since she went into possession, nor by Orson Pratt or any agent of his since that time. Orson Pratt has not supported his wife, Sarah M. Pratt, or her family since March, 1868, and has contributed but a very small amount for that purpose. The town-site was purchased by the mayor, under the provisions of the Congressional Town Site Act, November 21, 1871. Young filed his declaratory statement in the office of the probate clerk, January 13, 1872, and Mrs. Pratt filed hers April 9, 1872.

Upon this state of facts, it is clear that the judgment appealed from was right, unless there was error in the rulings as to the admissibility of evidence. The original occupancy of Orson Pratt and his wife was abandoned in 1861. Brigham Young then entered into possession.

It matters not, for the purposes of this inquiry, whether he purchased the possessory rights of Pratt and his wife or not. They voluntarily left the lot and he took it. Then in 1868 he gave back the south half to Mrs. Pratt, and she has occupied adversely ever since. Under the rule settled in Stringfellow v. Cain, this gave her the right to a conveyance under the trust created by the town site purchase.

It remains only to consider the several objections to the rulings upon the admissibility of the evidence. From what has been said it is clear that the exclusion of the deed was immaterial. As Pratt and his wife abandoned the possession in 1861, it is of no consequence whether Young occupied after that as their vendee or as an adverse possessor. He was in possession claiming title, and they were out with no apparent purpose of returning. That is all that is necessary to make his right good as against their previous entry.

As to the testimony of Brigham Young, Jr., it related to a payment of rent by Orson Pratt after this proceeding was begun in the probate court. Of course that, under the circumstances, could have no effect adverse to Mrs. Pratt's title.

As to the testimony of Brigham Young, Sr., it was clearly immaterial or incompetent. That in respect to his purchase from Pratt was immaterial, because his rights prior to his putting Mrs. Pratt in possession the second time are not disputed. His statement that he owned the property was incompetent. That depended upon the facts, and his statement was no more than an expression of his opinion.

The testimony of Park, so far as it related to the ownership of the property, was also incompetent, as it was in reality only an expression of his opinion. As to the collection of rent from Orson Pratt, he says his collections were made from T. W. Ellerbach, as the agent of Pratt, and in the testimony of Ellerbach the same payments are shown, with the manner of payment and his authority as agent. No possible harm could have resulted from the exclusion of this evidence. A judgment will not be reversed for error in excluding testimony which is cumulative only, if it is apparent that if received it would not affect the result. In this case the rejected evidence was all before the Supreme Court, and was there considered. In the opinion it is, in effect, said that if the evidence had been admitted in the court below, and if that court had given it all the force which could be reasonably claimed, the result must have been the same. Under these circumstances we must consider the case as coming here from the Supreme Court, with the facts found upon all the evidence.

Upon the whole case we are satisfied with the judgment below and it is, consequently, affirmed.

Cited—108 U. S., 13.

THE GERMANIA NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS ET AL., Appts.,

v.

FRANK F. CASE, RECEIVER OF THE CRESCENT CITY NATIONAL BANK of New Orleans

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 628-635.)

Pledge of stock, liable as stockholder—fraudulent transfer—power of bank—suits against stockholders.

1. One to whom stock has been transferred in pledge or as collateral security for money loaned, and who appears on the books of the corporation as the owner of the stock, is liable as a stockholder for the benefit of the creditors.

2. A transfer of his stock by a shareholder, for the mere purpose of avoiding his liability to the company or its creditors, is fraudulent and void, and he remains still liable.

3. A bank is authorized to make a loan with the stock of another bank pledged as collateral security. If otherwise, it could not set up its own violation of law, to escape the responsibility resulting from its illegal action.

4. The determination of the Comptroller of the Currency and his order to the receiver, are conclusive of the extent to which the liability of stockholders of insolvent banks may be enforced in suits against such stockholders.

[No. 217.]

Argued Apr. 7, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The appellee was the complainant in the court below, where the case arose.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. T. J. Durant, C. W. Hornor, Henry J. Levy and McDonald, for appellants:

The only question in all these cases is: who were the shareholders entitled to the profits and liable for losses, on the date of the order of liquidation; who was the holder and owner?

Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S., 56-63 (XXIII., 220, 223); Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S., 673 (XXIV., 168).

The owners of the 100 shares are Phelps, McCulloch & Co., the Germania Bank is the pledgee and Waldo the agent or trustee for both owners and pledgee. These facts exclude the notion of any liability on the part of the appellant. All that was done was regular and legal.

Talty v. Freedman's Bank, 93 U. S., 321 (XXIII., 886).

The shareholders of the Germania Bank are at all times subject to the personal liability clause of the National Bank Act. But this, the act of its cashier, doubles this personal liability clause, and makes the stockholders of the appellant liable also on the shares of the Crescent City Bank. This is making bad worse.

Pleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat., 338; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet., 46; U. S. v. Bank of Columbus, 21 How., 356 (62 U. S., XVI., 130).

A blunder of this sort cannot be made the basis of either legal or equitable liability.

The Reciprocity Bank, 22 N. Y., 17.

"Individual liability is repugnant to the law of corporations."

Carrol v. Green, 92 U. S., 512 (XXIII., 739).

Hence, no national bank can lend on the shares of another national bank.

The whole system of National Banks could be evaded if this were not the law, by establishing two banks instead of one, and paid up capital, the basis of the entire system, would thus be a mere sham, as in the present case.

Bank v. Bank, 92 U. S., 128 (XXIII., 681); Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa., 456; R. S. U. S., 5136, 5200-5203.

Messrs. Charles Case and J. D. Rouse, for appellee:

Under the circumstances of this case the personal liability to respond as shareholder attaches.

Bowden v. Far. & Merch. Bank, 1 Hughes, 307; Magruder v. Colston, 44 Md., 349; Hale v. Walker, 31 Ia., 344; Grew v. Breed, 10 Met., 569; Crease v. Babcock, 10 Met., 525; Holyoke Bank v. Burnham, 11 Cush., 183; Adderly v. Storm, 6 Hill, 624; Matter of Empire City Bank, 18 N. Y., 199.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill, the object of which is to compel contribution by the stockholders of the Crescent City National Bank of New Orleans. It asks for a decree that each of the defendants pay to the Receiver of the Bank seventy per cent. of the par value of the stock owned by them severally at the time when their respective liabilities were fixed by the Bank's insolvency, without regard to any pretended transfers of such stock, which they may have attempted to make after the insolvency occurred.

The Bank was organized under the National Banking Law in 1871. On the 13th of February, 1873, its London correspondents failed, and the Bank lost heavily by the failure; nearly the entire amount of its capital. This loss was almost immediately known in the community where the institution was located, and necessarily affected its credit. On the 14th of March, 1873, payment of checks drawn upon it by its depositors was suspended, and on the 17th of the same month its circulating notes went to protest.

In reference to the alleged ownership by the Germania Bank (one of the appellants) of shares in the Crescent City Bank, the facts appear to be as follows: on the 14th day of December, 1872, it loaned to Phelps, McCulloch & Co., $14,000 on a note of the firm dated December 7, 1872, payable in ninety days, and to secure the payment of the loan the borrowers pledged to the Bank one hundred shares of the stock of the Crescent City Bank, with power, on non-payment of the note, to dispose of the stock for cash, at public or private sale, without recourse to legal proceedings, and to this end to make transfers on the books of the corporation whose stock it was. At the same time a power of attorney was given to Mr. Roehl, empowering him to transfer the stock to the Germania Bank, of which he was cashier. The note fell due on the 10th of March, 1873, and was not paid; and on that day a transfer of the one hundred shares to the Germania Bank was made on the transfer books of the Crescent City Bank. The Germania then caused seventy-six of the shares to be transferred to William A. Waldo, one of its clerks, and on the next day transferred to him the remainder. It has ever since stood in his name. Waldo acquired by the transfer no beneficial interest in the stock, and there was an understanding between him and the officers of the Bank that he should retransfer it at their request. The cashier has testified, in answer to the question: "Was not the transfer made (to Waldo) with the view to avoid the liability under the National Bank Act in case of suspension of the Crescent City Bank?" that it was not exactly in that way. "We simply transferred," says he, "because we are not in the habit of holding any bank stock. We did not want to have any bank stock in our name. That was the object." When further asked whether he was well aware of the fact that the stockholders of national banks were liable to contribute to the payment of their debts in case of insolvency, he replied in the affirmative. When asked whether he did not have that in contemplation at the time of this transfer, he answered, "That may be one of the reasons why we did not want to own any stock." And when further asked: "Was not that one of the principal motives of this transfer to Waldo?" his reply was, "Yes."

See 9 OTTO.

From this testimony, as well as from other in the record, it is evident that Waldo held the stock as a cover for the Germania Bank; that, notwithstanding the transfer to him, it remained subject to the Bank's control, and that the transfer to him was made to evade the liability of the true owners. It was not a sale. The Bank continued after it was made a pledgee with the legal title in itself or in its representative, and Phelps, McCulloch & Co. were no longer the owners.

Such being the facts of the case, there can be no serious controversy respecting the principles of law applicable to them. It is thoroughly established that one to whom stock has been transferred in pledge or as collateral security for money loaned, and who appears on the books of the corporation as the owner of the stock, is liable as a stockholder for the benefit of creditors. We so held in Pullman v. Upton, 96 U. S., 328 [XXIV., 818]; and like decisions abound in the English courts, and in numerous American cases, to some of which we refer: Adderly v. Storm, 6 Hill, 624; Rosevelt v. Brown, 11 N. Y., 148; Bk. v. Burnham, 11 Cush., 183; Magruder v. Colston, 44 Md., 329; Crease v. Babcock, 10 Met., 525; Wheelock v. Kost, 77 Ill., 296; Matter of Emp. C. Bk., 18 N. Y., 199; Hale v. Walker, 31 Iowa, 344. For this several reasons are given. One is that he is estopped from denying his liability by voluntarily holding himself out to the public as the owner of the stock, and his denial of ownership is inconsistent with the representations he has made; another is, that by taking the legal title he has released the former owner; and a third is, that after having taken the apparent ownership and thus become entitled to receive dividends, vote at elections and enjoy all the privileges of ownership, it would be inequitable to allow him to refuse the responsibilities of a stockholder. This subject is well treated in Mr. Thompson's recently published work on "The Liability of Stockholders," where may be found not only a full collection of authorities, but a careful analysis of what the authorities contain. Vide, ch. 13.

When, therefore, the stock was transferred to the Germania Bank, though it continued to be held merely as a collateral security, the Bank became subject to the liabilities of a stockholder, and the liability accrued the instant the transfer was made. At that instant the liability of Phelps, McCulloch & Co. ceased. We have, then, only to inquire whether the Bank succeeded in throwing off that liability by its transfer to its clerk, Waldo. It certainly did not thereby divest itself of its substantial ownership. It is not every transfer that releases a stockholder from his responsibility as such. While it is true that shareholders of the stock of a corporation generally have a right to transfer their shares, and thus disconnect themselves from the corporation and from any responsibility on account of it, it is equally true that there are some limits to this right. A transfer for the mere purpose of avoiding his liability to the company or its creditors is fraudulent and void, and he remains still liable. The English cases, it is admitted, give effect to such transfers, if they are made (as it is called) "out and out;" that is, completely, so as to divest the transferor of all interest in the stock. But even in them it is held that if the transfer is merely colorable, or as sometimes coarsely denominated, a sham; if, in fact, the transferee is a mere tool or nominee of the transferor, so that, as between themselves, there has been no real transfer; "but in the event of the company becoming prosperous the transferor would become interested in the profits, the transfer will be held for nought, and the transferor will be put upon the list of contributors." Williams' Case, L. R. 9 Eq., 225, note, where the transfer was, as in the present case, made to a clerk of the transferor without consideration; Paynes' Case, L. R., 9 Eq., 223; Ex parte Kintrea, L. R., 5 Ch., 95. See, also, Lindley, Part., 2d ed., p. 1352; Chinnocks' Case, 1 Johns. V. Ch., 714; Hyams' Case, 1 De G., F. & J., 75; Budds' Case, 3 De G., F & J., 297. The American doctrine is even more stringent. Mr. Thompson states it thus, and he is supported by the adjudicated cases: "A transfer of shares in a failing corporation, made by the transferor with the purpose of escaping his liability as a shareholder, to a person who, from any cause, is incapable of responding in respect to such liability, is void as to the creditors of the company and as to other shareholders, although as between the transferor and the transferee it was out and out." Nathan v. Whitlock, 9 Paige, 152; McClaren v. Francisco, 43 Mo., 452; Marcy v. Clark, 17 Mass., 330; Johnson v. Laylin, by Dillon, J., 6 Cent. L. J., 131.

The case in hand does not need the application of so rigorous a doctrine. While the evidence establishes that the Crescent City was in a failing condition when the transfer to Waldo was made, and leaves no reasonable doubt that the Germania Bank knew it and made the transfer to escape responsibility, it establishes much more. The transfer was not an out and out transfer. The stock remained the property of the transferor. Waldo was bound to retransfer it when requested, and all the privileges and possible benefits of ownership continued to belong to the Bank. No case holds that such a transfer relieves the transferor from his liability as a stockholder. We are, therefore, compelled to rule that the decree of the circuit court against the Germania Bank was correct. Its case, no doubt, is a hard one; but it is not in our power to give relief, without a sacrifice of the well established rules of law and equity both in this country and in England.

There is nothing in the argument on behalf of the appellants that the Bank was not authorized to make a loan with the stock of another bank pledged as collateral security. That is an ordinary mode of loaning, and there is nothing in the letter or spirit of the National Banking Act that prohibits it. But if there were, the lender could not set up its own violation of law to escape the responsibility resulting from its illegal action.

In support of the other appeals which were taken from the decree of the court below, no argument has been submitted, and they require only brief remarks.

Alcus, Scherck and Autey in their first answer to the bill, after setting forth several matters perfectly immaterial, admit that they were at one time the owners of seventy shares of the stock of the Crescent City National Bank, but aver that on the [blank] day of [blank], 1873, they sold them all to one Julius Fox, a white person, about twenty-one years old, and a clerk by occupation; that the price paid to them by Fox for the stock was $5, and that they never offered to Fox any money or other valuable consideration or promise to induce him to accept the stock. The utter worthlessness of this as a defense sufficiently appears in what we have said respecting the appeal of the Germania Bank. Subsequently, what is called a supplemental and amended answer was filed, quite inconsistent with the one first made. It admits the ownership of the stock by the respondents at the time of the Bank's insolvency and suspension, and merely denies any unlawful confederacy. That no defense was shown by this supplemental answer we need spend no time to prove.

The only material averment in the answer of the Crescent Mutual Insurance Company was, in substance, that they had owned shares of the stock of the Crescent City Bank before it became a national bank, and that though the state bank had become a national bank with their consent, and they had received dividends, they had not received new certificates. The stock ledgers of the Bank, however, show that one hundred and thirty shares stood in their name when the Bank failed and, therefore, taking their averment to be true, it is impossible to find any reason why they are not subject to the liabilities of stockholders.

The appeal of Benjamin J. West is equally without merit. It was admitted by his answer and proved by his own testimony that on the 13th of March, 1873, the day before the Bank ceased paying its depositors, he was the owner of fifty-eight shares of its stock. On that day he transferred it to one Vincent, whom he describes as a white man, about thirty-five years old, a salesman by trade, for the price of about $10 a share. Nothing more than the testimony of Mr. West himself is needed to show that this is what is called in the English books a sham sale, made to conceal his liability. Vincent was West's clerk at the time and, so far as it appears, without any pecuniary responsibility. No certificate of the stock was issued to him. He paid nothing at the time of the alleged transfer, and never has paid anything since. He gave no note or other written acknowledgment of indebtedness, and West continued to pay his salary as a clerk six or eight months after the transfer, without deducting anything for the price of the stock. Indeed, the price of the stock was never charged against Vincent in West's books. Add to this the fact plainly visible in his testimony, that the alleged transfer was made when Mr. West had become alarmed about the condition of the Bank, and nothing more is needed to show that it was inoperative, as against the creditors of the Bank, according to the doctrine of the cases hereinbefore cited.

There are some other averments in the answer of the appellants, of which it is hardly necessary to say anything. Former decisions of this court have ruled that the determination of the Comptroller of the Currency and his order to the receiver are conclusive of the extent to which the liability of stockholders of insolvent banks may be enforced in suits against such stockholders.

The several appeals in this case are not sustained and the decrees of the Circuit Court are affirmed.

Cited—107 U. S., 261; 111 U. S., 483; 28 Hun, 128; 17 Blatchf., 262; 19 Blatchf., 362; Hughes, 533; 7 Sawy., 31.

TOWN OF LYONS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

EDGAR MUNSON.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 684-686.)

County Judge's decision as to county bonds—certiorari—conclusive judgment—recitals—bona fide holder.

1. Where the County Judge has jurisdiction to decide upon the application made by the tax payers for the issuing of county bonds, his judgment until reversed is final.

2. If there were errors, the proceedings should be brought before a higher court for review by a writ of certiorari; and if need be, the issuing and circulation of the bonds should have been enjoined, subject to the final result of the litigation.

3. The judgment rendered can no more be collaterally attacked in such case than could any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, rendered with the parties properly before it.

4. Where the recital in the bonds set forth the judgment of the County Judge, that it was duly rendered, that the bonds were issued pursuant to the statutes referred to, for the object specified in the petition of the tax payers, and by persons properly appointed and charged by law with the duty of subscribing for the stock and issuing the bonds, and the sufficiency of the statutory authority under which the proceedings were had is not denied, the recital is an estoppel. A bona fide holder of the bonds was not bound to look further, and the obligor cannot go behind it.

[No. 214.]

Argued Apr. 4, 1879. Decided Apr. 21, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York.

The case, which arose in the court below, sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. H. L. Comstock and C. H. Roys, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. W. F. Cogswell, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

All the questions presented for our consideration by this record relate to the validity of bonds issued by the Town of Lyons in payment for railroad stock subscribed by its proper authorities.

Propositions covering the entire ground of the controversy between the parties have been so frequently decided by this court that any extended examination of the case is unnecessary. The Town of Orleans v. Platt [ante, 404], our last adjudication of this class is conclusive in favor of affirming the judgment of the circuit court.

See 9 OTTO.

The County Judge unquestionably had jurisdiction to decide upon the application made by the tax payers. His judgment until reversed was final. If there were errors, the proceedings should have been brought before a higher court for review by a writ of certiorari, and if need be, the issuing and circulation of the bonds should have been enjoined, subject to the final result of the litigation. The judgment rendered can no more be collaterally attacked in this case than could any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction rendered with the parties, as in this case, properly before it. The recital in the bonds sets forth the judgment of the County Judge, that it was duly rendered, that the bonds were issued pursuant to the statutes referred to, for the object specified in the petition of the tax payers, and by persons properly appointed and charged by law with the duty of subscribing for the stock and issuing the bonds to pay for it.

The sufficiency of the statutory authority under which the proceedings were had is not denied.

Under such circumstances the recital is an estoppel. A bona fide holder of the bonds was not bound to look further, and the obligor cannot go behind it. Orleans v. Platt [supra]; Lynde v. The County, 16 Wall., 6 [83 U. S., XXI., 272]; Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 [68 U. S., XVII., 548]; Knox Co. Comrs. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 [62 U. S., XVI., 208]; Town of Rock Creek v. Strong, 96 U. S., 271 [XXIV., 815].

The learned Judge below in his charge to the jury well remarked: "To imply the intent that such obligations after they are negotiated shall be vulnerable to the objections here urged, would be to impute bad faith to the authors of such legislation towards those who are to be induced to invest in such bonds."

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Cited—89 N. Y., 588.

GEORGE BURT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MARIA M. PANJAUD.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 180-183.)

Objection to juror—examination of—possession, evidence of title.

*1. Though an objection to a juror as legally disqualified be improperly overruled, the error is cured if it appear affirmatively that he was not on the jury when the case was tried and it does not appear that the party's right of peremptory challenge was abridged in getting him off.

*2. A man offered as a juror is, no more than a witness, compelled to disclose under oath his guilt of a crime which would disqualify him. The party relying on such disqualification must prove it by other evidence if the juror declines to answer.

*3. In an action of ejectment or trespass to land, actual possession, or receipt of rent by plaintiffs prior to eviction, is prima facie evidence of title, on which recovery can be had against a naked trespasser.

[No. 235.]

Submitted Apr. 18, 1879. Decided Apr. 23, 1879.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Causes of challenge to jurors and their qualifications. See note to Clinton v. Englebrecht, 80 U. S., XX., 659.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida. The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. H. Bisbee, Jr., for plaintiff in error:

1. Mr. Holmes did not for himself claim that he might criminate himself by answering such questions. Under the operation of the amnesty Proclamation he was pardoned of the offense of treason, if he had ever been guilty of it.

Refusing to answer questions touching his qualifications was tantamount to an admission that he was disqualified.

The fact that this juror was afterwards challenged peremptorily and was thus kept off the jury does not cure the error.

U. S. v. Hammond, 2 Woods (C. C.), 197.

2. Assuming that prior possession alone would entitle plaintiff to recover in any case, such possession must in any event be open, notorious, adverse and continuous for the statutory period, and must be based upon color and claim of title.

Tyler, Ej., 859, 860, 861.

Here was no pretense of continuous possession, nor of any possession, except the shadowy one of a person claiming to be agent, without evidence of such agency, exercising the right to lease the premises in 1842. Nor does the plaintiff pretend that her alleged prior possession commenced under color of title.

But we deny that a plaintiff in ejectment can recover on the strength of a prior possession, though open, notorious, continuous and adverse for the statutory period, against a defendant lawfully in possession.

In the New York cases, where a recovery was had on prior possession, it was shown affirmatively that defendant was an intruder or wrong-doer.

Tyler, Ej., 72.

In Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend., 171; Jackson v. Denn, 5 Cow., 200; Jackson v. Walker, 7 Cow., 637; Jackson v. Harder, 4 Johns., 210; Devacht v. Newsam, 3 Ohio, 57; Ludlow v. Barr, 3 Ohio, 388; Abram v. Will, 6 Ohio, 164; Newnam v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio, 323; and Christy v. Scott, 14 How., S. C., 292; this doctrine of the sufficiency of a prior possession, to enable a plaintiff in ejectment, is discussed; and in every case the court held that recovery could not be had except as against an intruder or wrong-doer.

Present possession of defendant is presumed to be in harmony with the legal title; and plaintiff must rebut this presumption before a mere prior possession can avail him.

Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat., 107, 108.

Again; such prior possession must be such an adverse possession as the statute requires.

"Where it shall appear that there has been an actual, continual occupation of premises under a color of title, exclusive of any other right, but not founded upon a written instrument, as a judgment or decree, the premises so actually occupied, and no other, shall be deemed to have been held adversely."

Sec. 7, Laws of Florida, 1872.

Mr. James M. Baker, for defendant in error:

I. Section 820 of the Rev. Stat., invoked as authority for challenging the juror, Holmes, in the court below, was passed in violation of the 8d clause of the 9th section of Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed."

Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall., 323 (71 U. S., XVIII., 363).

This law was enacted nearly six years after the President of the United States issued his Proclamation of general amnesty and pardon. And this court, in commenting on the effect of the Executive's pardon so issued, as applied in the case of Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 380 (71 U. S., XVIII., 370), says: "Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon, nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders."

In this case Mr. Holmes was asked if he had committed a certain crime mentioned in the Act. He refused to answer. He was not bound to accuse himself, nor to answer any question that would have a tendency to expose him to a penal disability, or liability to any kind of criminal charge.

1 Greenl., secs. 451, 453; 5th Amendment to the Constitution.

II. Chief Justice Kent, in his opinion in the case of Smith v. Lorrillard, 10 Johns., 356, says: "It is not necessary that a plaintiff in ejectment should in every case show a possession of twenty years or a paper title. A possession of a less period will form a presumption of title sufficient to put the tenant on his defense. A prior possession short of twenty years, under a claim or assertion of right, will prevail over a subsequent possession of twenty years, when no evidence of title appears on either side."

1 Best, Ev., 68; Tyler, Ej., 71; Allen v. Rivington, 2 Saund., 111; Hartley v. Ferrel, 9 Fla., 375; Jackson v. Hubble, 1 Cow., 613.

The court below properly left it open to the jury to judge of the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the possession by the plaintiff.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of ejectment brought by the defendant in error against plaintiff in error, in the State Court of Florida, and afterwards removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for that District. Plaintiff there sued and recovered judgment for two lots or parcels of land in the City of St. Augustine. Defendant set up no title whatever to the land, and did not even rely on the Statute of Limitations, as far as the record shows, though in possession for several years previous to the commencement of the suit.

It appears that, before the jury was sworn to try the case, one of the panel, Henry Holmes, was sworn on his voir dire, and was asked whether or not he had aided or abetted the late rebellion against the United States, when he was told by the presiding Judge that it was optional with him whether he would answer the question or not; and said Holmes declined to answer. The defendant excepted to this ruling, and then moved that Holmes be excluded for cause, which the court overruled, and defendant excepted again.

It appears affirmatively that Holmes was not sworn as one of the jury, and no reason is given for it.

1. We are of opinion that, since Holmes did not sit on the jury, no harm was done to defendant. The object of both motions was to exclude him, as one incompetent to sit. It is immaterial to the defendant how this was brought about. It is possible that if defendant had shown affirmatively that he was excluded by reason of his peremptory challenge, and that in doing so the exercise of his right of peremptory challenge had been abridged, the result might be otherwise. It is sufficient to say that the record does not show that he was on the jury, but in fact that he was not, or that in getting rid of him any right of defendant was abridged or lost.

2. But we are further of opinion that a juror is, no more than a witness, obliged to disclose on oath his guilt of any crime, or of any act which would disgrace him, in order to test his qualification as a juror. The question asked him, if answered in the affirmative, would have admitted his guilt of the crime of treason. Whether pardoned by a general amnesty or not pardoned, we think the crime was one which he could not be required to disclose in this manner. Nor would this ruling deprive the party of his right of challenge. Like a conviction for felony, or any other disqualifying circumstance, the challenger was at liberty to prove it by any other competent testimony.

He did not offer to do this, and as the juror's incompetency was not proved, the court was not bound to exclude him.

All the other exceptions relate to the insufficiency of plaintiff's title to recover, it being conceded that defendant showed none in himself.

It is true that plaintiff does not trace her title to any acknowledged source. But as to lot 4, she produces a deed from M. C. Mordecai and Thomas Kerr, dated April 30, 1845, conveying the lot to her; and she proves by a competent witness that there were two houses on this lot, and that she lived in one or both of them from 1845 to 1847, and that one Solonoa, as agent for plaintiff, returned this property for taxes and paid the taxes from 1857 to 1860, and that the two houses were occupied.

As regards the other lot of ground, no written evidence of title is proved, but the tax collector states that the same Mr. Solonoa, professing to act for plaintiff, paid the taxes on this lot as on the other, and that witness leased this lot from him, professing to act as agent of plaintiff.

On this evidence the court instructed the jury, in several forms, that if they believed the plaintiff had possession of the lots in suit at the times mentioned, that the presumption was that she retained possession by herself or tenants until ousted by defendant, and that her removal from the City of St. Augustine was not necessarily an abandonment of this possession; and if her possession had continued for seven years, it was sufficient to enable her to recover against a trespasser or one showing no right to enter.

We think there was sufficient evidence, as to both lots, of plaintiff's possession under claim of ownership. The deed from Mordecai and Kerr, with her actual residence on lot 4, and payment of taxes, was clearly sufficient to establish such possession. So, also, as regards the other lots, the witness who paid the rent was her tenant. The payment of the rent to a man who professed to act as her agent bound the tenant to her as such, and he could not have disputed her title. It was her possession. This was corroborated by the payment of taxes and the absence of any proof of abandonment or loss of possession prior to defendant's tortious entry. It was sufficient for the jury, in the absence of any pretense of right by defendant.

See 9 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

This principle is so well settled in the law of ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit, as to need no citation of authority. It will be found laid down by Mr. Greenleaf in 2 Greenl. Ev., sec. 311, that either actual possession of the premises or receipt of rent is prima facie evidence of title in fee; also secs. 618, 618 a; see, also, Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal., 33; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal., 426.

There are no other assignments of error worthy of notice, and we see no error in the record.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field, concurring:

I agree with the court that the juror, Holmes, in this case, could not be required to answer the questions put to him; but I go further. I do not think that the Act of Congress, which requires a test oath as to past conduct, and thereby excludes a great majority of the citizens of one half the country from the jury-box, is valid. In my judgment, the Act is not only oppressive and odious, and repugnant to the spirit of our institutions, but is unconstitutional and void. As a war measure, to be enforced in the insurgent States when dominated by the national forces, it could be sustained; but after the war was over, and those States were restored to their normal and constitutional relations to the Union, it was as much out of place and as inoperative as would be a law quartering a soldier in every Southern man's house.

Mr. Justice Strong dissents, on the ground that the evidence of plaintiff's possession was not sufficient to raise the presumption of title.

Cited—99 U. S., 184, 185; 14 N. W. Rep., 418.

WARNER VAN NORDEN, Appt.,

v.

LEVI P. MORTON ET AL., as MORTON, BLISS & Co.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 378-382.)

Legal or equitable remedy.

*The rule is well settled in this court that whenever a new right is granted by statute, or a new remedy for violation of an old right, or whenever such rights and remedies are dependent on state statutes or Acts of Congress, the jurisdiction of such cases, as between the law side and the equity side of the Federal Courts, must be determined by the essential character of the case; and unless it comes within some of the recognized heads of equitable jurisdiction, it must be held to belong to the other.

[No. 225.]

Argued Apr. 10, 1879. Decided Apr. 28, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. T. J. Durant & C. W. Hornor, for appellant.

Mr. John A. Campbell, for appellees.

*Head note by Mr. Justice MILLER.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The complainant filed his bill, addressed to the Judges of the Circuit Court sitting in chancery, alleging that he is the owner of dredge-boat No. 3, lying in the river at New Orleans; that Morton, Bliss & Co., having obtained a judgment in the same court against the Mississippi and Mexican Gulf Ship Canal Company for over $24,000, had issued an execution on said judgment, under which the marshal had seized dredge-boat No. 3, and had advertised to sell it to satisfy the writ; he then alleges that he, and not the Ship Canal Co., is the owner of the boat; that it is not liable to be taken on said execution; and that the seizure has already subjected him to a loss of $5,000, and his continued deprivation of its use will cause him much greater loss. He prays that the plaintiffs in this judgment and Packard, the Marshal, be made defendants, and enjoined from interfering with him in the possession of the boat; that he be quieted and maintained in his title and possession, and defendants be decreed to pay him $5,000 aforesaid as damages, and for the writ of subpoena. A temporary injunction was granted. Answer and replication were filed, depositions and other testimony taken and, on hearing, the court dissolved the injunction and dismissed the bill.

The first question we are called to consider is, whether the circuit court had jurisdiction of this suit in equity.

If the case had arisen in any State where separate jurisdiction at common law and in equity was fully recognized, there could be no difficulty in answering this question in the negative.

The remedy in all times for this trespass, which is a very common one, has been by an action of replevin to take the property out of the hands of the sheriff or marshal and return it to the owner, or to leave the officer to proceed with the sale of the property and sue him or the purchaser in trespass for its value and for any incidental damage. In the one case, the party whose property was wrongfully seized recovered possession of it. In the other he recovered compensation for its loss. No case has been cited to us, we presume none can be found, where equity has interfered under such circumstances. The case of Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall., 74 [72 U. S., XVIII., 580], is supposed to support that of the appellant here. In that case Sutherland, the party whose goods were seized, was engaged in a successful dry goods trade. The seizure was of all his goods, and it closed his store, and if continued would have broken up a profitable business. For this the court held that the action at law for damages could have given no adequate remedy. The equitable jurisdiction, as will be seen by an examination of the opinion of the court, rested solely on that consideration. The case, as it was, is a very close one, and its main feature is absent in the one before us. There is no reason to believe that the value of the dredge-boat would not be adequate compensation for its loss, and no such allegation is made in the bill. On the contrary, the complainant claims $5,000 damages for the loss of its use while held by the marshal.

It is said, however, that the Code of Louisiana does not give an action of replevin in any case, or its equivalent, and that it does give a specific remedy for cases of this class, which, in its nature, is of an equitable character, and should be administered in the Federal Courts on the equity side of the calendar.

If the first proposition were true, there would still remain the remedy by an action for damages at law, which is legally an adequate remedy. But while it is true that the Louisiana Code provides no process by which, in advance of a judgment as to the right of the parties, personal property can be taken from the possession of one party and delivered to the other, it does provide the remedy of sequestration, by which the possession of the property which is the subject of the litigation may be taken by order of the court and held until the right is decided. See, Sequestration, Code of Pr., art. 269-283. Under the provisions of these articles, we see no reason why complainant might not have brought suit and recovered the ultimate possession of his boat and damages for its detention.

The special provision for such cases as the present is found in article 298, paragraph 7, of the same Code of Practice. The whole of section 5 is devoted to injunctions, and a careful reading of all the subdivisions shows that the word is used as applicable to cases which are in their nature of a common law character, and that it is used as synonymous and interchangeably with prohibition. It is also authorized in some cases which with us would be undoubtedly of chancery cognizance.

We think the rule is settled in this court that whenever a new right is granted by statute, or a new remedy for violation of an old right, or whenever such rights and remedies are dependent on state statutes or Acts of Congress, the jurisdiction of such cases, as between the law side and the equity side of the Federal Courts, must be determined by the essential character of the case, and unless it comes within some of the recognized heads of equitable jurisdiction, it must be held to belong to the other.

The case of Thompson v. R. R. Co., 6 Wall., 134 [73 U. S., XVIII., 765], had been removed from the state court into the Circuit Court of the United States. In the latter a bill in chancery was filed and a decree rendered in favor of the complainant. On appeal, this court held that the case had no feature of equitable cognizance, and it was ordered to be dismissed without prejudice. It was conceded that if the case had remained in the state court the plaintiff could have recovered.

The court said: "The remedies in the courts of the United States are, at common law or in equity, not according to the practice of the state courts, but according to the principles of common law and equity, as distinguished and defined in that country, from which we derive our knowledge of these principles. And although the forms of proceedings and practice in the state courts shall have been adopted in the Circuit Courts of the United States, yet the adoption of the state practice must not be understood as confounding the principles of law and equity, nor as authorizing legal and equitable claims to be blended together in one suit;" citing Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat., 212, and Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How., 669, to which we take leave to add: Jones v. Mc Masters, 20 How., 8 [61 U. S., XV., 805], and Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall., 680 [87 U. S., XXII., 453].

With this criterion before us, we are of opinion that the remedy provided by the Code of Practice of Louisiana is a simple application to the court from which the writ issued to remedy the evil of an erroneous levy of the execution. It says: "The injunction must be granted and directed against the defendant himself in the following cases: * * *

When the sheriff, in the execution of a judgment, has seized property not belonging to the defendant, and insists on selling the same, disregarding the opposition of him who alleges that he is the real owner, or is guilty of any other act in the execution of his office."

Now this obviously refers to the control of the court over its own officer, in the execution of its own writs, and is as applicable to other misconduct of that officer, in the execution of his official duties, as in cases of seizure of property not liable under an execution in his hands. The remedy needs no formal chancery proceeding, but a petition or motion, with notice to the sheriff, is not only all that is required, but is the most speedy and appropriate mode of obtaining relief.

This relief does not depend on any inadequacy of an action for damages or by sequestration. It is a short, summary proceeding before the court under whose authority the officer is acting, gives speedy relief, and is very analogous to the statutory remedy given in many of the western States in similar cases, to try the right of property at the instance of the party whose property is wrongfully seized. It has no element of equitable right or procedure, and as a court of chancery the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the case.

Although the court below dismissed the bill, it was a decision on the merits, and not for want of jurisdiction. The decree recites that the case was heard on bill, answer, replication, exhibits and proofs, and on consideration thereof the bill was dismissed. This decree would be a bar to any other action which complainant might bring at law.

In accordance with the settled rule of this court, as shown in the case above cited, of Thompson v. R. R. Co. [supra], and Kendig v. Dean, at this Term [97 U. S., 423, XXIV., 1061], this decree must be reversed and a new one entered dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction, and without prejudice to the right of complainant to bring any action at law or other proceeding which he may be advised; and it is so ordered.

Cited—101 U. S., 157; 105 U. S., 602; 106 U. S., 678; 110 U. S., 236; 6 N. W. Rep., 848; 44 Miss., 336; 38 Am. Rep., 275.

F. W. HARTMAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

IRVING M. BEAN, COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE, and F. W. PAYNE, DEPUTY-COLLECTOR.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 393-398.)

Sale of distilled spirits—lien for tax.

1. The owner of distilled spirits may sell the same while the spirits are deposited in a bonded warehouse; but the purchaser takes the property subject to the lien in favor of the United States for the tax created by the Act of Congress.

2. It is the duty of the Commissioner to examine the monthly returns of the distiller, and if he finds that the distiller has not accounted for all the spirits produced, he must assess the delinquent for the excess produced beyond the amount reported; the spirits purchased under such circumstances were subject to the lien for such corrected tax.

[No. 242.]

Submitted Apr. 22, 1879. Decided Apr. 28, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. F. W. Cotzhausen, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

High wines produced by distillation, like other distilled spirits, when removed from the place where the same were distilled, if not deposited in a bonded warehouse, as required by law, become liable to the same internal revenue tax as that prescribed to be paid by the distiller, owner or person in possession thereof before the same is removed from the bonded warehouse; and the provision is, that when the commissioner obtains knowledge that such distilled spirits have been so removed, and that the same are not deposited in the bonded warehouse, it is made his duty to assess the distiller for the amount, and to return the assessment to the collector, who is directed to demand payment of the tax; and if the distiller neglects and refuses to pay the assessment, the requirement is that the collector shall proceed to collect the same by distraint. R. S., secs. 3251, 3253.

Certain high wines which the plaintiff alleges that he owned, and which he claims that he purchased of the distiller, were seized and sold by the defendants, under and by virtue of a warrant of distraint for the collection of certain internal revenue taxes assessed against the distiller of the same, of whom plaintiff made his purchase. Sufficient appears to show that the plaintiff is, and for a number of years has been, engaged in business as a rectifier of such wines and as a wholesale dealer in liquors, and that the principal defendant is the Collector of Internal Revenue for the district, the other being his deputy.

Liquors of the kind, when lawfully removed from the distillery and deposited in a warehouse, are frequently sold by the distiller subject to tax, but while they remain in the warehouse they are subject to the regulations prescribed by the Act of Congress. Such distillers are required, on the first day of each month, or within five days thereafter, to render, under oath, to the collector of the district, an account in duplicate, taken from their books stating the quantity and kind of materials used for the production of spirits each day, and the number of wine gallons of spirits produced and placed in warehouse.

Accounts of the kind, in duplicate, are required; and it is made the duty of the collector to transmit one of the same to the commissioner, and on the receipt of the return the commissioner is directed in each month to inquire and determine whether the distiller has accounted for all the grain or molasses used and the spirits produced by him in the preceding month.

Even if the commissioner is satisfied that the distiller has reported all the spirits produced by him, still if the quantity reported is less than eighty per centum of the producing capacity of the distillery, he is required by law to make an assessment for such deficiency at the rate of ninety cents for every proof gallon; but if the commissioner finds that the distiller has not accounted for all the spirits produced by him, the Act of Congress directs that he shall, from all the evidence he can obtain, determine what quantity of spirits was actually produced by such distiller, and that an assessment shall be made for the difference between the quantity reported and the quantity shown to have been actually produced, at the rate of ninety cents for every proof gallon, the same as if the true quantity had been reported. R. S., secs. 3307, 3309.

Much discussion of the facts is unnecessary, as there is no conflict in the evidence as reported in the bill of exceptions.

On the 8th of May, 1875, the plaintiff in good faith purchased the high wines mentioned in the declaration of the distiller. They had been produced at the distillery of the seller, and were regularly deposited in the bonded warehouse, the tax not having been paid; and it appears that the purchaser paid for the spirits twenty-six cents for each proof gallon, subject to tax. Purchases of the kind had frequently been made by the plaintiff; and the bill of exceptions states that it is the custom to make such purchases subject to tax, the purchaser withdrawing the same from time to time on payment of tax, as fast as the spirits are wanted in his business. Written notice of the sale and purchase was given to the collector on the same day, and the statement is that the notice has ever since remained on file in his office.

Irregularity in the transaction is not suggested; and it appears that the plaintiff, not needing the high wines for immediate use in his business, allowed the same to remain in the bonded warehouse, which constituted a part of the distillery premises where the wines had been manufactured, he, the purchaser, not making any application to remove or withdraw the same until after the tax in question had been assessed, as required by the Internal Revenue Act of Congress.

Prior to such application, to wit: on the 10th of June subsequent to the purchase by the plaintiff, the commissioner, pursuant to the provision contained in the section of the Revised Statutes last above cited, assessed the distiller and vendor of the plaintiff the sum of $2,857.68 as an internal revenue tax on 4,082³⁸/₁₀₀ proof gallons of high wines distilled by the said distiller at his said distillery between the 6th of January and the 8th of March of the same year the purchase of the distilled spirits was made by the plaintiff.

Due notice, in writing, of the tax and demand of payment were made by the collector of the district, and the bill of exceptions states that the distiller wholly neglected and refused to make the payment. Assessment being duly made and payment being refused, the collector, pursuant to law, issued his warrant of distraint, and the deputy-collector seized and sold the property to make the money. Immediate redress was sought by the plaintiff through the present action of trover, commenced in the state court. Service having been made, the defendants appeared, and on their motion the cause was removed into the circuit court, where the answer of the defendants was filed. Both parties appeared in the circuit court and, having waived a jury, they submitted the cause to the determination of the court. Hearing was had; and the court being of the opinion that, in point of law, there was a lien on the high wines for the taxes assessed by the commissioner, under the provision before referred to, held that the action could not be maintained, and that the assessment of the tax and the sale of the spirits under the warrant of distress were valid. Judgment being rendered for the defendants, the plaintiff removed the cause into this court, and assigns for error that the circuit court erred in the conclusions of law set forth in the transcript, he, the plaintiff, insisting that the high wines were neither subject to a lien for the tax nor to seizure under the warrant of distraint, and that the withholding and sale of the same constituted a conversion.

Formal application to withdraw the high wines from the bonded warehouse was made on the 14th of July subsequent to the assessment, and the bill of exceptions shows that on that day the plaintiff caused the statements and certificates required by law to be made out for that purpose, and that he tendered to the collector the tax on the same, meaning the tax assessed on the quantities reported by the distiller; but the leave to withdraw was refused, because the corrected assessment by the commissioner had previously been made for the difference between the quantity reported and the quantity shown to have been actually produced.

Actual seizure of the high wines was made by the deputy-collector on the 8th of the same month, and it appears that he advertised the same for sale on the same day. Prior to the sale, to wit: July 22, the plaintiff tendered to the collector the amount of the tax admitted to be due and owing on the said high wines, at the rate of ninety cents per proof gallon, demanded possession thereof, and that the levy be released and the sale abandoned; but the defendants refused to release the property, and the same was sold on the following day under the warrant of distress and pursuant to the antecedent advertisement. But such a tender, even if it included the corrected assessment, could not benefit the plaintiff, as it did not cover either interest or penalty for the non-payment.

Beyond all question, the corrected assessment made was fully authorized by the Act of Congress, as the same section provides that all assessments made under that section shall be a lien on all distilled spirits, the distillery premises, the distillery used for distilling the same, the stills, vessels, fixtures and tools therein, the tract of land whereon the said distillery is located, and any building thereon, from the time such assessment is made until the same shall have been paid and discharged. R. S., sec. 3309.

Argument to show that that provision secures a lien upon the distilled spirits as security for the payment of the tax is quite unnecessary, as the language of the Act is express to that effect; and section 3188 also provides that in case of such neglect or refusal the collector may levy, or by warrant may authorize a deputy-collector to levy, upon all property and rights to property, except such as are exempt by the preceding section, belonging to such person or on which the said lien exists, for the payment of the sum due with interest, and penalty for non-payment.

Nothing can be plainer in legal decision than the proposition that the lien in such a case attaches to the distillery, the distilled spirits, and to the real and personal property used in connection with the distillery, and that it may be enforced against the distilled spirits at any time before the purchaser of the same withdraws the spirits from the bonded warehouse, which is all that is necessary to decide in the case before the court. Dobbins v. U. S., 96 U. S., 401 [XXIV., 638].

Concede that the owner of the distilled spirits may sell the same while the spirits are deposited in the bonded warehouse, still his sale must be regarded as subject to the tax, as the purchase was in this case; which means that the purchaser takes the property subject to the lien in favor of the United States that is created by the Act of Congress; nor is it any hardship upon the purchaser, as he as well as the distiller knows that the Act of Congress makes it the duty of the commissioner to examine the monthly returns of the distiller, and that if he finds that the distiller has not accounted for all the spirits produced, he must assess the delinquent for the excess produced beyond the amount reported.

Viewed in the light of that suggestion, it is clear that the purchaser has no just ground of complaint, as he knew that the spirits purchased under such circumstances were subject to such a corrected tax, and that the corrected assessment as well as that levied pursuant to the report of the distiller becomes a lien upon the high wines deposited in the bonded warehouse.

Judgment affirmed.

EDWIN PARSONS ET AL., Appts.,

v.

HENRY R. JACKSON ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 434-441.)

Railroad bonds—when not negotiable—stolen bonds.

1. Railroad bonds, by which the company acknowledges indebtedness to A or bearer, in the sum of either £225 in London or $1,000 in New York or New Orleans, the place of payment to be fixed by the president of the company by his indorsement, but the place of payment left blank in the indorsement, are not negotiable paper.

2. The uncertainty of the amount payable, in the absence of the required indorsement, is of itself a defect which deprives these instruments of the character of negotiability.

See 9 OTTO.

3. Where such bonds were never issued by the railroad company, but were seized and carried off by a raid of soldiers during the war, and had past-due coupons attached and were offered for a very small consideration, purchasers were affected with notice of their invalidity, and cannot sustain the position of bona fide holders without notice.

[No. 156.]

Argued Mar. 5, 1879. Decided Apr. 28, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. N. A. Cowdrey, Thos. L. Bayne and Thos. Allen Clarke, for appellants:

The bonds are in the usual form and are negotiable.

Hotchkiss v. Nat. Bank, 21 Wall., 354 (88 U. S., XXII., 645); White v. Vt. & Mass. R. R. Co., 21 How., 575 (62 U. S., XVI., 221); Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall., 110 (69 U. S., XVII., 857); Mercer County v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 (68 U. S., XVII., 548).

The designation of a place of payment is not essential. The bonds would be negotiable without naming any place whatever and, the President having indorsed them, leaving the place of payment blank, any holder bona fide was authorized to fill the same.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst., 111; Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall., 552 (76 U. S., XIX., 766); Bank of Pittsburg v. Neal, 22 How., 107 (63 U. S., XVI., 328); Woodward v. Gunn, Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, March Term, 1878, reported in the "Reporter," published at Boston, Vol. 5, p. 668.

The indorsement is signed by the President, and if it was not intended that this blank should be filled by any holder, then there was negligence in signing the indorsement in blank; and persons acquiring in good faith, are entitled to recover upon the bond.

Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass., 45; Worcester Co. Bank v. Dorchester Bank, 10 Cush., 488; Redlich v. Doll, 54 N. Y., 235.

In the latter case the note was as follows:

"NEW YORK, Sept. 30th, 1868.

Three months after date I promise to pay to the order of myself, six hundred and seventy-nine dollars and twenty cents, at value received.

Signed, N. DOLL."

"Earl, C. I am well satisfied, upon a long line of authorities, that the insertion of the place of payment in this note did not avoid it in the hands of a bona fide holder for value."

The defendant made his note perfect in form except the place of payment, and intrusted it to Istel for a special purpose. If the word "at" had not been inserted in the note, it would have been a complete note without the insertion of other words. But with that word in, preceding a blank, it carried upon its face an implied authority for any bona fide holder to insert the place of payment. In such a case, if the note be used or the blank filled up contrary to the agreement or the intention of the original parties, the maker is held to any bona fide holder for value, upon the principle that where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the fraud or wrong of a third person, the one who put it in the power of such third person to commit the wrong, must bear the loss.

Garrard v. Hadden, 67 Pa., 82; Kitchen v. Place, 41 Barb., 465; Montague v. Perkins, 22

Eng. L. & E., 516; Orrick v. Colston, 7 Gratt., 189.

Suspicion of defect of title, or the knowledge of circumstances which would excite such suspicion in the mind of a prudent man, or gross negligence on the part of the taker at the time of the transfer, will not defeat his title; that result can only be produced by bad faith on his part.

Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall., 121 (69 U. S., XVII., 859); Cromwell v. Sac Co., 96 U. S., 51 (XXIV., 681); Hotchkiss v. National Bank (supra).

These bonds were bought in open market, in the usual course of business, and for what the record in this case will show was a fair price; but if the price was not for full value, this will not affect appellants' right to recover.

Cromwell v. County of Sac (supra).

The railroad was seized under process from the state courts in 1865, and sold February, 1866.

Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall., 616 (88 U. S., XXII., 492).

The sale has been set aside, and the litigation is still pending.

Bonds, such as these found in this record, are made to raise money by sale. They are payable to bearer twenty years after their date, and to facilitate their sale several places of payment are indicated in the face of the bond, and in the indorsement, a blank is left over the signature of the President, to be filled by any bona fide holder. The option which the holder enjoys, appreciates the value of the bond, and is an advantage which accrues to the makers.

Hotchkiss v. Bk. (supra); Wheeler v. Guild, 20 Pick., 550.

Messrs. John A. Campbell and H. M. Spofford, for appellees:

A negotiable instrument is a writing containing a promise to pay a certain sum of money, unconditionally, to a person designated by the instrument.

This bond shows an obligation to pay a certain number of pounds sterling, or a certain number of American dollars. Whether the one or the other, or any, according to the terms of the bond fairly and distinctly appearing on the face, was to be settled and declared by the indorsement of the president. No such declaration is to be found. The President did not negotiate these bonds; he did not intrust them to another for negotiation. They were carried away from the custody of the company amid tumult and violence, and without its consent or privity, and without fault or neglect. The absence of a negotiable quality, and the fact that they were never negotiated, is proved by the bond and the testimony. The appellants have no just claim on the property.

Story, Prom. N., secs. 19, 20, 22; Chit. Bills, 152; Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall., 683 (74 U. S., XIX., 176); Nelson's Opinion; Cook v. Satterlee, 6 Cow., 108.

A floating contingent promise is not negotiable.

Storm v. Stirling, 3 Ell. & B., 832; 1 Pars. Bills & N., 114.

On the face of the bond an act is imposed on the president of the corporation, as a duty to be performed, without which the bond is incomplete as a negotiable security. The absence of the indorsement of the president indicated to the holder and to the buyer that an officer of the corporation had a duty to perform, and that it had not the constituents of negotiable paper in its condition, as held or offered for sale.

Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How., 343, 365, 366 (61 U. S., XV., 934, 941); Chit. Bills, 206, 225.

There was no trust or confidence on the part of the president of the corporation, and none on the part of the corporation itself, reposed in any other party whereby these bonds reached the New York market.

They were taken by violence or stealth, by unauthorized person or persons, from a secure and unexposed place.

There was no neglect or fraud on the part of any person belonging to the corporation. The corporation is not blameworthy for the circulation, and not responsible on the bonds.

Foster v. MacKinnon, L. R., 4 C. P., 704; Nance v. Lary, 5 Ala., 370; McGrath v. Clark, 56 N. Y., 34; Angle v. Ins. Co., 92 U. S., 330 (XXIII., 556); Taylor v. Gr. Ind. P. R. Co., 3 De Gex, F. & J., 442; Michigan Bk. v. Eldred, 9 Wall., 544 (76 U. S., XIX., 763); Garrard v. Hadden, 67 Pa., 82; Caulkins v. Whisler, 29 Iowa, 495.

The case of Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y., 307, is founded upon a negotiation of bonds of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company, under the same conditions as those proved to the Master, and including some of these bonds. The Supreme Court of New York decided that they were not negotiable, and not a valid claim upon the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company.

This case is a very striking one. The determination of the place of payment ascertains the currency to be employed, and affects the sum of money to be paid. If the blank be filled with New York, or New Orleans, gold money, silver money, or Treasury notes may be paid. A reasonable hope may be entertained by the debtor that lead, copper or leather may come into vogue as a legal tender. Another currency of coin would be exacted in London, and of a different value.

Some years ago the difference was thirty or forty per cent. The indorsement of the president, according to the terms of the bond, was an essential part of it, and this indorsement was indispensable to the constitution of a complete negotiable instrument.

Toullier discusses questions arising under obligations or sales written over blank signatures by persons not authorized by the author of the signature. His conclusions are, that the author is bound by the obligation of the sale in case he intrusted the signature to the writer, and could not complain of a breach of trust in opposition to a bona fide holder. But if the signature were obtained without any consent or privity of the author or by force or fraud the author might denounce the forgery or fraud and cause the paper to be annulled though held by a bona fide holder.

4 Toull., p. 275, or book 3, tit. 3, ch. 6, sec. 2.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises out of the supplementary proceedings which took place in the case of Jackson v. Vicksburg, Shreveport & Texas R. R. Co., reported under the name of Jackson v. Ludeling, in 21 Wall., 616 [88 U. S., XXII., 492] after our decision therein. In pursuance of the mandate issued in that case, the court below made a further decree on the 22d day of March, 1875, directing, amongst other things, as follows, that is to say:

"3. It is ordered that F. A. Woolfley be appointed special master to take the proofs of the bonds bona fide issued by the said Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company, and to report the names of the owners and the amounts due to the holders of such bonds so issued. * * *

He will give notice to the holders of bonds bona fide issued for twenty days by publication in one of the city papers that he is ready to receive proofs of the debt aforesaid, and that he shall hold sessions for thirty days, each day, Sunday excepted, from the date of his first publication in the paper for that purpose."

In pursuance of this decree the master gave the required notice, and received proofs adduced by those claiming to hold bonds entitled to the benefit of the decree rendered by this court. By his report filed the 17th day of January, 1876, it appears that there were then outstanding seven hundred and sixty-one bonds bona fide issued by the said railroad company, of which schedules were annexed to his report. He further reported a schedule of certain other bonds executed by the company, and presented to him as issued under the mortgage mentioned in the decree; but which, the testimony taken by him proved, were never issued by the said company, its officers or agents, but were carried off by persons belonging to, or taking advantage of, a raid upon the Town of Monroe, La., during the late war, in the month of April, 1864. As to these bonds, the master further reports as follows:

"None of the parties presenting these bonds, or the coupons on them, have proved at what time, for what consideration, or under what circumstances they acquired them, except Francis T. Willis, Charles Parsons, E. G. Pearl, Edwin Parsons, George Parsons and Scott, Zérega & Co. in liquidation. In reference to this class, if the bonds were complete in all their parts and no circumstances of suspicion appeared on their face, the proof that they had not been issued bona fide under the authority of the corporation, and other facts relative to the issue, would have required the parties to prove that they were bona fide holders for a valuable consideration.

In reference to the claims of Francis T. Willis, Charles Parsons, E. G. Pearl, Edwin Parsons and Scott, Zérega & Co. in liquidation, I report that in addition to the fact that the bonds were not issued bona fide, but were taken by force from the custody of the company, that there appears on the indorsement of the bonds a material deficiency and an incompleteness which deprives them of the character of commercial instruments fit for circulation. I also report that the railroad was, at the date of their purchase, in a damaged condition, it having been under the control of the military power of the Confederate States and the United States, which had been used to partially destroy it. That there were several years of unpaid coupons on each of the bonds, in the most of cases being contemporaneous with the execution of the mortgage; that these bonds were sold for an insignificant sum, and apparently purchased at a hazard, without any view to their character as commercial instruments fit for circulation, and that from the date of this suit, the 1st December, 1866, nor in any proceedings antecedent thereto, did the holders, or any of them, appear to maintain any claim for protection.

I, therefore, report that the said bonds mentioned in the schedule BB were not issued bona fide by the said railroad company, and ought not to be allowed as a charge on the mortgage."

The parties above named excepted to this report; but after hearing thereon, the court confirmed the same, and made a decree disallowing the said last mentioned bonds, and from that decree the present appeal was taken.

From the evidence taken by the master it appears that the appellants purchased the bonds held by them, in the City of New York, in November and December, 1865, at from ten to fifteen cents on the dollar, without any actual knowledge that they were not issued by the company. But it further appeared that none or very few of the coupons had been cut off from the bonds, and that the latter were imperfect in form.

Each bond, on its face, certifies "That the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company is indebted to John Ray, or bearer, for value received, in the sum of either £225 sterling or $1,000 lawful money of the United States of America, to wit: £225 sterling if the principal and interest are payable in London, and $1,000 lawful money of the United States of America if the principal and interest are payable in New York or New Orleans, etc." This is the obligatory part of the instrument, and is necessarily indeterminate in its character without some further designation of the place at which it is to be paid. Each bond, further, on its face declares that "The president of said company is authorized to fix, by his indorsement, the place of payment of the principal and interest in conformity with the terms of this obligation." And on the back of the bonds is indorsed a printed blank in the following words to wit: "I hereby agree that the within bond and the interest coupons thereto attached shall be payable in ——" On the bonds, which are conceded to be genuine and bona fide issued, this blank is filled up with the name of some place, as, for example, "The City of New York;" or, in some cases, "New Orleans, at the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana," etc. All the indorsements have the signature of the president of the company, but on the bonds in question the above blank for the place of payment is not filled up. The mortgage under which the bonds purport to be issued, and which is referred to in the body thereof, contains the same provision with respect to the place of payment. After referring to the bonds to be issued under and secured by it, its language is as follows: "The principal and interest of said bonds being made payable in New Orleans, New York, or London, as he, the said president, by his indorsement, may determine." The resolutions of the Board of Directors, authorizing the execution of the mortgage and the issue of the bonds, which resolutions are copied in the mortgage, contain the same provision, namely: "The principal and interest of said bonds being made payable in New Orleans, New York, or London, as the president, by his indorsement, may determine." These resolutions, being the authority by virtue of which the mortgage and bonds were executed and issued, would seem to be mandatory, and to require that the place of payment should be indorsed by the president on the bonds independently of the necessity of such indorsement for the purpose of fixing the amount payable thereon.

The uncertainty of the amount payable, in the absence of the required indorsement, is of itself a defect which deprives these instruments of the character of negotiability. As they stand, they amount to a promise to pay so many pounds, or so many dollars, without saying which. One of the first rules in regard to negotiable paper is that the amount to be paid must be certain, and not be made to depend on a contingency. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst., sec. 53. And although it is held that, Id certum est quod certum reddi potest—a maxim which would have given the bonds negotiability in this instance, had the requisite indorsement been made, yet, without such indorsement, the uncertainty remains, and operates as an intrinsic defect in the security itself.

Now it is shown by the master's report, and if it were necessary to go behind the report, the evidence shows that these bonds were never issued by the railroad company at all, but were seized and carried off by a raid of soldiers during the war. They afterwards turned up in New York, and were purchased by the appellants; and the question is, whether the fact that the past-due coupons were still attached, and that no place of payment was indorsed on the bonds, as required to be done by the bonds themselves, was sufficient to put the appellants upon inquiry as to their validity, and as to the bona fides of their issue; these marks of suspicion being supplemented by the further fact, that the bonds were offered for a very small consideration.

Our opinion is, that the appellants had abundant cause to question the integrity of these bonds, that they were affected with notice of their invalidity, and cannot be allowed to sustain the position of bona fide holders without notice. The presence of the past-due and unpaid coupons was itself an evidence of dishonor, sufficient to put the purchasers on inquiry. The imperfection as to the place of payment is another strong evidence of want of genuineness. Of course, it is not necessary to the validity of a bond that it should name a place of payment, but these bonds expressly declare that they are to be payable at the place which should be determined by the president's indorsement; and that the sum payable should depend on that indorsement; and yet no indorsement appears thereon. We do not say that this defect would have invalidated the bonds if they had in fact been issued by the company, and the amount had been certain; but it was a pregnant warning to the purchasers to inquire whether they had been issued or not. These facts, taken in connection with the price at which the bonds were offered, were abundantly sufficient to affect the purchasers with notice of any invalidity in their issue. The case is so plain, that it is hardly necessary to cite any authorities on the subject. "A person who takes a bill," said this court in Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet., 65,

"which upon the face of it was dishonored, cannot be allowed to claim the privileges which belong to a bona fide holder without notice." The same doctrine is re-affirmed in Fowler v. Brantly, 14 Pet., 318, and, indeed, is elementary law. The circumstances in this case went farther than merely to cast a shade of suspicion upon the bonds; they were so pointed and emphatic as to be prima facie inconsistent with any other view than that there was something wrong in the title. See, 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst., sec. 796.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Clifford.

Mr. Justice Swayne did not sit in this case.

Cited—99 U. S., 513; 103 U. S., 762; 70 Mo., 339, 341.

HENRY R. JACKSON ET AL.,

v.

THE VICKSBURG, SHREVEPORT AND TEXAS RAILROAD COMPANY, JOHN T. LUDELING ET AL.

—

THE VICKSBURG, SHREVEPORT AND TEXAS RAILROAD COMPANY, JOHN T. LUDELING ET AL., Appts.,

v.

HENRY R. JACKSON ET AL.

(See S. C., "Jackson v. Ludeling," 9 Otto, 513-539.)

Foreclosure sale of railroad—resale—improvements—Louisiana law—rule of compensation.

*1. In Louisiana, where a railroad, in a state of complete dilapidation and ruin, was sold under a mortgage, under circumstances importing some fraud in the purchasers which induced the court to set the sale aside and order a resale, such purchasers, though deemed possessors in bad faith, are entitled by the spirit of article 508 of the Civil Code, to compensation for reconstructing and repairing the road and putting it in working order.

2. Whatever question may exist about compensation for intrusion or inseparable ameliorations and improvements made by a possessor in bad faith, there is no question about his right to be reimbursed for necessary repairs, both according to the general civil law and the 2314th article of the Civil Code of Louisiana.

3. It seems to be held in Louisiana, contrary to former decisions, that compensation will not be allowed to the possessor in bad faith for inseparable improvements to land, such as clearing and ditching; but the reconstruction and putting in working order of a railroad, thereby restoring it to its normal condition, partake so much of the nature of repairs, that compensation therefor is required, by an equitable construction of article 508 of the Civil Code.

4. The rule of compensation in such a case is, to allow credit to the possessors for the value of the materials of the improvements yet in existence, and the cost of the labor bestowed thereon; but not for the improvements which have been consumed in the use, and not to exceed the value of the improvements when delivered up. Interest on the outlay of the possessors will also be allowed to an amount not exceeding the net earnings or fruits received from the improvements. They will be accountable, however, for all the fruits received by them from the property. [Quere: whether they would be accountable for the fruits of the improvements beyond the allowance made to them therefor.]

5. For any balance found to be due them on such an accounting, the possessors will have a lien on the property.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice BRADLEY.

[Nos. 525, 526.]

Argued Mar. 7, 1879. Decided Apr. 28, 1879.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The facts are fully stated by the court.

Messrs. John A. Campbell and H. M. Spofford, for Jackson et al.

Messrs. Jeremiah S. Black, Matt. H. Carpenter, John T. Ludeling, in person, John Ray and W. H. Hunt, for R. R. Co., Ludeling et al.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case, like the one just decided [ante, 457], arises out of the supplementary proceedings which took place in the case of Jackson v. R. R. Co., reported as Jackson v. Ludeling in 21 Wall., 616 [88 U. S., XXII., 492], after our decision therein. In pursuance of the mandate in that case, the Circuit Court for the District of Louisiana made a further decree on the 23d day of March, 1875, containing amongst other things, the following directions, that is to say:

"2. It is further adjudged and decreed that the writ of injunction directed by the decree issue to the parties to the deed of the 5th February, 1866, executed to John T. Ludeling and his associates, and to all of the defendants in this cause, according to the directions of said mandate, and that they be required to cancel the said deed, and deliver the same as canceled to the master of this court hereinafter named.

3. It is ordered that F. A. Woolfley be appointed special master to receive the said deed as canceled; to take the proofs of the bonds bona fide issued, etc.; that he take an account of the property embraced in the mortgage described in the bill executed to John Ray or bearer, which was not sold or disposed of prior to 23d December, 1865, and render the account between the plaintiffs and defendants provided for in the decree aforesaid. He will give notice to the holders of bonds, etc. He will give notice to the defendants, or their solicitor, of his taking the account, and for all purposes of his duties under this order he may refer to the testimony on file in the cause, and shall also report upon the sale of the property and the best mode of effecting it, so as to promote the interest of all concerned under the decree. He is authorized to make special reports from time to time to the court, and to ask for instructions.

4. It is further ordered that John W. Greene be appointed receiver under the decree, to collect, receive and hold possession of all of the estate, property and effects described in the mortgage aforesaid, executed to John Ray or bearer, by the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company, not sold or disposed of prior to the 23d of December, 1865, and to hold the same subject to the orders of this court."

To understand the questions that are raised on the present appeal, it is necessary briefly to rehearse the history of the case:

The Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company, on the first day of September, 1857, by an authentic act of mortgage, did grant to John Ray a first mortgage lien and privilege upon its entire railroad from the Mississippi River, opposite Vicksburg, by way of Monroe and Shreveport, to the boundary line of Louisiana and Texas, a distance of one hundred and ninety miles, more or less, including right of way, lands, property and franchises of every description, with all its rolling stock, machinery and effects, including also a land-grant of over four hundred and twenty thousand acres, to secure the payment of a contemplated issue of two thousand bonds of $1,000 each. A considerable portion of these bonds were issued; but the disturbances arising from the late civil war resulted in the destruction of the company's property, and default in the payment of interest on the bonds. In the month of December, 1865, an order of seizure and sale was made by the Twelfth District Court of Louisiana, for the sale of the mortgaged premises, at the instance of one William R. Gordon, a holder of some of the bonds; and on the 3d day of February, 1866, the whole property was sold by the sheriff of the Parish of Ouachita to John T. Ludeling and others, for the sum of $50,000; and a regular act of sale was passed to them on the 10th day of February, 1866; and they thereupon took possession of the property, and commenced to reconstruct the same and put it in repair. A large number of the bondholders, however, on the first day of December, 1866, filed their original bill in this case, complaining that the said proceedings were irregular and fraudulent, and praying that the said sale might be set aside, and that the property might be again sold by virtue of the mortgage for the benefit of all the bona fide bondholders; and that the purchasers under the first sale might be decreed to account for all moneys received, or which they might have received, from the use of the property; and for an injunction and receiver. This bill was dismissed by the circuit court; but that decree was reversed by this court, and a decree made in favor of the complainants, establishing the mortgage, declaring the sale to Ludeling and his associates fraudulent and void and setting it aside, and ordering an injunction against them to refrain from setting up any title by reason thereof. The cause was thereupon remitted to the circuit court with instructions to direct an account to be taken of all the property of the corporation, to appoint a receiver thereof, and to order the same to be sold for the benefit of the bondholders. It was further ordered and decreed that the defendants should account for all money and property received by them out of the property, or from its profits or income, receiving in their account such credits as, under the circumstances of the case, by the law of Louisiana, they were entitled to, and that they should pay and deliver to the receiver whatever on such accounting might be found due from them. A mandate was issued corresponding to this decree; and in obedience thereto the decree of the circuit court was made, which is first above recited. In pursuance of this decree an accounting was had, in which the amounts received by the defendants from the earnings of the railroad were stated, and in which the defendants claimed large allowances for expenditures made by them in rebuilding and repairing the railroad and its appurtenances, and in providing it with rolling stock, machinery, etc. The plaintiffs resisted all claim for allowances to the defendants, beyond the necessary expenses of operating the road; and whether any, and what, allowances should be made to them is the principal question in the cause. The court below made such allowances, decreeing, amongst other things, as follows:

"Third. That the defendants have expended on said mortgaged property in the making of improvements and betterments thereon, which still remain upon said property ready to be turned over, the sum of four hundred and eighty-eight thousand one hundred and nine dollars and fifty-four cents ($488,109.54), on which they are entitled to interest from the date of said expenditures, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, until said mortgaged property was placed in the hands of a receiver by this court; that defendants have received from the earnings of said property, over and above all sums paid out for maintenance of said property and running expenses, the sum of one hundred and sixty-one thousand four hundred and seventy-six dollars and sixty-nine cents, for which they should account, with interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the receipt of said sum; that the interest on said sum expended and said sum received by the defendants should be computed for the same period of time, or, what is equivalent thereto, the said sum received should be deducted from the said sum expended and the interest computed on the remainder; that after making said deduction the remainder is three hundred and twenty-six thousand six hundred and thirty-two dollars and eighty-five cents ($326,632.85), which, with interest added from the time when interest should be computed, up to April 13, 1875, when the receiver of this court took possession of said property, amounts to three hundred and ninety-one thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine dollars and forty-two cents ($391,959.42), for which sum defendants are entitled to compensation out of said property, to be raised in the manner hereinafter set forth.

Fourth. That article 508 of the Revised Code of Louisiana, which authorizes the owner of property to require the removal or demolition of the improvements made in his land by a third person, or to keep them at the value of the materials and cost of the workmanship, is not applicable to this case, because the plaintiffs are mortgagees and not owners, and because the removal of many of said improvements is impossible; and because said improvements cannot be demolished without destroying the property of which they form a part; and, therefore, the claim to said election made by plaintiffs under said article of the Code is disallowed.

Fifth. That all of said mortgaged property, including the improvements placed thereon by the defendants, shall be set up at the price of $833,098.38, the actual value thereof, as shown in the report of the experts; and that if this sum or a greater amount be obtained at the sale, the defendants shall be entitled to the sum of $391,959.40, fixed as the value of their improvements and interest thereon, as settled in the third paragraph of this decree; and if the said sum of $833,098.38 cannot be obtained, then they shall have in the same proportion of the sum actually obtained as that sum bears to the upset price aforesaid if any less amount shall be obtained.

Sixth. That the holders of a majority of the bonds and coupons shall be at liberty to agree upon a committee to purchase the property for their account upon articles and terms of associations, and with concessions to any bondholder to become a party thereto at or within fifteen days from the day of sale. Should the purchase be made, the purchasers shall not be required to make a payment beyond the costs, charges, expenses of the sale and the amount of the judgment in favor of the defendants hereinbefore stated, with five per cent. interest to the day of sale, which shall be a privilege upon the proceeds of sale; and the said purchasers shall be entitled to credit their bonds with the sums that may be due from the purchasers on them as a part of the payment."

From this decree both parties have appealed; the complainants insisting:

1. That no allowance at all should have been made to the defendants for ameliorations and improvements.

2. That the allowances made are too great.

3. That interest should not have been allowed.

The defendants, on the other hand, insist:

1. That the allowances made are insufficient in amount.

2. That no allowance is made for improvements worn out in the service of the railroad.

3. That an insufficient amount of interest is allowed.

4. That no allowance is made for salaries and contingent expenses, taxes, etc.

5. That it does not enforce the right of the defendants to retain possession until their claim for improvements is paid.

6. That the account of earnings is incorrectly stated.

Other errors are assigned, but they are either included in those stated, or are not of sufficient importance to require serious consideration.

Assuming that the determinations of this court in its former decree are not open to further question, and that the defendants acquired possession of the property by a proceeding which was founded in fraud, still it cannot be doubted that they supposed themselves to be the legal owners of the property by virtue of the judicial sale, and made the repairs and improvements in controversy under that idea. But as the vice of their title consisted in their own inequitable acts and proceedings, we think that they are to be regarded, in the language of the civil law, as possessors in bad faith. The common law allows nothing to the possessor in good or bad faith for expenditures made upon land from which he is evicted by superior title; but equity, in cases within its jurisdiction, allows the possessor in good faith both for repairs and improvements; but where the possessor (being a trustee) has been guilty of actual fraud, it makes him no allowance for improvements, but allows him compensation for necessary repairs. Lewin, Tr., 466. The present case, however, is to be governed by the law of Louisiana, which is based upon the civil law, not precisely as laid down in the compilations of Justinian, but as interpreted in the jurisprudence of France and Spain, and has some peculiar rules on this subject. When Louisiana was acquired by the United States in 1803, it had been a Colony of Spain for more than thirty years, except in the formal transfer to France at the time of our purchase; and the Spanish law was the common law of the Territory until modified by subsequent legislation. In 1808, the first Civil Code was adopted, based partly on the Spanish Partidas and partly on the projet of the Code Napoleon, the completed Code not having yet been received. In 1825, the Civil Code was revised, and was made to conform more closely to the French Code, often copying its phraseology. The provisions of the Code which have the nearest application to the present case are the same both in the Code of 1808 and 1825, and are very nearly an exact copy of the corresponding provisions of the Code Napoleon, whilst they also correspond, substantially, with the Spanish law. They are as follows:

"Art. 508. When plantations, constructions and works have been made by a third person, and with such person's own materials, the owner of the soil has a right to keep them, or to compel this person to take away or demolish the same.

If the owner requires the demolition of such works, they shall be demolished at the expense of the person who erected them, without any compensation; such person may even be sentenced to pay damages, if the case require it, for the prejudice which the owner of the soil may have sustained.

If the owner keeps the works, he owes to the owner of the materials nothing but the re-imbursement of their value and of the price of workmanship, without any regard to the greater or less value which the soil may have acquired thereby.

Nevertheless, if the plantations, edifices or works have been done by a third person evicted, but not sentenced to make restitution of the fruits, because such person possessed bona fide, the owner shall not have a right to demand the demolition of the works, plantations or edifices, but he shall have his choice either to re-imburse the value of the materials and the price of workmanship, or to re-imburse a sum equal to the enhanced value of the soil."

"Art. 2314. He to whom property is restored must refund to the person who possessed it, even in bad faith, all he had necessarily expended for the preservation of the property."

These articles are substantially equivalent to articles 555 and 1381 of the Code Napoleon. They are also nearly equivalent to the laws of the Partidas. The latter divide ameliorations into three kinds, necessary, useful and voluntary. Necessary: such as preserve the property and prevent it from going to ruin, as repairs to a house, causeways to prevent inundations, etc.; Useful: such as augment the value of the property and its rents, as the planting of trees or vines, the erection of a furnace, wine-press, barn or stable. Voluntary: such as are made for ornament or pleasure. The Partidas declare, that if the possessor in bad faith makes necessary repairs, or does other things by which the estate is benefited, he may recover the expense thereof, less the amount of rents received, and will not be obliged to deliver the property to the owner until such compensation is made. But if he construct an edifice, or plant seed, he can only deduct the expense from the fruits for which he is made accountable; or if he has defrayed expenses for works of profit and utility, and the owner is unwilling to re-imburse him, he may carry away the additional works which he has erected. Partida, III., title 28, laws 42, 44; Esriche, titles, Mejores and Poseedor de mala fe.

See 9 OTTO.

From these laws it seems clear that for necessary repairs the possessor, even in bad faith, is entitled to full indemnity; and for useful improvements, he will also be entitled to full indemnity to the value of the materials and price of workmanship, if the owner elects to retain them; or the right to demolish them and remove the materials, if the owner shall elect not to retain them. The general principle upon which this law is founded is, that no one should be made richer at the expense of another, even though the latter has acted in bad faith.

The question, then, arises, how the laws which we have quoted are to be applied in a case like the present; the case of a railroad which was in a state of ruin and dilapidation, and which the purchasers have repaired and put in working order. Are they to be indemnified in any way or to any extent, for the expense which they have been at, or are they to lose it all?

We have no great difficulty in considering the parties as holding the relation of rightful owners on one side, and ejected possessors on the other. Both claim under the same title—the mortgage—and the question between them was, whether the derivative title of the defendants was a valid one or not. The complainants, if not the owners, represent the owners, namely: the railroad company, which is conceded to be utterly insolvent and practically out of existence. So far as the parties are concerned, therefore, the laws above quoted may be regarded as applicable to them.

But, in regard to the subject matter, it seems almost impossible to apply them literally. It is not like the case of lands, either in the country or the town. These may be recovered and enjoyed by the owner, though the improvements erected thereon be demolished. But a railroad is not land; it is a peculiar species of property, of a compound character, consisting of roadway, embankment, superstructure and equipment. These constitute the corpus of the property. There is no room to exercise the election which the law gives to the owner, of keeping the ameliorations, or requiring the ejected possessor to demolish them. The demolition of the ameliorations would be the demolition of the thing itself. If any room for election does exist, it is virtually made in bringing the suit to recover the property. To carry out the spirit of the law, therefore, since we cannot carry out its letter, the other alternative, of allowing the defendants compensation for their ameliorations, seems to be the only course that is left. Its propriety in this case is corroborated by the fact that the property in its improved state has been taken possession of by a receiver at the instance of the complainants, and has been used for their benefit for now nearly four years past.

In addition to these considerations, it is very questionable whether a large portion of what are called ameliorations in this case are not rather to be regarded as repairs. The railroad has been rescued from destruction and repaired by the defendants. These repairs were necessary in order to restore the property to its condition and quality as a railroad; the thing which the mortgage contemplated, and which the complainants seek to possess under and by virtue of the mortgage. So far as the improvements may be regarded as necessary repairs, there is no question that the defendants would be entitled to compensation for their expenses in making the same. But as it is impossible to distinguish what might properly be called, repairs, from ameliorations, we think that the rule laid down in the law for the case where the owner elects to keep the constructions and works erected by the unlawful possessor may be equitably applied. This rule is that the latter shall be reimbursed the value of his materials and the price of the workmanship. This was the rule adopted by the circuit court, and we think that its decision in this respect was correct, except that, in an equitable application of the rule, the allowance made to the defendants should not exceed the value of the improvements. For this amount, therefore, with interest, less the fruits received, the defendants should have remuneration.

After a careful examination of the authorities bearing upon the case, we find nothing which, properly considered, derogates from this view of the case. The class of cases which comes nearest to the present is that of lands which have been cleared up, and brought to a state of cultivation by embankments and ditches; though even here, there is a point of difference which it is material to notice, namely: that such clearings and reclamations of new land involve a change in its character, which was not produced by the rehabilitation of the railroad. The repairs made on the latter had the effect to restore the property to its first estate and use; and the expenditures for that purpose are such as the true owner must necessarily have made, in order to have the property in the only form which its nature and uses admit of, and which the mortgage contemplated.

A leading case in Louisiana relating to clearing and reclaiming land is Pearce v. Frantum, decided in 1840, and reported in 16 La., 414. In that case, the defendant had settled on the land, supposing it to belong to the United States, and that he had a right of preemption to it; but it turned out to be an Indian claim under which the plaintiff's title was derived. Whether the defendant was a possessor in good or bad faith the court do not seem to have decided, and do not appear to have regarded it as material. The defendant cleared about 150 acres of the land, and put up a very ordinary dwelling on it, and some cabins. The clearing was the principal improvement; and with regard to the defendant's claim to compensation therefor, the court said: "The right of the defendant to be paid for the improvements by which the value of the premises was enhanced depends upon other provisions of law. It rests upon the broad principle of equity, that no man ought to enrich himself at the expense of another. If instead of recovering four hundred arpents of waste land, covered with heavy timber, the plaintiffs succeeded in establishing their title to that quantity, of which one hundred and fifty is ready for the plough, together with the convenience of a dwelling and a gin, the result of the industry of his adversary, he cannot justly resist the latter's claim for remuneration. If the party evicted be entitled to be paid for edifices erected on the premises, of which the successful party has taken possession, no plausible reason can be perceived why he should lose the lasting conquest his industry has achieved over the forest."

On a reargument of the case, the court, in support of the same views, further said: "The character of Frantum's possession, his liability to restore fruits upon eviction, and his right to be paid for useful improvements, are to be determined by the provisions of the Code of 1808, and the Spanish law then in force. Admitting that the provisions of the Code itself left it doubtful whether Frantum was or was not a possessor in bad faith, in that sense which would deprive him of a right to claim for improvements, yet, the 44th law, 28th title, of the 3d Partida, appears fully to sustain the court in the position first assumed; to wit: that 'in respect to the right to be reimbursed for useful expenses, by which the property has been made more valuable to the owner, the Code makes little or no distinction between the possessor in good or bad faith.' The words of that law of the Partida are: 'Men may incur expenses on account of other persons' houses or lands, not by erecting new works there, but by making necessary repairs, or doing other things there by which the estate is benefited. In that case, we say that if such expenses were necessary, they who made them may and ought to recover them back, while in possession of the estate upon which they expended them, whether they hold in good or in bad faith; and, though the owner may evict them by a judgment of the court, they will not be obliged to deliver him the house or estate until he shall have paid the expenses incurred on account of the same.'"

The court also cites Merlin, as follows: "Merlin, after treating this subject ex professo, and in a manner as usual with that author, which leaves little to be said on either side, and after discussing the opinions of Cujas, Favre, and other distinguished doctors, opinions not always in harmony with each other, sums up his conclusions in the following manner. * * * We may, therefore, lay it down as a settled rule, that the proprietor who sues for an immovable (un fonds) never ought to enrich himself at the expense of the possessor, whether in good or in bad faith, no matter in what manner the maxim ought to be applied." Repertoire de Jurisprudence, verbo, Amelioration, 16 La., 431.

Quite a number of cases, which it is not necessary to quote, followed the general reasoning of this case. In Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann., 347, decided in 1847, the court allowed a party compensation for improvements of the same kind as those in Pearce v. Frantum, made after judicial demand, and after judgment of eviction; holding that they were necessary improvements, and that the rule of compensation should extend to such, though not to improvements merely useful. The court say: "But there can be no doubt that the party evicted is entitled to be paid for necessary improvements. The improvements in this case were clearings, levees and ditches, without which the land could not have been brought into cultivation, so as to yield the rents and profits which the plaintiff now claims."

If the Supreme Court of Louisiana was correct in this case in holding that the ameliorations made by the defendants were necessary improvements, taking into view the fact that the character of the property was changed thereby from its original condition, then, much more in the present case ought the improvements effected by the defendants to be regarded as necessary, resulting as they did in the restoration of the property to its original and normal state. It is for the use by the defendants of these very improvements that the complainants are seeking, in this suit, for an account of fruits and profits of the estate.

There is a series of cases, however, in which it is held by the Supreme Court of Louisiana that a person without title, going into possession of the public lands of the United States, cannot set up a claim for improvements against the government or its grantees. This was decided in Jenkins v. Gibson, 3 La. Ann., 203; in Hollon v. Sapp, 4 La. Ann., 519; and in Jones v. Wheelis, 4 La. Ann., 541. In Hollon v. Sapp, the court say expressly: "We are of opinion that this article of the Code is not applicable to materials used and labor expended in making settlements upon the national domain. No right can be acquired in relation to the public lands except under authority of Congress."

The case of Gibson v. Hutchins, 12 La. Ann., 545, is much relied on by the complainants, and in its general reasoning does undoubtedly overrule the doctrine of Pearce v. Frantum, though, as in Jenkins v. Gibson, Hollon v. Sapp, and Jones v. Wheelis, the title of the land was in the government when the improvements were made. The court say: "The mere possessor is presumed to have made such changes for his own amelioration, and to have received a sufficient reward in the immediate benefit which he reaps from the enhanced production of the soil. Perhaps the true owner would have preferred that the primitive forest should remain. Perhaps the ditching will not suit the purposes for which he wishes to use the land." It is evident from the reasons here given that the court regarded the change of the condition and character of the land as a material circumstance, and the suggestion is not without force, that the owner might have preferred that the original timber of the forest should not have been destroyed. The present case, as already intimated, is distinguishable from Gibson v. Hutchins, and others of like character, in that the character of the property is not changed by the improvements, but the property is restored to its original condition, purpose and use, and to the only condition and use which it is susceptible of, and which makes it what it is, a railroad. It is this aspect of the present case which gives to a large portion of the improvements made, the character of necessary repairs.

But the fact that the title to the land in the case of Gibson v. Hutchins was in the government when the improvements were made is sufficient, of itself, to place it in a different category from the present. The court, indeed, say: "He (the defendant) had no claim against the United States for improvements. He was rather indebted to the United States for the privilege of living so long undisturbed upon the public land. And the United States ceded its rights to the plaintiff's authors. They took it free from any legal demand against either the government or themselves for improvements." 12 La. Ann., 547. Reference is then made by the court to Pearce v. Frantum, and other cases, as being overruled. But one of the grounds for overruling them is stated to be that they sustained a claim for improvements against the United States. "The overruled cases," said the court, "conceded to a settler upon the United States lands, who possessed with the hope of securing a preemption, the right of retaining the land against a vendee or patentee of the United States Government until such patentee should reimburse the settler the increased value of the property as resulting from improvements and expenses upon it during the settlement." It is true, the court adds: "We said in Hemkin v. Overly (a case which seems not to have been reported) that 'We are unable to recognize the doctrine that one who makes improvements upon property to which he knows he has no title has any legal or equitable claim to reimbursement for such improvements.'" But with the feature referred to, namely: the right of the government, present in the case of Gibson v. Hutchins, to which so much importance is given, it is impossible to regard it as a decisive authority on the general question of a possessor's right to compensation for improvements which are inseparable from the land.

See 9 OTTO.

It must be conceded, however, that in several subsequent cases the Supreme Court of Louisiana has used expressions indicating an intention to adhere to the general views enunciated in Gibson v. Hutchins, and to hold that for improvements of the kind referred to the only compensation which the maker of such improvements can claim is the benefits which he has enjoyed from the use of them. Thus, in Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann., 91, the defendant having been adjudged a possessor in bad faith, the court held that he was entitled to no other claim for improvements than those stated in the first three sections of the article of the Civil Code before recited. Art. 508. The improvements consisted of a clearing of two hundred and thirty acres of land, and of certain erections on the land, costing $5,250. The clearing was set off in compensation of the fruits and cord-wood derived from the land cleared, which, the court said, would more than compensate for the clearing made. As to the erections, the plaintiff was decreed to elect in thirty days whether he would keep them and pay for their cost, or not; if he so elected or made default, it was decreed that he should pay for them; on his refusal to retain them, the defendant was allowed to remove them in a reasonable time.

But in the case of Stanbrough v. Wilson, 13 La. Ann., 494, decided a year later than Gibson v. Hutchins, the defendant, who had purchased land at a probate sale, which was declared void and which would probably place him in the category of a possessor in bad faith, was allowed compensation for his improvements, including over $4,000 for clearing the land, and judgment was given in his favor for a balance exceeding $5,000, over the rent of the property.

And in the case of D'Armand v. Pullin, 16 La. Ann., 243, where the defendant had erected various improvements on land to which he had no just title, the court held that, under the Code, the plaintiff had the right either to keep them or to cause their removal or demolition; but also held, that by executing a lease to the defendant for a few months, after having procured an adjudication of his title, he had elected to keep the improvements, and must pay the defendant their cost.

The case of Wilson v. Benjamin, 26 La. Ann., 587, was decided at the same Term with D'Armand v. Pullin (1861), and the judgment was affirmed on a rehearing in 1874. In that case, the plaintiff, who had been a possessor in bad faith, sued for the value of his improvements; and it was held that his expenses in clearing the land should be set off in compensation for his detention thereof; and judgment was given in his favor for the value of his other improvements, consisting of erections on the land; and the court refused to charge him any rent therefor, because they were his own property.

On the whole, we should infer the prevailing doctrine of the Supreme Court of Louisiana at present to be, that for inseparable improvements on land, such as clearings, etc., made by a possessor in bad faith, he cannot recover any compensation from the owner; though he will not be accountable for the fruits derived from such improvements.

But, as before suggested, we do not think that the decisions referred to govern the present case. It is so different in its circumstances from the cases in which those decisions were made, that any attempt to carry out the spirit of the Code will require that those circumstances should be taken into consideration.

The character of the property, a railroad, so different from that of land; the character of the ameliorations made to it, partaking so nearly of that of necessary repairs; the acts and demands of the parties in this suit, wherein the plaintiffs seek possession of the ameliorations in question, and thereby, in effect, elect to retain them, and seek to charge the defendants for all the fruits and profits thereof; the fact that, at the instance of the complainants, and for their benefit, the property, with all its ameliorations, has been taken out of the defendants' hands, and placed in the hands of a receiver; the fact that the plaintiffs, in getting possession of the property, cannot but come into the enjoyment of large expenditures which the defendants have made, and which, if they had not made, the plaintiffs, or the persons who may purchase the property, would have to make, and which they are now relieved from making; the fact, in other words, that the taking of the property in its present state would make the complainants so much richer as the improvements are worth—all these things combined present a case so peculiar that we do not see how it is possible for the complainants, under any fair interpretation of the Code, to avoid allowing the defendants the value of the improvements. On the contrary, we think that the Code, interpreted according to its spirit and meaning, requires that the complainants should take the property, or rather that it should be sold, subject to the lien of the defendants for the actual expense which they have incurred in creating and putting into repair the works as they now exist, but not to exceed the actual value thereof.

We have not thought it necessary to discuss or review the commentaries on the French Code cited by both parties, except in a single instance which will be presently stated. We have examined them sufficiently to ascertain that they give us no clear light on the precise question in this case. They are not contemporaneous even on the general question of inseparable improvements made to land. The references to the Roman law, even if otherwise applicable to the case, cannot be received against the positive laws of France and Spain, much less against the text of the Civil Code of Louisiana. It is this Code, and the proper meaning and effect to be given to its provisions, adopting its spirit where the letter is imperfect, that must decide the case before us. It is conceded by many French juriconsults that the Roman law of Justinian refuses any re-imbursement for improvements to a possessor in bad faith. But the French law has always been otherwise. See, Denisart, verbo, Ameliorations, Vol. I, p. 495, where this subject is discussed.

Cujas thought the rule for re-imbursement could be deduced from the general principle that no one ought to enrich himself by another's loss; and from the dispositions of the 38th law of the title De Petitione Hereditatis. Dig., lib. v. tit. iii. Pothier, expounding the old French law, says: "In our practice, it is left to the discretion of the judge to decide, according to the different circumstances, whether or not the owner ought to re-imburse the possessor in bad faith for useful expenses to the amount that the property recovered is benefited thereby." And then he distinguishes between possessors in bad faith whose acts partake of a criminal character; such as usurping an estate without any title during the long absence of the owner; and those who have taken a title which they knew was not valid, yet had some excuse for doing so; such as purchasing from a guardian, etc. The former class should receive the utmost rigor of the law; the latter should be treated with indulgence, and should receive compensation for their ameliorations to the amount they have benefited the property. Pothier, Traité du Droit de Propriété, sec. 350.

The Code Napoleon settled many uncertainties of the old law, and attempted to lay down a fixed rule; but, nevertheless, as we have seen, left the question of inseparable improvements somewhat at large.

Demolombe, one of the ablest commentators on this Code, in Vol. IX., sec. 639, has a very interesting article on this subject. He thinks that inseparable improvements are not provided for by 555th article of the Code; but that the question of compensation therefor is to be governed by general principles of equity, to be drawn from other sources. He instances the case of a possessor in bad faith who has drained a marsh, cleared lands, dug ditches for irrigation, or who has caused paintings to be made or paper to be placed on the walls of a mansion, or who has performed any other like work of intrinsic amelioration. And he asks: is article 555 applicable in such a case? After stating the argument on both sides of this question, he gives his own opinion in the negative. He says the article refers to works which the possessor may be compelled to remove; but such as those mentioned are not susceptible of removal; and the option given to the owner, either to keep them by payment, or to cause them to be removed, cannot be exercised. Besides, it would be a savage doctrine to hold that the possessor might in any case destroy such improvements, even though he should leave the property in its first estate. He, therefore, concludes that the specific case is unprovided for, and thinks that it is necessary to resort to analogies deduced from similar matters and to the general principles of the law; and that a solution of the case may be found in the quasi contract of agency. We find here, he says, two rules of equity, both equally certain:

First. That no one ought to enrich himself at the expense of another; a rule which the law applies in the very case of the relations between the owner and possessor, even in bad faith.

Second. That a third person cannot impose upon the owner of the soil, without his authority and against his will, expenses which he would not have made himself, and which exceed his means, and for the payment of which, if forced to it, he would have to sell an estate that he would prefer to keep.

In the combination and conciliation of these two rules, he thinks, we may find the solution of the difficulty.

He then quotes to his purpose a law of the Digest (law 38, De Rei Vindicatione, Book VI., tit. i.), which he characterizes as full of good sense, equity, wisdom and practical knowledge of affairs. It is a passage from Celsus, as follows: "On another's land which you have unwittingly bought, you have builded, or made repairs; then you are evicted; a good judge will decide according to the merits of the parties, and according to the circumstances. Suppose the owner would have done the same thing, then let him re-imburse the expense, as a condition of receiving his land; but only to the amount that it is benefited. If he is poor, and cannot pay without selling his home, you should be satisfied in being permitted to remove what you can of your improvements, leaving the estate in as good condition as if they had not been made. But it has been decided that if the owner can pay what the possessor can get for them, if removed, he should have that privilege. And let nothing be done in malice; as, by defacing plaster or pictures on the walls, which could do you no good, but only result in injury. If it is the owner's intention immediately to sell the property, you will not be condemned to give it up, until he has paid what we have said he ought to pay."

Considering the possessor in bad faith as a quasi agent in charge, and applying these principles, we must look, says Demolombe,

First. To the character of the possessor; as whether he has taken a title which he knew to be invalid, but which he hoped to have confirmed; or whether he was a mere interloper, without title, taking possession in the absence of the owner.

Second. To the character of the owner; as whether he would himself have been able and willing to make the improvements in question; whether they would be useful to him, considering his profession, habits, etc.; and whether it was his intention to keep the property, or to offer it for sale.

Third. To the nature of the improvements made; as whether they have added to the income and to the actual value and salableness of the property, etc., or only to its ornamentation, etc.; also, whether the improvements have or have not been excessive and unreasonable.

The consideration of these three elements, giving due weight to each, will enable the judge to decide whether any indemnity should be given; what it should be; and how it should be paid, whether at once or on time, whether in a capital sum or in the way of rent.

This is the substance of Demolombe's article. We can only say, that if it is a sound explication of the law of France and, therefore, of the law of Louisiana (which in this matter is exactly the same as that of France), it is in direct accord with the result to which we have been brought in this case, by the application of the principles which we suppose to be involved in article 508 of the Civil Code of Louisiana, interpreted according to its spirit and intent. If by the course of decisions in Louisiana it cannot be held to apply to the case of an ordinary immovable, it is at least applicable to such a case as that with which we are now dealing, considered in all its various circumstances.

The other points raised in the case do not present much difficulty. We shall proceed to consider those which we deem material.

First. The defendants complain that they were not allowed for the cost of those things which were consumed by them in the use, such as cross-ties, etc., which were worn out, and had to be replaced. The court below only allowed them compensation for those things which were in existence when the railroad was turned over to the receiver, in April 1875. This, it seems to us, is in strict accordance with the law. In ordinary cases of possessors in bad faith, the owner, according to article 508, has an election either to keep the constructions and works, or to require their removal. He certainly cannot keep, nor require the removal of, that which no longer exists. When he elects to keep them, as we suppose to be virtually the case here, he owes to the owner of the materials nothing but the re-imbursement of their value and of the price of workmanship. This evidently refers only to the materials which compose the things which are in existence at the time of making the election; and that time, in this case, must be deemed to be the time of the delivery of the property to the receiver, which was on the 13th of April, 1875. We think the court was right in deciding that it was the improvements then in existence, the value or cost of which was to be allowed to the defendants.

Second. The defendants complain that the full first cost of the improvements which were in existence was not credited to them in the decree; they contend that these improvements cost them at least forty per cent. more than their value at the time they were appraised by the experts, besides the sum of $49,005, which the experts deducted for deterioration.

The experts appraised these improvements in the fall of 1875, and estimated their then cash value at the sum of $347,361.29. It was sufficiently shown that their original cost was considerably more than this. The master, from the evidence before him, estimated and reported that the cost of materials and workmanship, was, on the whole, twenty-five per cent. more than their then value, the cost being much greater when the improvements were made than the same would be at the time of the appraisal, in consequence of the condition of the country after the war, the disturbance in labor, and the expansion of the currency. He, therefore, reported the cost at $434,201.61. But as the experts had deducted $49,005 for deterioration of iron rails whilst used by defendants, this sum added would make the whole first cost $483,206.61. The court, in its opinion, considers the allowance of twenty-five per cent. as excessive, because, whilst prices were higher when the improvements were made, so also the currency was depreciated; and the court was of opinion that fifteen per cent. additional was sufficient. This would make the first cost of the improvements equal to $399,465.48. But the decree allows the sum of $488,109.54, which is more than forty per cent. greater than the amount of the appraisalment. No explanation of this discrepancy has been made. It seems to be the result of some inadvertent error in making the computations.

But, in our judgment, there should be no allowance for increased cost. We have proceeded on the principle of carrying out the spirit and equity of the law, since it cannot be carried out in the letter. Now, the letter gives the owner the option of requiring the improvements to be removed. This option is a means in his hands of protecting himself if the original cost is greater than the improvements are worth. As he cannot actually exercise it in this case, it would violate the spirit of the law to allow the defendants a greater sum. We think, therefore, that the appraised value of $347,361.61 is all that can be allowed to the defendants.

Third. As to the question of interest. On this subject there does not seem to have been any distinct adjudication by the Supreme Court of Louisiana. In all the cases which we have examined, the rents, or fruits, have been deducted from the cost of the improvements, or vice versa, and judgment given for the balance, without any calculation of interest on either side, except where the possessor, in exoneration of the estate, has paid money which was a lien thereon. The question of interest does not seem to have been debated. But the French jurists, who have given special attention to this subject, agree that when the owner of the land compels the unlawful possessor to account for the fruits of his improvements, the latter is entitled to interest on their value, on the principle that it would be unjust to charge him for the fruits of his own improvements without allowing him interest on their cost, provided it does not exceed the amount of such fruits; not, indeed, as interest properly so called, but as an equivalent pro tanto to the fruits received, in the account to be rendered thereof. They all agree, however, in saying that interest cannot be allowed beyond the amount of such fruits, and that it cannot be brought into compensation with the fruits of the original property. Demolombe on the Code Napoleon, Vol. IX., art. 679; Aubry & Rau, Droit Civ. Fr., Vol. II. sec. 204 b, p. 232 and n.; Dalloz, Vol. XXXVIII., p. 273, tit. Propriété, art. 429.

In the present case, the fruits were, in fact, the results of the improvements made. The property, when taken possession of by the defendants, was a ruin. They reconstructed it, and made it capable of producing what it did produce. According to the French rule, therefore, the defendants were entitled to interest on their expenditures in making the improvements in question, provided it did not exceed the fruits and profits with which they were charged. It is conceded that interest should only be charged at the rate of five per cent. per annum. The master estimates four and a half years as the proper average time for allowing interest. In this we concur. The interest, therefore, on the whole first cost of the improvements, without deducting for deterioration, would be $108,721.48. This should be credited against the net earnings for which the defendants are held responsible, both being in the same currency. These net earnings were found to be $161,476.69; and deducting the said interest therefrom, the remainder is $52,755.21, which is to be deducted from the value of the improvements. Being so deducted, the balance is $294,606.08.

This sum, according to our view, was the amount due to the defendants at the time when they delivered the property to the receiver, and not the sum of $391,959.42, as stated in the decree of the circuit court; which should, therefore, be reversed, with directions to be corrected in respect to the amount, as now stated; which amount, with interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the time of delivering the property to the receiver, should be first paid to the defendants out of the proceeds of the sale of the property, before any payment made to the bondholders. But as it may be difficult for the bondholders, or other persons purchasing the property, to raise at once the whole amount due to the defendants, the court below should direct the property to be sold subject to the lien of the defendants for said amount with interest as aforesaid, and should allow a reasonable time to the purchaser, not exceeding nine months from the day of sale, to pay the same; with a condition annexed to said sale, that if the amount due the defendants be not paid within the time so limited, a resale of the property shall be made for the purpose of satisfying said amount due the defendants, with interest as aforesaid and expenses. The court should also direct that, subject to said lien, no bid be received for a less sum than will be sufficient as a fund to defray the costs, expenses and charges arising in the cause since the former decree of this court; which costs, expenses and charges, except the costs of the defendants for attorneys', counsel, and witness fees, should be paid from said fund. The amount of said fund should be fixed by the court, and should be paid to the special master making said sale before adjudicating the property as sold to any bidder.

In view of the dispositions thus to be made in the decree, the defendants will not be concerned or interested in the accounts and transactions of the receiver; but any net earnings of the railroad, or proceeds of property, which shall have come into his hands as such receiver, after paying his expenses and compensation, will go to the benefit of the bondholders; and any deficiency of moneys in his hands to pay said expenses and compensation should be paid out of the said fund required to be paid in cash as aforesaid.

As to the costs in the court below, incurred since the former decree of this court, the defendants should be decreed to pay their own attorneys', counsel, and witness fees; and the residue of the costs, expenses and charges in the cause should be paid out of the proceeds of said sale from the fund before specified in that behalf.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the remaining points which have been raised on decided that the judge who pronounced the sentence was not liable for false imprisonment because he acted as a judge, such decision does not present a federal question of which this court has jurisdiction.

[No. 826.]

Submitted Apr. 28, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

On motion to dismiss.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. B. F. Tracy, for defendant in error.

Mr. Wm. Henry Arnoux, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall., 163 [85 U. S., XXI., 872], we decided that the present plaintiff in error must be discharged from imprisonment, because the sentence under which he was held was not authorized by law. In the present case, the Court of Appeals of New York held that, even though such was the law; the defendant in error is not liable in damages for the false imprisonment, because in pronouncing the judgment under which the imprisonment was had he acted as a judge, in his judicial capacity, and not so entirely in excess of his jurisdiction as to make it the arbitrary and unlawful act of a private person. This is not a federal question, and it was the only question decided.

Dismissed.

TOWN OF WEYAUWEGA, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CHARLES H. AYLING.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 112-119.)

Town bonds—estoppel—delivery.

1. A town in Wisconsin issuing its bonds, is estopped as against a bona fide holder for value, to show that the true date of the bonds was different from that named in them.

2. The town is estopped from showing, in an action on the bonds, that the town clerk, who was in office at the date of the bonds, in fact signed the bonds after he went out of office.

3. It must be assumed that the bonds were delivered to the railroad company with the assent of the clerk and, therefore, that they were issued by the proper officers of the town. If the fact was otherwise, it was incumbent on the town to make the necessary proof.

[No. 241.]

Argued Apr. 22, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

The defendant in error brought suit in the court below, upon certain bonds. The Judges were divided in opinion upon certain questions, of which the first was: "Whether the said Town of Weyanwega was estopped from showing the true date upon which the bonds were in fact signed by the said C. A. Verke."

The case further appears in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Wm. P. Lynde and H. M. Finch, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Edwin H. Abbot and L. L. Dixon, for defendant in error.

470

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The first question certified in this case is answered in the affirmative. The legal voters of the Town, by a vote duly taken pursuant to statutory authority for that purpose, directed the issue of the negotiable bonds in controversy. As soon as this vote was given, it became the duty of the chairman of the Board of Supervisors and the clerk of the Town to cause the bonds to be made out and delivered to the railroad company. Such was the requirement of the statute under which the vote of the Town was taken. The designated officers had no discretion in the premises.

After the vote, an appropriate form of bond and coupons was lithographed and printed, with blanks in the bond for the signatures of the chairman and clerk. As printed, the bonds bore date June 1, 1871. At that time Fenelon was chairman and Verke clerk. The signatures of these officers were lithographed and printed on the coupons. Before the bonds were actually signed by Verke, he had resigned his office and moved out of the Town. Another clerk had been appointed and qualified in his place. Apparently to save the expense of a new lithograph and another printing of the bonds, Verke, after going out of office, affixed his signature to those which had been printed. These bonds so signed by Verke and by Fenelon, who actually was chairman at the time, were taken by Fenelon and delivered to the railroad company. This having been done, Ayling, the defendant in error, purchased the bonds to which the coupons sued on were attached, and paid their full value without notice of any claim of defense to their due execution. Under these circumstances, we think the Town is estopped from proving that Verke in fact signed the bonds after he went out of office. If Ayling had put himself on inquiry when he made his purchase he would have found: (1) that the Town had authority to vote the bonds, (2) that the necessary vote had been given; (3) that at the date of the bonds Verke was clerk and Fenelon chairman; (4) that their signatures were genuine; and (5) that the bonds had actually been delivered to the railroad company by Fenelon, who was at the time chairman. If a bank puts out a note for circulation bearing the signature of one who was, in fact, president of the bank when the note bore date, no one will pretend that it could be shown as a defense to the note when sued upon by a bona fide holder, that the signature of the person purporting to be president was affixed after he went out of office. So if one puts out a note purporting to be signed by himself, but which was in fact signed by another having at the time no authority from him, he cannot prove the forgery or want of authority in the signer as against a bona fide holder. The reason is obvious. The bank by issuing the note, and the individual by delivering the paper which purported to be his obligation, adopted what they thus put out as their own, and became bound accordingly.

The same principle applies in this case. There is no pretense that the obligation of these bonds is other or different from that authorized by the voters. So far as the record shows, the Town has received and retains the consideration for which they were voted. No bad faith is imputed to anyone. It is true the chairman alone made the actual delivery to the railroad company; but the presumption is, that what he did was assented to by the clerk in office at the time. Certainly it could not have been contemplated that, to make a binding obligation, both the chairman and clerk must have been present when the delivery to the railroad company was made; and as the presumption always is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that a public officer while acting in his official capacity is performing his duty, it must be assumed for all the purposes of this case that the bonds were delivered to the railroad company by the chairman with the assent of the clerk and, therefore, that they were issued as negotiable instruments by the proper officers of the Town. If the fact was otherwise, it was incumbent on the Town to make the necessary proof.

99 U. S.

It is unnecessary to answer any of the other questions certified, further than has already been done. The answer to the first question is decisive of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

Cited—101 U. S., 699.

GEORGE W. ATWOOD ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

FANNY E. WEEMS, as EXRX. of FRANCIS M.
WEEMS and in her own right, ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 183-188.)

Oath to jurors—devise of lands contracted—void sale for taxes—effect of offer to pay taxes.

*1. The right, under sec. 821 of the Revised Statutes, to require the panel of the jurors called to serve for a term to take the oath therein prescribed, or to be discharged from the panel, is limited to the district attorney, and is not a right of individual suitors in a case about to be tried.

2. A testator in whom was the legal title to real estate, which he had sold by a written contract, can transfer by his will, both the legal title of the land and the notes given for its purchase, and the devisee will stand towards the purchaser in the same position that the testator did.

3. The cases of Bennett v. Hunter, and Tracey v. Irwin, re-affirmed, holding that a sale for direct taxes under the Act of 1862 is void, where the owner or some one for him, offered to pay, was ready to pay before the sale, and was told payment would not be accepted; that such offer to pay, made to a clerk of the Board of Commissioners at their office, who was authorized by them to receive delinquent taxes generally, was sufficient.

[No. 236.]

Submitted Apr. 18, 1879. Decided May, 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida. The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. H. Bisbee, Jr., for plaintiffs in error.
Mr. James M. Baker, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of ejectment for a lot in St. Augustine, brought in the proper court of

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Direct taxes. See note to Scholey v. Rew, 90 U. S., XXIII., 99.

See 9 OTTO.

the State of Florida, and transferred into the Circuit Court of the United States for that district, where the plaintiffs below recovered a judgment against the plaintiffs in error, which we are called on to review. The questions to be decided are all raised by a bill of exceptions.

1. It appears "That the defendants moved the court that the jurors of the panel be required to answer upon oath whether or not they had given aid and comfort to, or aided and abetted, the late rebellion against the Government of the United States, within the true sense and meaning of section 820 of the Revised Statutes, for the purpose of exercising the right of challenging them, if they came within its provisions." The court denied the motion, on the ground that said section was unconstitutional.

We have just decided in Burt v. Panjaud, [ante, 451], from the same circuit, that a man cannot be compelled to answer this question when put to him separately in reference to the right of challenge for the disqualification prescribed by that section and that, to enable a party to avail himself of the right there given, he must prove by other evidence, if the proposed juror declines to give it, that he has been guilty of the offenses which so disqualify him.

But section 821 authorizes such an oath to be tendered to the whole panel, at the instance of the district attorney or his representative. This, however, must be at the beginning of the term, and relates to service on the panel for the term. The right to tender the oath is discretionary with the attorney for the government, and belongs to no one else.

It is not a right, therefore, in a party to a civil suit to tender such oath in that suit. Section 821 does not require the panel, or anyone on it, to take the oath or to take a general oath to answer questions touching his qualifications, but provides expressly for his declining to take the prescribed oath. This act of declining of itself disqualifies him as a member of the panel for that term. This right to decline to swear confirms what we have said in Burt v. Panjaud, namely: that it was not intended to compel the proposed juror to disclose on oath his own guilt. Since, therefore, the defendant had no right to challenge the entire panel, as the district attorney might have done at the beginning of the term, nor to require each member of it to testify as to his guilt or innocence of treason, and since he offered no evidence that any one of them was so disqualified, the court was right in overruling his motion.

The Judge's declaration of opinion that the law was unconstitutional did not make his action erroneous when it was right on other grounds.

2. The next question arises out of the construction of the will of Francis M. Weems, under which plaintiffs claimed title.

The will is in the record, and is dated September 25, 1865, and conveys a lot in St. Augustine, three notes due from J. H. Meyers for $500, each given for the purchase of a lot in St. Augustine, and all his other property, to his wife and three sons, who are the plaintiffs. A written agreement, made in 1860 by Francis M. Weems, for the sale of this lot to J. H. Meyers, is offered in evidence, with proof that Meyers had taken possession under it. The court was asked to instruct the jury that the will did not convey the title to the lot, but only the notes of Meyers; and that, if it was designed to convey the title, it was void, by reason of the adverse possession of defendants. The court refused to do this, and said that the failure to pay the notes gave to the testator, Weems, a right of entry which passed by the will.

It is clear that the contract with Meyers left the legal title in Weems. This legal title passed by the will as well as the notes; and though it may have been the desire of the testator to recognize the contract for the sale, it was necessary, to enable the devisees and the executor to enforce the collection of the notes, that the title should be in them also. They could then either tender a deed and demand payment, or assert their right of entry for failure of the purchaser to pay.

It is not necessary to decide here whether by the common law a testator having the legal title and right of entry of land in the adverse possession of another could make a valid devise of the title, or whether, if that be the common law, it was the law of Florida; for it appears both by the will itself and by other evidence in the record that the plaintiffs are heirs as well as devisees of Francis M. Weems, and if the will did not convey the title, it was theirs by inheritance.

3. Defendants produced in evidence a certificate of sale of this lot for taxes made by commissioners appointed under the Act of June 5, 1862, for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, to Adolph Mayer, and an assignment from Mayer to Anna M. Atwood, one of the defendants, and possession under that certificate. In avoidance of this certificate, plaintiffs introduced evidence tending to prove that the sale was not advertised as long as the law required, and also that before the sale plaintiff's intestate offered to pay the taxes and costs, which the commissioners refused to receive.

The evidence on this last point, which is without contradiction, is, that the commissioners had determined that no taxes could be lawfully paid, after the advertisement of the sale, by anyone else but the owner of the property; and that, under this view of the matter, the clerk of the Board of Commissioners, who had charge of the office at St. Augustine, twice peremptorily refused to receive the tax due from Weems on this lot.

One offer to pay was made by Amos Corbitt, who was in possession of the lot under J. H. Meyers, the purchaser from Weems, and the other by Christoval Bravo, an agent authorized by Weems to do so. To Corbitt, the clerk said he would take the money from no one but the owner, and he might as well talk of paying tax for Jeff. Davis.

In the case of Bennett v. Hunter, 9 Wall., 326 [76 U. S., XIX., 672], and Tacey v. Irwin, 18 Wall., 549 [85 U. S., XXI., 786], we decided this very question. In the former case, the tax was offered by a tenant of the owner and refused, and we held the sale void; and further, that said payment could be made by any friend or agent of the owner, whose act he recognized. The case of Tacey v. Irwin went further, and held that neither payment nor actual tender was indispensable, but that a refusal to receive the taxes rendered a manual tender unnecessary. If the party offered to pay, was ready to pay, and was told it would not be accepted, it defeated the sale as much as payment.

Some attempt is made to show that Dunham, the clerk, to whom Corbitt and Bravo applied, was not authorized to receive taxes, and that they could only have been lawfully paid or tendered to the commissioners in person at Fernandina.

But it appears, by the testimony of the commissioners themselves, that they had an office at St. Augustine as well as at Fernandina; that Dunham, their clerk at the former place, was authorized to receive, and did receive, the taxes which were payable there, and that all the money received for taxes at that place was paid to him. Of their right to authorize him to act for them in the receipt of taxes we have no doubt, and that his refusal to receive these taxes, which was under instructions from them, was the same as if they had done it in person.

The sale, therefore, was void. Payment of the taxes is one of the matters which, by the express terms of section 7 of the amendatory Act of 1862, may be shown to avoid the certificate; and in the cases cited we have held that an offer to pay, and refusal to receive, had the same effect. The error of the Judge concerning the length of the advertisement of the sale, which is not one of the matters that will avoid the certificate under that section, was immaterial, as it was clearly void, for the reason we have just stated.

We see no error in the judgment and it is, therefore, affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field, concurring:

I agree with my associates that the jurors summoned in this case could not be required to make oath whether they had participated in, or given aid and comfort to, the late rebellion against the Government of the United States. And I also agree with the court below as to the unconstitutionality of the Act which excludes from the jury persons who decline to take such oath.

Undoubtedly, Congress may prescribe the qualifications of jurors in the Federal Courts, and declare the causes of disqualification and challenge. But if any of these causes be the commission of an act which the law has made a public offense, it is not competent for the court to go into an investigation to determine the guilt or innocence of the juror. That is to be ascertained only in one way: by a separate trial of the party upon an indictment for the offense, and the only competent evidence in such case is the record of his conviction or acquittal. It would be a strange and unprecedented thing for a court, upon the challenge of a juror, to go into a side trial, whether he had committed a felony, such as highway robbery, arson or murder. No one would contend that such a procedure is admissible; and if not in those cases, it is not admissible in any case where the commission of a public offense is the ground of challenge.

The court may take judicial notice, from the existence of war, that a whole People are public enemies; but it cannot take judicial notice that a whole People, or individuals of it, have violated the municipal laws of the country. If such violation be relied upon to exclude a person from becoming a witness or a juror, it must be shown, not by evidence of what others may have seen or heard, but by the record of the party's conviction.

Cited—105 U. S., 321; 106 U. S., 200.

GEORGE A. KETCHUM, Plff. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE W. BUCKLEY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 188-191.)

Rebellion, effect of on law of the States—Military Governor.

1. During the late civil war the same general form of government and the same general law for the administration of justice and the protection of private rights which had existed in the States prior to the rebellion, remained during its continuance and afterwards.

2. The appointment by the President of a Military Governor for the State at the close of hostilities, did not, of itself, change the general laws then in force for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and did not remove from office those who were at the time charged by law with public duties in that behalf.

[No. 766.]

Submitted Apr. 23, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama.

On motion to dismiss, with which was united, under Rule 6, a motion to affirm.

Judgment was given in the Circuit Court of Mobile County, Ala., against the plaintiffs in error, upon the bond of McGuire as general administrator. The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State; whereupon they sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Thomas H. Price, for defendant in error.

Messrs. P. Phillips and E. S. Dargan, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We are not willing to hear an argument on the only possible federal question presented by this case. It is now settled law in this court that during the late civil war "The same general form of government, the same general law for the administration of justice and the protection of private rights, which had existed in the States prior to the rebellion, remained during its continuance and afterwards. As far as the Acts of the States did not impair or tend to impair the supremacy of the national authority, or the just rights of the citizens, under the Constitution, they are in general to be treated as valid and binding." Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S., 176 [XXIV., 716]; Horn v. Lockhart, 17 Wall., 570 [84 U. S., XXI., 657]; Sprott v. U. S., 20 Wall., 459 [87 U. S., XXII., 371]; Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 700 [74 U. S., XIX., 227]. The appointment by the President of a Military Governor for the State at the close of hostilities did not, of itself, change the general laws then in force for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and did not remove from office those who were at the time charged by law with public duties in that behalf. It is not alleged that the Governor after his appointment undertook by any positive act to remove McGuire from the position he occupied as general administrator, or that McGuire himself at any time ceased to perform the duties of his office by reason of what was done by the President or others towards the restoration of the State to its political rights under the Constitution of the United States. From all that appears in the record, he continued to act during the whole of his term as general administrator of the county, notwithstanding the changes that were going on in the other departments of the State Government. Under these circumstances, it is so clear that the judgment of the court below was right, that we grant the motion to affirm.

See 9 OTTO.

Affirmed.

THOMAS J. PHELPS, Assignee, Appt.,

v.

AUGUSTINE R. McDONALD ET AL.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 298-309.)

Sale of bankrupt's claim against foreign government—suits by assignee—powers of court of equity.

1. A claim against a foreign government, vaguely described in the schedule of a bankrupt's assets, and denominated worthless, does not pass on a general sale of his accounts, notes and judgments to a purchaser of the same for the benefit of the bankrupt with money furnished by him, where the price paid was a mere nominal sum, and the claim was largely valuable.

2. The provision of the Bankrupt Law, which requires that all suits by or against the assignee should be brought within two years from the time the cause of action accrued, relates to suits by or against the assignee with respect to parties other than the bankrupt; in a suit against the bankrupt it has no application.

3. A claim of a bankrupt against a foreign government passes to his assignee in bankruptcy.

4. Where the necessary parties are before a court of equity, it is immaterial that the res of the controversy, whether it be real or personal property, is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the tribunal; it has the power to compel the defendant to do all things necessary, according to the lex loci rei sitæ, which he could do voluntarily, to give full effect to the decree against him.

[No. 254.]

Argued Apr. 25, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

McDonald was adjudged a bankrupt, and his assets sold in the ordinary proceedings in bankruptcy in 1869. The claim here in question was sold for $20, and the purchaser transferred it back to McDonald. Subsequently McDonald, being a British subject, although long resident in this country, prosecuted said claim before the joint British and American Commissioner under the Treaty of May 8, 1871, and obtained an adjudication in his favor of $197,190. The appellant thereupon filed the bill in this case in the court below, to obtain the proceeds of said claim for the creditors of the bankrupt.

The case further appears in the opinion.

Messrs. F. P. Stanton, Jno. D. McPherson and Geo. F. Appleby, for appellant :

It is not necessary to the character of the claim that it should be one capable of enforcement by legal proceedings. A claim upon the justice of a foreign nation or of the Congress of the United States, passes by proceedings in bankruptcy.

Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Pet., 193; Clark v. Clark, 17 How., 315 (58 U. S., XV., 77); Milnor v. Metz, 16 Pet., 221; Sheppard v. Taylor, 5 Pet., 707; Prevall v. Bache, 14 Pet., 95.

The authorities above cited, which show that a claim against foreign powers, passed by bankrupt proceedings from the claimant to his assignee, conclusively show that the claim is the property of the injured person, and not of his government.

The learned Judge, in his opinion, objects that the bill does not charge a fraudulent motive as to the statement of this item in the schedule, but only "that it was calculated to mislead as to its value." We submit that this is virtually a charge of fraud. The circumstances which constitute the fraud are most distinctly stated, although they are not actually characterized and stigmatized by the potential word, fraudulent. This is sufficient, we think, and brings the case directly within the principle of the case of Clark v. Clark (supra), and sufficient to cause for that reason the overruling of any demurrer.

Adams, Eq., 336, in note.

Messrs. W. A. Cook and C. C. Cole, for appellees:

There was no concealment by Mr. McDonald of the condition or supposed value of the claim to bring the case within the principle of Clark v. Clark (supra).

At the time of the sale by the assignee and purchase by White of this claim, it was worthless, having only a possibility of a value.

The Supreme Court for the District of Columbia had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit. The fund was under the control of the British Government to be distributed. The decree of any court in this country could not operate upon that fund.

Treaty of 1871, art. XII.; Sto. Eq. Pl., sec. 489.

This fund should be considered as situated in England, and the assignment in bankruptcy did not pass the title to the assignee.

Oakley v. Bennett, 11 How., 33; Law. Wheat. 2d ed., 162, 163; Perry v. Barry, 1 Cranch (C. C.), 204; Blane v. Drummond, 1 Brock., 62; Hunt v. Jackson, 5 Blatchf., 349.

The fund being in a foreign jurisdiction, the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia could have no jurisdiction, except on the ground of fraud, trust or contract, and neither is alleged in the bill.

Blake's Case, 1 Cox, 398; Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves., 444; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal in equity from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The case was decided in that court upon a demurrer to the bill and amended bill of the complainant. The demurrer was sustained and the bills were dismissed. The complainant is the appellant, and the action of the court below is brought before us for review.

The demurrer admits the facts alleged. The question is only as to their sufficiency to entitle the appellant to the relief which he seeks.

Without reproducing the case in detail as it is in the record, we shall address ourselves to the salient points which it presents for our consideration.

A chose in an action lies at the foundation of the controversy. It is thus described by McDonald in the schedule of his assets filed with his petition in bankruptcy: "Claim against Gen. Osborne, of U. S. Army, and others, for burning, in January or February, 1865, from 1,000 to 2,000 bales of my cotton in Arkansas and Louisiana."

The late Bankrupt Law provided that as soon as an assignee was appointed, the judge or register should convey to him "All the estate, real and personal, of the bankrupt." R. S., sec. 5044. And that there should vest in the assignee, among other things, all the bankrupt's "Rights of action for property, real or personal, and for any cause of action which he had against any person arising from contract, or from the unlawful taking or detention or injury to" his property.

Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Pet., 195, has an important bearing upon this case. That case arose under the Bankrupt Law of April 4, 1800. 2 Stat. at L., 19. The 5th and 6th sections authorized the commissioners to convey to the assignees "All the real and personal estate, of every nature and description, to which the said bankrupt may be entitled, either in law or equity, in any manner whatsoever."

Under this Act, Vasse was declared a bankrupt and received his certificate of discharge. He had been an underwriter, and as such received from those whom he had insured and indemnified assignments of their claims against France, Great Britain and Spain. In his return of his effects to the commissioners, pursuant to the statute, he named the claims against France and England, but not the claim against Spain. The omission was supposed to have been honestly made, because there was then not the slightest spes recuperandi, with respect to that country. The claim was regarded as hopelessly worthless.

More than twenty years later, under a Treaty between Spain and the United States, an award was made for its payment. There as here, the money was demanded by the bankrupt and by his assignees, and the same lines of argument to which we have listened in this case were pursued by the counsel in that case with consummate learning and ability. The judgment of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Story. It sustained the demand in behalf of the creditors, and is exhaustive and conclusive.

It is needless for us in this case to go over the same field of discussion. A few remarks, however, grounded chiefly upon that authority will not be out of place. It will be observed that the claim against Spain, and the claim against the United States, here in question, rested upon the same foundation, and that each was surrounded by like circumstances.

There is no element of a donation in the payment ultimately made in such cases. Nations, no more than individuals, make gifts of money to foreign strangers. Nor is it material that the claim cannot be enforced by a suit under municipal law which authorizes such a proceeding. In most instances the payment of the simplest debt of the sovereign depends wholly upon his will and pleasure. The theory of the rule is that the government is always ready and willing to pay promptly whatever is due to the creditor. It is but a short time since our government could be sued, and it can be done now only under the special circumstances defined by the statute. It is enough that the right exists when the transfer is made, no matter how remote or uncertain the time of payment. The latter does not affect the former. Nor has an adverse decision any final effect. If the demand be just, and recognized as valid by the law of nations, the claimant or his government, if the latter choose to do so, may still press it upon the attention of the alien government.

If the thing be assigned, the right to collect the proceeds adheres to it, and travels with it whithersoever the property may go. They are inseparable. Vested rights ad rem and in re—possibilities coupled with an interest and claims growing out of property—pass to the assignee. The right to indemnity for the unjust capture or destruction of property, whether the wrongdoer be a government or an individual, is clearly within this category. Erwin v. U. S., not yet reported, 97 U. S., 392 [XXIV., 1065]. The register's deed in this case bears date on the 12th of February, 1869. The title then became vested in the appellant. Thereupon he stood in the place of McDonald, and was clothed with all the rights which had belonged to the bankrupt before he became such. On the 25th of September, 1873, within less than five years after the assignment, an award was made by the mixed commission, sitting under the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, for the payment of $187,190 in satisfaction of the claim.

In the light of these considerations, it would be sheer fatuity to deny the substantial character and value of the claim at the time of the transfer by the register's deed.

But it is insisted that the alleged sale under the order of the district court divested the title of the assignee.

According to the bill, the order was to sell "certain accounts, notes, judgments," etc. The exhibit referred to as containing "copies of the petition, order and report of the sale" is not in the record. Whether the order was broad enough to include the claim in question, and whether the report showed that it was sold, are questions which, in the state of the record as it is before us, we are unable to determine. Doubts in such cases are to be resolved against the pleader. But if the affirmative be conceded, as to both these points, a fatal objection still remains. McDonald went into voluntary bankruptcy. His petition did not disclose that he was a British subject. We have given the description of the claim in the schedule filed with his petition. It was brief and vague, and gave no definite information. In a duplicate schedule filed with the register he pronounced it "worthless." In assigning to him exempted property, the register and assignee unite in saying: "No other exemptions made, because there are no assets, except some old claims which upon their face called for large amounts, and upon inquiry I find them totally or entirely worthless." He failed to make known that he bought the cotton under a permit from the Treasury Department, accompanied with an order from the President directing the officers of the army and navy to aid him in getting it beyond the lines of the insurgent territory, and that it was lost to him by reason of a sudden and unexpected change in the legislation of Congress, thus creating as strong an equity in his favor against the United States as could well exist.

His memorial to the mixed commission was sworn to on the 25th of November, 1871. In that document his losses are stated with fullness and particularity. It is in striking contrast with the meagerness of the schedules. When there had been a transfer of the claim, the rules of the commission provided that "the mode and manner of such transfer must be stated." The memorial was silent upon this subject. This asset—soon to realize nearly $200,000—was sold for $20! The amended bill avers, and the demurrer admits, that "The said White at the sale of assets in the bill mentioned purchased the same at the request of said McDonald, and with money furnished by him."

Such is the case touching the point in hand, as it is presented by the demurrer of the appellees to the allegations of the complainant. Considering the sale in the light of this showing, we cannot hesitate to hold it invalid. We are not unmindful that the question may come again before the lower court and, perhaps, before this court, upon the answers of the appellees and the testimony adduced by the parties, and that it may then be the hinge of the controversy. It is our purpose in such case to leave both courts unfettered by anything in this opinion, and in all respects as free to decide, one way or the other, as if the subject had not been before considered by either tribunal.

The Bankrupt Law required that all suits by or against the assignee should be brought within two years from the time the cause of action accrued. R. S., p. 982, sec. 5057.

But this provision relates to suits by or against the assignee with respect to parties other than the bankrupt. In a case like this it has no application. If this were otherwise, the cause of action here did not accrue until the award was made and McDonald set up a claim to the fund awarded. Clark v. Clark, 17 How., 315 [58 U. S., XV., 77].

Lastly, it is said that the suit is in effect a suit against the British Government, and that hence the court below had no jurisdiction of the case.

In Clark v. Clark [supra], where the contest was between the bankrupt and his assignee, touching a fund in the treasury derived from a foreign government, the Secretary, though not a party, was enjoined from paying it over until the rights of the contestants were settled in the suit then pending.

In Milnor v. Metz, 16 Pet., 221, also, the fund in controversy was in the Treasury. The Secretary refused to recognize the claim of either party, and left them to adjust the conflict by a judicial determination. The contest was ended by a decree in the court below, which was affirmed by this court, perpetually enjoining one of the parties from receiving the money.

This objection assumes facts which have no existence. The British Government is in no-wise, either in form or substance, a party to the record, and no final or coercive judicial action is sought except with respect to McDonald and White. In the progress of the case below, George W. Riggs, Esq., was appointed receiver, with authority to collect the fund. Of course he could do nothing without the voluntary concurrence of the just and eminent British agent who was in possession. By consent of parties the fund was delivered to the receiver, and in the final decree brought here for review he was directed to pay it over to the appellees, less certain charges and expenses incurred in procuring the award, and he was thereupon to be discharged from his office. We have heard no objection from any quarter to the placing of the fund in the hands of the receiver. Certainly, none has been suggested in behalf of the sovereignty whose rights are said to have been invaded.

But suppose, as has been suggested, that the money were in the British exchequer, at the seat of the home government; still the court below acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the cause, and had an important duty to perform.

Such commissions as that which made the award here in question usually decide only as to the validity of the claim and the amount to be paid. It is rarely, if ever, within their jurisdiction to decide to whom the claim belongs, and hence is entitled to receive the money. They have no means of compelling the attendance of parties or witnesses, no rules of pleading or procedure applicable to such a case, and the foreign element in the tribunal, at least, cannot be supposed to have any knowledge of the law according to which the question is to be determined. The validity of the claim depends upon the law of nations; its ownership, upon the local jurisprudence where the transfer is alleged to have been made.

Hence, Comegys v. Vasse, Clark v. Clark [supra], and other like cases have arisen, involving conflicting claims to the fund awarded, and nothing else.

In this case, whether the money be here or abroad, the assignee is entitled to have the question finally settled whether he or McDonald has the better right. This court has twice decided that a British subject can sue the United States in the Court of Claims, because an American citizen is permitted to sue the British Government by a petition of right. The Act of Congress creating the court requires reciprocity. U. S. v. O'Keefe, 11 Wall., 178 [78 U. S., XX., 131]; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall., 147 [83 U. S., XXI., 426].

If the claim of the assignee were presented to the British Government by a petition of right, and the claim of McDonald were also presented, the parties, in the absence of any judicial determination, would, doubtless, be required to settle their controversy by interpleading, or in some other appropriate form of litigation. If the appellant shall be finally successful in this case, and the record should be presented with his petition, no such question could arise, and judgment in his favor must necessarily follow. Conceding the fund to be there, why should not this question of paramount right be settled in this case, rather than that the American claimant should be subjected to the delay, expense and other inconveniences of a suit before a foreign tribunal? The adjudication would be as binding in one case as in the other.

Where the necessary parties are before a court of equity, it is immaterial that the res of the controversy, whether it be real or personal property, is beyond its territorial jurisdiction. It has the power to compel the defendant to do all things necessary, according to the lex loci rei sitæ, which he could do voluntarily, to give full effect to the decree against him.

Without regard to the situation of the subject-matter, such courts consider the equities between the parties, and decree in personam, according to those equities, and enforce obedience to their decrees by process in personam. 2 Story, Eq., sec. 899; Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall., 249 [69 U. S., XVII., 830]; Penn v. Ld. Baltimore, 1 Ves., Sr., 444; Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige, 606.

The decree of the court below is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to proceed in conformity to this opinion.

Mr. Justice Miller, dissenting:

The Treaty under which the award was made, which is the subject-matter of this suit, provides for the payment to Great Britain of claims for injury to British subjects, and the award in this case in express terms orders the money to be paid to the agent of that government in this country. The case of Comegys v. Vasse and Clark v. Clark, cited in the opinion, are cases of awards made in favor of the United States for the use of her citizens.

While the money so awarded is properly a fund within the jurisdiction of our courts, as are also our own citizens, I do not think those courts have any control over the British Government or its agents in the distribution of the fund awarded to them.

It does not appear from anything in the record, as I read it, that the fund in controversy has ever been voluntarily paid into court by the agent of that government. It is an indelicate attempt by the courts of this country to seize in transitu, for its own citizens, what by Treaty this government has agreed to pay to another government for its subject.

I, therefore, dissent from the judgment of the court, and my brother Field concurs with me in the matter.

Cited—109 U. S., 663; 29 Hun, 284; 96 Ill., 31.

JAMES W. DENVER ET AL., Appts.,
v.

ARCHIBALD ROANE, Exr. of JAMES
HUGHES, Deceased.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 355-361.)

Duty of partners—compensation for settling business—violation of agreement.

1. Every partner is under obligation to exercise due diligence and skill, and to devote his services and labors for the promotion of the common benefit of the concern, without any rewards or compensation, unless there be an express stipulation for compensation.

2. Where there is no stipulation in the partnership agreement, for compensation to a surviving partner for settling up the partnership business, he is entitled to no compensation.

3. He who acts so as to treat the articles of co-partnership as a nullity as it regards his own obligations, cannot complain if they are so treated for all purposes.

[No. 240.]

Argued Apr. 22, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. Albert Pike, R. W. Johnson, Luther H. Pike and J. W. Denver, for appellants.

Messrs. S. S. Henkle, J. H. Bradley, and Archibald Roane, in person, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill filed in this case was not an ordinary bill for the settlement of partnership accounts. James Hughes, the complainant's testator, and James W. Denver and Charles F. Peck were in partnership as attorneys and counselors at law from 1866 until the 18th of March, 1869. On that day it was agreed between them, virtually, that the general partnership should terminate; that thereafter no new business should be received in partnership, and that any coming to the firm through the mails should be equitably divided. The agreement, however, contained a stipulation that the business of the firm theretofore received and then in hand should be closed up as rapidly as possible by the members of the firm "as partners under their original terms of association and in the firm name."

Soon after, on the 13th of August, 1869, a further agreement was made to the effect that in case of the death of any one of the partners, his heirs or personal representatives, or their duly authorized agent, should receive one third of the fees in cases nearly finished, and twenty-five per cent. in other partnership cases. Denver acceded to this second agreement, with the understanding that before any such division should be made, at any time, all partnership obligations should be first satisfied, proposing no new terms, only stating the legal effect. We think this was a closed contract.

It is upon these two agreements the bill is founded. Mr. Hughes died on the 21st of October, 1873, and Roane, the executor of his will, has brought the present suit for a discovery, and to recover from the surviving partners the share of the testator in the fees received by them out of the partnership business which remained unfinished when the general partnership was dissolved. A decree having been entered against the defendants in the court below, they have appealed to this court, and have assigned numerous errors. Of most of them it will be necessary to say but little and, indeed, in regard to most of them there has been hardly any controversy between the parties during the argument.

It is first insisted by the appellants that the court below had no competency or jurisdiction to entertain a bill for such relief as is prayed for, nor to give such a decree as the court gave, whereby it attempts to settle and close the affairs of a partnership by decreeing specific sums as legally due, and if so demandable at law, and providing for the further continuance of the partnership and collection by virtue of its decree of other like sums until the business of the partnership may end. Such is the first assignment of error. The objection misapprehends the nature of the case made by the bill, overlooks the facts, and does not state accurately the decree. That a bill in equity may be maintained by the personal representatives of a deceased partner against the survivors to compel an account, so far as an account is possible, and for a discovery of the partnership property which came to their hands, is undeniable, and such was the object of the present bill. When the firm was dissolved in March, 1869, for general purposes, the agreement of dissolution stipulated that, as to the business then in hand, the members of the firm should continue partners, and should close it up. What that business was, the present defendants only could know, after the death of Hughes, for it was then left in their hands, and they only could know what fees had been received on account of it. A bill for discovery, as well as for distribution of the fees received, was, therefore, plainly within the province of a court of equity. And as the partners had agreed, as they did by the agreement of August, 1869, to divide those fees in certain proportions, it was quite competent for the court to enforce fulfillment of the contract, so far as was possible when the decree was made. The court did not attempt to make a complete settlement of the affairs of the partnership. In the nature of the case that was impossible. Some of the partnership business remained unfinished, and fees uncertain in amount were yet to be collected. But so far as fees had been collected, the right to immediate distribution was complete. The agreement did not contemplate that all the fees collected might be held by the surviving partners until all the partnership business should be brought to an end, and it was, therefore, quite proper to reserve consideration of the fees yet to be received after they shall have been earned.

An objection raised by several other assignments of error (particularly the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 18th and 19th) is, in substance, that the court erred in applying to a partnership between lawyers and claim agents the principles of the law of commercial partnerships, in regard to the modes of settlement of the same after the death of a partner, and in regard to the neglect of the business of such a firm by a partner; that, by the decree, no compensation is allowed to the survivors for carrying on the unfinished business, but that they are required to continue it as well for themselves as for the benefit of the deceased partner's estate. We think these objections to the decree ought not to be sustained. We are not convinced that during his life Mr. Hughes (except, perhaps, in reference to a single case in charge of the firm) was guilty of such neglect, or violation of his duty to his partners, as should deprive him or his personal representative of a right to share in the profits of the partnership. In regard to the work done and the fees received after his death, the parties, by their agreements, prescribed the rule for determining their rights as against each other. Having jointly undertaken the business intrusted to the partnership, all the parties were under obligation to conduct it to the end. This duty they owed to the clients and to each other. And as to the unfinished business remaining with the firm on the 18th day of March, 1869, the duty continued. The agreement provided for that. Now, in reference to this duty the law is clear. "As there is an implied obligation on every partner to exercise due diligence and skill, and to devote his services and labors for the promotion of the common benefit of the concern, it follows that he must do it without any rewards or compensation, unless there be an express stipulation for compensation." Story, Part., secs. 182, 331; Caldwell v. Leiber, 7 Paige, 483. So it is held that where partnerships are equal, as was true in the present case, and there is no stipulation in the partnership agreement for compensation to a surviving partner for settling up the partnership business, he is entitled to no compensation. Brown v. McFarland, 41 Pa., 129; Beatty v. Wray, 19 Pa., 516; Johnson v. Hartshorne, 52 N. Y., 173. This is the rule in regard to what are commonly called commercial partnerships, and the authorities cited refer to those. There may possibly be some reason for applying a different rule to cases of winding up partnerships between lawyers and other professional men, where the profits of the firm are the result solely of professional skill and labor. No adjudicated cases, however, with which we are acquainted, recognize any such distinction. And in the present case, as we have said, the parties made arrangements for the work and results of work after the death of any of their number. The agreement of Aug. 13, 1869, provided that in case of the death of any partner, one third of the fees in cases nearly finished, and one quarter of the fees in other partnership cases, should belong to the representatives of the decedent. Of course, it was contemplated that the surviving partners should finish the work, and that no allowance should be made to them beyond the share of the fees specified in the agreement.

The most important objection to the decree which has been urged by the appellant is that it adjudged to the complainant one third of the fee collected by the defendants in the case of Gazaway B. Lamar against The United States, including the claim of D. A. Martin. That case was in charge of the firm before the agreement of March 18, 1869, was made, and was commenced in 1868. It was, therefore, one of the cases within the purview of the agreement of Aug. 13, 1869. Mr. Hughes' name appeared on the record as attorney and counsel with the appellants for the claimant. But on the 9th of January, 1873, he came into court and asked that his name be erased as such attorney, and that he have leave to withdraw his appearance and sever his connection with the cause. His motion was allowed, and his appearance was then withdrawn. The appellants, however, went on with the case. Briefs were filed for the claimant on the 21st of March and the 22d of April, 1873, the case was argued on the 20th of May, and on the 2d of June next following the court entered a judgment for the claimant. An appeal was then taken to this court, which was subsequently dismissed. After the withdrawal of his appearance and the severance of his connection with the cause, Mr. Hughes took no part in prosecuting the claim, neither in the Court of Claims nor in the Supreme Court, and he paid no attention to it. He quarreled with Lamar, and about the time he withdrew from the cause he denounced the claim privately to one of the Judges of the Court of Claims as altogether without merit and a fraudulent case, or words to that effect, and said that he had decided not to be involved in a case of so scandalous a character, and for so worthless or unworthy a client. In regard to the question of fees in the case, the Judge testifies, "He declined to have any interest in the case, or to take fees, because he believed the case was a corrupt one, and not likely to succeed, and that he would not lose much by his withdrawal from the case."

The question presented by this state of facts is, whether, inasmuch as the case was afterwards conducted by the appellants to final success, and they received a fee from Mr. Lamar, the claimant, Mr. Hughes would be entitled to any part of the fee, were he now living. If not, certainly his personal representative cannot be now. The recovery of the claim was undertaken by the firm without any agreement respecting fees. By undertaking it, the firm and each member of it assumed to conduct the case to a final conclusion, and with all fidelity to the client. Such was the contract of Mr. Hughes with Lamar, as completely as if he had been the sole attorney and counsel employed. And as the contract was entire, he could not have abandoned it after a partial performance, and still have held the other party bound. Much less could he have accompanied his abandonment by denouncing the honesty of the claim to one of the Judges of the court whose province it was to find the facts and adjudicate upon its merits, and yet claim compensation for services rendered. Such conduct on his part was not merely a renunciation of his engagement to the client; it was a flagrant breach of professional duty. It was not in his power to refuse performance of his part of the implied contract with Lamar, take action hostile to the claim, and still hold Lamar bound. Certainly he could not hold Lamar directly liable. And we do not perceive that, in equity, his situation is any better because he had contracted with the client jointly with his copartners.

If, then, by abandoning the case and denouncing it as fraudulent, he lost all the right which he had against Lamar, how can he claim from his copartners any of the compensation they obtained for conducting the case after his abandonment to final success? His action was a breach of his duty to those partners, as well as of his obligation to Lamar. By the agreement of copartnership he had undertaken to share in the labor, and to promote the common interests of the firm, and that was the foundation of his right to share in its earnings. It may be that mere neglect of his duty would not have extinguished that right, but a repudiation of his obligations, refusing to act as a partner, or to perform the functions of a partner, is quite a different thing. It may well be considered as a repudiation of the partnership. It was said in Wilson v. Johnstone, 16 Eq. Cas. Abr., 606: "He who acts so as to treat the articles as a nullity as it regards his own obligations, cannot complain if they are so treated for all purposes." It may, therefore, very justly be held that by his action Mr. Hughes became a stranger to the case, and repudiated any relation he had previously held to it as a partner in the firm. The partnership ceased as respects that claim. The other partners who continued to attend to the case could charge the client nothing for his services, for as the contract was contingent on success, nothing was due to any partner until success was attained. They certainly could claim nothing for services rendered by him after he severed his connection with the case, for he rendered none; and if he had any just claim on a quantum meruit for services rendered before, it was against Lamar, and not against his co-partners.

We think, therefore, the decree of the court below was erroneous, in so far as it allowed to the complainant any part of the fee collected from Lamar or from Martin, who owned a part of what was recovered in the Lamar suit.

We discover no other fault in the decree, but for this the case must be sent back for correction.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District is reversed and the record is remitted, with instructions to enter another decree in conformity with this opinion.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

JOSIAH WINCHESTER, Ext. of JOHN C. JENKINS, Deceased.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 372-377.)

Admiralty jurisdiction—confiscation—seizure—naval forces—prize money.

1. The admiralty jurisdiction of the District Court extends to seizures on navigable waters, not to seizures on land.

2. By the Abandoned and Captured Property Act, the provisions for confiscating property, in the Confiscation Act of 1862, are not repealed.

3. No previous seizure of the property, under an order of the Executive, was essential to give jurisdiction to the court to adjudge its forfeiture and decree its condemnation under the Confiscation Act.

4. Where the seizure was made by the naval forces, a decree by a court, which thus never had the property rightfully before it for condemnation, has no validity.

5. Where half the proceeds of cotton thus seized was distributed to the naval captors as prize money, the claimant is entitled to judgment for such amount illegally distributed.

[No. 1098.]

Submitted Apr. 17, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

The proceedings in the District Court of the District of Columbia, mentioned in the opinion were proceedings begun there in July, 1874, for the distribution of the "informers'" money among the officers and crew, of the Mississippi squadron. These proceedings were instituted by Admiral Porter, who placed in the custody of the court his check upon the assistant treasurer at St. Louis in favor of the assistant treasurer at Washington, for the amount of such money. The admiral had previously refused to accept the money for himself, as is related in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., Jos. K. McCammon and E. B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellant.

Messrs. Jos. S. Fowler and John Pool, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The claimant is the surviving executor of the will of John C. Jenkins, deceased, who died in 1855, leaving four minor children, surviving him, and possessed of a plantation in the State of Mississippi, on the Mississippi River, above Vicksburg. By directions in the will, the plantation was to be cultivated by the representatives of the estate for the benefit of the testator's children.
See 9 OTTO.

On the 18th of February, 1863, there was on this plantation, belonging to the estate and raised thereon according to the provisions of the will, a quantity of cotton, one hundred and sixty-eight bales of which were on that day seized by the naval forces of the United States, and taken on board of a government steamer. The cotton was then carried to Johnson's Landing, on the river, and thence to Milliken's Bend; where, with other cotton, making in all two hundred and fifty-eight bales, it was shipped on board of the transport Rowena, by order of Admiral Porter, who was in command of the naval forces on the Mississippi.

In March following, the admiral reported the capture of this cotton to the Secretary of the Navy, and was informed, in reply, that all property captured as "prize property" must be sent to a prize court for adjudication, and be disposed of as the court might decree; and that the disposition of captured "abandoned property" was provided for by an Act of Congress of March 12, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 820. The cotton was thereupon sent to Cairo, where it arrived on the 7th of April, 1863, and was delivered to Captain Pennock, commanding at the station, and was by him turned over to the United States Marshal of the District. Soon afterwards, upon information given by Captain Pennock, the United States District Attorney filed a libel in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois for the condemnation and sale of the cotton as forfeited to the United States. The libel stated that the seizure was made by order of Admiral Porter, on the Mississippi River, that river "Being a public water of the United States, navigable to the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden;" and that the seizure was made for violation of the Non-Intercourse Act of July 13, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 255, and the Proclamation of the President of August 16, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 1262; and because the property belonged to a person in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States; and that the case was within the admiralty jurisdiction of the court. The case then proceeded, in accordance with the forms of admiralty practice and entitled as in admiralty, to a decree condemning the property as forfeited to the United States. The decree was subsequently opened as to part of the property, and the libel was amended by striking out the first allegation as to the Non-Intercourse Act, which was inapplicable to the cotton belonging to the estate of Jenkins and seized on his plantation.

Pending the proceedings, the cotton was sold, and by the decree one half of the proceeds was paid into the Treasury, and the other half ordered to be paid to Captain Pennock, as informer, to whom a check for that amount was delivered. Captain Pennock handed the check to Admiral Porter, his superior officer. The admiral, unwilling to receive or keep it as informer, sent it to the Secretary of the Navy, requesting that the money might be distributed among the officers and crews of the Mississippi squadron as captors. The Secretary refused to distribute the money, and returned the check to the admiral, and he deposited it with the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis, upon whom it was drawn.

Treating the proceedings in the district court as in admiralty, they are without validity. The admiralty jurisdiction of the district court extends only to seizures on navigable waters, not to seizures on land. The difference is important, as cases in admiralty are tried without a jury, whilst in cases at law the parties are entitled to a jury, unless one is waived. U. S. v. The Betsey, 4 Cranch, 443; The Sarah, 8 Wheat., 391.

But it is contended by the Attorney-General that the proceedings, however loose and defective in form, can be sustained under the Confiscation Act of July 17, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 589, upon the charge that the property was seized as belonging to a person in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States. Assuming that upon a vague allegation of this kind, without designation of the owner, and with an erroneous statement in the libel of the place of seizure, a valid decree of condemnation could be rendered under the Act of 1862, previous to the passage of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act, it is contended on the part of the claimant that by the passage of this Act the provisions for confiscating property, in the Act of 1862, are impliedly repealed, as being repugnant to those of the latter Act. We do not think so. We agree with the Court of Claims on this point.

The whole scope and purpose of the two Acts are different. The first Act provides for the punishment of treason, the seizure, condemnation and sale of property of persons engaged in the rebellion, and the payment of the proceeds into the Treasury, to be applied to the support of the Army of the United States. It was directed against persons committing certain overt acts of treason, and against their property. Its object was to punish the persons and to confiscate their property, and contemplated in the latter proceedings equally as in the former the intervention of judicial authority.

The second Act was designed to reach all property, with few exceptions, in the insurgent States, seized or taken from hostile possession by the military or naval forces of the United States, whether belonging to friends or enemies, as well as property taken while the owner was voluntarily absent and engaged in aiding or encouraging the rebellion. It provided for a sale of the property thus captured or abandoned without judicial proceedings, and the payment of the proceeds into the Treasury, allowing the loyal owner, who had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion, the privilege of pursuing the proceeds in the Court of Claims. There was also a marked difference in the effect of the proceedings under the two Acts. The Confiscation Act authorized proceedings only against the interest of the disloyal owner; the Captured and Abandoned Property Act directed the seizure of the property itself; and its sale carried the title against all claimants. The former also took the property wherever it was found; the latter only in the insurgent States. The former, as respects property, had all the merciless features inseparable from a war measure, and treated as enemies, whose property could be confiscated, all residents within the insurgent States; the latter had this beneficent provision, that it made a discrimination among those whom the rule of international law classes as enemies, in favor of those who, though resident within the hostile territory, maintained in fact a loyal adhesion to the government. The two Acts can stand together, and the Confiscation Act be enforced as to all property seized under its provisions. The position of the claimant, as to an implied repeal from a supposed repugnancy of the provisions of the two Acts, is not, therefore, tenable.

But upon another ground, apparent upon the face of the record, the proceedings and decree of the district court cannot be sustained. There was no previous seizure of the property under any order of the Executive; and such seizure was an essential preliminary to give jurisdiction to the court to adjudge its forfeiture and decree its condemnation. The executive seizure is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings under the Confiscation Act. Such is the plain import of the law, and it was so held by this court in Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall., 103 [76 U. S., XIX., 602], and re-affirmed in The Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall., 92 [87 U. S., XXII., 320]. Here the property was seized by the naval forces of the United States upon the notion that being property in the enemies' country, it was subject to capture as a prize of war. The Secretary of the Navy, when informed of the capture, instructed the admiral in command that the disposition of captured abandoned property was provided for by the Act of March 12, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 820, evidently regarding the property as coming within that class, if not "prize property." No seizure by executive order is alleged in the libel, for none such was made. The seizure alleged is one made by the naval forces, and even that is stated to have been made at a place other than the plantation of the testator. No validity can be ascribed to a decree by a court which thus never had the property rightfully before it for condemnation. For one half of the proceeds of the sale paid into the Treasury under the decree the claimant is, therefore, clearly entitled to judgment.

As to the remaining half also we have no doubt. The check which Captain Pennock received under the decree of the court, included not only one half of the proceeds of the claimant's cotton, but of cotton libeled in other cases, amounting in the whole to $59,943.42. The admiral of the squadron to whom Captain Pennock turned over the check, desired, as already stated, that the money should be distributed among the officers and crews of the Mississippi squadron as captors; and when the Secretary of the Navy declined to make the distribution, he deposited the check with the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis, upon whom it was drawn. Subsequently, in July 1864, the admiral invoked the aid of the District Court of the District of Columbia to make the distribution, and placed in the hands of the district attorney a certificate stating that the amount decreed to him as informer, namely: $59,943.42, was on deposit with the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis, and expressing his wish as to the distribution of the money, accompanying the certificate with a check for the amount. The district court took jurisdiction in admiralty of the case, and ordered the check to be deposited by the Marshal with the Assistant Treasurer at Washington, and that the money should remain in his hands subject to the further order of the court. The check was accordingly deposited with the Assistant Treasurer, and by a subsequent decree the court ordered the money to be distributed as desired, after the payment of certain costs and disbursements incurred in the proceedings.

It is not a question upon which contention can arise that these proceedings of the District Court of the District of Columbia were extra-judisdictional from beginning to end; and indeed it is apparent from inspection of the decree that the court, assuming as valid the action of the Illinois Court, proceeded to distribute the money more upon the request of the admiral than upon any authority conferred by law. The decree of distribution signed by the Chief Justice of the district court shows the kind disposition of a learned magistrate to carry out the generous intentions of a gallant admiral to distribute among the officers and crew under his command money awarded to him as informer, but which he refused to take in that character, without assuming any authority beyond what the admiral implored him to exercise. But, as the Illinois Court had no jurisdiction to award to the admiral or his captain the money thus generously distributed, we are of opinion that the claimant must have judgment for the amount as well as for the other moiety of the proceeds of the cotton belonging to the estate of his testator.

In the views thus expressed we have merely stated, in brief, the conclusions of the Court of Claims. In the opinion of that court the questions are so fully, clearly and exhaustively discussed as to leave nothing to be added.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES S. CLARK ET AL., Partners, under the firm name of J. S. CLARK & Co., Appts.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 493-496.)

Limitations to government claims.

1. Claims against the United States in the Court of Claims are barred by statute, unless filed within six years after the claim accrues.

2. A claim for cotton which was shipped from Mobile to New York in August, 1865, and there sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States, filed on the 27th of March, 1872, is barred by the statute.

[No. 111.]

Argued Apr. 15, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. John J. Weed and Matt. H. Carpenter, for appellants.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., T. S. Si-

See 9 OTTO.

mons, Asst. Atty-Gen., and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the Court of Claims. The facts of the case cannot be more clearly or compactly stated than they are presented in the findings of the court.

The findings are as follows:

"In July and August, 1865, the petitioners, James S. Clark and Edward Fulton, were merchants and copartners doing business at New Orleans, under the firm name and style of J. S. Clark & Co., and Joseph C. Palmer was a merchant at Mobile.

In said July and August the petitioners were the owners jointly of 900 bales of cotton, which arrived at Mobile in the last part of said July or the first part of said August, consigned by them to T. C. A. Dexter, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department for the department of Alabama.

At the times above stated the Government had charge of the railroads, and the cotton was consigned to Mr. Dexter to facilitate its arrival at Mobile, and on its arrival there it was claimed of him by the petitioners.

In August, 1865, Mr. Dexter having received orders from the Treasury Department to ship all the cotton received by him, shipped the said 900 bales to New York, where it arrived and was sold by the United States, and the net proceeds thereof, amounting to $127,350, were paid into the Treasury.

The said Clark and Fulton resided in New Orleans, and said Palmer in Mobile, during the whole rebellion, and this petition was filed March 27, 1872."

The United States rely upon two defenses:

(1) That the petitioners did not, within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer their claim in the Court of Claims.

This limitation is prescribed by the "Act for the Collection of Abandoned Property, and for the Prevention of Frauds in the Insurrectionary Districts of the United States," passed March 3, 1863. 12 Stat. at L., 820. It is confined to cases arising under that Act.

(2) That the petition was not filed in the Court of Claims within six years after the cause of action accrued.

This limitation is found in the 10th section of the Act relating to the Court of Claims, also of March 3, 1863. 12 Stat. at L., 765. That section enacts:

"That every claim against the United States cognizable by the Court of Claims shall be forever barred unless the petition setting forth a statement of the claim be filed in the court, or transmitted to it under the provisions of this Act, within six years after the claim first accrues; Provided, That claims which have accrued six years before the passage of this Act shall not be barred, if the petition be filed in the court or transmitted as aforesaid within three years after the passage of this Act; And provided further, that the claims of married women first accrued during marriage, of persons under the age of twenty-one years, first accruing during minority, and of idiots, lunatics, insane persons, and persons beyond seas at the time the claim accrued, entitled to the claim, shall not be barred if the petition be filed in the court or transmitted as aforesaid within three years after the disability had ceased; but no other disability than those enumerated shall prevent any claim from being barred, nor shall any of the said disabilities operate cumulatively."

In the Revised Statutes of 1874, section 1009, the first proviso was dropped. It was then needless, the time of the saving thereby created with respect to the claims to which it related having before expired.

The counsel of the appellants have contended, in an argument of unusual research and ability, that the cotton in question was not captured or abandoned property within the meaning of the Act upon that subject, and that hence the limitation in that Act has no application to this case. Our view renders it unnecessary to consider this point. We, therefore, pass from it without further remark. The only question to be considered is whether the action is barred by the limitation of six years in the Court of Claims Act before referred to.

Nothing can be clearer than the terms of the limiting section.

It begins by declaring that every claim cognizable by the court "shall be forever barred" unless the petition "shall be filed within six years after the claim first accrued." Then follows the proviso naming the disabilities which shall arrest the running of the statute, and either of which shall give three years for the filing of the petition "after the disability has ceased." Finally, it is enacted that "No other disability shall prevent any claim from being barred, nor shall any of said disabilities operate cumulatively."

It is not claimed that any of the disabilities named affected either of the appellants.

In the early part of April, 1862, New Orleans was captured by the naval forces of the United States under the command of Admiral Farragut. On the first of May following the national military forces under the command of General Butler took possession of the city. It was never afterwards in possession of the insurgents. Des mare v. U. S., 93 U. S., 605 [XXIII., 959]. The appellants resided there. It is a part of the public history of the country, of which we are bound to take judicial notice, that from the time last mentioned, communication between that place and the seat of the National Government was constant and uninterrupted.

In the case just referred to, this court said: "Upon the issuing of General Butler's proclamation, the legal status of New Orleans and its inhabitants with respect to the United States became changed. Before that time the former was enemy's territory and the latter were enemies. * * * General Butler's proclamation was proof of the subjugation of the city and the re-establishment of the national authority. The hostile character of the territory thereupon ceased, and the process of rehabilitation began. The inhabitants were at once permitted to resume, under the regulations prescribed, their wonted commerce with other places, as if the State had not belonged to the rebel organization. The Venice, 2 Wall., 258 [69 U. S., XVII., 866]. But they were clothed with new duties as well as new rights."

The cotton was shipped to New York in August, 1865, and there sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States. The claim then first accrued. The petition was filed on the 27th of March, 1872. This was at least six months in excess of the six years limited by the Statute.
482

During all this period the appellants could easily have put the proper machinery of the law in motion. The delay is unaccounted for.

The supplementary briefs filed by the parties since the argument at the bar do not, we think, call for any special remarks.

The case is clearly within the bar of the Statute, and we are constrained to hold accordingly.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Field, Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Bradley.

UNITED STATES, Plf.,

v.

CHARLES N. GERMAINE.

(See S.C., 9 Otto, 508-512.)

Surgeon, when not U. S. officer—indictment—Commissioner of Pensions.

1. A surgeon, appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions to examine pensioners and applicants for pensions, is not an officer of the United States.

2. An indictment against him for extortion in taking fees from pensioners under section 12, of the Act of 1825, is not sustainable.

3. The Commissioner of Pensions is not the head of a department, within the meaning of the Constitution.

[No. 216.]

Argued Apr. 7, 1879. Decided May. 5, 1879.

ON a certificate of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maine.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff:

That Germaine was a federal officer, see U. S. v. Maurice, 1 Brockb., 102; see, also, State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio, 347, et. seq.

Mr. T. B. Reed, for defendant.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions to act as surgeon, under the Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. at L., 566, the 3d section of which is thus stated in the Revised Statutes as section 4777:

"That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, empowered to appoint, at his discretion, civil surgeons to make the periodical examination of pensioners which are or may be required by law, and to examine applicants for pension, where he shall deem an examination by a surgeon appointed by him necessary; and the fee for such examinations, and the requisite certificates thereof in duplicate, including postage on such as are transmitted to pension agents shall be two dollars, which shall be paid by the agent for paying pensions in the district within which the pensioner or claimant resides, out of any money appropriated for the payment of pensions, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe."

He was indicted in the District of Maine for extortion in taking fees from pensioners to which he was not entitled. The law under which he was indicted is thus set forth in section 12 of the Act of 1825, 4 Stat. at L., 118:

"Every officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment not more than one year, according to the aggravation of his offense."

The indictment being remitted into the circuit court, the Judges of that court have certified a division of opinion upon the questions whether such appointment made defendant an officer of the United States within the meaning of the above Act, and whether, upon demurrer to the indictment, judgment should be rendered for the United States or for defendant.

The counsel for defendant insists that article 2, section 2, of the Constitution, prescribing how officers of the United States shall be appointed, is decisive of the case before us. It declares that "The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they may think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

The argument is, that provision is here made for the appointment of all officers of the United States, and that defendant, not being appointed in either of the modes here mentioned, is not an officer, though he may be an agent or employé working for the Government and paid by it, as nine tenths of the persons rendering service to the Government undoubtedly are, without thereby becoming its officers.

The Constitution, for purposes of appointment, very clearly divides all its officers into two classes. The primary class requires a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. But, foreseeing that when offices became numerous and sudden removals necessary, this mode might be inconvenient, it was provided that, in regard to officers inferior to those specially mentioned, Congress might by law vest their appointment in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment there can be but little doubt. This Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and no Act of Congress is of any validity which does not rest on authority conferred by that instrument. It is, therefore, not to be supposed that Congress, when enacting a criminal law for the punishment of officers of the United States, intended to punish anyone not appointed in one of those modes. If the punishment were designed for others than officers as defined by the Constitution, words to that effect would be used, as servant, agent, person in the service or employment of the Government; and this has been done where it was so intended, as in the 16th section of the Act of 1846, concerning embezzlement, by which any officer or agent of the United States, and all persons participating in the act are made liable. 9 Stat. at L., 59.

See 9 Otto.

As the defendant here was not appointed by the President or by a court of law, it remains to inquire if the Commissioner of Pensions, by whom he was appointed, is the head of a department, within the meaning of the Constitution, as is argued by the counsel for plaintiffs.

That instrument was intended to inaugurate a new system of government, and the departments to which it referred were not then in existence. The clause we have cited is to be found in the article relating to the Executive, and the word as there used has reference to the subdivision of the power of the Executive into departments, for the more convenient exercise of that power. One of the definitions of the word given by Worcester is, "A part or division of the executive government, as the Department of State, or of the Treasury." Congress recognized this in the Act creating these subdivisions of the executive branch by giving to each of them the name of a department. Here we have the Secretary of State, who is by law the head of the Department of State, the Departments of War, Interior, Treasury, etc. And by one of the latest of these statutes reorganizing the Attorney-General's office and placing it on the basis of the others, it is called the Department of Justice. The association of the words "heads of departments" with the President and the courts of law strongly implies that something different is meant from the inferior commissioners and bureau officers, who are themselves the mere aids and subordinates of the heads of the departments. Such, also, has been the practice, for it is very well understood that the appointments of the thousands of clerks in the Departments of the Treasury, Interior and the others, are made by the heads of those departments, and not by the heads of the bureaus in those departments.

So in this same section of the Constitution it is said that the President may require the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments, relating to the duties of their respective offices.

The word "department," in both these instances, clearly means the same thing, and the principal officer in the one case is the equivalent of the head of department in the other.

While it has been the custom of the President to require these opinions from the Secretaries of State, the Treasury, of War, Navy, etc., and his consultation with them as members of his Cabinet has been habitual, we are not aware of any instance in which such written opinion has been officially required of the head of any of the bureaus, or of any commissioner or auditor in these departments.

The case of U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 385 [73 U. S., XVIII., 830], is not, as supposed, in conflict with these views. It is clearly stated and relied on in the opinion, that Hartwell's appointment was approved by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury as acting head of that department, and he was, therefore, an officer of the United States.

If we look to the nature of defendant's employment, we think it equally clear that he is not an officer. In Hartwell's case the court said, the term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument and duties, and in that case it said the latter were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary. In the case before us, the duties are not continuing and permanent, and they are occasional and intermittent. The surgeon is only to act when called on by the Commissioner of Pensions in some special case, as when some pensioner or claimant of a pension presents himself for examination. He may make fifty of these examinations in a year, or none. He is required to keep no place of business for the public use. He gives no bond and takes no oath, unless by some order of the Commissioner of Pensions of which we are not advised.

No regular appropriation is made to pay his compensation, which is $2 for every certificate of examination, but it is paid out of money appropriated for paying pensions in his district, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner. He is but an agent of the commissioner, appointed by him and removable by him at his pleasure, to procure information needed to aid in the performance of his own official duties. He may appoint one or a dozen persons to do the same thing. The compensation may amount to $5 or $500 per annum. There is no penalty for his absence from duty or refusal to perform, except his loss of the fee in the given case. If Congress had passed a law requiring the commissioner to appoint a man to furnish each agency with fuel, at a price per ton fixed by law high enough to secure the delivery of the coal, he would have as much claim to be an officer of the United States as the surgeons appointed under this statute.

We answer that the defendant is not an officer of the United States, and that judgment on the demurrer must be entered in his favor. Let it be so certified to the Circuit Court.

GARDNER R. COLBY ET AL., EXRS. OF GARDNER COLBY, Deceased, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE REED.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 560-566.)

Oral demand of performance—demand for too much—mitigation of damages.

1. An oral demand of performance of a written contract is sufficient, where the contract does not contain the stipulation that the demand should be in writing.

2. Where a party demands more than he is entitled to receive, that circumstance alone will not justify the other party in refusing to deliver that part of the property to which the demandant is entitled, provided it is distinct, well known and clearly distinguishable from that to which the latter had no right.

3. Courts may, in a proper case, where the action is trover or trespass de bonis, order the plaintiff to accept the property, in mitigation, of damages, against his wishes; but the practice is not applicable in actions of assumpsit for a breach of contract.

[No. 243.]

Argued Apr. 23, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

The case is fully stated by the court.

484

Messrs. Edwin H. Abbot and L. S. Dixon, for plaintiffs in error:

If the defendant's possession was lawful, and his refusal to surrender was qualified, or if the conversion was technical only and without willful wrong on his part, and the property remains strictly in statu quo, the defendant may compel the plaintiff to accept it in mitigation of damages.

Pickering v. Truste, 7 T. R., 53; Hayward v. Seaward, 1 Moore & S., 459.

(a) And even if the plaintiff do not expressly consent, the defendant may show, in mitigation of damages, that the property has gone into possession of plaintiff or to his use. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt., 138; Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt., 243; Reynolds v. Shuler, 5 Cow., 323; Baldwin v. Porter, 12 Conn., 473; Kaley v. Shed, 10 Met., 317.

(b) And the law will imply an acceptance where the property has actually gone into his use, and mitigate damages accordingly, and will reduce verdict, on motion, for acts done after verdict, as if on audita querela. Plevin v. Henshall, 10 Bing., 24 (1833); Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt., 30.

(c) And it will grant a rule that the judgment for damages be discharged, on placing the plaintiff, by full delivery and payment of costs, in as good a position as he was before the action arose. Coombe v. Sansom, 1 Dowl. & R., 201; Earl v. Holderness, 4 Bing., 462.

Will this court adopt less liberal practice in contract than in tort?

The plaintiff is entitled to indemnity only. He has no right to force a purchase upon an unwilling and innocent purchaser, and the common law courts have jurisdiction to prevent this injustice by shaping their procedure.

Chinery v. Viall, 5 Hurl. & N., 288; Johnson v. Stear, 15 C. B. (N. S.), 330 (1863); Robinson v. Harman, 1 Exch., 850.

"The old cases which hold that judgment in trover vests the property in the defendant (which would prevent the right of return after suit), have been overruled."

Big. Lead. Cas. on Torts, 439; Brinsmead v. Harrison, L. R., 6 C. P., 584.

"A party cannot," says Baron Parke, "recover the full value of a chattel, unless under circumstances which import that the property has passed to the defendant."

Laird v. Pim, 7 Mees. & W., 474.

Interest on the value of the stock from May 27, 1875, was wrongly included in the judgment, even if it is otherwise correct.

Van Dieman's Land Co. v. Cockerill, 1 C. B. (N. S.), 732; Sedg. Dam., 260; Shepherd v. Hampton, 3 Wheat., 200; Gray v. Portland Bank, 3 Mass., 364.

And there is no just distinction between stock and any other vendible commodity.

Sedg. Dam., 273; Copper Co. v. Copper Mining Co., 33 Vt., 92; Shaw v. Holland, 15 Mees. & W., 136; Rand v. White Mountain R. R. Co., 40 N. H., 79; Taylor v. Turner, 2 Cranch (C. C.), 203; Gilpins v. Consequa, Pet. (C. C.), 85.

Messrs. Matt. H. Carpenter and N. S. Murphey, for defendant in error:

Where there is a breach of contract, the defendant must respond in damages. The damage claimed in this case is the value of the stock, and judgment must be rendered for amount proven.

Chit. Pl., 338.

99 U. S.

No objection was made by the defendant at the time, to the sufficiency of the demand.

No stricter rule could be required than in an action of trover, and the demand in such case would have been sufficient. No particular form is necessary. Thompson v. Shirley, 1 Esp., 33, per Lord Kenyon; 1 Chit. Pl., 159.

The defendant was advised by plaintiff's request, that he desired the stock in question. If he considered that we were not entitled to all of it, he should have offered to deliver so much as he considered us entitled to. The stock was all of the same character, one share as good as another.

After the commencement of this action, and at the trial, defendant offered to deliver the stock. An offer to pay is a waiver of any objection to the form of demand.

Bank of Ky. v. Wister, 2 Pet., 318.

As to the motion made at close of testimony, on trial, that the plaintiff be ordered to accept stock in mitigation of damages to be recovered by plaintiff, we say the offer comes too late. There is no authority for such an order.

Suit is for breach of contract. No tender was made before suit was brought.

Plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the stock found to be due him by the jury, at the time of demand, on the 27th of May, 1875, with interest from the time of demand.

Clark v. Pinney, 7 Cow., 681; Bush v. Canfield, 2 Conn., 485; Barnard v. Conger, 6 McLean, 497; Halseys v. Hurd, 6 McLean, 102; Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y., 40; Vaughan v. Howe, 20 Wis., 497.

In the case of Wheeler v. Pereles, 43 Wis., 332, it was held that a person having wrongfully converted a policy of insurance, left with him as security, must be presumed to have in his possession its market value in cash, or its equivalent, and it was held that plaintiff could not be compelled to accept the policy in mitigation of damages.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Tender, when the demand is of money, for a definite sum or for an amount capable of being made certain, may at common law be made on the very day the money becomes due, but it will constitute a defense only when made before the action is brought. Chit. Cont., 10th ed., 732, 733; Pars. Cont., 6th ed., 148; 9 Bac. Abr. Tender, D, 321; Stat. Bk. v. Worcester Bk., 5 Pick., 106; Pitcher v. Bailey, 8 East, 171; Briggs v. Calverly, 8 T. R., 629.

In actions of debt and assumpsit the principle of the plea of tender is, that the defendant has always been ready to perform the contract, and that he did perform it as far as he was able by tendering the requisite money, the plaintiff himself having prevented a complete performance by his refusal to accept the tender. Such a tender and refusal do not discharge the debt, and hence the plea must proceed to allege that the defendant is still ready to perform, and it must contain a proferit in curia of the money tendered. Dixon v. Clark, 5 Man. G. & S., 377; Ayers v. Pease, 12 Wend., 393.

Arrangements were made between the parties to advance material aid in the construction of a certain land-grant railroad, and to promote that object the defendant agreed with the plaintiff iff, in writing under seal, that he would take stock in the company to the amount of $200,000, and that he would pay or deliver to the order of the plaintiff $45,000 of the proceeds of the subscription. Pursuant to the agreement, the defendant subsequently paid the agreed sum in money, and received the certificates of the stock to the same amount. Progress was made in the undertaking, but it turned out that more money was needed to complete the enterprise; which made it necessary that the same parties should subscribe for an additional $100,000 of the stock. It appears that they were willing to do so; but that the plaintiff could not furnish his proportion of the money for the new subscription, and that the defendant, in consideration of receiving $5,000 out of the plaintiff's stock, agreed to pay the entire amount of the additional subscription and to take the whole of the new stock, which left in his hands only $40,000 of the original stock belonging to the plaintiff. Money to the amount of $2,000 was, about the same time, borrowed for six months by the plaintiff of the defendant, on a pledge of $8,000 of plaintiff's stock in the hands of the defendant, which the record shows was never repaid, leaving in the possession of the defendant only $32,000 of the first subscription.

Throughout these transactions the relations between the parties were amicable; but they subsequently became hostile, and on the 28th of May, 1875, the plaintiff instituted the present suit in the circuit court, in which he claimed judgment against the defendant for the stock of the railroad in his hands to the amount of $45,000, with interest, as alleged in the complaint.

Service was made; and the defendant filed an answer, setting up several defenses: (1) That the allegation that he refused to deliver the stock mentioned in the complaint is not true. (2) That no proper demand for the delivery of the same was ever made. (3) That the demand made was for the delivery of $45,000 of the stock, when the defendant well knew that he was only entitled to demand $32,000 of the same, and the defendant avers that he always was and still is ready and willing to deliver the true amount. (4) That the plaintiff is indebted to the defendant in the sum of $2,000, for which he claims an allowance as a set-off or as a counter claim. (5) That the value of the stock is much below par, and that the pledge to him for the loan is inadequate as security.

Preliminary matters being closed, the parties went to trial. Evidence was introduced on both sides, and the court submitted certain questions to the jury, to which they responded to the effect following: that the plaintiff, before the commencement of the action, made a demand of the stock from the defendant, and that the defendant refused to deliver the same; that the parties entered into the agreement set forth in the answer, by which the plaintiff was to deliver to the defendant the excess of the stock originally subscribed, above $40,000, in the event that it should become necessary to make the additional subscription of $100,000; and that the notice, required of the defendant in that contingency, was waived by the plaintiff; and the jury also found that the amount of stock which the plaintiff was entitled to demand and receive was only $32,000, and that the cash value of the same was and is $9,600, which finding appeared to be satisfactory to the plaintiff, as he moved for judgment in his favor; but the defendant filed two motions: one that the plaintiff be ordered to accept the stock found to be due in mitigation of damages, and the other that a new trial be granted.

Hearing was had, and the court overruled the motions of the defendant and rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $7,641.72. Before doing so, however, the court adjusted the equities between the parties as follows: interest in favor of the plaintiff was added to the sum found due by the jury as the value of the stock, and from that amount the court deducted the counter claim and interest set up by the defendant which gave as a balance the sum for which the judgment was rendered.

Seasonable exceptions were filed by the defendant and he sued out the pending writ of error.

Numerous errors are assigned by the defendant, but in the view taken of the case it will not be necessary to give them a separate examination. Attention will be called to the substantial issues presented in the pleadings and to the material questions which arose in the progress of the trial and in the rendition of the judgment.

Both parties agree that the controversy grew out of a contract between them, and that the redress sought by the plaintiff is compensation for the alleged breach of it and the failure of the defendant to comply with its terms. Every pretense of conversion, therefore, may be dismissed in the outset without the least consideration, as there is nothing either in the cause of action, or the form of the remedy, or in the allegations of the complainant, or in the averments of the answer, or in the evidence introduced by either party, which gives such a theory any support whatever. Instead of that, the plaintiff set up the agreement and alleges that the defendant broke it, and he claims compensation for the damage he suffered from its non-performance by the defendant. Demand of performance is also alleged by the plaintiff, which is explicitly denied by the defendant, who avers in his answer that he was always ready and willing to perform to the full extent of his obligation under the agreement.

Neither the answer nor the evidence shows that the defendant ever did perform the agreement to deliver, but what he alleged and attempted to prove was that the plaintiff claimed $13,000 of stock more than he, the defendant, contracted to deliver; and his theory is that the demand being in excess of the obligation created by the contract, was null and of no effect, and inasmuch as the demand exceeded the right, he was not required to perform what the contract required.

Two issues of law were presented by the defendant in respect to the alleged demand: (1) That it must be in writing, and that an oral demand was insufficient. (2) That a request to deliver more property than the party is entitled to receive and a failure to deliver placed on that ground do not in law constitute a sufficient demand and refusal to sustain an action like the one before the court.

Had the the contract contained the stipulation that the demand should be in writing, there would be much force in the suggestion; but, inasmuch as the contract is silent upon the subject, the court is of the opinion that the ruling of the circuit court that it might, be verbal or in writing is undoubtedly correct. Smith v. Young, 2 Dev. & B. (N. C.), 26.

Responsive to the second request, the Judge told the jury that where a party demands more than he is entitled to receive, that circumstance alone will not justify the other party in refusing to deliver that part of the property to which the party making the demand is entitled, provided it is distinct, well known, and clearly distinguishable from that to which the demanding party had no right; that if the plaintiff demanded $45,000 of the stock when he was only entitled to $32,000 of the same, the defendant could not properly refuse to deliver what the plaintiff was entitled to receive, on the ground that the demand was excessive. Injustice and inconvenience would flow from any different rule, and inasmuch as we are all of the opinion that the instruction was correct, it is not deemed necessary to pursue the subject. 2 Greenl. Ev., sec. 604.

Matters of fact in the case need no examination, as they are found by the jury and are not the subject of review in this court. Actual demand, it is conceded, was necessary to complete the cause of action, and the court is of the opinion that the demand was not vitiated because it was for too much, as the party of whom it was made was under no obligation to tender more than was due. Chit. Cont., 10th ed., 738. Both demand and refusal are established by the special verdict, which is all that need be said upon the subject.

Two other assignments of error deserve to be considered, and they may be examined together, as they involve the same question. They are as follows: (1) That the court erred in denying the motion of the defendant to require the plaintiff to accept the stock tendered by the defendant to the plaintiff in open court in reduction of the damages. (2) That the court erred in rendering judgment for the full value of the stock in money, and in not applying the stock deposited in court in mitigation of damages, at its value as fixed by the jury.

Tender of the stock before breach of the condition or before the commencement of the action is not pretended, nor is it pretended that the defendant ever made a money tender of the debt due to the plaintiff, either before or after the action was commenced. Such a tender, if made before action brought and kept good, is a defense to the action, as the money to pay the debt remains in the court, and the party plaintiff is not entitled to prevail unless the sum tendered was insufficient, nor is it questioned that such a tender in a proper case, and payment of the money into court, may be made after action brought; but the rule is universal, that in that event the tender and the payment must include the costs to that time as well as the debt. Add. Cont., 6th ed., 954.

Authority undoubtedly exists in the defendant to tender the debt, if it is of a definite amount, before action brought; but it is equally well settled, even if it be large enough to pay the whole debt, that it is utterly nugatory after action brought, unless it also include a sum sufficient to pay the costs. Emerson v. White, 10 Gray, 351; People v. Banker, 8 How. Pr., 258.

Exceptional cases may be found, but they arise in States where the matter is regulated by statute. Ashburn v. Poulter, 35 Conn., 553; Call v. Lothrop, 39 Me., 434; R. S. (Me.), 642; Gen. S. (Mass.), 671.

No such regulation has ever been adopted by the State in which this controversy arose, from which it follows that it must be governed by the general rules, which do not give the right of tender after action brought, except in the form and under the conditions before explained.

Concede that; and still it is insisted by the defendant that the court erred in refusing his request to order the plaintiff to accept the certificates of stock in mitigation of damages, which presents the principal question in the case.

Power to tender back the property in trover, where the gist of the action is conversion, is certainly vested in the defendant, and its exercise is a matter of frequent occurrence, where it appears that the property is in the same condition as when taken. Such a right may, doubtless, be exercised where the charge is conversion or a wrongful taking even after action brought, if it be accompanied with a tender of costs and intervening damages. R. R. Co. v. Bk., 32 Vt., 639; Kaley v. Shed, 10 Metc., 317.

There can be no manner of doubt that the defendant in actions of trover and trespass de bonis asportatis, in cases where the taking was not unlawful and the property is not essentially injured, will be allowed to surrender the property in specie in mitigation of damages. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt., 138; Fisher v. Prince, 3 Burr., 1363; Pickering v. Truste, 7 T. R., 54.

Courts, beyond doubt, may in a proper case, where the action is trover or trespass de bonis, order the plaintiff to accept the property in mitigation of damages against his wishes; and the rule is that the return of the property in such a case will reduce the damages to those actually sustained for the wrongful taking, together with intervening damages, and costs. Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt., 243; Halliday v. Holgate, L. R., 3 Exch., 301.

Orders of the kind are frequently given in actions of trover and trespass de bonis asportatis, but the practice is not applicable in actions of assumpsit for a breach of contract, the rule being that the party, if he desires to stop the litigation, must adopt the measure prescribed by the common law, except in jurisdictions where a different mode of proceeding is prescribed by statute.

Judgment affirmed.

THE CONGRESS AND EMPIRE SPRING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ANN P. EDGAR.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 645-659.)

Injuries inflicted by animals, liability for—negligence—vicious habits—experts—charge to jury.

NOTE.—Liability of owner of animals for injuries to persons by them.

The owner of ordinary domestic animals is not liable for injuries which they do to another, unless the animal was accustomed to injure persons or had an inclination to do so, to the knowledge of the owner. Smith v. Causey, 22 Ala., 568; Dearth v. See 9 OTTO.

1. Whoever undertakes to keep an animal feræ nature in places of public resort, is liable for the injuries inflicted by it on a party who is not guilty of negligence, and is otherwise without fault.

2. It is not necessary to aver negligence in the owner or keeper, but only to state the ferocity of the animal, and the knowledge of the defendant.

3. Owners are liable for the hurt done by the animal, even without notice of the propensity, if the animal is naturally mischievous; but if it is of a tame nature, there must be notice of the vicious habit.

4. Experts are entitled to give their opinions in evidence, as to conclusions from facts within the range of their specialties.

5. Instructions given by the court at the trial are not, as a general rule, to be regarded as incorrect on account of omissions or deficiencies not pointed out by the accepting party.

[No. 255.]

Argued Apr. 25, 1879. Decided May. 5, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York.

The case, which arose in the court below is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Charles S. Lester, for plaintiff in error: The liability of the owner of an animal of any description, for an injury committed by such animal, is founded upon negligence, actual or presumed.

Earl v. Van Alstine, 8 Barb., 630; Whart. Neg., secs. 918, 926; Earhart v. Youngblood, 27 Pa., 331; Shear. & Redf. Neg., sec. 185; Munn v. Reed, 4 Allen, 431; Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald., 304.

It is well settled that the owner of a domestic animal like a dog, horse or cow, is not liable for injuries committed by it, unless he had notice that it was accustomed to do mischief.

Bull. N. P., 77; 3 Bl. Com., 153; Vrooman v. Lawyer, 13 Johns., 339; Van Lewen v. Lyke, 1 N. Y., 515.

Deer, although feræ nature, may be reclaimed and domesticated when they cease to be such. 2 Kent, Com., 348.

The common law refers the question, whether an animal is wild or tame, to our knowledge of his habits derived from fact and experience. 2 Kent, Com., 349.

It follows, therefore, that if the deer was a domesticated animal, there was no cause of action made out, because there was no evidence that it had ever before committed any injury, or exhibited any disposition to commit an injury, nor that the defendant had any knowledge that it possessed a dangerous disposition; and the court should have directed a verdict for defendant.

But if it is claimed that a deer belongs to the same class of animals as lions, bears and tigers, then the plaintiff is chargeable with the same knowledge of its dangerous character as the defendant, and her negligence in going into the inclosure where she knew this deer was confined, was such contributory negligence as barred her from recovering.

Whart. Neg., sec. 926; Earhart v. Youngblood, 27 Pa., 331; Brock v. Copeland, 1 Esp., 203; Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald., 304.

Baker, 22 Wis., 73; Earl v. Van Alstine, 8 Barb., 630; Fleming v. Orr, 29 Eng. L. & E., 16; Rex v. Hugbins, 2 Raym., 1583; Cox v. Burbridge, 13 C. B. (N.S.), 430; Vrooman v. Lawyer, 13 Johns., 339; Le Forest v. Tolman, 117 Mass., 109; S. C., 19 Am. Rep., 400; Popplewell v. Pierce, 10 Cush., 509; Pressey v. Wirth, 3 Allen, 191.

1. The character and disposition of a wild or domestic animal is a fact to be ascertained by experience, and not a question of science, skill or trade, on which the opinion of an expert is admissible.

It is only upon questions of science, skill or trade, that opinions of experts are admissible.

1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 440; Devitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y., 375; Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y., 634; Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Exch., 275; Nelson v. Sun. M. Ins. Co., 71 N. Y., 453.

2. The books of natural history, which the witness said he had read, would not of themselves have been competent evidence.

Commonwealth v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337; Morris v. Harmer, 7 Pet., 554; McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y., 206; Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P., 73.

The statements of the witness, therefore, as to what he had read in relation to living animals well known to many people, was the merest hearsay and its admission was error.

Mr. Geo. W. Miller, for defendant in error.

A person harboring or owning and keeping an animal feræ naturæ, is responsible for any injury it may do to another, without notice of its vicious character, other than that to be presumed from the nature of the beast.

Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y., 516, and cases cited; Bac. Abr. Trespass, 15, 106; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns., 75.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Animals feræ naturæ, as a class, are known to be mischievous; and the rule is well settled, that whoever undertakes to keep such an animal in places of public resort is or may be liable for the consequences to a party suffering injury from the animal, if not guilty of negligence and otherwise without fault.

Compensation in such a case may be claimed of the owner or keeper, for the injury; and it is an established rule of pleading that it is not necessary to aver negligence in the owner or keeper, as the burden is upon the defendant to disprove that implied imputation. Cases have often arisen where no such averment was contained in the declaration; and the uniform ruling has been that the omission constitutes no valid objection to the right of recovery. May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B., 100.

Where an animal is accustomed to injure persons, and the owner has notice or knowledge of that fact, he is liable for any injury which such animal may do to another person. Arnold v. Norton, 25 Conn., 92; Fairchild v. Bentley, 30 Barb., 147; Laverone v. Mangianti, 41 Cal., 138; S. C., 10 Am. Rep., 269; Shirley v. Bartley, 4 Sneed, 58; McCaskill v. Elliott, 5 Strob., 196; Meibus v. Dodge, 38 Wis., 300; S. C., 20 Am. Rep., 6; Smith v. Pelah, 2 Str., 1264.

A person bitten by a ferocious dog left loose in the day-time may recover from the owner, although he was, when bitten, trespassing. Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend., 496; S. C., 31 Am. Dec., 306; Brock v. Copeland, 1 Esp., 203; Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 C. & P., 297.

If a person provokes a dog to bite, he cannot recover. Keightlinger v. Egan, 65 Ill., 235.

A person who keeps an animal after he has notice of its vicious disposition, is liable for such injury as it may do, without reference to any specific negligence in its custody. Popplewell v. Pierce, 10 Cush., 509; Koney v. Ward, 2 Daly, 295; S. C., 36 How. Pr., 255; Stumps v. Kelly, 22 Ill., 140; Kittredge v. Elliott, 16 N. H., 77; Kelly v. Tilton, 2 Abb. Ct. of App. Dec., 495; S. C., 3 Keyes, 263; Earhart v. Youngblood, 27 Pa. St., 337.

A person who keeps a monkey that is dangerous to allow at large, is liable for injuries it may do to Negligence was not alleged in that case. Trial was had, and the verdict being for the plaintiff, the defendant moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was bad for not alleging negligence or some default of the defendant in not properly or securely keeping the animal. Attempt was made by a very able counsel to support the motion, upon the ground that even if the declaration was true, still the injury might have been occasioned entirely by the carelessness and want of caution on the part of the plaintiff; but Lord Denman and his associates overruled the motion in arrest, and decided that whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack and injure mankind, with knowledge that it is so accustomed, is prima facie liable in an action on the case at the suit of the person attacked and injured, without any averment of negligence or default in securing or taking care of the animal; and the Chief Justice added, what it is important to observe, that the gist of the action is the keeping of the animal after knowledge of its mischievous propensities.

Precedents, both ancient and modern, it seems, were cited in the argument and were examined by the court, and the learned Chief Justice remarked that, with scarcely an exception, they merely state the ferocity of the animal and the knowledge of the defendant, without any allegation of negligence or want of care. Jackson v. Smithson, 15 Mees. & W., 563; Popplewell v. Pierce, 10 Cush., 509.

Injuries of a serious character inflicted by a mischievous deer, which the defendant Company kept in their park, were received by the plaintiff at the time and place alleged, for which she claims compensation of the Company. By the declaration it appears that the Company is the owner and proprietor of the Congress Spring at Saratoga, in the State of New York, whose waters have become celebrated for their medicinal qualities and the source of great gains and profits to the Company. Among other things, the plaintiff alleges that the spring had for a long time been kept open and accessible to visitors, the public being invited in various forms to patronize its waters, and that to make it more inviting and attractive the Company had opened in connection therewith an extensive park, ornamented with fountains, trees, shrubbery and flowers, through which extensive graveled walks persons. May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B., 101; 10 Jur., 692; 16 L. J. Q. B., 64.

Knowledge of owner's agents, or servants having charge of the animal, of its ferocious disposition, may be sufficient to charge the owner with notice. Applebee v. Percy, 9 L. R. C. P., 647; 22 W. R., 704; 43 L. J. C. P., 365; 30 L. T. N. S., 785.

If a person harbors a dog accustomed to bite, or allows it to frequent his premises, he is liable, although not the owner of it. Frammell v. Little, 16 Ind., 251; Marsh v. Jones, 21 Vt., 378; McRone v. Wood, 5 C. & P., 1; Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal., 102.

Otherwise, where he tries to keep him off his premises, but is not successful. Smith v. Gt. Eastern Ry. Co., 2 L. R. C. P., 4; 36 L. J. C. P., 22; 15 W. R., 131; 15 L. T. N. S., 246.

The owner of wild and savage beasts is liable for injuries committed by them, without proof of notice of their savage propensities. Scribner v. Kelley, 38 Barb., 14; Besozzi v. Harris, 1 Fost. & F., 92; May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B., 101.

Knowledge of owner, that dog is vicious, is sufficient, without showing that it had ever bitten any one. Rider v. White, 65 N. Y., 54; S. C., 22 Am. Rep., 600; Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt., 251; S. C., 36 Am. Rep., 751.

have been constructed for the use and comfort of those who resort there to use the mineral waters and to enjoy the landscape; that the Company, in order further to enhance the attractions of the park, had obtained and in some degree domesticated several wild deer, and among them a large and powerful buck, with large horns and of vicious character and habits, which were well known to the defendant Company, their officers and agents, and the residents of the village.

Actual knowledge by the Company of the mischievous character of the animal is alleged by the plaintiff, and she avers that the vicious animal on the day named, to wit: the 18th of October, 1870, was permitted to run at large in the park, and that she on that day visited the spring to partake of its waters, and that while she was peaceably proceeding along one of the walks in the parks she was fiercely attacked by the mischievous buck and greatly injured, bruised and lacerated, as more fully set forth in the declaration.

Service was made; and the defendant Company appeared and pleaded: (1) The general issue. (2) That the damage and injury suffered by the plaintiff were occasioned by her own fault in neglecting to obey the rules and regulations of the Company. On motion of the plaintiff a jury was impaneled, and the parties went to trial, which resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Exceptions were filed by the defendant Company, and they sued out the pending writ of error.

Since the cause was entered here the defendant Company has filed the following assignments of error: (1) That the court, in view of the evidence, should have directed a verdict for the defendant. (2) That the court erred in admitting the questions to the two witnesses called by the plaintiff as experts. (3) That the court erred in the instructions given to the jury in respect to the question of damages.

Certain animals feræ naturæ may, doubtless, be domesticated to such an extent as to be classed, in respect to the liability of the owner for injuries they commit, with the class known as tame or domestic animals; but, inasmuch as they are liable to relapse into their wild habits and to become mischievous, the rule is that if they do so, and the owner becomes notified of their vicious habit, they are included in the same rule as if they had never been domesticated; the gist of the action in such a case, as in the case of untamed wild animals, being not merely the negligent keeping of the animal, but the keeping of the same with knowledge of the vicious and mischievous propensity of the animal. Whart. Neg., sec. 922; Decker v. Gammon, 44 Me., 322.

Three or more classes of cases exist in which it is held that the owners of animals are liable for injuries done by the same to the persons or property of others, the required allegations and proofs varying in each case. 2 Bl. Com., per Cooley, 390.

Owners of wild beasts or beasts that are in their nature vicious are liable under all or most all circumstances for injuries done by them; and in actions for injuries by such beasts it is not necessary to allege that the owner knew them to be mischievous, for he is presumed to have such knowledge, from which it follows that he is guilty of negligence in permitting the same to be at large.

Though the owner have no particular notice that the animal ever did any such mischief before, yet if the animal be of the class that is feræ naturæ the owner is liable to an action of damage if it get loose and do harm. 1 Hale, P. C., 430; Worth v. Gilling, L. R., 2 C. P., 3.

Owners are liable for the hurt done by the animal even without notice of the propensity, if the animal is naturally mischievous, but if it is of a tame nature, there must be notice of the vicious habit. Mason v. Keeling, 12 Mod., 332; Rex v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Raym., 1574.

Damage may done by a domestic animal kept for use or convenience, but the rule is that the owner is not liable to an action on the ground of negligence, without proof that he knew that the animal was accustomed to do mischief. Vrooman v. Lawyer, 13 Johns., 339; Buzendin v. Sharp, 2 Salk., 662; Cockerham v. Nixon, 11 Ired. (N. C.), L., 269.

Domestic animals, such as oxen or horses, may injure the person or property of another, but courts of justice invariably hold that if they are rightfully in the place where the injury is inflicted, the owner of the animal is not liable for such an injury, unless he knew that the animal was accustomed to be vicious; and in suits for such injuries such knowledge must be alleged and proved, as the cause of action arises from the keeping of the animal after the knowledge of its vicious propensity. Jackson v. Smithson, 15 Mees. & W., 563; Van Leuwen v. Lyke, 1 N. Y., 515; Card v. Case, 5 C. B., 632; Hudson v. Roberts, 6 Exch., 697; May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B., 100; Dearth v. Baker, 22 Wis., 73; Coa v. Burbridge, 13 C. B. (N. S.), 430.

It appears by the bill of exceptions that the plaintiff, on the morning of the day of the injury, entered the park belonging to the defendant Company; that after drinking of the water of the spring she walked through the grounds and that she met the mischievous deer; that he attacked her, goring and striking her with his head and horns, whereby she was thrown down and greatly injured and put to great suffering and expense, as more fully set forth in her testimony. On her cross-examination she testified that she had been in the habit of visiting the park to enjoy the water and the pleasure of the walk; that she had noticed the deer at an earlier period and had often seen them running about on the lawn; that she had seen persons playing with them on different occasions; and that she had noticed the signboard posted in the park containing the notice, "Beware of the buck." Another witness called by the plaintiff testified that the park contains about eleven acres; that there were nine deer in the park, among which were three bucks, the oldest being four years old; that he first heard that the buck was ugly when the plaintiff was attacked and knocked down; that notices were put up at different places in the park a year or two before, cautioning visitors not to tease or worry the deer; and that he had no knowledge or belief, prior to the accident, that the buck or any other of the herd would attack any person if they were not disturbed. Expert witnesses were called by the plaintiff, and they gave it as their opinion that the male deer in the fall of the year is a dangerous animal.

Five witnesses were examined in behalf of the plaintiff; but the bill of exceptions does not show that the defendant Company gave any evidence in reply, nor is it stated that the whole testimony introduced by the plaintiff is reported. When the evidence was closed, the defendant moved that the action be dismissed, that the plaintiff be nonsuited, and that the court direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant.

Discussion of the first two propositions involved in the motion is wholly unnecessary, for two reasons: (1) Because the jurisdiction of the court was beyond doubt, and the record shows that the suit was well brought. (2) Because it is not competent for the circuit court to order a peremptory nonsuit in any case.

Circuit courts cannot grant a nonsuit, but the defendant at the close of the plaintiff's case may move the court to instruct the jury that the evidence introduced by the plaintiff is not sufficient to maintain the action, and to direct a verdict for the defendant. In considering the motion, the court proceeds upon the ground that all the facts stated by the plaintiff's witnesses are true, and the rule is that the motion will be denied unless the court is of the opinion that in view of the whole evidence, and of every inference the law allows to be drawn from it, the plaintiff has not made out a case which would warrant the jury to find a verdict in his favor. Merch. Nat. Bk. v. St. Nat. Bk., 3 Cliff., 205; S. C., 10 Wall., 655 [77 U. S., XIX., 1021].

Tested by that rule, which is everywhere admitted to be correct, it is clear that the motion of the defendant was properly denied, for several reasons: (1) Because the proof of injury was overwhelming. (2) Because the allegation that the animal was vicious and mischievous was satisfactorily proved. (3) Because the evidence to prove that the defendant Company had knowledge of the vicious and mischievous propensity of the animal was properly left to the jury, and it appearing that the circuit court overruled the motion for a new trial, the court here cannot disturb the verdict except for error of law. (4) Because the cause of action in the case arises not merely from the keeping of the animal, but from the keeping of the same after knowledge of its vicious and mischievous propensities. (5) Because the evidence is plenary that the plaintiff was rightfully in the place where she was injured, and that the owners of the vicious animal, inasmuch as the evidence tended to show that they had knowledge of its mischievous propensities, are justly held liable for the consequences. Stiles v. Nav. Co., 33 L. J. (N. S.), 311; Oakes v. Spaulding, 40 Vt., 347; Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 Car. & P., 297; S. C., 1 Moo. & M., 505; Besozzi v. Harris, 1 Fos. & F., 92.

Whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack or injure mankind, with the knowledge of its dangerous propensities, says Addison, is prima facie liable to an action for damages at the suit of any person attacked or injured by the animal, without proof of any negligence or default in the securing or taking care of the animal, the gist of the action being the keeping of the animal after knowledge of its mischievous disposition. Add. Torts, ed. 1876, 233; Dickson v. McCoy, 39 N. Y., 400; Applebee v. Percy, L. R., 9 C. P., 647; Lead. Cas. Torts, 489.

Witnesses are not ordinarily allowed to give opinions as to conclusions dependent upon facts not necessarily involved in the controversy; but an exception to that rule is recognized in the case of experts, who are entitled to give their opinions as to conclusions from facts within the range of their specialties, which are too recondite to be properly comprehended and weighed by ordinary reasoners. 1 Whart. Ev., sec. 440.

Men who have made questions of skill or science the object of their particular study, says Phillips, are competent to give their opinions in evidence. Such opinions ought, in general, to be deduced from facts that are not disputed, or from facts given in evidence; but the author proceeds to say that they need not be founded upon their own personal knowledge of such facts, but may be founded upon the statement of facts proved in the case. Medical men, for example, may give their opinions, not only as to the state of a patient they may have visited, or as to the cause of the death of a person whose body they have examined, or as to the nature of the instruments which caused the wounds they have examined, but also in cases where they have not themselves seen the patient, and have only heard the symptoms and particulars of his state detailed by other witnesses at the trial. Judicial tribunals have in many instances held that medical works are not admissible, but they everywhere hold that men skilled in science, art or particular trades may give their opinions as witnesses in matters pertaining to their professional calling. 1 Phil. Ev., ed. 1868, 778.

It must appear, of course, that the witness is qualified to speak to the point of inquiry, whether it respects a patented invention, a question in chemistry, insurance, shipping, seamanship, foreign law or the habits of animals, whether feræ naturæ or domestic.

On questions of science, skill or trade, or others of like kind, says Greenleaf, persons of skill, sometimes called experts, may not only testify to facts, but are permitted to give their opinions in evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 400; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns., 75.

Whether a witness is shown to be qualified or not as an expert, is a preliminary question to be determined in the first place by the court; and the rule is, that if the court admits the testimony, then it is for the jury to decide whether any, and if any what, weight is to be given to the testimony. Cases arise where it is very much a matter of discretion with the court whether to receive or exclude the evidence; but the appellate court will not reverse in such a case, unless the ruling is manifestly erroneous. Townboat Co. v. Starrs, 69 Pa., 36; Page v. Parker, 40 N. H., 48; Tucker v. R. R. Co., 118 Mass., 546.

Experts may be examined, says Justice Grier, to explain the terms of art and the state of the art, at any given time. Speaking of controversies between a patentee and an infringer, he says that experts may explain to the court and jury the machines, models or drawings exhibited in the case. They may point out the difference or identity of the mechanical devices involved in their construction, and adds, that the maxim "Cuique in sua arte credendum," permits them to be examined in questions of art or science peculiar to their trade or profession. Winans v. R. R. Co., 21 How., 88 [62 U. S., XVI., 68]; Ogden v. Parsons, 23 How., 167 [64 U. S., XVI., 410].

Even if the witnesses are not properly to be regarded as experts, the court is of the opinion that the testimony was properly admitted as a matter of common knowledge.

Well guarded instructions were given to the jury on the subject, as appears from the transcript. Their attention was directed to the testimony, and they were told that it was for them to determine its weight, which shows that the defendant has no just ground of complaint.

3. Complaint is also made by the defendant that one sentence of the charge of the court in respect to the damages is erroneous. When you have made up your mind, said the Judge, as to the amount really sustained, you are not to be nice in the award of compensation. It should be liberal.

Exception was taken to that remark without request for a different instruction, or that it should be qualified or explained in any way. Before that remark was made the Judge cautioned the jury against giving credence to any extravagant statement of the injuries received, and then told them that when they had made up their minds as to the amount, meaning the amount of the injury really sustained, they should not be nice in the award of compensation; adding, as if to qualify the antecedent caution given in favor of the defendant, that it should be liberal.

In examining the charge of the court, for the purpose of ascertaining its correctness in point of law, the whole scope and bearing of it must be taken together. It is wholly inadmissible to take up single and detached passages and to decide upon them, without attending to the context or without incorporating such qualifications and explanations as naturally flow from other parts of the instructions. Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet., 348.

Instructions given by the court at the trial are entitled to a reasonable interpretation, and if the proposition as stated is not erroneous, they are not, as a general rule, to be regarded as incorrect on account of omissions or deficiencies not pointed out by the excepting party. Castle v. Bullard, 23 How., 172 [64 U. S., XVI., 424].

Appellate courts are not inclined to grant a new trial on account of an ambiguity in the charge to the jury, where it appears that the complaining party made no effort at the trial to have the matter explained. Locke v. U. S., 2 Cliff., 574; Smith v. McNamara, 4 Lans., 169.

Requests for such a purpose may be made at the close of the charge, to call the attention of the judge to the supposed error, inaccuracy or ambiguity of expression; and where nothing of the kind is done, the judgment will not be reversed, unless the court is of the opinion that the jury were misled or wrongly directed. Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet., 1; White v. McLean, 57 N. Y., 670.

None of the exceptions can be sustained, and there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Cited—15 N. W. Rep., 93.

See 9 OTTO.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF BOURBON COUNTY, KANSAS, Plff.

in Err.,

v.

JOHN H. D. BLOCK.

JOHN H. D. BLOCK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF BOURBON COUNTY.

(See S. C., 9 Otto, 686-699.)

County bonds—former judgment, when a bar—bona fide holder of coupons—election—new election—Kansas Act—subsequent state judgment.

1. Where a judgment has been rendered by the State Supreme Court against the validity of coupons of county bonds, their owner, who was a party to such judgment, cannot, while still owning them, recover upon them in another action in a third person's name. Such judgment pleaded in the new action is a conclusive answer to the suit founded upon those coupons.

2. A bona fide holder of other coupons, who has purchased them for a valuable consideration, without actual notice of any defense which could be set up against them, where there was legislative authority for the issue of the bonds, and the condition upon which it was allowed to be exercised had been fulfilled, may enforce them.

3. For all legal purposes, the result of an election is what it is declared to be by the authorized Board of Canvassers empowered to make the canvass at the time when the returns should be made, until its decision has been reversed by a superior power; and a reversal has no effect upon acts lawfully done prior to it.

4. A new election subsequently ordered and held, and the action of the Board after the bonds were issued, are immaterial.

5. Under the Kansas Statute of 1865, it is not necessary to name any particular company in the submission to the popular vote. A description of a railroad company may well be made without mentioning its corporate name.

6. This court will not follow a state judgment not given until after the bonds were issued and after the rights of the holders thereof had become fixed, which is not in harmony with many rulings of this court, made and repeated through a long series of years.

[Nos. 234, 290.]

Argued Apr. 13, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. J. E. McKeighan, Jno. C. Orrick and A. L. Williams, for Board of Commissioners:

In No. 234.

The case of the Comrs. of Johnson County v. Thayer, 94 U. S., 631 (XXIV., 133), contains the latest and most forcible enunciation of the law applicable to this case. If a majority of the electors cast their votes against the proposition to issue bonds, the entire foundation for the proceedings is gone. There is an absolute want of jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter, and an attempt to do so is void, as are all proceedings or issues based upon it. With this elemental failure existing in that case, other and further decisions tending to the same result are not to be regarded as authority.

NOTE.—Suits on coupons detached from bonds. See note to Kenosha v. Lamson, 76 U. S., XIX., 725.

Mandamus to compel city, town or county to levy tax to pay bonds or interest on bonds. See note to The Mayor v. U. S., 76 U. S., XIX., 704.

But it will be urged that the so-called canvass of the Commissioners is conclusive. This was argued in the Lewis case, and overruled, and approved by this court in the Johnson County case.

The purchaser of bonds like those in suit, must inquire and find both legislative and actual authority; and even if the Commissioners had made a record which, on its face was clean, and which showed that the bonds were authorized to be issued by a majority vote, yet, as this court has said, the court has jurisdiction to inquire for itself whether or not such was the fact. This principle has peculiar force in this case. The County Commissioners had no express authority to canvass the vote; no time was named when a canvass should be made; and the record which was made contained enough to lead to a discovery of the truth.

Lewis v. Comrs. Bourbon Co., 12 Kan., 186.

The record of the meeting of May 10, 1867, at which the votes were canvassed, distinctly informs the purchaser that there were two townships whose votes were not canvassed: Franklin and Walnut, but "that there was no evidence that there had been an election in those townships." This is simply equivalent to saying that, at the time of the canvass, the returns had not come in. The presumption of the law is that there was an election.

There is no estoppel in this case against the County. There are no recitals in the bonds. The County does not, and never did, hold the stock of the company, but assigned it at the solicitation of the company, for a nominal consideration.

The bonds are void at all points; and the bonds themselves, instead of silencing inquiry by their statements, excite it.

The familiar argument of acquiescence by the people is of no force in Kansas. The individual tax payers were powerless.

Craft v. Comrs. of Jackson Co., 5 Kan., 518.

In No. 290.

1. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Kansas in the case of Lewis v. Comrs. of Bourbon Co., was final as to all coupons held by said Lewis, or for him by the plaintiff.

Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall., 619 (74 U. S., XIX., 205).

A judgment in mandamus at common law would not be a bar; but it is submitted that, under the laws of Kansas, it is a bar.

Gen. Stat., 1868, sec. 688, pp. 766, 767; State v. Marston, 6 Kan., 524; State v. Jeff. Co. Comrs., 11 Kan., 66.

In modern practice, the writ of mandamus is nothing more than an ordinary process in cases where it is applicable.

Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How., 66 (65 U. S., XVI., 171); Gilman v. Bassett, 33 Conn., 298; Arberry v. Beavers, 6 Tex., 457.

Where a party has resorted to mandamus, he cannot maintain another suit for the same cause of action.

Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How., 87.

Mr. John D. Stevenson, for Block:

In No. 234.

When a corporation has power under any circumstances to issue negotiable securities, the bona fide holder has the right to presume that they were issued under the circumstances which give the requisite authority, and that they are no more liable to be impeached for any infirmity in the hands of such holder than any other commercial paper.

City of Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall., 283 (81 U. S., XX., 809); Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall., 203 (68 U. S., XVII., 524); Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 (62 U. S., XVI., 208); Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall., 784 (72 U. S., XVIII., 559); Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 24 How., 299 (65 U. S., XVI., 671).

A county may be estopped against asserting that the conditions attached to a grant of power were not fulfilled, by the fact that the county had subsequently levied taxes to pay interest on the bonds.

Pendleton Co. v. Amy, 13 Wall., 297 (80 U. S., XX., 579).

Power to issue bonds being shown, the municipal corporation, as against a bona fide holder for value, is estopped to deny that the power was properly executed.

Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall., 654 (70 U. S., XVIII., 79); Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall., 356 (82 U. S., XXI., 170); Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 (68 U. S., XVII., 548); Meyer v. Muscatine, 1 Wall., 384 (68 U. S., XVII., 564); The Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall., 409 (76 U. S., XIX., 704); Aurora v. West, 7 Wall., 82 (74 U. S., XIX., 42); Beloit v. Morgan, Id., 619 (74 U. S., XIX., 205).

Corporations cannot, by their acts, representations or silence, involve others in onerous engagements.

Moran v. Miami County, 2 Black, 722 (67 U. S., XVII., 342); also, Zabriskie v. C. C. & C. R. R. Co., 23 How., 400 (64 U. S., XVI., 497); Bissell v. Jeffersonville, Clark v. Supervisors, 27 Ill., 305.

In No. 290.

The proceedings by mandamus, Lewis v. Comrs. of Bourbon Co., 12 Kan., 186, was to compel the county officials to perform a duty imposed on them by statute. The only judgment that could be rendered was, to grant or deny the writ.

Stat. of Kan., Rev. of 1868, p. 760.

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Kansas is no part of the judgment.

Gibson v. Chouteau, 8 Wall., 314 (75 U. S., XIX., 317).

This court will decide the validity of the bonds under the laws of Kansas for itself.

Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall., 666 (86 U. S., XXII., 227).

The judgment in Lewis v. Bourbon Co., 12 Kan., 186, if held to be an estoppel, is only good against the coupons due July 1st, 1872.

Big. Estop., 104, 111; Goodrich v. Yale, 8 Allen, 454.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

These are writs of error complaining of one judgment. The plaintiff, Block, brought suit to recover the amount of $16,800 alleged to be due him upon past-due interest coupons detached from bonds made and issued by Bourbon County. From the findings of fact made by the court below it appears that the plaintiff is the bona fide owner of twenty of the bonds from which part of the coupons in suit were taken, and that he purchased them in open market without actual notice of any defense the county now sets up against them. The remaining coupons are the property of one William J. Lewis, delivered by him to the plaintiff to be collected, not for the benefit of Block, but for that of Lewis, the true owner. Whether, in view of such a finding, a recovery for them can be had in this suit, if there were no other objection to it, we do not now determine. There is another and graver question to be considered. The Lewis coupons had been in litigation before this suit was commenced. In January, 1873, he applied to the Supreme Court of the State for a mandamus, suggesting that he was the owner of bonds of the County, one hundred in number, and numbered from one to one hundred, and of the coupons attached to the same; that he was the holder, bearer, and owner of the one hundred coupons due and payable July 1, 1873, part of the coupons now in suit; that a tax had been levied and collected amply sufficient to pay those coupons, but that the County had refused to pay them. The suggestion further represented that the proper officers of the County had neglected and refused to take the necessary steps to make provision for the payment of the coupons falling due in 1873, in January and July, and by an alternative writ the Board of Commissioners of the County were commanded to pay the coupons due in 1873, and to provide for levying a tax sufficient to pay the coupons as they should fall due in 1873.

To this alternative writ the Commissioners answered, in substance, denying the validity and obligation of the bonds. Much of the answer was formal and quite immaterial, but there was also much of substance. It was denied that there had been any proper submission to the electors of the County, of the question whether the County should subscribe to the stock, or issue bonds to the railroad company to which the bonds were issued, to wit: the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company. The answer further averred that, though there was a submission to the electors, of the question whether the County would vote $150,000 to any railroad running east to connect with the aforesaid road, a majority of the votes cast at the election ordered was cast against the proposition. It further avers that though the Commissioners canvassed the vote and decided from the returns before it that a majority had voted in favor of the proposition, the returns from one township were not brought in until after the canvass had been completed, and until after the Board had adjourned, and that if the return from that township had been made in season and had been counted, a majority would have appeared against the proposition submitted. This belated return remained unopened until years afterwards, until after the bonds had been issued and after a new submission to the electors had resulted in the vote of a decided majority in favor of the bonds. This new submission, it was averred, was made in 1869, and it was not until after the vote had been taken that a subscription was made to the stock of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, and the bonds of the county were issued in payment. At the time when the subscription was ordered to be made and the bonds were directed to be executed and delivered to the railroad company, it was also ordered that the stock of the County in the railroad company should be sold to the Land-Grant and Trust Company of New York, for the sum of $5.

Upon the issue thus tendered and made up, the case was tried by the Supreme Court of the State, and a judgment was given for the defendant. What the effect of this judgment was has a most important bearing upon the inquiry whether there can be any recovery in the present suit for the coupons belonging to Lewis, the relator in the application for the mandamus.

To obtain a clear appreciation of that, it is necessary to observe closely what was in issue in the proceeding in the state court and, consequently, what was adjudicated. It was not denied that Lewis was the owner of the one hundred bonds to which the coupons now in suit for his use were attached. It was not denied that the coupons were due and unpaid, as averred in the suggestion and alternative writ. Nor was it denied that the officers of the County had power, and that it was their duty to levy a tax to pay them and to make payment, if they were a lawful debt of the County. In legal effect all this was admitted. The only issue tendered and the only issue tried was that tendered by the answer, namely: that the bonds and coupons were unauthorized by law, because a majority of the voters of the County, voting at the election in 1867, had not sanctioned a subscription to the stock of the railroad company, and approved the proposition submitted for the issue of the bonds. If they had not, the bonds were unauthorized, and the coupons, of course, constituted no debt of the county. Then the relator was not entitled to his mandamus. If, on the other hand, the bonds and coupons were lawfully issued, either in pursuance of the vote of 1867 or that of 1869, they did constitute a debt of the County, and a mandamus to enforce their payment necessarily followed. The court gave judgment for the defendant, as we have seen, and thus decided that the bonds and coupons held and owned by Lewis were invalid. Such was the necessary effect of the judgment. The issue tried was a material one, and the judgment could not have been rendered without deciding it. Now that a judgment in a suit between two parties is conclusive in any other suit between them, or their privies, of every matter that was decided therein, and that was essential to the decision made, is a doctrine too familiar to need citation of authorities in its support. A few cases go farther, and rule that it is conclusive of matters incidentally cognizable, if they were in fact decided. To this we do not assent. But it is certain that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is everywhere conclusive evidence of every fact upon which it must necessarily have been founded. As between Lewis, therefore, and Bourbon County the judgment of the State Supreme Court finally established that the coupons, which he held and which he subsequently placed in the hands of Block, the plaintiff in the present suit, were invalid and constituted no part of the debt of the County. As that judgment was pleaded in the present case, it was a conclusive answer to the suit so far as it was founded upon those coupons. The plaintiff's writ of error, consequently, cannot be sustained.

The coupons held and owned by Block are in a different position. As between him and the County there is no estoppel. He was not party to the suit in which the Lewis coupons were adjudged invalid, and he is unaffected by the judgment therein. Of the coupons which he holds, he is a bona fide holder, having purchased them for a valuable consideration, without actual notice of any defense which could be set up against them. When he bought, he was under no obligation to look further than to see that there was legislative authority for the issue of the bonds, and that the condition upon which it was allowed to be exercised had been fulfilled. If there was such authority, and the precedent conditions had been performed, the bonds and coupons are valid obligations of the County, which he, as their owner, may enforce.

The bonds are dated July 1, 1870, and on their face they purport to have been issued by order of the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Bourbon, Kansas, dated March 8, 1867, and they are made payable to the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company or bearer.

The authority under which it is claimed they were issued was an Act of the Legislature of the State of Feb. 10, 1865, amended by an Act passed Feb. 26, 1866. By that it was enacted "That the Board of County Commissioners of any county to, into, from or near which, whether in this State or any other State, any railroad is or may be located, may subscribe to the capital stock of any such railroad corporation in the name and for the benefit of such county, not exceeding in amount the sum of $300,000 in any one corporation, and may issue the bonds of such county, in such amounts as they may deem best, in payment of said stock; * * * but no such bonds shall be issued until the question shall first be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of the county at some general election, or at some special election to be called by the Board of County Commissioners; * * * and in submitting such question said Board of Directors shall direct in what manner the ballots shall be cast. If a majority of the votes cast at such election shall be in favor of issuing such bonds, the Board of Commissioners of the county shall issue the same."

In this Act several things are to be noticed. The bonds were allowed to be issued in payment for subscriptions to stock of any railroad company, whether its road was then located, or might be thereafter, whether it was in the State or out of it, in the county or out of it, provided the question of subscription to the stock and issuing the bonds was first submitted to a vote of the qualified electors, and a majority was found in favor of issuing the bonds. Another thing is manifest. It was the legislative intention that the Board of Commissioners should be the body which should submit the question of subscription and issue of the bonds to popular decision, and they were also deputed to determine the result of the election; we mean the Board as it was constituted at the time when an election might be held.

Authorized by this statute, the Board of County Commissioners, on the 8th of March, 1867, submitted to the electors of the County the question whether there should be subscribed for the County $150,000 to the stock of any railroad company then organized, or that might thereafter be organized, that should construct a railroad commencing at a point on the Tebo and Neosho Railroad running westward, via Fort

Scott (in Bourbon County), and should issue bonds to the company for the same. Pursuant to this submission an election was held, the returns of which were canvassed at the proper time by the Board, and the result declared to be that a majority of the votes had been cast in favor of the subscription and the issue of the bonds. This was on the 10th of May, 1867. The declaration of the result was duly entered upon the minutes of the Board. Subsequently an additional return was made from one township which was not before the Board when the canvass was made. Had it been, the result would have been different. But this return was not opened until June 27, 1872; long after the bonds had been issued. Upon the records of the Board nothing appeared to impeach the canvass made in 1867, though in the files of the office the belated poll-book remained unopened. It is hardly necessary to say that the Board, as it was in 1872, had no authority to make a new canvass of the election held in 1867, after the bonds had been issued and purchasers had bought on the faith of the canvass first made. The bonds, it is true, contain no recitals. If they did contain a recital that an election had been held, and that a majority had voted for the issue of the bonds, the recital would have been conclusive upon the County, and a purchaser would have needed to look no further than to the Act of the Legislature. This is according to all our decisions. But, in the absence of any recital, it may be conceded he was bound to inquire whether a majority vote had been returned for the issue of the bonds. But where was he to inquire? Plainly only of the Board whose province it was to ascertain and declare the result of the election. Had he gone to their records, they would have shown that the popular vote was in favor of the bond issue. They showed nothing else until 1872. He was not bound to canvass the vote for himself, or to revise and correct a mistaken canvass, any more than he was bound to inquire into the qualification of the electors. And if, relying upon the canvass of the Board and the declared result, he accepted the obligations of the County, it would be a strange doctrine were we to hold that a second canvass, made many years afterwards, could reverse the first and annul rights that had been acquired under it. There is no such law. For all legal purposes, the result of an election is what it is declared to be by the authorized Board of Canvassers empowered to make the canvass at the time when the returns should be made, until their decision has been reversed by a superior power, and a reversal has no effect upon acts lawfully done prior to it. The County of Bourbon is, therefore, estopped, in a suit by a bondholder whose bonds were issued in 1870, from asserting that the canvass of 1867 was incorrect, and that in fact no majority of the qualified electors had voted in favor of the issue of the bonds. All that took place afterwards, all the new evidence that was discovered, the new election ordered and held in 1869, and the action of the Board after the bonds were issued, are immaterial. It follows that much of the argument of the learned counsel for the County, who has argued against the validity of the bonds and coupons, is unsound. It assumes, what cannot be admitted, that a majority of the votes cast at the election in 1867 was against the issue of the bonds, when it was conclusively established by the decision of the tribunal appointed by law to determine the result of the election, that the contrary was the fact.

We pass now to the consideration of some of the objections made to the order of the County Board of March 8, 1867, submitting to the qualified electors the question whether there should be a subscription made to the stock of any railroad organized, or that might thereafter be organized, that should build a railroad commencing at a point on the Tebo and Neosho Railroad and running westward to Fort Scott, and whether county bonds should be issued to said company therefor. It is said this did not authorize a subscription to the stock of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, or the issue of bonds to it. The objection, in view of the facts that appear in the record, is of no weight. When the order was made, that company had been incorporated by the Legislature of Missouri, and had projected its road along and near the northern boundary of that State through a county adjoining Bourbon. The order of the County Board contemplated a connection of Fort Scott with that road, and the issue of bonds to any company that would make that connection. A part of the connecting road was necessarily in Missouri and a part in Kansas. The Missouri corporation could only build, by its own direct action, to the State line, and a Kansas corporation could only build the part in Kansas; but the Tebo and Neosho Company could and did cause the entire line to be constructed. It had power by its charter to extend, construct, maintain and operate its railroad and branches beyond the limits of the State, so far as Missouri could give it that power. In 1869, that company, under legislative authority, sold all its privileges, rights, powers and franchises to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, organized under the laws of Kansas, stipulating that the vendee should assume all indebtedness incurred for the construction, or otherwise, of the line between Sedalia, Mo., and Fort Scott, in Bourbon County, Kansas. Accordingly, the road begun by the Tebo and Neosho Company was constructed and extended to and beyond Fort Scott, and is now in operation. There can be no doubt that this was a compliance by the Tebo and Neosho Company with the conditions prescribed by the order of the County Board. It built the road through the agency of the Kansas corporation and it, therefore, answered the description made in the order of submission. The County Commissioners subscribed to its stock and issued the bonds to it, or bearer, and their action was warranted, as we have said, by the terms of the submission and its approval. It was not a case of authority given to issue bonds to one railroad company and their issue to another.

We have said enough in refutation of the argument, that because the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company was a Missouri corporation and could not, therefore, extend its road into Kansas, it was excluded from the roads contemplated in the order and election. If it was, then every railroad company was excluded, for even a Kansas company could not build a road into Missouri. Yet the order and election meant something. No company was named in the order. None could be. But a description was given that pointed unmistakably to the company that caused the work to be done. In Johnson Co. Comrs. v. Thayer, 94 U. S., 631 [XXIV., 133], this court held that under the Kansas Statute of 1865 it is not necessary to name any particular company in the submission to the popular vote. A description of a railroad company may well be made without mentioning its corporate name.

See 9 OTTO.

This is all that, in our judgment, these cases require. We have not deemed it necessary to invoke, in aid of our conclusions, the provisions of the curative Act of 1868, for we think it is not open to question that a majority of the qualified electors of the County approved the subscription that was made and the issue of the bonds. That was finally determined by the Board whose duty it was to canvass the result of the election and declare the result. Their decision has never been reversed by any competent authority, and it cannot be impeached collaterally. Nor do we place any reliance upon the second order, made in 1869, and the election held thereunder, resulting in a large majority in favor of the subscription and issue of the bonds. The bonds stand on the order and vote of 1867, as determined by the Canvassing Board at that time.

Nor can we yield assent to the claim that the Acts of 1865 and 1866 were repealed by the General Statutes of 1868. Certainly there was no express repeal, and we can discover no necessary implication of a repeal. And it may be added that the Supreme Court of the State seem to regard those Acts as still in force. Lewis v. The Comrs., 12 Kan., 186, gives no intimation to the contrary, though the court had before it the questions we are now considering. In Morris v. Morris Co., 7 Kan., 576, decided in 1871, the court said: "The Acts of 1865-6 have never been expressly repealed; and if they have ever been impliedly repealed, all rights, power and authority that had accrued under them prior to their repeal had at least been impliedly reserved." And again; "Whatever was done under the Acts of 1865 and 1866, prior to the passage of the Acts of 1868, continued in force the same as though the Acts of 1868 had never been passed."

We have not overlooked the opinion delivered by the Supreme Court of the State in Lewis v. The Comrs. [supra]. The judgment in the case was not given until after the bonds were issued, and after the rights of the holders thereof had become fixed. We are, therefore, at liberty to follow our own convictions of the law. To those expressed by the state court we cannot assent. They are not in harmony with many rulings of this court, made and repeated through a long series of years, and they are not such as in our opinion would administer substantial justice if applied to this case.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Clifford, dissenting:

Two cases are disposed of by the opinion in this case. I dissent from the judgment in the first case, and concur in the judgment in the second case.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See "Sinking Fund Cases," 9 Otto 700-727.)

Union Pacific Railroad sinking fund—power of Congress—effect of deposit—earnings from services rendered Government—amendment—Act of 1878.

1. That part of the Act of May 7, 1878, to aid in the construction of a railroad, etc., from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, etc., which establishes in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund, is constitutional.

2. That part of said Act does not deprive the Union Pacific Railroad Company of its property without due process of law, or in any other way improperly interfere with vested rights; but is a reasonable regulation, promotive of the interests of the public and the corporators.

3. Whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter, for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment to such charter.

4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is made the sinking fund agent, and the Treasury of the United States the depository, or that the investment is to be made in the public funds of the United States, does not make the deposit a payment of the debt due the United States.

5. It is not a fatal objection that the half of the earnings for services rendered the Government, is retained and put into this fund, for this money, although kept in the Treasury, is owned by the Company.

[No. 1083.]

Argued Mar. 19, 20, 21, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Court of Claims. The appellant brought suit in the court below, to recover one half of the amount allowed it as compensation for transporting troops, etc., which sum, demanded, was retained by the Secretary of the Treasury by authority of Act of Congress approved May 7, 1878, to be turned into a sinking fund.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. Samuel Shellabarger and Jeremiah M. Wilson, for appellant.

The question is, whether the United States, having made to its citizen a loan of money, upon full and valuable considerations other than the promise of repayment at the end of thirty years, as well as upon consideration of the promise of such repayment; and such borrower, the claimant, having long since rendered and paid such other full consideration for said loan on time, and the borrower and lender having agreed on, and given and received at the time of the loan, all the security for repayment of the loan which the parties either required or contemplated as a condition of the loan, may the lender now, of its own motion, and fifteen years before any part of the loan is due, order either the present payment of the debt, or that the moneys of the borrower shall be now seized by the lender, and by it be held and managed as a fund for the payment of this debt until the maturity thereof, and then applied to its payment?

The claimant, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, as a person, "a citizen," O. & M. R. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 286 (66 U. S., XVII., 130), was created before this loan was made; this, under and in virtue of the Act of 1862.

II. The claimant, at the date of this loan, was not merely a person capable of making a contract with the defendant fixing the terms of the loan, but "was not", to here adopt the words of this court in the late case unreported, which, for the sake of identifying it, we shall denominate the Credit Mobilier Case," (ante, 143) "a mere creature of the United States; but while it owes duties to the Government, which may in a proper case be enforced, it is still a private corporation, the same as any other railroad company;" and as such private corporation the said "railroad and telegraph line are neither in whole nor in part the property of the Government, but the ownership is in the claimant, a private corporation." R. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall., 32 (85 U. S., XXI., 792). Hence, any property held by the claimant in the terms of this contract of loan, is the private property of this private corporation.

III. This private property of this private corporation, whether held in the terms of this contract of loan or in aught else, is not subject to any outstanding trust, in, or in favor of, the United States, in virtue of which the United States can assert, by suit or Act of Congress, any trust dominion whatever over such property, or deal with the terms of this loan otherwise than as any ordinary loan.

IV. In the words of the court, as found in the case last cited, "The Government sustains two distinct relations to this railroad company. The power of Congress, therefore, in its sovereign and legislative capacity over this corporation is very great."

The Government, however, holds another and very important relation to the Company, namely: that of contractor.

Citing U. S. v. R. R. Co., 91 U. S., 72 (XXIII., 224), under this contract relation of lender, therefore, "There is no ground of relief on account of money due by the defendant to the plaintiff."

V. Since all this is conclusively adjudged or confessedly true, and must, in this case, under the state of the pleadings, be assumed as true, therefore this Funding Act, in its order to seize, by mere mandate of Congress, the moneys and property of this company; to hold, manage and use these according to its mere pleasure; to deprive the company of the right to enjoy, manage, and use its own income under the rights and dominion which belong to ownership; to do this, in pretended security and for ultimate payment of a debt not due by about the seventh of a century, and for which delay of payment the Government has already exacted and been paid an enormous consideration; and to do this in the very teeth of the exact and unambiguous letter of this "distinct" contract of loan, by which it was stipulated that "only one half of the price of transportation and five per cent. of net earnings should be annually applied in payment of such thirty year loan, and that the residue should be demandable and paid only at the end of thirty years, is grossly violative of every guarantee of property right known to this Government."

It violates that limitation which declares:

(a) The legislature has "no power over the substance of that original justice" which is the basis of all government and of society itself;

(b) That the obligations of contracts shall not be impaired;

(c) That property shall be taken for the public use only upon full compensation;

(d) That none shall be deprived of property save by due process of law.

Reserved power of amendment is not, in its terms, an unconditional one.

This court has repeatedly held that these two Acts of 1862 and 1864, being in pari materia, must be considered and read as one Act. In the recent decision of this court in the case of The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company v. Kansas Pacific, this was considered and held; and on this principle it was there decided that the title of the companies to their land grants "took effect, by relation, as of the date of the Act" of 1862. The same principle is declared in Union Pacific Railroad Company v. Hall, 91 U. S., 350 (XXIII., 430), and in other cases.

Congress has no power to interpret laws.

In fixing our rights under these statutes, they shall utter language both as to the past and the future, only through the mouth of the judiciary of the land, and not through Congress. How far Congress has power to alter and amend these laws, is another and the main point, to which we presently again come; but with the exception of its power to change the language of these Acts by amendment, Congress is powerless to declare what the laws as they now stand have meant, or shall in the future mean.

Cooley, Const. Lim., 84, note 1, says: "It is well said in Haley v. Philadelphia, 68 Pa., 45, it would be monstrous to maintain that when the words and intention of an Act were so plain that no court had ever been applied to for the purpose of declaring their meaning, it was, therefore, in the power of the Legislature, by retrospective law, to put a construction upon them contrary to the obvious letter and spirit."

Justice Gibson, in Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa., 494, says: "How a mandate to the courts to establish a particular interpretation of a particular statute can be taken for anything else than an exercise of judicial power in settling a question of interpretation, I know not." And in the text, Mr. Cooley explicitly states what is the indisputable law on this point. He says, page 94: "As the Legislature cannot set aside the construction of the law already applied by the courts to actual cases, neither can it compel the courts, for the future, to adopt a particular construction of a law which the Legislature permits to remain in force. To declare what the law is or has been, is a judicial power. To declare what the law shall be, is legislative. One of the fundamental principles of all our governments is, that the legislative power shall be separate from the judicial."

Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns., 498; Lambertson v. Hogan, 2 Pa. St., 25; Ogden v. Blackledge, 2 Cranch, 272; see, also, Governor v. Porter, 5 Humph., 165; People v. Supervisors, 16 N. Y., 424; Reiser v. Tell. Asso's, 39 Pa., 137; Dundas v. Bowler, 3 McL., 397.

The power of amendment cannot destroy vested rights.

The leading case upon this point is The Commonwealth v. The Essex Company, 13 Gray, 239, and the opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Shaw. In that case the reserved right of amendment was unlimited. And yet in this case, where the question was the validity of the attempt to so amend as to require the making the additional fishways to those required by the charter, the court unanimously declare the legislation void, and Judge Shaw says, among other things:

"The rule to be extracted is this, that when under power in a charter, rights have been acquired and become vested, no amendment or alteration of the charter can take away the property or rights which have become vested under a legitimate exercise of the powers granted."

Commonwealth v. Bridge Proprs., 2 Gray 339.

In Miller v. State, 15 Wall., 498 (82 U. S., XXI., 104) this court adopts the words of Judge Shaw.

See, also, Holyoke v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 522 (83 U. S., XXI., 140).

By the definition of this court, the alteration must be one which "will defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant, or any rights which have vested under it."

In Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 324 (XXIV., 357, 359), the court uses these words: "The power of alteration and amendment is not without limit. The alterations must be reasonable; they must be made in good faith; they must be consistent with the scope and object of the Act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong cannot be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration. Beyond the sphere of the reserve powers, the vested rights of property of corporations, in such cases, are surrounded by the same restriction, and are as inviolable as in other cases."

Sage v. Dillard, 15 B. Mon., 357; Miller v. Erie R. R. Co., 21 Barb., 513.

Power of Congress to impair the obligation of contracts.

Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet., 657, opinion by Mr. Justice Story, is exactly in point "That government can scarcely be deemed free, where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon the will of the legislative body, without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require that the rights of personal liberty and of private property should be held sacred. At least, no court of justice in this country would be warranted in assuming that the power to violate and disregard them—a power so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty—lurked under any general grant of legislative power, or ought to be implied from any general expression of the will of the people." * * * * A different doctrine is utterly inconsistent with the great and fundamental principles of a republican government.

In Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall., 388, "A law that destroys or impairs the lawful private contracts of citizens," is declared to be "against all reason and justice," and, therefore, not law; and the court adds, in speaking of the powers of Legislatures: "They command what is right and prohibit what is wrong, but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract, or the right of private property. To maintain that our Federal or State Legislature possess such powers, if they had not been expressly restrained would, in my opinion, be a political heresy, altogether inadmissible in our free republican governments."

In Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall., 623 (75 U. S., XIX., 526), the court upon this point says:

"We cannot doubt that a law, not made in pursuance of an express power, which necessarily and in its direct operation, impairs the obligation of contracts, is inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution."

True it is that Hepburn v. Griswold, has been, in one particular, overruled in Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall., 457 (79 U. S., XX., 287), but these remarks of Chief Justice Chase, so far as they have reference to an attempt by Congress to "directly" destroy a contract, as in this Funding Act, are not controverted by Mr. Justice Strong, who delivered the leading opinion in The Legal Tender Cases.

Osborn v. Nicholson, 13 Wall., 662 (80 U. S., XX., 695).

In Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 163, Chief Justice Marshall uses the following language:

"The Government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws, and not of men. It will certainly cease to deserve this high appellation, if the laws furnish no remedy for the violation of vested rights."

See also, Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 135.

In Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat., 206; Chief Justice Marshall discussed the questions of the purpose of the Convention which framed the Federal Constitution in regard to the protection of private contracts, and the prevention of the mischief which had arisen out of their violation. In that connection he used the following words:

"To restore public confidence completely, it was necessary not only to prohibit the use of particular means by which it might be effected, but to prohibit the use of any means by which the same mischief might be produced. The Convention appears to have intended to establish a great principle, that contracts should be inviolable."

In the 44th number of the Federalist, p. 281, it is said that "Bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts, are contrary to the first principles of the social compact, and to every principle of sound legislation. The two former are expressly prohibited by the declarations prefixed to some of the State Constitutions, and all of them are prohibited by the spirit and scope of these fundamental charters. Our own experience has taught us, nevertheless, that additional defenses against these dangers ought not to be omitted. Very properly, therefore, have the Convention added this constitutional bulwark in favor of personal security and private rights."

Is it conceivable that the framers of the Constitution, with these words upon their lips, declaring that the impairment, by legislation of the obligations of contract, was prohibited by the "spirit and scope of all existing constitutional charters, and that additional defense against the danger of such impairment by Legislatures should not be omitted from the Federal Constitution" and yet designed at the same moment to transfer the power of impairing the obligation of contracts from the States to the Federal Government?

The reasoning of the Judges, as found in Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 213, shows that no such absurdity as that just stated is attributable to the framers of the Federal Constitution.

See especially pages 354 and 355 of 12 Wheat.

The case of Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall., 655 (87 U. S., XXII., 455), covers the legal principle that property vested in contracts is, like all other property, protected against invasion by the Legislature, whether State or National.

Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations, page 175, says:

"The bill of rights in the American Constitution, forbids that parties shall be deprived of property except by the law of the land; but if the prohibition had been omitted, a legislative enactment to pass one man's property over to another, would nevertheless be void. If the Act proceeded upon the assumption that such other person was justly entitled to the estate, and therefore it was transferred, it would be void, because judicial in its nature; and if it proceeded without reasons, it would be equally void, because neither legislative nor judicial, but a mere arbitrary fiat."

The note is as follows:

"Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Bay, 252; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet., 657; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 43; Ervine's Appeal, 16 Pa., 266. It is now considered a universal and fundamental proposition in every well regulated and properly administered government, whether embodied in a constitutional form or not, that private property cannot be taken for a strictly private purpose at all, nor for public, without a just compensation; and that the obligation of contracts cannot be abrogated or essentially impaired. These and other vested rights of the citizen are held sacred and inviolable, even against the plenitudes of power in the legislative department." Nelson, J., in People v. Morris, 13 Wend., 328.

In Duer, on Constitutional Jurisprudence, it is said, page 356: "But the National Legislature has no power to interfere with contracts, except where it is expressly given to it."

The power to impair the obligation of contracts, save as to bankruptcy, is neither expressly granted, nor necessary as an incident of any grant. Hence, it was not necessary to be prohibited, by the Constitution, to Congress, as it was necessary, or at least prudent, to do as to the States; simply because, not being granted to Congress, it was prohibited to Congress by the clause reserving all powers not granted to the States or the people. See, also, Gideon v. U. S., 1 Abb. Dig., 568, sec. 370.

Claimant had a vested estate in the thirty year loan.

On this point this court lays down the rule in these words, in the cases of Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat., 84; and in Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall., 553 [71 U. S., XVIII., 409]:

"The objections to a law on the ground of its impairing the obligation of a contract, can never depend upon the extent of the change which the law effects in it. Any deviation from its terms by postponing or accelerating the period of performance which it prescribes, imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, dispensing with the performance of those which are, however minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract of the parties, impairs its obligation." See, also, Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How., 316.

The case of Palairot's Appeal, 67 Pa., 479, brought up the question whether the Act of 15th April, 1869, was valid, which authorized irredeemable ground-rents to be discharged and paid off by payment of their value in a gross sum, to be found by a jury in a specified judicial proceeding. It was not an attempt to take property at the will of the Legislature, at less than full value, but was an attempt to compel the citizen to take its full value at a time different from that stipulated by his contract of leasing. Held invalid.

The following cases tend to illustrate the question, when and how a right becomes "vested," or becomes property, so as to be, as such, within the protection due to all forms of property:

Southard v. R. R. Co., 2 Dutch., 13; State v. Warren, 28 Md., 338; Lucas v. Sawyer, 17 Ia., 517; Burke v. Barron, 8 Ia., 132; Dunn v. Sargent, 101 Mass., 336; People v. Auditors, 9 Mich., 327; La Forge v. Magee, 6 Cal., 650; Pembroke v. Epson, 44 N. H., 113; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 605 (67 U. S., XVII., 263); Hull v. Sunderland, 3 Vt., 507; Burch v. Newbury, 10 N. Y., 374; Lewis v. Webb, 3 Me., 326; and a large number of cases cited in note on page 96, Cooley's Const. Lim.; Cooley, 289; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How., 608; the Funding Act, a device to compel payment before maturity.

The Funding Act was defended against the allegation that it compelled virtual payment, before maturity, of a debt no part of which was due, on the ground that it did not compel payment, but only security.

This reply sets up a form for the purpose of disguising substance—resorts to a device in order to hide reality—in a way which has hardly the merit of ingenuity.

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty. Gen., and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellee:

In equity, the property of the corporation is regarded as held in transfer for the payment of its debts. And it is also held, that stockholders are not entitled to any part of the capital stock or dividend of the profits, until all the debts are paid. And the rights of the creditors are recognized to pursue corporate property into whose possession soever it may have passed, unless transferred to a bona fide purchaser; even assets derived from the sale of corporate property will be regarded as substitutes for the things sold. 1 Potler, Corp., 389, sec. 308.

It is evident that the law under discussion is based upon this principle. It is the nature of a law allowing a bill quia timet; or of a statute authorizing interposition to preserve rights seen to be endangered by a course adopted and pursued by a debtor. It is the mere accident of the present case that the sovereign which creates the law is also the creditor to be protected. This does not affect the merits of the question. The interest to be subserved is the same in this as in the other cases, viz.: that of the public.

Therefore, as a matter of general legislation, this Act of May 7, 1878, might have been passed, even if the power of Congress were as restricted by existing obligation as is that of a State Legislature; or if the Acts of 1862 and of 1864 contained no reservation of the right to amend or repeal them.

II. Congress is not expressly debarred by the Constitution from passing a law which may incidentally impair or affect the obligation of a contract in some of its provisions. The prohibition is against any State doing this. Expressio unius, etc., may, perhaps, apply here. In the clause referred to (art. 1, sec. 10), it is noticeable that everything forbidden to the State is something which is competent to the United States, except the passage of attainder and ex post facto laws and the grant of a title of nobility; and this last excepted power is explicitly denied the Federal Government in the next preceding section of the Constitution, and that of passing bills of attainder and retroactive laws by another sentence of that section.

The power to establish a system of bankruptcy is a power to abrogate contracts between citizens by wholesale, "so it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations indirectly in a multitude of ways." Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall., 550 (79 U. S., XX., 311); Evans v. Eaton, 1 Pet. (C. C.), 323.

What is meant by indirect release from obligations is very evident. For instance, there is no power expressly conferred upon the United States to make any contract at all. It is implied from the erection of a sovereignty. Dugan v. U. S., 3 Wheat., 172; U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall., 407 (77 U. S., XIX., 940).

The validity of the statutes giving priority to debts due to the Government, is placed upon a constitutional duty of providing for the public debt. U. S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 396.

The effect of this priority is, that the debtor is unable to fulfill earlier obligations to individual creditors. So a statute, constitutional, as providing means to secure a debt to the Government, may take property previously inaccessible, or vary existing rights. The direct purpose is, to provide for the public debt; the indirect result is, that other creditors have to go unpaid.

III. These Acts of 1862 and 1864 are not mere contracts, but are also statutes. State v. Jersey City, 31 N. J. Law, 579, case cited infra.

As such they are liable to modification or repeal by the body originally enacting them.

Congress did not merely contract for the preservation of the Union; it passed laws to that end, reserving the right to alter and amend such laws as national exigencies might require. It authorized the construction of these roads for uses for which it was constitutionally bound to provide.

In this statute it delegated the right of eminent domain; a thing hardly to be accomplished by mere contract. In this very important particular, railroad, canal and turnpike corporations are sui generis. R. R. Comrs. v. R. R. Co., 63 Me., 276, 277, et seq.

Whatever is given by statute may be taken away by statute, especially if the right of revocation or modification is reserved.

State v. Hoeflinger, 31 Wis., 262; Perrine v. Canal Co., 9 How., 184; State v. Mayor, etc., 31 N. J. Law, 579.

The present case is not one of an interference with vested rights. It deprives the Corporations of no property, interferes with no proper exercise of corporate privileges. The contract entered into for the repayment of the government advances is not disturbed. The Companies are not required to anticipate the time for extinguishing the debts due the United States. They are simply required to furnish security that they will finally perform this agreement. The payments to constitute a sinking fund are not taken from the Company, nor do the moneys so paid belong to the United States, by whose treasurer they are held for safe-keeping, simply as a custodian in trust for the companies. The interest earned by this sinking fund inures wholly to the benefit of the Corporations, because the funds are theirs.

The law merely requires a deposit of security, just as it is exacted of insurance companies, etc. It is expressly recited in the preamble that this security is demanded, because the companies, by their operations and management of their incomes, are endangering the interests of the United States, which would be entirely insecure without further legislation. It sets out the precise state of facts which has always been held to justify similar interference with the management of corporations. The existence of these facts is for legislative ascertainment and determination, and is not at all matter of judicial inquiry or cognizance, otherwise than that the court is bound to accept, as an unquestionable verity, that condition of things which the Legislature declares to exist.

Crease v. Babcock, 23 Pick., 344; Story v. Jersey City, etc., Co., 16 N. J. Eq., 22; State v. Miller, 30 N. J. Law, 373, affirmed in 31 N. J. L., 521 and 579; Miners' Bank v. U. S., 1 Greene (la.), 563, 564; Errie R. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa., 300, et seq., per Black, J.

The requirement of a safety fund, so far from being in contravention of the design of the Acts of 1862 and 1864, is in furtherance of it.

"The reserved power (to alter and amend), may be exercised, and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant, or to secure the due administration of its affairs, so as to protect the rights of its stockholders and of creditors, and for the proper disposition of the assets."

Miller v. State of N. Y., 15 Wall., 498 (82 U. S., XXI., 104); see, also, Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall., 454 (82 U. S., XXI., 204); Peik v. R. R. Co., 94 U. S., 164 (XXIV., 97); R. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. S., 179 (XXIV., 99); C. B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S., 155 (XXIV., 94); Stone v. Wisconsin, 94 U. S., 181 (XXIV., 102).

In railroad, ferry, bridge and other similar corporations, the inducement to the corporators is evidently the excess (above expenses) of tolls or profits that may accrue to be divided.

Yet it has been repeatedly held that, under the general clause reserving the right to alter and amend, rates established in the organizing Act might be reduced, or fixed, if none were there mentioned, or if they were merely required to be reasonable.

Parker v. R. R. Co., 109 Mass., 506; Mass. Gen. Hosp. v. Life Ass. Co., 4 Gray, 227.

These corporations were conceived and created with a liability to such limitations and modifications as might subsequently be imposed, and to extinction by repeal. "Nascentes morimur, et finis ab origine pendet."

South Meadow Dam Co. v. Gray, 30 Me., 552 (top); Oliver Lee & Co's Bank, 21 N. Y., 21; R. R. Co. v. Miller, 10 Barb., 283 (top).

It would be competent for any Legislature to require a deposit of funds with the state treasurer, to meet the judgments against railroads doing business in the State, recovered by reason of any mismanagement occasioning injury to person or property in the State.

It is for the Legislature to ascertain whether or not the management of railroad companies is such as to demand a new remedy, to secure or compel performance of existing obligations.

In the present case it may be noticed, arguendo, the officers of these two Corporations communicated to Congress the fact that, under former laws they would be unable to pay the claims of the Government when they matured, or at all. See Cong. Rec., pt. II., p. 1967; and especially same vol., pt. III., p. 2101.

If there is any right which might fairly be called vested, it would be the privilege of exemption from taxation, especially if conceded upon condition that the State should share all above a given per centage of the profits; yet in the case of Hoge v. R. R. Co., No. 134 (ante, 303), this court says: that where a charter is made subject to amendment, this right of exemption exists only until the Legislature may otherwise enact.

Railroad Co v. Maine, 96 U. S., 499 (XXIV., 836).

Possibly the right to use the accepted location of the road for the purposes for which it was made, with its designated stations, etc., may be deemed more essentially and vitally a vested right than that to which allusion has just been made. In Massachusetts, however, certain corporations were required to unite in building a passenger station, to extend their tracks thereto, and thereafter to discontinue a portion of their existing locations. This court cited this case, Worcester v. R. R. Co., 109 Mass., 103, with approval in Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 319; 325 (XXIV., 357), which also see.

This reserved power of amendment has been exercised in the matter of regulating tolls (whether the reservation was expressed in the charter or made by general law, a part of every Act of incorporation) in almost every State, if not in all; or else similar modifications of the rights first conceded, have been held constitutional.

Proprietors, etc., v. Haskell, 7 Me., 474; Read v. Frankfort Bk., 23 Me., 318; Meadow Dam Co. v. Gray, 30 Me., 547; Crease v. Babcock, 23 Pick., 334; Roxbury v. R. R. Co., 6 Cush., 424; Fitchburg R. R. Co. v. Grand Junction R. R. Co., 4 Allen, 198; Comm. v. Eastern R. R. Co., 103 Mass., 254; McLaren v. Pennington, 1 Paige, 102; Schenectady & S. P. R. Co. v. Thatcher, 11 N. Y., 102; R. R. Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y., 336; Oliver Lee & Cos. Bank, 21 N. Y., 9; Matter of Reciprocity Bank, 17 How. Pr., 323; R. R. Co. v. Miller, 10 Barb., 260; White v. R. R. Co., 14 Barb., 559; Hyatt v. McMahon, 25 Barb., 457; Bailey v. Trustees, 6 R. I., 491; Gardner v. Ins. Co., 9 R. I., 194; Errie R. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa., 287; Story v. Jersey City, etc., Co., 16 N. J. Eq., 13; State v. Miller, 30 N. J. Law, 368 and 31 N. J. Law, 531; State v. Mayor, 31 N. J. Law, 575; Wilson v. Tesson, 12 Ind., 285; Perrin v. Oliver, 1 Minn., 202; Blake v. R. R. Co., 19 Ind., 418; Miners' Bk. v. U. S., 1 Green (la.), 563; R. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 3 Wis., 287; Pratt v. Brown, 3 Wis., 603; R. R. Co. v. Marsh, 17 Wis., 16; Whiting v. R. R. Co., 25 Wis., 197; State v. Milwaukee Gas Co., 29 Wis., 461; West Wis. R. R. Co. v. Supervisors, 35 Wis., 257; Atty-Gen. v. R. E. Cos., 35 Wis., 425; See, also, Sherman v. Smith, 1 Black, 587 (66 U. S., XVII., 163); Pa. College Cases, 13 Wall., 190 (80 U. S., XX., 550); Tomlinson v. Jessup, Miller v. State and Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 454 and 478, and 500, cited ante (82 U. S., XXI, 204, 98, 133); Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall., 678 (83 U. S., XXI., 382); Perrine v. Canal Co., 9 How., 184; State v. Hoeflinger, 31 Wis., 262.

The above cited case of Sherman v. Smith, is an affirmation of the decision as to Oliver Lee & Co's Bank, 21 N. Y., 9, making stockholders individually responsible for corporate debts, from which the charter exempted them. The charter was subject to amendment. This amendment gave infinitely more security to creditors, and made every stockholder's estate pledged for debts for which it was not previously holden. It greatly affected the value of the stock. So did the change mentioned in Bailey v. Hope Ins. Co., 9 R. I., 194, requiring stockholders to fill up reduced capital. The report of Lee's Bank Case, 21 N. Y., 9, cites Mass. Hosp. v. State Life Ins. Co., 4 Gray, 227 (supra). Near the commencement of his opinion, Denio, J., says: "The intention was more adequately to protect the creditors of these institutions," etc. 21 N. Y., 11. These cases are cited in the Inland Fisheries v. Holyoke Co., 104 Mass., 451.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question presented by this case is as to the constitutionality of that part of the Act of May 7, 1878, 20 Stat. at L., 56, which establishes in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund. The validity of the rest of the Act is not necessarily involved.

It is our duty, when required in the regular course of judicial proceedings, to declare an Act of Congress void if not within the legislative power of the United States; but this declaration should never be made except in a clear case. Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the Government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule.

The United States cannot, any more than a State, interfere with private rights, except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but, equally with the States, they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law. They cannot legislate back to themselves, without making compensation, the lands they have given this Corporation to aid in the construction of its railroad. Neither can they by legislation compel the Corporation to discharge its obligations in respect to the subsidy bonds otherwise than according to the terms of the contract already made in that connection. The United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals. If they repudiate their obligations, it is as much repudiation, with all the wrong and reproach that term implies, as it would be if the repudiator had been a State or a municipality or a citizen. No change can be made in the title created by the grant of the lands, or in the contract for the subsidy bonds, without the consent of the corporation. All this is indisputable.

See 9 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

The contract of the Company in respect to the subsidy bonds is to pay both principal and interest when the principal matures, unless the debt is sooner discharged by the application of one half the compensation for transportation and other services rendered for the Government, and the five per cent. of net earnings as specified in the charter. This was decided in U. S. v. R. R. Co., 91 U. S., 72 [XXIII., 224]. The precise point to be determined now is, whether a statute which requires the Company in the management of its affairs to set aside a portion of its current income as a sinking fund to meet this and other mortgage debts when they mature, deprives the Company of its property without due process of law, or in any other way improperly interferes with vested rights.

This Corporation is a creature of the United States. It is a private Corporation created for public purposes, and its property is to a large extent devoted to public uses. It is, therefore, subject to legislative control so far as its business affects the public interests. R. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S., 155 [XXIV., 94].

It is unnecessary to decide what power Congress would have had over the charter if the right of amendment had not been reserved; for, as we think, that reservation has been made. In the Act of 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 489, section 18, it was accompanied by an explanatory statement showing that this had been done "The better to accomplish the object of this Act, namely: to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but especially in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military and other purposes," and by an injunction that it should be used with "due regard for the rights of said companies." In the Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356, however, there is nothing except the simple words (section 22) "That Congress may at any time alter, amend and repeal this Act." Taking both Acts together, and giving the explanatory statement in that of 1862 all the effect it can be entitled to, we are of the opinion that Congress not only retains, but has given special notice of its intention to retain, full and complete power to make such alterations and amendments of the charter as come within the just scope of legislative power. That this power has a limit, no one can doubt. All agree that it cannot be used to take away property already acquired under the operation of the charter, or to deprive the Corporation of the fruits actually reduced to possession of contracts lawfully made; but, as was said by this court, through Mr. Justice Clifford, in Miller v. The State, 15 Wall., 498 [82 U. S., XXI., 104], "It may safely be affirmed that the reserve power may be exercised, and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant, or to secure the due administration of its affairs, so as to protect the rights of stockholders and of creditors, and for the proper disposition of its assets;" and again; in Holyoke Company v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 519 [82 U. S., XXI., 139], "To protect the rights of the public and of the corporations, or to promote the due administration of the affairs of the corporation." Mr. Justice Field, also speaking for the court, was even more explicit when, in Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15

Wall., 459 [82 U. S., XXI, 206], he said: "The reservation affects the entire relation between the State and the Corporation, and places under federal legislative control all rights, privileges and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State;" and again; as late as R. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S., 510 [XXIV., 840], "By the reservation * * * the State retained the power to alter it [the charter] in all particulars constituting the grant to the new company, formed under it, of corporate rights, privileges, and immunities." Mr. Justice Swayne, in Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 324 [XXIV., 359] says, by way of limitation, "The alterations must be reasonable; they must be made in good faith, and be consistent with the object and scope of the Act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong cannot be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration." The rules as here laid down are fully sustained by authority. Further citations are unnecessary.

Giving full effect to the principles which have thus been authoritatively stated, we think it safe to say, that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the Corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment. In so doing it cannot undo what has already been done, and it cannot unmake contracts that have already been made, but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparation shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into. It might originally have prohibited the borrowing of money on mortgage, or it might have said that no bonded debt should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet it at maturity. Not having done so at first, it cannot now by direct legislation vacate mortgages already made under the powers originally granted, nor release debts already contracted. A prohibition now against contracting debts will not avoid debts already incurred. An amendment making it unlawful to issue bonds payable at a distant day, without at the same time establishing a fund for their ultimate redemption, will not invalidate a bond already out. All such legislation will be confined in its operation to the future.

Legislative control of the administration of the affairs of a corporation may, however, very properly include regulations by which suitable provision will be secured in advance for the payment of existing debts when they fall due. If a State, under its reserved power of charter amendment, were to provide that no dividends should be paid to stockholders from current earnings until some reasonable amount had been set apart to meet maturing obligations, we think it would not be seriously contended that such legislation was unconstitutional, either because it impaired the obligations of the charter contract, or deprived the corporation of its property without due process of law. Take the case of an insurance company dividing its unearned premiums among its stockholders without laying by anything to meet losses, would anyone doubt the power of the State under its reserved right of amendment to prohibit such dividends until a suitable fund had been established to meet losses from outstanding risks? Clearly not, we think, and for the obvious reason that while stockholders are entitled to receive all dividends that may legitimately be declared and paid out of the current net income, their claims on the property of the Corporation are always subordinate to those of creditors. The property of a corporation constitutes the fund from which its debts are to be paid, and if the officers improperly attempt to divert this fund from its legitimate uses, justice requires that they should in some way be restrained. A court of equity would do this, if called upon in an appropriate manner; and it needs no argument to show that a legislative regulation which requires no more of the corporation than a court would compel it to do without legislation is not unreasonable.

Such a regulation, instead of being destructive in its character, would be eminently conservative. Railroads are a peculiar species of property, and railroad corporations are in some respects peculiar corporations. Large amounts of money are required for construction and equipment, and this to a great extent is represented by a funded debt, which, as well as the capital stock, is sought after for investment, and is distributed widely among large numbers of persons. Almost as a matter of necessity it is difficult to secure any concert of action among the different classes of creditors and stockholders and, consequently, all are compelled to trust in a great degree to the management of the corporation by those who are elected as officers, without much, if any, opportunity for personal supervision. The interest of the stockholders, who, as a rule, alone have the power to select the managers, is not unfrequently antagonistic to those of the debtholders, and it, therefore, is especially proper that the Government, whose creature the corporation is, should exercise its general powers of supervision and do all it reasonably may to protect investments in the bonds and stock from loss through improvident management.

No better case can be found for illustration than is presented by the history of this Corporation. Without undertaking in any manner to cast censure upon those by whose matchless energy this great road was built and, as if by magic, put into operation, it is a fact which cannot be denied, that, when the road was in a condition to be run, its bonds and stocks represented vastly more than the actual cost of the labor and material which went into its construction. Great undertakings like this, whose future is at the time uncertain, requiring as they do large amounts of money to carry them on seem to make it necessary that extraordinary inducements should be held out to capitalists to enter upon them, since a failure is almost sure to involve those who make the venture in financial ruin. It is not, however, the past with which we are now to deal, but rather the present and the future. We are not sitting in judgment upon the history of this Corporation, but upon its present condition. We now know that when the road was completed its funded debt alone was as follows: first-mortgage, $27,232,000, subsidy bonds, $27,236,512, all maturing thirty years after date, and that the average time of its maturity is during the year 1897. In addition to these are now the sinking-fund bonds, the land-grant bonds, and the Omaha bridge bonds, amounting to at least $20,000,000 more. The interest on the first-mortgage and all other classes of bonds, except the subsidy bonds, will undoubtedly be met as it falls due; but on the subsidy bonds, as has already been seen, no interest is payable, except out of the half of the earnings for government service and the five per cent. of net earnings, until the maturity of the principal. Thus far, as we have had occasion to observe in the various suits which have come before us during the past few years, involving an inquiry into these matters, the payments from these sources have fallen very far short of keeping down the accruing interest, and according to present appearances, it is not probably too much to say that when the debt is due there will be as much owing the United States for interest paid as for principal. There will then become due from this Company, in less than twenty years from this date, in the neighborhood of $80,000,000, secured by the first and subsidy mortgages. In addition to this are the capital stock, representing $36,000,000 more, and the funded debt inferior in its lien to that of the subsidy bonds. All these different classes of securities have become favorites in the market for investments, and they are widely scattered, at home and abroad. They have taken to a certain extent the place of the public funds as investments. With the exception of the land-grant, which is first devoted to the payment of the land-grant bonds, but little if anything except the earnings of the Company can be depended on to meet these obligations when they mature. The Company has been in the receipt of large earnings since the completion of its road, and, after paying the interest on its own bonds at maturity, has been dividing the remainder, or a very considerable portion of it, from time to time among its stockholders, without laying by anything to meet the enormous debt which, considering the amount, is so soon to become due. It is easy to see that in this way the stockholders of the present time are receiving, in the shape of dividends, that which those of the future may be compelled to lose. It is hardly to be presumed that this great weight of pecuniary obligation can be removed without interfering with dividends hereafter, unless at once some preparation is made by sinking fund or otherwise to prevent it. Under these circumstances, the stockholders of to-day have no property right to dividends which shall absorb all the net earnings after paying debts already due. The current earnings belong to the Corporation, and the stockholders, as such, have no right to them as against the just demands of creditors.

The United States occupy towards this Corporation a twofold relation: that of sovereign and that of creditor. U. S. v. R. R. Co. [ante, 143]. Their rights as sovereign are not crippled because they are creditors, and their privileges as creditors are not enlarged by the charter because of their sovereignty. They cannot, as creditors, demand payment of what is due them before the time limited by the contract. Neither can they, as sovereign or creditors, require the Company to pay the other debts it owes before they mature. But out of regard to the rights of the subsequent lienholders and stockholders, it is not only their right, but their duty, as sovereign to see to it that the current stockholders do not, in the administration of the affairs of the Corporation, appropriate to their own use that which in equity belongs to others. A legislative regulation which does no more than require them to submit to their just contribution towards the payment of a bonded debt cannot in any sense be said to deprive them of their property without due process of law.

The question still remains, whether the particular provision of this statute now under consideration comes within this rule. It establishes a sinking-fund for the payment of debts when they mature, but does not pay the debts. The original contracts of loan are not changed. They remain as they were before, and are only to be met at maturity. All that has been done is to make it the duty of the Company to lay by a portion of its current net income to meet its debts when they do fall due. In this way the current stockholders are prevented to some extent from depleting the treasury for their own benefit, at the expense of those who are to come after them. This is no more for the benefit of the creditors than it is for the Corporation itself. It tends to give permanency to the value of the stock and bonds, and is in the direct interest of a faithful administration of affairs. It simply compels the managers for the time being to do what they ought to do voluntarily. The fund to be created is not so much for the security of the creditors as the ultimate protection of the public and the corporators.

To our minds it is a matter of no consequence that the Secretary of the Treasury is made the sinking fund agent and the Treasury of the United States the depository, or that the investment is to be made in the public funds of the United States. This does not make the deposit a payment of the debt due the United States. The duty of the manager of every sinking fund is to seek some safe investment for the moneys as they accumulate in his hands, so that when required they may be promptly available. Certainly no objection can be made to the security of this investment. In fact, we do not understand that complaint is made in this particular. The objection is to the creation of the fund and not to the investment, if that investment is not in law a payment.

Neither is it a fatal objection that the half of the earnings for services rendered the Government, which by the Act of 1864 was to be paid to the Companies, is put into this fund. The Government is not released from the payment. While the money is retained, it is only that it may be put into the fund, which, although kept in the Treasury, is owned by the Company. When the debts are paid, the securities into which the moneys have been converted that remain undisposed of must be handed over to the corporation. Under the circumstances, the retaining of the money in the Treasury as part of the sinking fund is, in law, a payment to the Company.

Not to pursue this branch of the inquiry any further, it is sufficient now to say that we think the legislation complained of may be sustained on the ground that it is a reasonable regulation of the administration of the affairs of the Corporation, and promotive of the interests of the public and the corporators. It takes nothing from the Corporation or the stockholders which actually belongs to them. It oppresses no one, and inflicts no wrong. It simply gives further assurance of the continued solvency and prosperity of a Corporation in which the public are so largely interested, and adds another guaranty to the permanent and lasting value of its vast amount of securities.

The legislation is also warranted under the authority by way of amendment to change or modify the rights, privileges and immunities granted by the charter. The right of the stock holders to a division of the earnings of the Corporation is a privilege derived from the charter. When the charter and its amendments first became laws, and the work on the road was undertaken, it was by no means sure that the enterprise would prove a financial success. No statutory restraint was then put upon the power of declaring dividends. It was not certain that the stock would ever find a place on the list of marketable securities, or that there would be any bonds subsequent in lien to that of the United States which could need legislative or other protection. Hence, all this was left unprovided for in the charter and its amendments as originally granted, and the reservation of the power of amendment inserted so as to enable the Government to accommodate its legislation to the requirements of the public and the Corporation as they should be developed in the future. Now it is known that the stock of the Company has found its way to the markets of the world; that large issues of bonds have been made beyond what was originally contemplated, and that the Company has gone on for years dividing its earnings without any regard to its increasing debt, or to the protection of those whose rights may be endangered if this practice is permitted to continue. For this reason Congress has interfered and, under its reserved power, limited the privilege of declaring dividends on current earnings, so as to confine the stockholders to what is left after suitable provision has been made for the protection of creditors and stockholders against the disastrous consequences of a constantly increasing debt. As this increase cannot be kept down by payment unless voluntarily made by the Corporation, the next best thing has been done, that is to say, a fund safely invested, which increases as the debt increases, has been established and set apart to meet the debt when the time comes that payment can be required.

Judgment affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Strong, Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley.

See dissenting opinions, post, 506.

Copy, foregoing opinion, duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Cited—105 U. S., 21; 107 U. S., 476, 740; 109 U. S., 27, 542; 110 U. S., 353; 17 Blatchf., 420; 6 Sawy., 357, 358; 31 Hun., 548; 90 N. Y., 161; 93 Ill., 239; 5 N. W. Rep., 280; 9 Lea., 621; 42 Am. Rep., 686.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, LELAND SANFORD ET AL.,

Appts., v.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

(See "Sinking Fund Cases," 9 Otto, 727-769.)

Franchises granted—assent of State—right of amendment by Congress—construction of road—extent of amendment—sinking fund.

1. By the Act of Congress of 1862, all the rights, privileges and franchises, including land-grants and subsidy bonds were given to the Central Pac. R. R. Co., that were granted to the Union Pac. R. R. Co., except the franchise of being a Corporation, which it already possessed under the laws of California.

2. That State, by implication at least, has given its assent to what was so done by Congress.

3. The Act of Congress of 1864, granting to the former Company certain additional corporate powers and pecuniary resources reserved to Congress full power of amendment.

4. The Central Pacific Co. assigned to the Western Pacific Co., organized under the law of California, its rights under the Act of Congress, to construct the road between San José and Sacramento, and this assignment was ratified, and further privileges given it by Congress.

5. To the extent of the powers, rights, privileges and immunities granted these corporations by the United States, Congress retains the right of amendment, and in this way may regulate their affairs, in a matter not inconsistent with the requirements of the original state charter.

6. The establishment of a sinking fund by the Act of 1875, is within the power of Congress and is not at all in conflict with anything contained in the original state charters.

[No. 972.]

Argued Mar. 19, 20, 21, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

This case arose upon a bill filed in the court below, to restrain the payment of certain dividends by the Central Pac. R. R. Co. The question involved is the validity of the so-called "Thurman Act" of Congress, approved May 7, 1878, as applied to this Company.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. S. W. Sanderson, J. H. Storrs and B. H. Hill, for appellants.

Mr. Geo. H. Williams, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The only material difference between this case and that of the Union Pacific Company, arising under the Act of May 7, 1878, lies in the fact that in this the special franchises as well as the land and subsidy bonds, were granted by the United States to a corporation formed and organized under the laws of the State of California, while in that, Congress created the corporation to which the grants were made. The California Corporation was organized under a state law with an authorized capital of $8,500,000, to build a road from the City of Sacramento to the eastern boundary of the State, a distance of about one hundred and fifteen miles. Under the operation of its California charter, it could only borrow money to an amount not exceeding the capital stock, and must provide a sinking fund for the ultimate redemption of the bonds. Hit-tell, Cal. L., 1850, 1864, sec. 840. No power was granted to build any road outside the State, or in the State except between the termini named. By the Act of 1862, Congress granted this Corporation the right to build a road from San Francisco, or the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, to the eastern boundary of the State, and from there through the Territories of the United States until it met the road of the Union Pacific Company. For this purpose all the rights, privileges and franchises were given this Company that were granted the Union Pacific Company, except the franchise of being a corporation, and such others as were merely incidental to the organization of the Company.

The land-grants and subsidy bonds to this Company were the same in character and quantity as those to the Union Pacific, and the same right of amendment was reserved. Each of the companies was required to file in the Department of the Interior its acceptance of the conditions imposed, before it could become entitled to the benefits conferred by the Act. This was promptly done by the Central Pacific Company, and in this way that Corporation voluntarily submitted itself to such legislative control by Congress as was reserved under the power of amendment.

No objection has ever been made by the State to this action by Congress. On the contrary, the State, by implication at least, has given its assent to what was done, for in 1864 it passed "An Act to Aid in Carrying Out the Provisions of the Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Act of Congress," and thereby confirmed and vested in the Company "All the rights, privileges, franchises, power and authority conferred upon, granted to, or vested in said Company by said Act of Congress," and repealed "All laws or parts of laws inconsistent or in conflict with * * * the rights and privileges herein (therein) granted." Hittell, L., sec. 4798; Acts of 1863, 1864, 471. Inasmuch as, by the Constitution of California, then in force (art. IV., sec. 81) corporations, except for municipal purposes, could not be created by special Act, but must be formed under general laws, the legal effect of this Act is probably little more than a legislative recognition by the State of what had been done by the United States with one of the state corporations.

In so doing, the State but carried out its original policy in reference to the same subject-matter, for as early May 1, 1852, an Act was passed reciting "That the interests of this State as well as those of the whole Union, require the immediate action of the Government of the United States, for the construction of a national thoroughfare connecting the navigable waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, for the purposes of national safety, in the event of war, and to promote the highest commercial interests of the Republic," and granting the right of way through the State to the United States for the purpose of constructing such a road. Hittell, L., sec. 4791; Acts of 1852, 150. In 1859 (Acts of 1859, 391), a resolution was passed calling a convention "To consider the refusal of Congress to take efficient measures for the construction of a railroad from the Atlantic States to the Pacific, and to adopt measures whereby the building of said railroad can be accomplished;" and at the same session of the Legislature a memorial was prepared asking Congress to pass a law authorizing the construction of such a road and asking also a grant of lands to aid in the construction of railroads in the State. Acts of 1859, 395. Nothing was done however by Congress until the rebellion, which at once called the attention of all who were interested in the preservation of the Union to the immense practical importance of such a road for military purposes, and then, as soon as a plan could be matured and the necessary forms of legislation gone through with, the Act of July 1, 1862, was passed. But this was not enough to interest capitalists in the undertaking, and although the Legislature of California during the year 1863 passed several Acts intended to hold out further inducements, but little was accomplished until the amendatory Act of Congress in 1864, which besides authorizing the first mortgage, and changing in some important particulars the conditions on which the subsidy bonds were to be issued, conferred additional powers on the Corporation, some of which, such as the right of eminent domain in the Territories, the State could not grant, and others, such as the right of issuing first-mortgage bonds without a sinking fund, and in excess of the capital stock, it had seen fit to withhold. This Act also reserved to Congress full power of amendment, and was promptly accepted by the Corporation. With this addition of corporate powers and pecuniary resources the work was pushed forward to completion with unexampled energy. But for the corporate powers and financial aid granted by Congress it is not probable that the road would have been built. The first-mortgage bonded debt was created without a sinking fund, and the road in the Territories built under the authority of Congress, assented to and ratified by the State.

The Western Pacific Company, now, by consolidation, a part of the Central Pacific Company, was also organized, December 13, 1862, Acts of 1863, 81, under the general Railroad Law of California, with power to construct a road from a point on the San Francisco and San José Railroad, at or near San José, to Sacramento, and there connect with the road of the Central Pacific Company. Afterwards the Central Pacific Company assigned to this Corporation its rights, under the Act of Congress, to construct the road between San José and Sacramento; and this assignment was ratified by Congress, "With all the privileges and benefits of the several Acts of Congress relating thereto, and subject to all the conditions thereof," 13 Stat. at L., 504. By the same Act further privileges were granted by the United States both to the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Companies, in respect to their issue of first-mortgage bonds.

Under this legislation we are of the opinion that, to the extent of the powers, rights, privileges and immunities granted these corporations by the United States, Congress retains the right of amendment, and that in this way it may regulate the administration of the affairs of the Company in reference to the debts created under its own authority, in a manner not inconsistent with the requirements of the original state charter, as modified by the state Aid Act of 1864, accepting what had been done by Congress. This is as far as it is necessary to go now. It will be time enough to consider what more may be done when the necessity arises. As yet, the State has not attempted to interfere with the action of Congress. All complaint thus far has come from the Corporation itself, which, to secure the government aid, accepted all the conditions that were attached to the grants, including the reservation of power to amend.

It is clear that the establishment of a sinking fund by the the Act of 1878 is not at all in conflict with anything contained in the original state charter, for by that charter no such debt could be created without provision for such a fund. This part of the Act of 1878 is, therefore, in the exact line of the policy of the State, and does no more than place the Company again, to some extent, under obligations from which it had been released by congressional legislation. So, too, the reservation of the power of amendment by Congress is equally consistent with the settled policy of the State; for not only the state charter, in terms, makes such a reservation in favor of the State, but the Constitution expressly provides that all laws for the creation of corporations "may be altered from time to time, or repealed." Art. IV., sec. 31.

It is not necessary now to inquire whether, in ascertaining the net earnings of the Company for the purpose of fixing the amount of the annual contributions to the sinking fund, the earnings of all the roads owned by the present corporation are to be taken into the account, or only of those in aid of which the land-grants were made and the subsidy bonds issued. The question here is only as to the power of Congress to establish the fund at all. If disputes should ever arise as to the manner of stating the accounts, they can be settled at some future time.

All the other questions which have been argued in this case were considered and decided in that of the Union Pacific Company in a way to sustain the decree below.

It follows that the decree of the Circuit Court must be affirmed; and it is consequently so ordered.

Copy, foregoing opinion, duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

[Dissenting opinions refer to both this and the preceding case, Nos. 1083 and 972.]

Mr. Justice Strong, dissenting:

In my opinion, the Act of Congress of May 7, 1878, 20 Stat. at L., 56, is plainly transgressive of legislative power. As was said by Mr. Hamilton in his celebrated communication to the Senate of January 20, 1795, "When a government enters into a contract with an individual, it deposes, as to the matter of the contract, its constitutional authority, and exchanges the character of legislator for that of a moral agent, with the same rights and obligations as an individual. Its promises may be justly considered as excepted out of its power to legislate, unless in aid of them. It is in theory impossible to reconcile the idea of a promise which obliges, with a power to make a law which can vary the effect of it." 3 Hamilton's Works, 518. Opinions similar to this have often found expression in judicial decisions, even in those of this court. If this be sound doctrine, it is as much beyond the power of a Legislature, under any pretense, to alter a contract into which the government has entered with a private individual, as it is for any other party to a contract to change its terms without the consent of the person contracting with him. As to its contract the government in all its departments has laid aside its sovereignty, and it stands on the same footing with private contractors.

The contracts of the government with the Union Pacific Railroad Company and with the Central Pacific, which the Act of Congress of 1878 has in view, were not made by the Act of 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 489, the Act chartering the former Company, nor by the amending Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356. They were made after those Acts had been accepted by the Companies, and after their chartered rights had been completely acquired. There was no agreement of the Companies to repay the loan of government bonds made to them, until the bonds were issued and delivered. The companies were under no obligation to accept the loan and assume the liability resulting from its acceptance. The contracts, therefore, are no part of the charter of the Union Pacific Company and no part of the Acts of 1862 or 1864. They are subsequent to those Acts and independent of them. It is true Congress authorized the loan. It made the Companies offers to lend upon certain conditions; and when those offers and conditions were subsequently accepted, the contracts of loan were made. Not until then. Before that time there was nothing but an unaccepted offer.

What, then, was the contract when it was made? The government lent its bonds and, in consideration of the loan, each Company assumed five obligations: 1, to pay the bonds at their maturity, that is, at the expiration of thirty years; 2, to keep the railroad and telegraph line in repair and use; 3, to furnish transmission of dispatches and transportation for the government at reasonable rates, allowing it a preference for such purposes; 4, to apply to the payment of the bonds and interest half the compensation due to it from the government for services rendered, until the whole amount of the loan is fully paid; and 5, after the completion of the railroad, to apply to the payment of the bonds at least five per cent. annually of its net earnings. The lender required and the borrower undertook nothing more.

It is manifest that by this contract the government acquired a vested right to payment at the time and in the mode specified, as well as to preference of transportation and transmission of dispatches; and the Company acquired a vested right to retain the consideration given for its assumption; that is, a vested right to withhold payment until by the terms of the contract payment became due. The contract implied an agreement not to call for payment or additional security before that time. I cannot conceive of any rational doubt of this. There is no technicality about vested rights. Most of them grow out of contracts and, no matter how they arise, they are all equally sacred, equally beyond the reach of legislative interference. A vested right of action is property in the same sense in which rights to tangible things are, and is equally protected. Whether it springs from contract or from other rules of the common law, it is not competent for the Legislature to take it away. If we look at what must have been the understanding of all parties to these contracts of loan, the rights created and vested under them cannot be in doubt. The government sought to induce private adventurers to construct a railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific Ocean: a work which necessarily required years and immense expenditures for its accomplishment. A loan, repayable on call or within a short time, would have been no inducement. Had it been dreamed that a call could have been made at any time thereafter designated by Congress, it is inconceivable that the loan proffered would have been accepted. It would have furnished no reliable basis for an attempt to build the road. The parties could not so have understood the bargain. The bonds were required to be paid by the Companies only at their maturity, except so far as half payment for governmental service, and five per cent of the net earnings, after the completion of the road, might pay. The contract, therefore, means exactly what it would have meant had it contained the express stipulation: "The United States shall not require payment of the amount of the bonds, or any part thereof (except half compensation for services, and five per cent. of net earnings), until the expiration of thirty years from their issue to the Company, or date, nor shall additional security be required, beyond the lien reserved." Such was the contract. It was not one of the franchises granted in the charter of the Union Pacific or the Central, but it was a business transaction, differing in nothing, except parties, from what it would have been if it had been made between two private individuals. It is true Congress authorized the loan on the terms upon which it was made; but, as I have said, the contract was not made by the Act of Congress, or with Congress. It was a subsequent transaction, and the United States became a party to it, not in its sovereign character, but as a civil corporation, as said by Mr. Hamilton, with the same rights and obligations as a private person, and no more.

Now, what has been attempted by the Act of May 7, 1878? That Act was passed with sole reference to this contract, and all its provisions have in view the imposition of additional obligations upon the Railroad Company. It does not purport to be a repeal of the charter. Its leading purpose is to take control of the property of the debtor, and sequester it for the security of a debt, which, by the terms of the contract, is not due and payable for years to come. I shall not go over all its provisions. It will be sufficient to notice some of the more prominent ones, which, if they are ruled to be operative, greatly change the contract which the parties made when the bonds were delivered and accepted, when the contract was closed, and which impose new and oppressive obligations upon the debtor.

By the contract only one half the compensation for services rendered to the government was required to be applied to the payment of the bonds, but by this Act the whole amount of the compensation which may from time to time be due for services rendered to the government is directed to be retained by the United States and, at the same time, the obligation to render those services is continued. By the 3d section of the Act a sinking fund is established in the Treasury of the United States, that is, in the Treasury of the creditor; and the 4th section enacts that there shall be carried into that fund, on the first day of February in each year, the one half of the compensation above named, not applied in liquidation of interest. By the contract the debtor was bound to pay only five per cent. of its net earnings, after the completion of the road, annually to the creditor; but this Act requires the debtor to pay into the creditor's treasury, to the credit of the sinking fund, twenty-five per cent. of its whole net earnings, on the 1st of February in each year. The Act further directs that the sinking fund thus created shall, with its accumulations, be invested in bonds of the United States, and at the maturity of the bonds loaned to the debtor be applied to the payment and satisfaction thereof, and of all interest paid by the United States. There are other provisions of this Act intended to enforce compliance with these newly added obligations imposed upon the debtor, as also provisions that the sinking fund shall be held for the benefit, protection and security of other lien creditors of the debtor. But I deem it unnecessary to mention them in detail. Those which I have mentioned are enough for the present case. No one can deny that they materially change the contract of loan and borrowing previously existing between the government and the railroad companies, and change it at the will of the creditor alone. Nor can it be denied that they impose upon the debtors new and onerous burdens that they never agreed to assume. Practically, they enforce payment of the debt before, by the terms of the contract, it is due. The Act seizes the half compensation, which the government agreed should not be retained, and covers it into the Treasury, appropriating it to the payment of the debt. For nothing else can it be used. The Act also requires payment into the treasury of twenty-five per cent. of the net earnings of the company, instead of five per cent. only, as stipulated when the contract was made. It is true it does not make immediate application of the sums thus withheld and demanded to the extinguishment of the debt. It declares that they shall be applied to the payment of the debt and interest "at the maturity of the bonds." But this is a distinction without a difference, obviously made to evade what it was known could not lawfully be done. An immediate application might as well have been directed. It would probably be better for the debtor if the application were immediately made. The money is taken from the debtor, withdrawn entirely from the debtor's control and use, and put into the Treasury of the creditor, and there left to the mere agreement of the creditor to apply it to payment. I apprehend no plain man of common sense will hesitate to conclude that this is exacting payment before the debt is due. If A borrows from B $1,000, and gives his note therefor, payable at the expiration of five years, and at the end of one year the lender demands that there be placed in his hands by the debtor a sum of money to meet the note when it shall fall due, it will hardly be contended that would not be requiring payment before the debtor was bound to pay. And if such a demand could be enforced, it would be at the expense of the contract. What more is the present case? And were it conceded the Act of 1878 does not attempt to enforce the payment before the maturity of the debt, the concession would be of little worth, for it will not be questioned that it attempts to enforce giving additional security for payment beyond that stipulated for in the contract. That is no less a material alteration of the contract, a serious addition to it. The plain truth is, the assertion of such a power is claiming the right to disregard the contract entirely, and substitute for it a different one, without the consent of the debtor. If the United States can exact now one quarter of the net earnings of each of these companies, and place it in their Treasury, they can, by the same power, and with the same reason, exact the whole of the earnings, or any other property equal to the amount of the debt. Was any such thing contemplated by the parties when the contract was made?

See 9 OTTO.

Now, where is the power of Congress to add new terms to any contract made with the United States, or made between any two private individuals? Where is the power to annul vested rights? It is certainly not to be found in the Constitution. True, the provision that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts applies only to state legislation. For such legislation the prohibition was necessary; for State Legislatures have all legislative power which is not expressly denied to them. But no necessity existed for imposing such a limitation on the power of Congress. As Mr. Hamilton said in the 84th number of the Federalist, "Why declare that things shall not be done which there is no power to do?" Congress has no power except such as has been expressly granted to it, or such as is necessary or proper for carrying into execution the powers specified, and those vested by the Constitution in the government, or some department or officer thereof. I search in vain for any express or implied grant of power to add new terms to any existing contracts made by or with the government, or any grant of power to destroy vested rights. No power has been given to Congress to lessen the obligations of a contract between private parties by direct legislation, except by the enactment of uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy. Even a bankrupt law cannot be enacted applicable only to single corporations or single debtors. To be constitutional, it must be uniform throughout the United States. I admit that in the exercise of some of the powers granted, Congress may enact laws that indirectly affect existing contracts and lessen their obligation, but I deny that it can by any direct action, otherwise than by a bankrupt law, even relieve a debtor to a private party from any duty he has assumed by his contract. Much less can it change the stipulations of the contract and impose additional liabilities upon a contractor with the government. Such an exercise of power would be making a contract for parties to which they never assented. In all the history of congressional legislation before the Act of 1878, such a power was never attempted to be exercised.

And not only is such legislative authority not conferred upon Congress by the Constitution, but it is, in effect, expressly denied. The Fifth Amendment contains restrictions taken, in substance, from Magna Charta. Among them are the provisions that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation. These are restrictions upon legislative as well as executive power. What is due process of law is well understood. It is law in regular course of administration through courts of justice. Coke, 2 Inst., 272; Murray v. Hoboken L. and Imp. Co., 18 How., 272 [59 U. S., XV., 372]. "The terms 'the law of the land,' said Chief Justice Ruffin, Hoke v. Henderson, 4 Dev. (N. C.), 15, do not mean merely an Act of the General Assembly. If they did, every restriction upon legislative authority would be at once abrogated, and private property would be at the mercy of the Legislature." Yet the Act of 1878 does attempt by its own force, and without any judicial action, not only to change a contract and increase its obligations, but also to deprive the Railroad Companies of their property. What is property? What is the common understanding of the term? It is, in reference to its subject, whatever a person can possess and enjoy by right, and the person who has that right has the property. The subject may be corporeal or incorporeal. A right in action is as completely property as is a title to land. A very large portion of the property of the country consists in rights attendant upon contract. The right of a promisee to demand payment when the note falls due is a right of property; and equally so is the right of the promisor to hold, as against his promisee, the consideration for the promise until the time stipulated in the note for payment. The promisee has no right to enforce payment, or to enforce giving security for it, if none was promised in the contract. Such a right is no portion of his property, and it can be enforced only at the expense of a clear right of the promisor. On the other hand, the promisor has a right to exemption from liability to give such security. It is incident to his contract. Indeed, it may be said that whatever rights are created by contract, or held under it, if they relate to property, are themselves, in a very just sense, property, and as such are protected by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

I notice another consideration which, to my mind, is not without weight. It may, I think, well be doubted whether the Act of 1878 is even an attempted exercise of legislative power. A statute undertaking to take the property of A and transfer it to B is not legislation. It would not be a law. It would be a decree or sentence, the right to declare which, if it exists at all, is in the Judicial Department of the Government. The Act of Congress is little, if any, more. It does not purport to be a general law. It does not apply to all corporations or to all debtors of the government. It singles out two Corporations, debtors of the government, by name and prescribes for them as debtors new duties to their creditor. It thus attempts to perform the functions of a court. This, I cannot but think, is outside of legislative action and power.

I turn now to the arguments by which the constitutionality of the Act of Congress has been attempted to be supported. It is said that, though Congress cannot directly abrogate contracts, or impair their obligation, it may indirectly, by the exercise of other powers granted to it. This I have conceded, but I deny that an acknowledged power can be exerted solely for the purpose of effecting indirectly an unconstitutional end which the Legislature cannot directly attempt to reach. If the purpose were declared in the Act, I think no court would hesitate to pronounce the Act void. In the case to which I have referred, Hoke v. Henderson, 4 Dev., 27, Ch. J. Ruffin, when considering at length an argument that a Legislature could purposely do indirectly what it could not do directly used this strong language: "The argument is unsound in this, that it supposes (what cannot be admitted as a supposition) the Legislature will, designedly and wilfully, violate the Constitution, in utter disregard of their oaths and duty. To do indirectly in the abused exercise of an acknowledged power, not given for but perverted for that purpose, that which is expressly forbidden to be done directly, is a gross and wicked infraction of the Constitution."

It is unnecessary, however, to enlarge upon this, for the effect wrought upon the contracts of these two Companies is a direct effect; a direct alteration of the obligation assumed by the debtors, and not an incidental result of legislation upon some other subject over which Congress has a right to legislate. It is too plain to admit of any doubt that the sole object of the Act of 1878 was to enforce giving new and additional security for the payment of the subsidy bonds at their maturity. All its provisions aim directly at that, and the new terms thereby added to the contract have that end solely in view.

In further attempted support of the validity of the Act, it has been denied that it does change the contract, because it does not require the application of the additional payments to the satisfaction of the debt before its maturity. I have, perhaps, said enough upon this subject. The argument can hardly be seriously made. The Act does compel the debtors to surrender possession of their property to the creditor before the time when, by the terms of the contract, they were under obligation to part with it. The debtors are no longer permitted to hold and use one half the compensation due presently from the government for services rendered, and are no longer at liberty to use all their net income or earnings, except five per cent. at their discretion. One quarter of their net earnings they are compelled to surrender to the creditor. Thus the creditor becomes the custodian of the debtors' property, and acquires a right to hold and manage it as if it were his own. It is absurd to say this is not practically a radical change in the relations between the parties established by the contract. And it is equally impossible to maintain that it is not depriving the debtors of their property without due process of law.

I turn now to what has been most relied upon in support of the validity of the Act. I refer to the clauses in the Acts of 1862 and 1864, reserving the right to repeal, amend or alter. There are two such: one in the Act of 1862, and one in that of 1864. That in the latter Act is the broadest, and it is as follows: "Congress may at any time alter, amend or repeal this Act." The power thus reserved is one over the Act itself, not over anything that may have lawfully been done under the Act, before its repeal or alteration. It is only by great confusion of things essentially distinct that this power can be construed as applicable to a contract made after the Corporation came into existence. Besides, the Act of 1878 does not attempt to repeal or alter or amend the Acts of 1862 and 1864. It changes no franchise granted by those Acts, nor does it interfere with its exercise. It interferes only with the fruits of the franchise. The right to possess and enjoy the income of the Company is not a franchise. It is an incident of the ownership of the Company's property, though the property may be accumulated by the use of the franchise. Concede that Congress has power to regulate the tolls on the railroad, or in some other mode to restrict the use of the franchise, and thus lessen the income, yet the income, whether large or small when made, is the Company's property, and, like other property, protected against being taken without due process of law. Or suppose the Acts of 1862 and 1864 were repealed, and thus all the franchises granted by them were taken away, the property of the Company would remain, and the income thereof, though greatly decreased, would be the property of the stockholders. Nobody denies that. Is the lesser greater than the whole? I repeat, therefore, the Act of 1878 is no exercise of the reserved power to alter, amend or repeal the Acts of 1862 and 1864. It is no attempt to make any such repeal or amendment. It is, at most, an attempt to seize the fruits of the franchise after they shall have become the vested property of the Corporations. It is an attempt to sequester the income of the property owned by them. As well might the government attempt to seize and put into its Treasury the rents, issues and profits of the lands granted to them by the 3d and 4th sections of the Act of 1862, and call that an amendment of the Act. There is no distinction to be made between the profits of the road and telegraph line and the rents of the lands. None has been attempted.

But if the Act of 1878 could be considered an alteration or amendment of the Acts of 1862 and 1864, the question would still remain: what was the extent of the power reserved by those Acts: I mean the power to alter, amend or repeal them. All the cases agree that such a reserved power is not without limits. I think its limits may be stated generally thus: it must be exercised, when exerted at all, so as to do no injustice to those to whom the franchise has been granted. Certainly the reservation cannot mean a right to take away the franchise, in whole or in part, and yet hold the grantee to the performance of the duties assumed, the consideration given for the grant. Nor can it mean to continue in the legislative power which the Legislature never possessed, and which it is constitutionally incapable of exercising. A partial definition of the limits of the reserved power may be found in Com. v. Essex Co., 13 Gray, 239, where Chief Justice Shaw (speaking of the reserved power to alter, amend or repeal a charter) said: "It seems to us this power must have some limit, though it is difficult to define it. Suppose authority has been given by law to a railroad corporation to purchase a lot of land and hold it for purposes connected with its business, and they purchase such lot from a third person, could the Legislature prohibit the Company from holding it? If so, in whom would it vest? Or could the Legislature direct it to revert to the grantor or escheat to the public? Or how otherwise? Suppose a manufacturing company, incorporated, is authorized to construct a dam and flow a tract of meadow, and the owners claim gross damages, which are assessed and paid, can the Legislature afterwards alter the Act of incorporation so as to give to such meadow owners future annual damages? Perhaps from these extreme cases, for extreme cases are allowable to test a legal principle, the rule to be extracted is this: that where, under a power in a charter, rights have been acquired and become vested, no amendment or alteration of the charter can take away the property or rights which have become vested under a legitimate exercise of the powers granted." This rule has been recognized ever since. Vide, Sage v. Dillard, 15 B. Mon., 349. It has been adopted by this court. In Miller v. State, 15 Wall., 478 [82 U. S., XXI., 98], it was said by Mr. Justice Clifford: "Power to legislate founded upon such a reservation in a charter of a private corporation is certainly not without limits, and it may well be admitted that it cannot be exercised to take away or destroy rights acquired by such a charter, and which, by a legitimate use of the powers granted, have become vested in the corporation." To the same effect is Holzyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 500 [82 U. S., XXI., 133]. If this limitation be admitted, it is impossible to see how a reserved power to alter, amend or repeal an Act granting a private charter can include a right to change the stipulations of a contract made under that charter, or to sequester for any purpose the property of the Company acquired while the charter remains unrevoked and unaltered. If the Acts of 1862 and 1864 were repealed, would not the contract of loan remain unaffected thereby? Can a Legislature that offers a contract on certain terms change those terms after they have been accepted and after the contract has been perfected? Yet that is what the Act of 1878 attempts to do. A principal who has authorized his agent to make a contract for him may revoke or restrict the agency before any contract is made, but he is bound by a contract made during the continuance of the agent's powers, if those powers were not transgressed in making it. He cannot afterwards repudiate its terms or add to them. I see no essential difference between such a case and the present. I cannot confound an alteration of the Acts of 1862 and 1864 with an alteration of a subsequent commercial contract authorized by those Acts, and made between the United States and companies chartered by them. My conviction, therefore, is, that the Act of 1878 cannot be defended as a legitimate exercise of the powers reserved to Congress.

I need not say it cannot rest upon what is generally denominated the visitatorial power of the government over its own corporations, though it is upon this power the opinion of the majority of the court largely relies. That power is applicable only to eleemosynary corporations, such as colleges, schools and hospitals, and the visitation is always through the medium of courts of justice. It is judicial and not legislative. 2 Kent, Com. Lect., 23, sec. 4. To claim, therefore, that, by virtue of that power, a private business corporation can be compelled by legislative action to establish a sinking fund for the payment of its debts, and deposit it in the treasury of its creditor, is totally inadmissible.

There are, undoubtedly, many cases to be found in which it has been decided that, by virtue of such a reservation as that contained in the Acts of 1862 and 1864, a Legislature may make new regulations, to some extent, of the action of corporations created by it; such as prescribing a new measure of tolls, increasing the capital of insurance companies, repealing an exemption from taxation, and the like. So, without the reservations, some new regulations may be prescribed in the exercise of the police power. They are all regulations of the franchise or of its use; not invasions of rights or property acquired under the franchise subsequent to its grant; and not one of them under the practice of amendment or rightful regulation has undertaken to change or vary any contract the corporation had made, or to control possession of property acquired. The Act of 1878 is, I believe, the first assertion of any such force in the reservation. It is a very grave and dangerous assertion. It is especially dangerous in these days of attempted repudiation, when the good faith of the government is above all price. If it can be maintained, the government is no longer bound by any commercial contract into which it may enter with these corporations, though it holds them bound. I cannot assent to any such doctrine; and upon the whole, in my opinion, the Act of 1878, 20 Stat. at L., 56, is not only unauthorized by any power existing in Congress, but it is an infraction of the prohibition I have pointed out, contained in the 5th amendment of the Constitution.

Most of what I have said is applicable to each of the cases: that of the Union Pacific and that of the Central. There are some other considerations peculiar in the case of the Central Pacific, which is a Corporation of the State of California, and was such in 1862. These I leave for consideration by my brethren who unite with me in dissent.

Mr. Justice Bradley, dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the judgment of the court in these cases, and will very briefly state the grounds of my dissent:

I think that Congress had no power to pass the Act of May 7, 1878, either as it regards the Union Pacific or the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The power of Congress, even over those subjects upon which it has the right to legislate, is not despotic, but is subject to certain constitutional limitations. One of these is, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; another is, that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; and a third is, that the judicial power of the United States is vested in the supreme and inferior courts, and not in Congress. It seems to me that the law in question is violative of all these restrictions—of their spirit at least, if not of their letter; and a law which violates the spirit of the Constitution is as much unconstitutional as one that violates its letter. For example, although the Constitution declares only that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and does not expressly declare that it shall not be taken for private use without compensation, or, in other words, does not declare that the property of one person shall not be taken from him and given to another without compensation, yet no one can reasonably doubt that a law which should do this would be unconstitutional, because the prohibition to do it is within the spirit of the prohibition that is given, it being the greater enormity of the two.

The contract between the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies and the government was an executed contract, and a definite one. It was in effect this: that the government should loan the Companies certain moneys, and that the Companies should have a certain period of time to repay the amount, the loan resting on the security of the Companies' works. Congress, by the law in question, without any change of circumstances, and against the protest of the Companies, declares that the money shall be paid at an earlier day, and that the contract shall be changed pro tanto. This is the substance and effect of the law. Calling the money paid a sinking fund makes no substantial difference. The pretense or excuse for the law is, that the stipulated security is not good. Congress takes up the question, ex parte, discusses and decides it, passes judgment, and proposes to issue execution, and to subject the Companies to heavy penalties if they do not comply. That is the plain English of the law. In view of the limitations referred to, has Congress the power to do this? In my judgment it has not. The law virtually deprives the companies of their property without due process of law; takes it for public use without compensation; and operates as an exercise by Congress of the judicial power of the government.

That it is a plain and flat violation of the contract there can be no reasonable doubt. But it is said that Congress is not subject to any inhibition against passing laws impairing the validity of contracts. This is true; and the reason why the inhibition to that effect was imposed upon the States and not upon Congress evidently was, that the power to pass bankrupt laws should be exclusively vested in Congress, in order that the bankruptcy system might be uniform throughout the United States. When the States exercised the power, they often did it in such a manner as to favor their own citizens at the expense of the citizens of other States and of foreign countries. It was deemed expedient, therefore, to take the power from the States so far as it might involve the impairing the validity of contracts. State bankrupt laws, since the Constitution went into effect, have only been sustained when operating prospectively upon contracts, and then only in the absence of a national law. The inhibition referred to undoubtedly had its origin in these considerations. It fully explains the fact that no such inhibition was laid upon the National Legislature; and the absence of such an inhibition, therefore, furnishes no ground of argument in favor of the proposition that Congress may pass arbitrary and despotic laws with regard to contracts any more than with regard to any other subject-matter of legislation. The limitations already quoted exist in their full force, and apply to that subject as well as to all others. They embody the essential principles of Magna Charta, and are especially binding upon the Legislative Department of the Government. Under the English Constitution, notwithstanding the theoretical omnipotence of Parliament, such a law as the one in question would not be tolerated for a moment. The famous denunciation that "It would cut every Englishman to the bone," would be promptly reiterated.

It will not do to say that the violation of the contract by the law in question is not a taking of property. In the first place, it is literally a taking of property. It compels the companies to pay over to the government, or its agents, money to which the government is not entitled. That it will be entitled by the contract to a like amount at some future time does not matter. Time is a part of the contract. To coerce a delivery of the money is to coerce without right a delivery of that which is not the property of the government, but the property of the Companies. It is needless to refer to the importance to the Companies of the time which the contract gives. If it be alleged that the security of the government requires this to be done in consequence of waste or dissipation by the Companies of the mortgage security, that is a question to be decided by judicial investigation with opportunity of defense. A prejudgment of the question by the Legislative Department is a usurpation of the judicial power.

But if it were not, as it is, an actual or physical taking of property; if it were merely the subversion of the contract and the substitution of another contract in its place, it would be a taking of property within the spirit of the constitutional provisions. A contract is property. To destroy it wholly or to destroy it partially is to take it; and to do this by arbitrary legislative action is to do it without due process of law.

The case bears no analogy to the laws which were passed in time of war and public necessity, making treasury notes of the government a legal tender. The power to pass those laws was found in other parts of the Constitution: in the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, to regulate the value of money, to raise and support armies, to suppress insurrections, and to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the general powers of the government. My views on that subject were fully expressed in the Legal Tender Cases, reported in 12 Wallace, 457 [79 U. S., XX., 287], and I have yet seen no reason to modify them. The legal tender laws may have indirectly affected contracts, but did not abrogate them. The case before us is totally different. It is a direct abrogation of a contract and that, too, of a contract of the government itself; a repudiation of its own contract.

Nor does the case in hand bear any analogy to what are familiarly known as the Granger Cases, reported in 94 U. S., 113 [XXIV., 77], under the names of Munn v. Illinois, etc. The inquiry there was as to the extent of the police power in cases where the public interest is affected; and we held that when an employment or business becomes a matter of such public interest and importance as to create a common charge or burden upon the citizen; in other words, when it becomes a practical monopoly, to which the citizen is compelled to resort, and by means of which a tribute can be exacted from the community, it is subject to regulation by the legislative power. It is obvious that the present case does not belong to that category. It is an individual case of private contract between the Companies and the government. It is a question of dollars and cents, and terms and conditions, in a particular case. To call the law an exercise of the police power would be a misuse of terms.

Great stress, however, is laid upon the reservation in the charter of the right to amend, alter or repeal the Act.

As a matter of fact, the reservation referred to really has no office in an Act of Congress; for Congress is not subject, as the States are, to the inhibition against passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. It has become so much the custom to insert it in all charters at the present day, that its original intent and purpose are sometimes forgotten. Since, however, it is contained in the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, it is proper that its meaning and effect should be adverted to.

It seems to me that this clause has been greatly misunderstood. It is a sort of proviso peculiar to American legislation, growing out of the decision in the Dart. Coll. Case. Mr. Justice Story, in his opinion in that case, 4 Wheat., 675, says: "When a private eleemosynary corporation is thus created by the charter of the Crown, it is subject to no other control on the part of the Crown than what is expressly or impliedly reserved by the charter itself. Unless a power be reserved for this purpose, the Crown cannot, in virtue of its prerogative, without the consent of the corporation, alter or amend the charter, or divest the corporation of any of its franchises." This hint that such a reservation would authorize an alteration or amendment to be made in a charter, has been freely availed of by Legislatures and constitutional conventions, in order to be freed from the constitutional restriction against impairing the validity of contracts, so far as it applied to charters of incorporation. The application of that restriction to such charters, by construing them to be contracts within the meaning of the Constitution, was a surprise to many statesmen and jurists of the country. Chief Justice Marshall, indeed, in his opinion in that case, says: "It is more than possible that the preservation of rights of this description was not particularly in the view of the framers of the Constitution when the clause under consideration was introduced into the instrument." 4 Wheat., 644. Probably in view of this somewhat unexpected application of the clause, operating as it did to deprive the States of nearly all legislative control over corporations of their own creation, the courts have given liberal construction to the reservation of power to alter, amend and repeal a charter; and have sustained some Acts of legislation made under such a reservation which are, at least, questionable.

In my judgment, the reservation is to be interpreted as placing the State Legislature back on the same platform of power and control over the charter containing it as it would have occupied had the constitutional restriction about contracts never existed; and I think the reservation effects nothing more. It certainly cannot be interpreted as reserving a right to violate a contract at will. No Legislature ever reserved such a right in any contract. Legislatures often reserve the right to terminate a continuous contract at will; but never to violate a contract, or change its terms, without the consent of the other party. The reserved power in question is simply that of legislation: to alter, amend or repeal a charter. This is very different from the power to violate, or to alter the terms of a contract at will. A reservation of power to violate a contract or alter it, or impair its obligation, would be repugnant to the contract itself, and void. A proviso repugnant to the granting part of a deed or to the enacting part of a statute is void. Interpreted as a reservation of the right to legislate, the reserved power is sustainable on sound principles; but interpreted as the reservation of a right to violate an executed contract, it is not sustainable.

The question then comes back to the extent of the power to legislate. But that is a restricted power; restricted by other constitutional provisions, to which reference has already been made. Certainly the Legislature cannot, in a charter of incorporation or in any other law, reserve to itself any greater power of legislation than the Constitution itself concedes to it. It seems to me clear, therefore, that the power reserved cannot authorize a flat abrogation of the contract by Congress, because, as before shown, such an abrogation would be a violation of those clauses which inhibit the taking of property without process of law and without compensation.

It may be said that by reason of the reserved power to alter and repeal a charter, this court has sustained legislative Acts imposing taxes from which the corporation by the charter was exempted. This is true. But the imposition of taxes is pre-eminently an Act of legislation. Its temporary suspension, conceded in a charter, is a suspension of the legislative power pro tanto. Being such, a reservation of the right to legislate, or, which is the same thing, to alter, amend or repeal the charter, necessarily includes the right to resume the power of taxation. The same observations apply to the regulation of fares and freights; for this is a branch of the police power, applicable to all cases which involve a common charge upon the people.

I conclude, therefore, that the power reserved to alter, amend and repeal the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, is not sufficient to authorize the passage of the law in question.

I will only add, further, that the initiation of this species of legislation by Congress is well calculated to excite alarm. It has the effect of announcing to the world and giving it to be understood that this Government does not consider itself bound by its engagements. It sets the example of repudiation of government obligations. It strikes a blow at the public credit. It asserts the principle that might makes right. It saps the foundations of public morality. Perhaps, however, these are considerations more properly to be addressed to the legislative discretion. But when forced upon the attention by what, in my judgment, is an unconstitutional exercise of legislative power, they have a more than ordinary weight and significance.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

I also dissent from the judgment of the court in these cases.

The decision will, in my opinion, tend to create insecurity in the title to corporate property in the country. It, in effect, determines that the General Government, in its dealings with the Pacific Railroad Companies, is under no legal obligation to fulfill its contracts, and that whether it shall do so is a question of policy and not of duty. It also seems to me to recognize the right of the government to appropriate by legislative decree the earnings of those Companies, without judicial inquiry and determination as to its claim to such earnings, thus sanctioning the exercise of judicial functions in its own cases. And in respect to the Central Pacific Company it asserts a supremacy of the Federal over the State Government in the control of the Corporation which, in my judgment, is subversive of the rights of the State. I, therefore, am constrained to add some suggestions to those presented by my associates, Justices Strong and Bradley. In what I have to say I shall confine myself chiefly to the case of the Central Pacific Company. That Company is a state Corporation, and is the successor of a corporation of the same name, created before the railroad Acts of Congress were passed, and of four other corporations organized under the laws of the State. No sovereign attributes possessed by the General Government were exercised in calling into existence the original company, or any of the companies with which it is now consolidated. They all derived their powers and capacities from the State, and held them at its will.

The relation of the General Government to the Pacific Companies is twofold: that of sovereign in its own territory and that of contractor. As sovereign, its power extends to the enforcement of such acts and regulations by the Companies as will insure, in the management of their roads, and conduct of their officers in its territory, the safety, convenience and comfort of the public. It can exercise such control in its territory over all common carriers of passengers and property. As a contractor it is bound by its engagements equally with a private individual; it cannot be relieved from them by any assertion of its sovereign authority.

Its relation to the original Central Pacific Company, and to the present Company as its successor, in the construction and equipment of its road, and its use for public purposes, was and is that of a contractor; and the rights and obligations of both are to be measured, as in the case of similar relations between other parties, by the terms and conditions of the contract.

By the 1st section of the original Railroad Act of Congress, passed in July, 1862 [12 Stat. at L., 489], certain persons therein designated were created a Corporation by the name of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and authorized to construct and operate a continuous railroad and telegraph line from a designated point on the 100th meridian of longitude west from Greenwich to the western boundary of Nevada Territory, and were invested with the powers, privileges and immunities necessary for that purpose, and with such as are usually conferred upon corporations.

By subsequent provisions of the Act and the Amending Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356, three grants were made to the Company thus created: a grant of a right of way over the public lands of the United States for the road and telegraph line; a grant of ten alternate sections of land on each side of the road, to aid in its construction and that of the telegraph line; and a grant of a certain number of subsidy bonds of the United States, each in the sum of $1,000 payable in thirty years, with semi-annual interest; patents for the lands and the bonds to be issued as each twenty consecutive miles of the road and telegraph should be completed. These grants were made upon certain conditions as to the completion of the road and telegraph line, their construction and use by the government, and their pledge as security for the ultimate payment of the bonds. They were the considerations offered by the government to the Company for the work which it undertook.

By the Act which thus incorporated the Union Pacific Company, and made the grants mentioned, the United States proposed to the Central Pacific that it should construct in like manner a railroad and a telegraph line through the State of California from a point near the Pacific coast to its eastern boundary, upon the same terms and conditions, and after completing them across the State, to continue their construction through the Territories of the United States until they should meet and connect with the road and telegraph line of the Union Pacific.

They, in effect, said to the Company, that if it would construct a railroad and a telegraph line from the Pacific Ocean eastward to a connection with the Union Pacific—the road to be in all respects one of first class—and keep them in repair, so that they could be used at all times by any department of the government for the transmission of dispatches and the transportation of mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, at reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding such as were charged private persons for similar services, and allow the government at all times the preference in the use of the road and telegraph, they would grant the Company a right of way over the public lands for the construction of the road and telegraph line, and grant to it ten alternate sections of land on each side of the road, and give it their bonds, each for the sum of $1,000, payable thirty years after date, with semi-annual interest, such bonds to be issued at the rate of sixteen, thirty-two or forty-eight the mile, according to the character of the country over which the road should be constructed; and would issue patents for the lands, and the subsidy bonds, as each twenty consecutive miles of the road and telegraph should be completed in the manner prescribed; it being agreed that the Company should pay the bonds as they should mature, and that for the security of their payment they should constitute a second mortgage upon the whole line of the road and telegraph, and that one half of the compensation earned for services to the government, and, after the completion of the road, five per cent. of its net earnings should be retained and applied to the payment of the bonds; and also, that the Company should complete the road by the first of July, 1876, and keep it in repair and use thereafter; or upon failure to do so, that the government might take possession of the road and complete it, or keep it in repair and use as the case might be. And they further, in effect, said, that if these terms and conditions were satisfactory, the Company should file its written acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months thereafter; and that thereupon there should be a contract between them.

This proposition of the government the Central Pacific accepted, and filed its acceptance, as required; and thereupon the provisions of the Act became a contract between it and the United States, as complete and perfect as could be made by the most formal instrument. The United States thus came under obligation to the Company to make the grants and issue the bonds stipulated, upon the construction of the road and telegraph line in the manner prescribed. The corporate capacity of the Company in no respect affected the nature of the contract, or made it in any particular different from what it would have been had a natural person been one of the parties. The Company was not a creature of the United States, and Congress could neither add to nor subtract from its corporate powers. The exercise of the right of eminent domain allowed in the Territories was not the exercise of a corporate power. That right belongs to the sovereign authority, and whoever exercises it does so as the agent of that sovereignty. Nor was its character as a state institution changed by the fact that it was permitted by Congress to extend its road through the territory of the United States. This permission was no more than the license which is usually extended by positive agreement, or by comity in the absence of such agreement, by one State to the corporations of another State, to do business and own property in its jurisdiction. Such license is not the source of the corporate powers exercised. Insurance companies, express companies and, indeed, companies organized for almost every kind of business, are, by comity, permitted throughout the United States, and generally throughout the civilized world, to do business, make contracts, and exercise their corporate powers in a jurisdiction where, in a strict legal sense, they have no corporate existence. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for example, to take an illustration mentioned by counsel, is a corporation created under the laws of the State of New York and, like the Central Pacific, has been subsidized by the United States. Its ships visit Central America, California, Japan and China, and in all these places it leases or owns wharves, and makes and enforces contracts necessary to the transaction of its business, yet no one has ever pretended or suggested that it derived any of its corporate powers from the United States, or from the authorities of any of the places named. By consent of those authorities, expressed in terms, or implied in what is understood as their comity, it exercises powers derived solely from the State of New York.

When, therefore, Congress assented to the extension into the territory of the United States of the road which the Central Pacific was authorized by its charter to construct in California, it was deemed important for the Company to obtain also the consent and authority of the State to act without its limits and assume responsibilities not originally contemplated. Accordingly, in 1864, the Legislature of the State, at its second session after the adoption of the original Railroad Act of Congress, in order to enable the Company to comply with its provisions and conditions, authorized the Company to construct, maintain and operate the road in the territory lying east of the State, and invested it with the rights, privileges and powers granted by the Act of Congress, with the reservation, however, that the Company should be subject to all the laws of the State concerning railroad and telegraph lines, except that messages and property of the United States, of the State and of the Company should have priority of transmission and transportation. The extent of the power which was thus reserved we shall hereafter consider. It is sufficient at present to observe that it was as ample and complete as it is possible for one sovereignty to exert over institutions of its own creation, and that its exercise is incompatible with the control asserted by the Law of Congress of 1878, which has given rise to the present suit.

The Central Pacific Company having accepted, as already stated, the conditions proffered by Congress, proceeded at once to the execution of its contract. In the face of great obstacles, doubts and uncertainties, its directors commenced and prosecuted the work, and within a period several years less than that prescribed, its telegraph line and road were completed, the latter with all the appurtenances of a first class road, and were accepted by the government. Patents for the land granted and the subsidy bonds mentioned were accordingly issued to the Company. Since then the road and telegraph line have been kept in repair and use, and the government has enjoyed all the privileges in the transmission of dispatches over the telegraph, and in the transportation of mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies and public stores over the road, which were stipulated. There has been no failure on the part of the Company to comply with its engagements nor is any complaint of delinquency or neglect in its action made by the government. The road is more valuable now than on the day of its completion; it has been improved in its rails, bridges, cars, depots, turnouts, machine-shops, and all other appurtenances. Its earnings have been constantly increasing, and it constitutes to-day a far better security to the United States for the ultimate payment of the subsidy bonds than at any period since its completion, and to the government it has caused, with the connecting road of the Union Pacific, an immense saving of expense. The records of the different departments show an annual saving, as compared with previous expenditures, in the item of transportation alone of the mails, troops and public stores, of $5,000,000, aggregating at this day over $50,000,000.

Whilst the Company was thus complying in all respects with its engagements, the Act of May 7, 1878, 20 Stat. at L., 56, was passed, altering in essential particulars the contract of the Company, and greatly increasing its obligations. By the contract, only one half of the compensation for transportation for the government is to be retained and applied towards the payment of the bonds. By the Act of 1878, the whole of such compensation is to be retained and thus applied. By the contract, five per cent. only of the net earnings of the road are to be paid to the United States to be applied upon the subsidy bonds. By the Act of 1878, twenty-five per cent. of the net earnings are to be thus paid and applied. By the contract, the only security which the government had for its subsidy bonds was a second mortgage on the road and its appurtenances and telegraph line; and the Company was allowed to give a first mortgage as security for its own bonds, issued for an equal amount. By the Act of 1878, additional security is required for the ultimate payment of its own bonds, and the subsidy bonds of the United States, by the creation of what is termed a sinking fund; that is, by compelling the Company to deposit $1,200,000 a year in the Treasury of the United States, to be held for such payment, or so much thereof as may be necessary to make the five per cent net earnings, the whole sum earned as compensation for services, and sufficient in addition to make the whole reach twenty-five per cent of the net earnings.

It is not material, in the view I take of the subject, whether the deposit of this large sum in the Treasury of the creditor be termed a payment, or something else. It is the exaction from the Company of money for which the original contract did not stipulate, which constitutes the objectionable feature of the Act of 1878. The Act thus makes a great change in the liabilities of the Company. Its purpose, however disguised, is to coerce the payment of money years in advance of the time prescribed by the contract. That such legislation is beyond the power of Congress I cannot entertain a doubt. The clauses of the original Acts reserving a right to Congress to alter or amend them do not, in my judgment, justify the legislation. The power reserved under these clauses is declared to be for a specific purpose. The language in the Act of 1862 is as follows: "And the better to accomplish the object of this Act, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order and to secure to the government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time—having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein—add to, alter, amend or repeal this Act." Sec. 18. The language of the amendatory Act of 1864 is more general: "That Congress may at any time alter, amend or repeal this Act." The two Acts are to be read together; they deal with the same subject; and are to be treated as if passed at the same time. R. R. Co. v. Prescott, 16 Wall., 603 [83 U. S., XXI., 373]. The limitations, therefore, imposed upon the exercise of the power of alteration and amendment in the Act of 1862 must be held to apply to the power reserved in the Act of 1864. They are not repealed, either expressly or impliedly, by anything in the latter Act. If this be so, the legislation of 1878 can find no support in the clauses. The conditions upon which the reserved power could be exercised under them did not then exist. The road and telegraph had years before been constructed, and always kept in working order; and the government has at all times been secured in their use and benefits for postal, military and other purposes.

But if the reserved power of alteration and amendment be considered as freed from the limitations designated, it cannot be exerted to affect the contract so far as it has been executed, or the rights vested under it. When the road was completed in the manner prescribed and accepted, the Company became entitled as of right to the land and subsidy bonds stipulated. The title to the land was perfect on the issue of the patents; the title to the bonds vested on their delivery. Any alteration of the Acts under the reservation clauses, or their repeal, could not revoke the title to the land or recall the bonds or change the right of the Company to either. So far as these are concerned the contract was, long before the Act of 1878, an executed and closed transaction, and they were as much beyond the reach of the government as any other property vested in private proprietorship. The right to hold the subsidy bonds for the period at which they are to run without paying or advancing money on them before their maturity, except as originally provided, or furnishing other security than that originally stipulated, was, on their delivery, as perfect as the right to hold the title to the land patented unincumbered by future liens of the government. Any alteration or amendment could only operate for the future and affect subsequent acts of the Company; it could have no operation upon that which had already been done and vested.

There have been much discussion and great difference of opinion on many points as to the meaning and effect of a similar reservation in statutes of the States, but on the point that it does not authorize any interference with vested rights, all the authorities concur. Such was the language of Chief Justice Shaw in the case cited from the Supreme Court of Massachusetts; and such is the language of Mr. Justice Clifford in the cases cited from this court. And such must be the case, or there would be no safety in dealing with the government where such a clause is inserted in its legislation. It could undo at pleasure everything done under its authority, and despoil of their property those who had trusted to its faith. Com. v. Essex Co., 13 Gray, 289; Miller v. State, 15 Wall., 478 [82 U. S., XXI., 98]; Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 500 [82 U. S., XXI., 133]. See, also, Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 319 [XXIV., 357], and Sage v. Dillard, 15 B. Mon., 349.

The object of a reservation of this kind in Acts of incorporation is to insure to the government control over corporate franchises, rights and privileges which, in its sovereign or legislative capacity, it may call into existence, not to interfere with contracts which the corporation created by it may make. Such is the purport of our language in Tomlinson v. Jessup, where we state the object of the reservation to be "To prevent a grant of corporate rights and privileges in a form which will preclude legislative interference with their exercise, if the public interest should at any time require such interference," and that "The reservation affects the entire relation between the State and corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State." 15 Wall., 454 [82 U. S., XXI., 204]. The same thing we repeated with greater distinctness in the case of the R. R. Co. v. Maine, where we said that by the reservation the State retained the power to alter the Act incorporating the Company, in all particulars constituting the grant to it of corporate rights, privileges and immunities; and that "The existence of the corporation, and its franchises and immunities, derived directly from the State, were thus kept under its control." But we added, that "Rights and interests acquired by the Company, not constituting a part of the contract of incorporation, stand upon a different footing." 96 U. S., 499 [XXIV., 836].

Now, there was no grant by the United States to the Central Pacific Company of corporate rights, privileges and immunities. No attribute of sovereignty was exercised by them in its creation. It took its life, and all its attributes and capacities from the State. Whatever powers, rights and privileges it acquired from the United States it took under its contract with them, and not otherwise. The relation between the parties being that of contractors, the rights and obligations of both, as already stated, are to be measured by the terms and conditions of the contract. And when the Government of the United States entered into that contract, it laid aside its sovereignty and put itself on terms of equality with its contractor. It was then but a civil corporation, as incapable as the Central Pacific of releasing itself from its obligations, or of finally determining their extent and character. It could not, as justly observed by one of the counsel who argued this case, "Release itself and hold the other party to the contract. It could not change its obligations and hold its rights unchanged. It cannot bind itself as a civil corporation, and loose itself by its sovereign legislative power." This principle is aptly expressed by the great conservative statesman, Alexander Hamilton, in his report to Congress on the public credit, in 1795; "When a government," he observes, "enters into a contract with an individual, it deposes, as to the matter of the contract, its constitutional authority, and exchanges the character of legislator for that of a moral agent, with the same rights and obligations as an individual. Its promises may be justly considered out of its power to legislate, unless in aid of them. It is, in theory, impossible to reconcile the two ideas of a promise which obliges with a power to make a law which can vary the effect of it." Hamilton's Works, Vol. III., pp. 518, 519.

When, therefore, the Government of the United States entered into the contract with the Central Pacific, it could no more than a private corporation or a private individual finally construe and determine the extent of the Company's rights and liabilities. If it had cause of complaint against the Company, it could not undertake itself, by legislative decree, to redress the grievance, but was compelled to seek redress as all other civil corporations are compelled, through the judicial tribunals. If the Company was wasting its property, of which no allegation is made, or impairing the security of the government, the remedy by suit was ample. To declare that one of two contracting parties is entitled, under the contract between them, to the payment of a greater sum than is admitted to be payable, or to other or greater security than that given, is not a legislative function. It is judicial action; it is the exercise of judicial power; and all such power, with respect to any transaction arising under the laws of the United States, is vested by the Constitution in the courts of the country.

In the case of Commonwealth v. Proprs. of N. B. Bridge, a corporation of Massachusetts, the Supreme Court of that State, speaking with reference to a contract between the parties, uses this language: "Each has equal rights and privileges under it, and neither can interpret its terms authoritatively so as to control and bind the rights of the other. The Commonwealth has no more authority to construe the charter than the Corporation. By becoming a party to a contract with its citizens the government devests itself of its sovereignty in respect to the terms and conditions of the contract and its construction and interpretation, and stands in the same position as a private individual. If it were otherwise, the rights of parties contracting with the government would be held at the caprice of the sovereign, and exposed to all the risks arising from the corrupt or ill-judged use of misguided power. The interpretation and construction of contracts when drawn in question belong exclusively to the Judicial Department of the government. The Legislature has no more power to construe their own contracts with their citizens than those which individuals make with each other. They can do neither without exercising judicial powers which would be contrary to the elementary principles of our government, as set forth in the Declaration of Rights." 2 Gray, 350.

In that case the charter of the corporation authorized the building of a toll-bridge across a navigable river, with two suitable draws at least thirty feet wide. A subsequent Act required draws to be made of a greater width; but the court held that the question whether the draws already made were suitable, and constructed so as not unreasonably or unnecessarily to obstruct or impede public navigation, was not a question to be determined by the Legislature, or by the corporation, but by the courts. It was a question which could not be authoritatively determined by either party so as to control and bind the other. "Like all other matters involving a controversy concerning public duty and private rights," said the court, "it is to be adjusted and settled in the regular tribunals, where questions of law and fact are adjudicated on fixed and established principles, and according to the forms and usages best adapted to secure the impartial administration of justice." In the case at bar, the government, by the Act of 1878, undertakes to decide authoritatively what the obligations of the Central Pacific are, and in effect declares that if the directors of the Company do not respect its construction, and obey its mandates, founded upon such construction, they shall be subject to fine and imprisonment.

The distinction between a judicial and a legislative Act is well defined. The one determines what the law is, and what the rights of parties are, with reference to transactions already had; the other prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under it. Wherever an Act undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation, or of property, as the foundation upon which it proceeds, such Act is to that extent a judicial one, and not the proper exercise of legislative functions. Thus, an Act of the Legislature of Illinois authorizing the sale of the lands of an intestate, to raise a specific sum, to pay certain parties their claims against the estate of the deceased for moneys advanced and liabilities incurred, was held unconstitutional, on the ground that it involved a judicial determination that the estate was indebted to those parties for the moneys advanced and liabilities incurred. The ascertainment of indebtedness from one party to another, and a direction for its payment, the court considered to be judicial acts which could not be performed by the Legislature. Lane v. Dorman, 3 Scam., 238. So, also, an Act of the Legislature of Tennessee authorizing a guardian of infant heirs to sell certain lands of which their ancestor died seised, and directing the proceeds to be applied to the payment of the ancestor's debts, was, on similar grounds, held to be unconstitutional. Jones v. Perry, 10

Yerg., 59. Tested by the principle thus illustrated, the Act of 1878 must be held in many ways to transcend the legislative power of Congress.

I cannot assent to the doctrine which would ascribe to the Federal Government a sovereign right to treat as it may choose corporations with which it deals, and would exempt it from that great law of morality which should bind all governments, as it binds all individuals, to do justice and keep faith. Because it was deemed important, on the adoption of the Constitution, in the light of what was known as tender laws, appraisement laws, stay laws and installment laws of the States, which Story says had prostrated all private credit and all private morals, to insert a clause prohibiting the States from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts, and no clause prohibiting the Federal Government from like legislation is found, it is argued that no such prohibition upon it exists.

"It is true," as I had occasion to observe in another case, "there is no provision in the Constitution forbidding in express terms such legislation. And it is also true that there are express powers delegated to Congress, the execution of which necessarily operates to impair the obligation of contracts. It was the object of the framers of that instrument to create a National Government, competent to represent the entire country in its relations with foreign nations, and to accomplish by its legislation measures of common interest to all the people, which the several States in their independent capacities were incapable of effecting, or if capable, the execution of which would be attended with great difficulty and embarrassment. They, therefore, clothed Congress with all the powers essential to the successful accomplishment of these ends, and carefully withheld the grant of all other powers. Some of the powers granted, from their very nature, interfere in their execution with contracts of parties. Thus, war suspends intercourse and commerce between citizens or subjects of belligerent nations; it renders during its continuance the performance of contracts previously made, unlawful. These incidental consequences were contemplated in the grant of the war power. So the regulation of commerce and the imposition of duties may so affect the prices of articles imported or manufactured as to essentially alter the value of previous contracts respecting them; but this incidental consequence was seen in the grant of the power over commerce and duties. There can be no valid objection to laws passed in execution of express powers, that consequences like these follow incidentally from their execution. But it is otherwise when such consequences do not follow incidentally, but are directly enacted."

"The only express authority for any legislation affecting the obligation of contracts is found in the power to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, the direct object of which is to release insolvent debtors from their contracts upon the surrender of their property." Legal Tender Cas., 12 Wall., 663 [79 U. S., XX., 348]. From this express grant in the case of bankrupts the inference is deducible, that there was no general power to interfere with contracts. If such general power existed, there could have been no occasion for the delegation of an express power in the case of bankrupts. The argument for the general power from the absence of a special prohibition proceeds upon a misconception of the nature of the Federal Government as one of limited powers. It can exercise only such powers as are specifically granted or are necessarily implied. All other powers, not prohibited to the States, are reserved to them or to the people. As I said in the case referred to, the doctrine that where a power is not expressly forbidden it may be exercised, would change the whole character of our government. According to the great commentators on the Constitution, and the opinions of the great jurists, who have studied and interpreted its meaning, the true doctrine is, that where a power is not in terms granted, and is not necessary or proper for the exercise of a power thus granted, it does not exist. It would not be pretended, for example, had there been no amendments to the Constitution as originally adopted, that Congress could have passed a law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or the right of the People to assemble and petition for a redress of grievances. The amendments prohibiting the exercise of any such power were adopted in the language of the preamble accompanying them, when presented to the States, "in order to prevent misconception or abuse" of the powers of the Constitution.

Independent of these views, there are many considerations which lead to the conclusion that the power to impair contracts, by direct action to that end, does not exist with the General Government. In the first place, one of the objects of the Constitution, expressed in its preamble, was the establishment of justice, and what that meant in its relations to contracts is not left, as was justly said by the late Chief Justice in Hepburn v. Griswold, to inference or conjecture. As he observes, at the time the Constitution was undergoing discussion in the Convention, the Congress of the Confederation was engaged in framing the ordinance for the government of the Northwestern Territory, in which certain articles of compact were established between the People of the original States and the People of the Territory, for the purpose, as expressed in the instrument, of extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, upon which the States, their laws and constitutions, were erected. By that ordinance it was declared, that, in the just preservation of rights and property, "No law ought ever to be made, or have force in the said Territory, that shall, in any manner, interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements bona fide and without fraud previously formed." The same provision, adds the Chief Justice, found more condensed expression in the prohibition upon the States against impairing the obligation of contracts, which has ever been recognized as an efficient safeguard against injustice; and though the prohibition is not applied in terms to the Government of the United States, he expressed the opinion, speaking for himself and the majority of the court at the time, that it was clear "That those who framed and those who adopted the Constitution intended that the spirit of this prohibition should pervade the entire body of legislation, and that the justice which the Constitution was ordained to establish was not thought by them to be compatible with legislation of an opposite tendency." 8 Wall., 623 [75 U. S., XIX., 526.].

Similar views are found expressed in the opinions of other Judges of this court. In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State Legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority, and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private contracts of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A and gave it to B. "It is against all reason and justice," he added, "for a people to intrust a Legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract, or the right of private property. To maintain that a Federal or State Legislature possesses such powers if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in all free republican governments." 3 Dall., 388.

In Ogden v. Saunders, which was before this court in 1827, Mr. Justice Thompson, referring to the clauses of the Constitution prohibiting the State from passing a bill of attainder, an ex post facto law, or a law impairing the obligation of contracts, said: "Neither provision can strictly be considered as introducing any new principle, but only for greater security and safety to incorporate into this charter provisions admitted by all to be among the first principles of our government. No state court would, I presume, sanction and enforce an ex post facto law, if no such prohibition was contained in the Constitution of the United States; so, neither would retrospective laws, taking away vested rights, be enforced. Such laws are repugnant to those fundamental principles upon which every just system of laws is founded."

In The Federalist, Mr. Madison declared that laws impairing the obligation of contracts were contrary to the first principles of the social compact and to every principle of sound legislation; and in the Dartmouth Coll. Case Mr. Webster contended that Acts, which were there held to impair the obligation of contracts, were not the exercise of a power properly legislative, as their object and effect was to take away vested rights. "To justify the taking away of vested rights," he said, "there must be a forfeiture, to adjudge upon and declare which is the proper province of the judiciary." Surely the Constitution would have failed to establish justice had it allowed the exercise of such a dangerous power to the Congress of the United States.

In the second place, legislation impairing the obligation of contracts impinges upon the provision of the Constitution which declares that no one shall be deprived of his property without due process of law; and that means by law in its regular course of administration through the courts of justice. Contracts are property, and a large portion of the wealth of the country exists in that form. Whatever impairs their value diminishes, therefore, the property of the owner; and if that be effected by direct legislative action operating upon the contract, forbidding its enforcement or transfer, or otherwise restricting its use, the owner is as much deprived of his property without due process of law as if the contract were impounded, or the value it represents were in terms wholly or partially confiscated.

In the case at bar, the contract with the Central Pacific is, as I have said, changed in essential particulars. The Company is compelled to accept it in its changed form, and by legislative decree, without the intervention of the courts, that is, without due process of law, to pay out of its earnings each year to its contractors, the United States, or deposit with them, a sum that may amount to $1,200,000, and this, twenty years before the debt to which it is to be applied becomes due and payable by the Company. If this taking of the earnings of the Company and keeping them from its use during these twenty years to come is not depriving the Company of its property, it would be difficult to give any meaning to the provision of the Constitution. It will only be necessary hereafter to give to the seizure of another's property or earnings a new name, to call it the creation of a sinking fund or the providing against the possible wastefulness or improvidence of the owner, to get rid of the constitutional restraint. To my mind the evasion of that clause, the frittering away of all sense and meaning to it, are insuperable objections to the legislation of Congress. Where contracts are impaired, or when operating against the government are sought to be evaded and avoided by legislation, a blow is given to the security of all property. If the government will not keep its faith, little better can be expected from the citizen. If contracts are not observed, no property will in the end be respected; and all history shows that rights of persons are unsafe where property is insecure. Protection to one goes with protection to the other; and there can be neither prosperity nor progress where this foundation of all just government is unsettled. "The moment," said the elder Adams, "the idea is admitted into society, that property is not as sacred as the laws of God, and that there is not a force of law and public justice to protect it, anarchy and tyranny commence."

I am aware of the opinion which prevails generally that the Pacific railroad corporations have, by their accumulation of wealth, and the numbers in their employ, become so powerful as to be disturbing and dangerous influences in the legislation of the country; and that they should, therefore, be brought by stringent measures into subjection to the State. This may be true; I do not say that it is not; but if it is, it furnishes no justification for the repudiation or evasion of the contracts made with them by the government. The law that protects the wealth of the most powerful, protects also the earnings of the most humble; and the law which would confiscate the property of the one would in the end take the earnings of the other.

There are many other objections to the Act of Congress besides those I have mentioned, each to my mind convincing; but why add to what has already been said? If the reasons given will not convince, neither would any others which could be presented. I will, therefore, refer only to the interference of the law with the rights of the State of California.

The Central Pacific being a state Corporation, the law creating it is, by the Constitution of California, subject to alteration, amendment and repeal by its Legislature at any time; a power which the Legislature can neither abdicate nor transfer. In its assent given to the Company to extend its road into the territory of the United States, the General Government having authorized the extension, the Legislature reserved the same control which it possesses over other railroad and telegraph companies created by it. That control under the new Constitution goes, as is claimed, to the extent of regulating the fares and freights of the Company, thus limiting its income or earnings; and of supervising all its business, even to the keeping of its accounts, making disobedience of its directors to the regulations established for its management punishable by fine and imprisonment; and the Legislature may impose the additional penalty of a forfeiture of the franchises and privileges of the Company. The law in existence when the Corporation was created, and still in force, requires the creation of a sinking fund by the Company to meet its bonds, and under it large sums have been accumulated for that purpose, and still further sums must be raised. In a word, the law of the State undertakes to control and manage the Corporation, in all particulars required for the service, convenience and protection of the public; and can there be a doubt in the mind of anyone that over its own creations the State has, within its own territory, as against the United States, the superior authority? Yet the power asserted by the General Government in the passage of the Act of 1878 would justify legislation affecting all the affairs of the Company, both in the State and in the Territories of the United States. It could treble the amount of the sum to be annually deposited in the sinking fund; it could command the immediate deposit of the entire amount of the ultimate indebtedness; it could change the order of the liens held by the government and the first-mortgage bondholders; it could extend the lien of the government beyond the property to the entire income of the Company, and, in fact, does so by the Act in question (sec. 9); it could require the transportation for the government to be made without compensation; and it could subject the Company to burdens which, if anticipated at the time, would have prevented the construction of the road. A power thus vast, once admitted to exist, might be exerted to control the entire affairs of the Company, in direct conflict with the legislation of the State; its exercise would be a mere matter of legislative discretion in Congress. Yet it is clear that both governments cannot control and manage the Company in the same territory, subjecting its directors to fine and imprisonment for disobeying their regulations. Under the Constitution the management of local affairs is left chiefly to the States, and it never entered into the conception of its framers that under it the creations of the States could be taken from their control. Certain it is that over no subject is it more important for their interests that they should retain the management and direction than over corporations brought into existence by them. The decision of the majority goes a great way—further, it appears to me, than any heretofore made by the court—to weaken the authority of the States, in this respect, as against the will of Congress. According to my understanding of its scope and reach, the United States have only to make a contract with a state corporation, and a loan to it, to oust the jurisdiction of the State, and place the corporation under their direction. It would seem plain that if legislation taking institutions of the State from its control, can be sustained by this court, the government will drift from the limited and well guarded system established by our fathers into a centralized and consolidated government.

See 9 OTTO.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JAMES H. MORGAN ET AL.

Secretary of the Treasury—extra compensation to collector—bill of exceptions—point not taken below.

1. An adjusted account made by the Secretary of the Treasury containing an allowance made by him to a Collector of Internal Revenue for extra compensation, is conclusive of that question.

2. Such Secretary may fix the rate of extra compensation to be allowed in advance of the service rendered and, if he does, it becomes binding with Government.

3. This court will hear the case upon the rulings contained in the bill of exceptions, and not upon the evidence.

4. A point, which does not appear by the bill of exceptions to have been taken in the court below, will not be heard in this court.

[No. 258.]

Submitted Apr. 25, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

The United States brought suit in the court below, upon the bond of Morgan as Collector of Internal Revenue, for an alleged failure to pay over moneys due. The defense was: 1. A general denial of indebtedness. 2. A special plea, setting forth certain items disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and claiming the allowance thereof. Upon the trial, defendants gave evidence against plaintiff's objection, by one Curtis and by Morgan himself, to show that the Secretary of the Treasury, by a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, agreed to allow the defendant seven per cent. commission on the first $100,000 and five per cent on all over that amount collected and accounted for by him for the term commencing June 30, 1864, and ending Feb. 28, 1865.

There was verdict and judgment for the defendants; whereupon the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. William W. Morrow, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We find no error in this record. The objection to the admissibility of the testimony of Curtis and the defendant Morgan, was not because it was insufficient to prove an arrangement between the Secretary of the Treasury and Morgan, by which Morgan was to be allowed his extra compensation, but because the Secretary of the Treasury might make the allowance at any time, and as the adjusted account showed the exact amount finally allowed, this account was conclusive evidence on that question. As the case stands upon the record, it is to be presumed there was evidence tending to prove that the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the objection as made, we think the ruling of the court was right. There is nothing in the Act of Congress which precludes the Secretary of the Treasury from fixing the rate of extra compensation to be allowed in advance of the service rendered, and if he does, it becomes binding on the Government and may be enforced in the settlement of accounts thereafter.

The allowance of a commission upon the sum of $13,619.85, as part of the compensation of the Collector for the year ending June 30, 1864, was also right. The money was all collected before the expiration of that year, and $10,000 was actually paid into the Treasury. As to the allowance of commissions for this there can be no doubt. It is a matter of no consequence that advices of the payment did not reach the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, so as to be entered on the books there, until after the year expired. No unnecessary delay occurred in paying over the remainder. It was actually collected in a distant part of the collection district, and did not in the ordinary course of transmission reach the Collector so that it could be paid into the Treasury before June 30. The Collector was accountable for it when it was collected, and since he paid it over as soon as he could, we think he was entitled to his compensation as for services rendered during the year.

The objection to the claim for express charges paid was not made below and cannot be considered by us. We hear the case upon the rulings contained in the bill of exceptions, and not upon the evidence.

The same is true as to the claim now made, that compensation has been given by the jury in their verdict in excess of the maximum limit fixed by the statute for the year. It does not appear from the bill of exceptions that this point was taken below.

No error is assigned upon that part of the charge of the court which related to the payment of the bills of the assistant assessors.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOHN B. DUMONT, Appt.,

v.

THE DES MOINES VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

Bill of Review.

A petition for a bill of review will be denied, unless diligence is shown in making the application, and where the evidence, alleged to have been discovered, might as easily have been found at the time of the controversy, as now.

[No. 87.]

Submitted Apr. 21, 1879. Decided May 5, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

Petition for leave to file bill of review.

The bill in this case was filed in the court below, for the cancellation of a certain land certificate, and the establishment of title in the complainant. The court below dismissed the bill, and the decree was affirmed by this court.

The appellant now brings his petition for leave to file a bill of review, on the ground that he had discovered new and important evidence, since the decision of the court below, which evidence would enable him to prove the invalidity of the defense and establish his claim. That the evidence consisted of a certain Treaty between the United States and the Sacs and Foxes and other Indian Tribes, made July 15, 1830, and ratified Feb. 24, 1831. 7 Stat. at L., 328. That he had been guilty of no negligence or laches in not sooner discovering said evidence, but that he and his counsel had been very diligent in endeavoring to obtain full knowledge of all the evidence as to the title in controversy.

Messrs. Charles A. Clark and James Grant, for appellant:

The new matter goes directly to the issue. It is not merely cumulative, but is a new fact, decisive of the central issue in the case. As such, it warrants a bill of review.

Story, Eq. Pl., secs. 415, 416 and notes; Partridge v. Osborn, 5 Russ., 195; Massie v. Graham, 3 McLean, 42; see, also, 2 Daniells, Ch. Pl. (Perkins, 3d Am. ed.), 1640, 1641 and notes.

Messrs. C. C. Nourse and N. M. Hubbard, for appellees:

The evidence with reasonable diligence might have been discovered sooner. Besides it is not so much a revelation of new facts, as a discovery of new theories.

As to diligence, see Livingston v. Hubbs, 3 Johns. Ch., 124; Pendleton v. Fay, 3 Paige, 203; Massie's Heirs v. Graham, 3 McLean, 41; Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 414.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This application is denied. The petitioners have not shown such diligence as will entitle them to reopen a litigation that has been carried on with so much pertinacity for a great number of years. The new matter relied upon consists principally of record evidence drawn from the archives of the government, which might as easily have been found at the time the controversy arose, as now. The Treaty was a part of the law of the land, and the maps and official reports have been on file in the proper government office where they were discovered, for a quarter of a century. We are all of opinion that if a bill of review should be filed containing all the averments that are in the present petition, it ought not to be sustained.

Clearly, then, leave ought not to be granted for a continuance of the litigation.

99 U. S.

XCIX UNITED STATES.

99 U. S. 1-10, 25 L. 309, WOLF v. STIX.

Bankruptcy.—Provision that no debt created by fraud shall be discharged, means positive fraud, or fraud in fact; hence, one liable on replevin bond as purchaser from bankrupt selling in fraud of his creditors, is not guilty of fraud in this sense, but his liability may be discharged in bankruptcy, p. 7.

Cited in Hennequin v. Clewes, 111 U. S. 679, 28 L. 568, 4 S. Ct. 579, holding debt arising from appropriation of pledged securities may be discharged; Noble v. Hammond, 129 U. S. 68, 69, 32 L. 623, 9 S. Ct. 236, 237, holding debt arising from mingling funds with those of another may be discharged; Upshur v. Briscoe, 138 U. S. 376, 34 L. 935, 11 S. Ct. 317, affirming 37 La. Ann. 152, holding person receiving money, agreeing to pay interest, may be discharged; Peel v. Bryson, 72 Ga. 333, holding fraudulent representations with reference to sale of land not within the provisions of the act; Georgia R. R. v. Cubbedge, 75 Ga. 323, holding debt of a person failing to account for property, barred by discharge; Baines v. Adams, 33 La. Ann. 47, holding constructive fraud not within meaning of act; Ames v. Moir, 138 U. S. 311, 34 L. 954, 11 S. Ct. 312, holding insolvent purchasing goods with intent not to pay for them is guilty of fraud; Bank of North America v. Crandall, 87 Mo. 212, holding fraud occurring long after debt, not obnoxious to the act; Ely v. Curtis, 60 N. H. 513, holding, to prevent discharge, fraud must be actual and not mere fraud in law; Gibson v. Gorman, 44 N. J. L. 327, purchase money unaccounted for by auctioneer is debt discharged by bankruptcy.

Fraud in law may exist without imputation of bad faith or immorality, p. 7.

Fraud.—Purchase of property from debtor, selling with intent to hinder and delay creditors, is not fraudulent, p. 7.

Distinguished in Eichenberg v. Marcy, 18 R. I. 175, 26 Atl. 9, holding, under statute, actual as well as constructive fraud prohibited.

Fraudulent conveyances.—The only risk a person incurs who purchases property sold in fraud of creditors is that such property may be reclaimed for their benefit, p. 7.

Bankruptcy.—Debt of claimant of goods, who has given a replevin bond for their recovery, is provable under bankrupt act, though replevin suit undecided and debt, therefore, contingent, p. 7, 8.

Cited in Carey v. Mayer, 79 Fed. 929, 51 U. S. App. 190, contingent debt not provable where time or amount of payment uncertain; Glenn v. Abell, 39 Fed. 12, stockholder's liability a provable debt.

Bankruptcy.—Under revised statutes, section 5118, sureties on bond given in replevin suit are not discharged by the bankruptcy, and discharge of their principal, p. 9.

Cited in Hill v. Harding, 130 U. S. 703, 704, 32 L. 1084, 9 S. Ct. 720, holding bankrupt may be proceeded against in order to fix liability of sureties; McCombs v. Allen, 82 N. Y. 117, holding principal's discharge does not release sureties; Whereatt v. Ellis, 103 Wis. 352, 79 N. W. 417, holding discharge of the principal by operation of law does not discharge the sureties; Robinson v. Soule, 50 Miss. 551, holding surety on replevin bond not affected by discharge of principal; Revere Rubber Co. v. Dimock, 90 N. Y. 37, holding discharge no bar to action upon a judgment subsequently obtained; King v. Neill, 26 Fed. 722, holding United States Circuit Court has no jurisdiction, after discharge, to protect exempted property. See elaborate note, 77 Am. Dec. 386.

99 U. S. 10-20, 25 L. 267, UNITED STATES v. FARDEN.

Internal revenue.—President has power, during recess of Senate, to suspend internal revenue collector, and act of secretary of treasury is presumed to be the act of the president, p. 19.

Cited in United States v. Badeau, 31 Fed. 699, and Runkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 557, 30 L. 1171, 7 S. Ct. 1147, both holding president may act through appropriate head of department, whose acts, in due course, are the acts of the president.

Internal revenue.—Collector having been suspended for fraud, and his deputy directed to assume duties of the office by the secretary of treasury, held, that deputy was entitled to compensation of collector during that period, p. 19.

99 U. S. 20-25, 25 L. 314, HUSSEY v. SMITH.

Public lands.—Under act of Congress, March 2, 1867, for confirmation of townsite titles on public lands, occupant of townsite lot has an equitable interest which he can sell and convey, or mortgage, p. 22.

Cited in West v. Child, 8 Utah, 229, 30 Pac. 756, Stringfellow v. Cain, 99 U. S. 615, 25 L. 423, Clawson v. Wallace, 16 Utah, 306, 52 Pac. 10, United States v. Tithing-Yard, 9 Utah, 281, 34 Pac. 58, Hager v. Wikoff, 2 Okl. 587, 39 Pac. 283, all holding occupant has a vested salable interest; Lockwitz v. Larson, 16 Utah, 281, 52 Pac. 281, holding person cannot acquire title unless he was an occupant at time of entry. Cited, arguendo, in Mayor v. Aspen, etc., Co., 10 Colo. 203, 15 Pac. 800, Guthrie v. Beamer, 3 Okl. 662, 41 Pac. 650, and McKennon v. Winn, 1 Okl. 335, 33 Pac. 585, 22 L. R. A. 512, and n.

Public lands.—By entry by town mayor, under act of 1867, for confirmation of townsite titles on public lands, title vested in him in trust for the occupants, p. 22.

Cited in Eakin v. McCraith, 2 Wash. Ter. 116, 3 Pac. 839, holding by entry and payment city became vested with the legal title.

Officers.—Acts of a de facto officer are valid and binding upon the parties; hence, where marshal erroneously conducted foreclosure sale for private parties, where United States were not involved, the sale was held valid, p. 24.

Cited in North Western, etc., Ins. Co. v. Seaman, 80 Fed. 360, holding appointment of a master in chancery, under color of title, cannot be attacked collaterally; Ex parte Ward, 173 U. S. 456, 19 S. Ct. 460, holding title of judge not open to collateral attack. Cited, arguendo, in Foster v. Foster, 129 Mass. 565.

99 U. S. 25, note, 25 L. 315, HUSSEY v. MERRITT.

Adjudged in conformity with Hussey v. Smith, supra.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 25-30, 25 L. 294, MILLS v. SCOTT.

Statute should be given such a construction as not to impair operation of other laws, which it is unreasonable to suppose legislature intended to repeal, p. 28.

Courts.—Federal courts follow State courts as to statute of limitations, p. 28.

Cited in Brunswick Co. v. National Bank, 88 Fed. 609, Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co., 154 U. S. 188, 38 L. 957, 14 S. Ct. 1014, and Bausermann v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 653, 37 L. 318, 13 S. Ct. 469, all holding State statute of limitations controls the Federal courts.

Limitation of actions.—Where statute, passed after the war, allowed only nine months for recovery of existing debts, but another statute prohibited the proving of debts against an estate for one year after letters issued, the nine months' limitation begins to run only after the year, p. 28.

Corporations.—Liability of stockholder may be enforced by a suit in equity, p. 29.

Cited in Maine Trust Co. v. Loan Co., 92 Me. 450, 43 Atl. 25, holding creditor's bill appropriate remedy against stockholders; Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Funk, 49 Neb. 361, 68 N. W. 522, holding liability of stockholder may be enforced in equity. See 3 Am. St. Rep. 855, note.

Courts.—Where State statute allowed action of debt to enforce stockholders' liability, where amount was mere matter of computation, Federal court will do likewise, p. 29.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Peavy, 69 Fed. 457, Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. 344, Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 756, 30 L. 829, 7 S. Ct. 762, National Bank v. Peavy, 64 Fed. 916, 920, and McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. 756, 757, all holding, whether the remedy in Federal courts be in law or equity depends upon State law.

Debt.—Action of, will always lie where amount is certain or can be ascertained by computation, p. 29.

Cited in National Bank v. Peavy, 64 Fed. 918, 920, holding, where indebtedness and number of shares held are ascertained, action at law may be maintained.

Appeal and error.—Where error in amount of recovery is apparent on record, though not pointed out by counsel, appellate court will direct its correction, p. 30.

See elaborate note in 43 Am. Dec. 702, 703.

99 U. S. 30-34, 25 L. 269, QUINN v. UNITED STATES.

Contracts.—Where government contract was terminated by government engineer for cause, but without loss to United States, and work was completed by others for less cost, held, contractor was entitled to the 10 per cent. of contract price, payable upon completion of work, but not to the profit to the government from the cheaper arrangement, pp. 32-34.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 35-47, 25 L. 295, UNITED STATES v. AMES.

Admiralty.—Prize jurisdiction is included in the general delegation of causes of admiralty and maritime cognizance to the District Court, p. 35.

Admiralty Courts proceed according to principles of admiralty, as contradistinguished from common-law courts, p. 36.

Admiralty.—As condition of the right to defend, court may require party to give security for costs, p. 36.

Admiralty.—After appearance the court may, upon application, release the property, upon the party giving a bond, p. 36.

Admiralty.—Bond, when given, is a substitute for the property; not for the amount of claim, but for the value of the property arrested, p. 36.

Cited in In re Morrison, 147 U. S. 35, 37 L. 68, 13 S. Ct. 253, holding stipulation stands in place of vessel and freight and court may exact a new or further stipulation; The Doris Eckhoff, 30 Fed. 141, holding stipulation stands in place of res, the sureties being substituted for vessel; Clark v. Five Hundred and Five Thousand Feet of Lumber, 65 Fed. 240, 24 U. S. App. 509, holding bond stands as a representation of the cargo, and the res is regarded as being in custody of court; The Frank Vanderkerchen, 87 Fed. 765, stipulation takes place of vessel, and libellant looks to the sureties for his claim; Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 212, 65 N. W. 705, 31 L. R. A. 246, holding remedy transferred from ship to the stipulation; The Haytien Republic, 59 Fed. 478, 15 U. S. App. 288, holding the remedy of libellants is transferred from property to bond.

Admiralty.—The court may, against the stipulators in the bond, exercise all authorities as if the thing itself were still in the custody of the court, p. 36.

Cited in The Oregon, 158 U. S. 211, 39 L. 954, 15 S. Ct. 814, holding court has power to reinstate case, as stipulators are liable to the same extent as property released.

Admiralty.—Stipulation with sureties for the discharge of property are allowed in all revenue cases, including forfeitures, p. 39.

Admiralty Courts have jurisdiction in a summary manner to enter judgment in suits in rem, and award execution against parties to stipulation in favor of prevailing party, p. 40.

Cited in Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 159, 5 N. W. 63, holding judgment against principal and surety is part of the general relief; Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 207, 65 N. W. 704, 31 L. R. A. 244, holding new suit is unnecessary on the stipulation, whether it is for value or costs; Munks v. Jackson, 66 Fed. 574, 29 U. S. App. 482, holding bonds are, to all intents, stipulations in the admiralty.

Admiralty.—Circuit Courts, in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, are possessed of full admiralty powers, p. 41.

Admiralty.—In cases of fraud or where order of release of property on stipulation was improvidently made, the court may recall the property, p. 42.

Cited in The Haytien Republic, 154 U. S. 126, 38 L. 933, 14 S. Ct. 994, holding court may recall vessel where fraudulent bond has been given; The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 68, 41 L. 920, 17 S. Ct. 504, holding the court may recall the vessel where it has been released improvidently; Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 213, 65 N. W. 706, 31 L. R. A. 246, holding, where vessel has been released improvidently or through fraud or mistake, court may order its recall.

Judgment against one of two joint contractors is a bar to action against the others; hence judgment against one partner, executing bond in admiralty for seized property of partnership, bars action against other partners, p. 44.

Cited in Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Oldendorff, 73 Fed. 90, 44 U. S. App. 487, holding release of one joint obligor operates as a release of all. See 25 Am. Dec. 544, note.

Pleading.—Matters of fact well pleaded are admitted by the demurrer, but mere conclusions of law are not, p. 45.

Cited in Interstate Land Co. v. Maxwell Land Co., 139 U. S. 578, 35 L. 282, 11 S. Ct. 659, Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 536, 37 L. 549, 13 S. Ct. 698, Dishong v. Finkbinder, 46 Fed. 17, Haynes v. Brewster, 46 Fed. 473, and Newberry Land Co. v. Newberry, 95 Va. 123, 27 S. E. 901, all holding demurrer admits only such facts as are well pleaded; Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S. 127, 35 L. 107, 11 S. Ct. 478, alleging a transaction to be fraudulent is a mere legal conclusion, which demurrer does not admit; United States v. Flournoy Live-Stock, etc., Co., 71 Fed. 578, pleading matters of judicial cognizance will not prevent court from drawing proper legal conclusion; Lumley v. Wabash Ry. Co., 71 Fed. 28, holding epithets "surreptitiously" and "fraudulently" conclusions of law not admitted by demurrer; Buffalo Catholic Institute v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 256, holding averment that defendant agreed to sell, and the plaintiff to purchase, is a legal conclusion not admitted by demurrer; State v. County Court, 33 W. Va. 593, 11 S. E. 74, holding motion to quash only admits such facts as are well pleaded.

Equity affords no relief against a mistake of law, p. 46.

Cited in Railway Co. v. Smith, 60 Ark. 238, 29 S. W. 753, holding, where party is negligent, equity will not relieve; Allen v. Gallo-way, 30 Fed. 467, in equity, courts of the United States afford no relief from a mistake of law; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 293, 35 L. 692, 11 S. Ct. 1000, dissenting opinion, holding equity will not relieve against mistake of law. Cited, without particular application, in The Battler, 67 Fed. 253.

Equity can afford no relief where plaintiff, having obtained judgment against one of several contractors, thereby releases the liability of the others, of which he was in ignorance, but might, with reasonable diligence, have learned, p. 47.

99 U. S. 48-67, 25 L. 424, PLATT v. UNION PACIFIC R. R. CO.

Mortgages.—An instrument, in form a deed of trust, held to be a mortgage, p. 57.

Cited in Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Doyle, 8 Sawy. 70, 11 Fed. 259, holding a trust conveyance to secure bonds is a mortgage.

Railroad company has not power either to sell or mortgage its franchise, or perhaps its road, without express legislative authority, p. 57.

Railroad may mortgage property which is not a part of its road, e. g., its land grant, p. 58.

Railroad.—Where railroad is authorized to hold property aside from its road, e. g., a land grant, it possesses ordinary incidents of ownership, p. 58.

Cited in Memphis & Little Rock R. R. Co. v. Dow, 22 Blatchf. 53, 19 Fed. 392, holding railroad empowered to hold land possesses all the incidents of ownerships.

Statutes.—Legislature is presumed to have used no superfluous words, p. 58.

Statute must be expounded, if practicable, so as to give effect to every part of it, p. 58.

Approved in State v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 515, 51 N. W. 740, 15 L. R. A. 577, holding statutes ought to be so construed that no clause, sentence or word shall be void or insignificant.

Statutes.—In construing act of Congress, courts will look at the paramount object Congress had in view, p. 59.

Statutes.—In construing acts of Congress, courts must look at the state of things then existing and in the light then appearing, p. 60.

Approved in Smith v. Townsend, 148 U. S. 495, 37 L. 534, 13 S. Ct. 635, holding, in construing a statute, courts may recur to the history of the times; Mobile, etc., R. R. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 502, 38 L. 799, 14 S. Ct. 974, holding, in construing a State law, it is necessary to recur to the history and situation of the country; Gold Hill v. Caledonia S. M. Co., 5 Sawy. 577, F. C. 5,512, holding, in construing statutes, we must place ourselves in the light that Congress enjoyed; Johnston v. Morris, 72 Fed. 896, 44 U. S. App. 303, holding, in construing statutes, recourse may be had to the state of things at the time of its passage; Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S. 419, construing provision as to married women's conveyances; Cortesy v. Territory, 7 N. Mex. 97, 32 Pac. 507, 19 L. R. A. 356, construing Sunday liquor law.

Railroads.—Land grant act of 1862 to Union Pacific, opening to pre-emption, after three years from completion of road, all such lands not sold "or disposed of" by the company, inferentially authorized company to mortgage them, p. 61.

Mortgages.—Land conveyed to a person to enable him to raise money would be an authorization for him to mortgage, p. 61.

Cited in Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 54 Fed. 774, 6 U. S. App. 469, holding power to sell negotiable securities implies the power to pledge; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Rust, 17 Fed. 275, holding power to pledge securities includes the power to sell.

Statutes.—Interpretation which defeats the manifest intention cannot be accepted, p. 62.

Approved in Van Patten v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 81 Fed. 547, holding purpose of act and evils sought to be remedied must be always kept in mind; Freight Discrimination Case, 95 N. C. 447, 59 Am. Rep. 258, holding, in construing statute, the mischief sought to be remedied must be taken into consideration; Bissell Carpet-Sweeping Co. v. Goshen Sweeping Co., 72 Fed. 553, 43 U. S. App. 47, holding laws intended to provide a remedy for evils should be favorably construed.

Statutes.—A secondary object should not be allowed to defeat or embarrass that which is primary, p. 65.

Cited in State v. McGraw, 13 Wash. 317, 320, 43 Pac. 178, 179, holding statutes should be so construed as to effect their primary objects.

99 U. S. 68-71, 25 L. 469, LANGE v. BENEDICT.

Courts.—State court decision that a judge is not liable in damages for having ordered imprisonment of defendant, involves no Federal question, p. 71.

Approved in Manning v. French, 133 U. S. 191, 33 L. 585, 10 S. Ct. 260.

99 U. S. 72-78, 25 L. 301, DOGGETT v. RAILROAD CO.

Railroads.—Under Florida internal improvement act of 1855, empowering trustees of the improvement fund to compel deposit semi-annually, by railroads, of certain per cent. of bonded indebtedness in a sinking fund, purchaser of railroad at foreclosure sale must make such deposit only on remaining outstanding bonds, not on entire amount, pp. 75-77.

Receivers.—In action by receiver of Florida internal improvement fund to compel a land company to pay its portion into sinking fund, bondholders are improperly joined as plaintiffs, p. 78.

Cited in Express Co. v. Railroad Co., 99 U. S. 199, 25 L. 320, holding, in suit to enforce contract of railroad, receiver the only necessary party.

Statutes.—Where intent is plain, nothing is left to construction, p. 78.

Cited in Cline v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 351, 61 Am. St. Rep. 870, 36 S. W. 1108, Berlin Iron-Bridge Co. v. San Antonio, 62 Fed. 889, and Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 671, 32 L. 1063, 9 S. Ct. 652, all holding, where law is expressed in plain and unambiguous language, no room is left for construction. See extensive note, 44 Am. St. Rep. 232.

99 U. S. 78-79, 25 L. 382, TRANSPORTATION LINE v. COOPER.

Shipping.—Canal-boat loaded with coal, having on board family of captain, is not a barge carrying passengers, within revised statutes, section 4492, requiring fire apparatus on board, p. 79.

Cited in United States v. Guess, 48 Fed. 588, holding wife and neighbors of owner on board tug during trial trip are not passengers.

99 U. S. 80-85, 25 L. 407, BARROW v. HUNTON.

Removal of causes.—Where proceeding subsequent to judgment in State court is practically a motion to set it aside for irregularity, or in the nature of appeal or writ of review therefrom, Federal court will not take jurisdiction on removal; e. g., petition to annul a default judgment for defective service, p. 83.

Approved and principle applied in Kalamazoo Wagon Co. v. Snavely, 34 Fed. 825, holding independent, as distinguished from auxiliary, actions may be removed; Filler v. Levy, 17 Fed. 613, holding that where suit is not a mode of relief, but an independent action, it may be removed; Chappell v. Chappell, 86 Md. 544, 39 Atl. 989, holding auxiliary proceedings respecting alimony, counsel fees and costs not removable; Massachusetts Life Assn. v. Lohmiller, 74 Fed. 27, 46 U. S. App. 103, holding proceedings must be original, Federal courts will not revise mere errors or irregularities; Grauer v. Faurot, 64 Fed. 241, holding Federal courts will not entertain bill of review attacking judgment of State courts; Ralston v. Sharon, 51 Fed. 707, 709, 710, holding, where no diverse citizenship and State courts can give full relief, Federal courts will not entertain jurisdiction; Cowley v. Northern Pacific R. R. Co., 46 Fed. 331, holding, where plaintiff has an adequate remedy by motion, Federal courts will not interfere; Smith v. Schwed, 9 Fed. 490, holding Federal courts will not set aside judgment of State courts for mere irregularities; Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Sprague, 76 Me. 60, Oakley v. Taylor, 64 Fed. 248, Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. Hamburg-Bremen Ins. Co., 62 Fed. 3, Lackawanna Coal & Iron Co. v. Bates, 56 Fed. 739, and Ladd v. West, 55 Fed. 354, all holding that, in order for Federal courts to assume jurisdiction, proceedings must be original and not incidental; Jackson v. Gould, 74 Me. 577, holding statute of removal was not intended to confer power of review; Pratt v. Albright, 10 Biss. 517, 9 Fed. 638, holding controversy between judgment creditor and garnishee is not a removal cause; Poole v. Thatcherdeft, 19 Fed. 51, supplemental proceedings not subject to removal.

Distinguished in McDonald v. Seligman, 81 Fed. 757, Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 503, 27 L. 1012, 3 S. Ct. 338, Oglesby v. Attrill, 12 Fed. 228, and Boatmen's Savings Bank v. Wagenspack, 4 Woods, 133, 12 Fed. 68.

Removal of causes.—If proceedings in State court, subsequent to a judgment, are tantamount to a bill in equity to annul judgment for fraud, Federal courts have jurisdiction on removal, p. 83.

Approved and relied upon in Central Nat. Bank v. Hazard, 49 Fed. 296, Sahlgard v. Kennedy, 1 McCrary, 293, 2 Fed. 297, Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 597, 598, 35 L. 873, 12 S. Ct. 64, 65, Young v. Sigler, 48 Fed. 183, Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 129 U. S. 99, 100, 32 L. 634, 635, 9 S. Ct. 241, Carver v. Mortgage Trust Co., 73 Fed. 12, Davenport v. Moore, 74 Fed. 947, Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 667, 28 L. 556, 4 S. Ct. 634, and Kurtz v. Railroad Co., 187 Pa. St. 68, 40 Atl. 991, all holding that where jurisdictional amount is sufficient and citizenship diverse, Federal courts have jurisdiction to set aside judgments of State courts fraudulently obtained; McNeill v. McNeill, 78 Fed. 835, holding divorce judgment obtained by fraud may be set aside; In re Iowa, etc., Construction Co., 3 McCrary, 312, 10 Fed. 402, allowing removal of petition in intervention, charging fraud in obtaining of interlocutory orders; Stackhouse v. Zunts, 4 Woods, 173, 15 Fed. 482, holding execution obtained upon fraudulent judgment may be restrained; Cowley v. Northern, etc., R. R., 159 U. S. 579, 580, 40 L. 266, 16 S. Ct. 130, holding judgment obtained through fraud of attorneys may be set aside; Hunt v. Fisher, 29 Fed. 806, holding State or Federal courts may inquire into titles procured by fraudulent judgments; United States v. Norsch, 42 Fed. 418, holding Federal government may annul naturalization obtained by fraud in State courts; Daniel v. Benedict, 50 Fed. 354, holding, in suit brought by surviving wife against trustee of decedent, collusive decree of divorce may be set aside; Little Rock, etc., R. R. v. Burke, 66 Fed. 88, 27 U. S. App. 736, Bledsoe v. Erwin, 33 La. Ann. 617, and Blythe v. Hinckley, 84 Fed. 254, all holding Federal courts will not assume jurisdiction where judgments appear to be void upon their face; United States v. Gleason, 78 Fed. 398, holding decree of naturalization cannot be set aside on the ground that the facts were falsely represented; Central Nat. Bank v. Fitzgerald, 94 Fed. 19, holding Federal courts have jurisdiction, though property has been set aside by Probate Court; Furnald v. Glenn, 64 Fed. 53, 26 U. S. App. 202, holding Federal courts have jurisdiction in proper cases to restrain prosecution, although based upon judgments.

Distinguished in National Bank v. Northwestern Car Co., 28 Fed. 113.

Courts.—Character of cases is always open to investigation, irrespective of State legislative declaration, to determine whether Federal courts may take jurisdiction, p. 85.

Cited in Davenport v. Moore, 74 Fed. 952, Edmunds Mfg. Co. v. Sprague, 76 Me. 58, Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 62 Fed. 2, and Ralston v. Sharon, 51 Fed. 708, all holding character of case always open in order to determine jurisdiction.

99 U. S. 86-96, 25 L. 363, HACKETT v. OTTAWA.

Municipal corporation.—Common fairness requires that municipalities should express in their ordinances the purposes for which bonds are issued, p. 92.

Municipal corporations.—Authority to levy taxes for "corporate purposes" contemplates a tax to be expended in a manner to promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality, p. 93.

Cited in Wetherell v. Devine, 116 Ill. 635, 637, 6 N. E. 25, 26, and Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 260, 26 L. 394, both holding the same as the principal case; Cary v. City of Ottawa, 8 Fed. 200, 204, 206, holding money borrowed for the improvement of water-power is for a municipal purpose; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 7, 28 L. 898, 5 S. Ct. 419, holding bonds issued for benefit of private manufactory void. See elaborate note, 98 Am. Dec. 668.

Municipal corporations.—Municipality is estopped to question validity of its bonds, which recite that they were issued for municipal purposes, without specifying what, where State Constitution authorizes indebtedness for such purpose, p. 96.

Approved and principle applied in Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 543, 22 S. W. 674, Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 118, 121, 27 L. 673, 674, 2 S. Ct. 362, 363, Town of Brewton v. Spira, 106 Ala. 235, 17 So. 607, Waite v. Santa Cruz, 89 Fed. 632, 634, Huron v. Second Ward Savings Bank, 86 Fed. 277, 57 U. S. App. 603, Howard v. Kiowa County, 73 Fed. 408, West Plains Township v. Sage, 69 Fed. 946, 956, 32 U. S. App. 725, Risley v. Village of Howell, 64 Fed. 457, 458, 22 U. S. App. 635, National Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Education, 62 Fed. 785, 27 U. S. App. 244, Ashley v. Board of Supervisors, 60 Fed. 67, 16 U. S. App. 656, Cadillac v. Woonsocket Institution, 58 Fed. 940, 16 U. S. App. 545, National Bank of Com. v. Town of Grenada, 41 Fed. 92, 93, Moulton v. Evansville, 25 Fed. 386, Cary v. City of Ottawa, 8 Fed. 205, Board of Commrs. v. Howard, 83 Fed. 298, 49 U. S. App. 645, Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 140, 36 L. 653, 12 S. Ct. 820, and Ottawa v. National Bank, 105 U. S. 343, 344, 26 L. 1127, all holding that recitals in municipal bonds are binding upon the municipality, and it is estopped from showing, against bona fide purchasers, that indebtedness was fraudulent.

lent or not for a municipal purpose; Lynchburg v. Slaughter, 75 Va. 63, holding person taking bonds, with knowledge of their invalidity, may transfer title to innocent purchaser; Flagg v. School District, 4 N. Dak. 61, 58 N. W. 510, 25 L. R. A. 375, holding, where bonds are issued upon certificate of county clerk, bona fide holder may rely upon certificate; Carter v. Ottawa, 24 Fed. 547, holding person who purchases bonds, with knowledge of invalidity, cannot recover; Klamath Falls v. Sachs, — Or. —, 57 Pac. 335, holding recitals in bonds are binding upon the purchasers. See elaborate note, 98 Am. Dec. 688; 51 Am. St. Rep. 835, 849, note. Affirmed, arguendo, in Rich v. Mentz, 21 Blatchf. 496, 18 Fed. 55.

99 U. S. 97-99, 25 L. 409, CANAL CO. v. NEW ORLEANS.

Banks and banking.—Burden of proof held to be upon a bank to show that it had been unlawfully taxed upon its capital, alleged to be invested in government notes, p. 99.

Cited in Cotton Exchange v. Board of Assessors, 37 La. Ann. 424, holding assessment presumed to be correct; Jones v. Seward Co., 10 Neb. 162, 4 N. W. 951, holding, where government bonds are purchased for the purpose of evading taxation, the money may be taxed.

Distinguished in Griffin v. Heard, 78 Tex. 614, 14 S. W. 894

99 U. S. 100-112, 25 L. 366, GRAFTON v. CUMMINGS.

Frauds, statute of.—In New Hampshire, memorandum of sale of realty must contain a description of the thing sold, of the price and of the party who sells, as well as of purchaser, p. 107.

Cited and principle applied in Peoria Sugar Co. v. Babcock Co., 67 Fed. 895, holding memorandum must contain description, price, parties; Sprankle v. Trulone, 22 Ind. App. 585, 54 N. E. 464, holding essential terms must be ascertainable from writing; Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 535, 21 Pac. 181, memorandum must show parties, price, when to be paid, description; Railway, etc., Assn. v. Loomis, 142 Ill. 568, 32 N. E. 426, memorandum must show parties as well as terms; American, etc., Leather Co. v. Porter, 94 Iowa, 120, 62 N. W. 659, itemized list of goods sold, signed by seller, insufficient; Commissioners v. Shipley, 77 Ind. 555, contract, without designating parties, insufficient; Becker v. Mason, 30 Kan. 702, 2 Pac. 854, unsigned real estate contract insufficient; Fry v. Platt, 32 Kan. 68, 3 Pac. 785, and Ross v. Allen, 45 Kan. 242, 25 Pac. 574, 10 L. R. A. 839, both holding written receipt for part of purchase of land insufficient; Kelley v. Thuey, 143 Mo. 436, 45 S. W. 303, holding memorandum not stating price insufficient; Mentz v. Newwitter, 122 N. Y. 496, 497, 19 Am. St. Rep. 517, 518, 25 N. E. 1045, 1046, entry by auctioneer, not showing name of seller, insufficient; Rafferty v. Lougee, 63 N. H. 56, holding unsigned memorandum of auctioneer insufficient; Clampet v. Bells, 39 Minn. 274, 39 N. W. 496, holding memorandum not showing vendor's name insufficient; Ringer v. Holtzclaw, 112 Mo. 522, 20 S. W. 801, memorandum must state terms with reasonable certainty; Rucker v. Harrington, 52 Mo. App. 489, memorandum must contain essential elements of contract; Lewis v. Wood, 153 Mass. 322, 26 N. E. 862, holding memorandum which does not identify purchaser insufficient; McGovern v. Hern, 153 Mass. 810, 25 Am. St. Rep. 634, 26 N. E. 862, 10 L. R. A. 816, holding memorandum identifying party as "seller" insufficient; Kingsley v. Siebrecht, 92 Me. 30, 31, 69 Am. St. Rep. 491, 492, 42 Atl. 251, 252, holding contract signed by agent, principal may take advantage of it; Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 492, 27 Pac. 723, holding interest of known, but unnamed, principal not bound; Freeland v. Ritz, 154 Mass. 259, 26 Am. St. Rep. 246, 28 N. E. 227, 12 L. R. A. 561, holding memorandum may refer to other papers containing essentials of contract; Riggles v. Erney, 154 U. S. 254, 38 L. 980, 14 S. Ct. 1086, holding part performance of contract to convey land takes it out of statute; Hale v. Hale, 90 Va. 731, 19 S. E. 741, contract to make mutual wills within the statute. Affirmed in dissenting opinion in Mantz v. Maguire, 52 Mo. App. 154, 155. Cited, arguendo, in Bank v. Sprague, 21 Blatchf. 479, 17 Fed. 788, and Burton v. Huma, 37 Fed. 743.

99 U. S. 112-119, 25 L. 470, TOWN OF WEYAUWEGA v. AYLING.

Municipal corporations.—Town is estopped from questioning legality of its bonds, in hands of bona fide purchaser, signed by town clerk, whose term had expired, but bearing date within his term, p. 118.

Cited in Yesler v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 323, 25 Pac. 1019, holding bonds valid, although not executed at date of issue; Brown v. Bon Homme County, 1 S. Dak. 225, 46 N. W. 175, holding bonds issued as of a certain date, by proper officers, valid in hands of bona fide purchaser; Jones v. Hurlburt, 13 Neb. 139, 13 N. W. 11, holding bonds signed outside of county valid; Montgomery v. Township of St. Mary, 43 Fed. 363, holding signing of trustee's name to bond in his presence and by his direction does not invalidate; Rich v. Mentz, 21 Blatchf. 496, 18 Fed. 55, town may be estopped by acquiescence and payment of interest.

Evidence.—Presumption is that official duty has been rightfully performed, p. 119.

Cited in Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 660, 41 L. 590, 17 S. Ct. 213, holding law presumes requisites for issuance of marriage license were followed. See 98 Am. Dec. 678, note. Arguendo, in Catron v. LaFayette County, 106 Mo. 670, 17 S. W. 579.

Distinguished in Coler v. Cleburne, 131 U. S. 174, 175, 33 L. 150, 9 S. Ct. 724, 725, and Anthony v. County of Jasper, 101 U. S. 699, 25 L. 1009.

99 U. S. 119-129, 25 L. 370, CASE v. BEAUREGARD.

Partnership.—The effects of a partnership belong to it so long as it continues in existence, p. 124.

Partnership.—Right of each partner extends only to a share of what may remain after payment of debts of the firm, p. 124.

Partnership.—Partner has a right to have partnership property applied to payment of partnership debts, and this right accrues to creditors, p. 124.

Affirmed in First Nat. Bank v. Cody, 93 Ga. 150, 19 S. E. 840.

Partnership.—Creditors have a right to have debts due to them paid out of assets of firm, p. 125.

Partnership.—The right of creditors to have partnership assets applied to their debts, in preference to debts of individual partners, is a derivative one, and must be enforced through the individual partner; hence, if individual partner has sold his interest to a creditor, who has taken possession and disposed of the property, a firm creditor could not enforce any lien thereon, p. 125.

Cited in Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 376, 27 Am. St. Rep. 355, 16 S. W. 594, holding bona fide waiver by partners of their equitable rights destroys derivative rights of firm creditors; Calder v. Creditors, 47 La. Ann. 354, 16 So. 856, Stahl v. Osmer, 31 Or. 201, 202, 49 Pac. 958, Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 326, 17 N. E. 927, 1 L. R. A. 184, Lamkin v. Baldwin Mfg. Co., — Conn. —, 43 Atl. 595, 44 L. R. A. 789, and Goldsmith v. Eichold, 94 Ala. 121, 33 Am. St. Rep. 101, 10 So. 82, all holding equity of firm creditors to share in partnership assets is derivative, and is destroyed by bona fide transfer; Hanover Bank v. Klein, 64 Miss. 150, 151, 60 Am. Rep. 47, 49, 8 So. 208, 209, holding, if from any cause partner cannot enforce his rights, firm creditors cannot.

Partnership.—Neither partners nor creditors have any specific lien on partnership assets until the property has passed in custodiam legis, through assignment or bankruptcy or some sort of trust; hence, failing that, a simple contract creditor cannot dispute a bona fide sale of one partner's interest and the purchaser's disposition of the portion of the firm property thus acquired, p. 125.

Cited in Harris v. Peabods, 73 Me. 267, Vietor v. Glover, 17 Wash. 40, 41, 48 Pac. 789, 40 L. R. A. 300, Wiggins v. Blackshear, 86 Tex. 670, 26 S. W. 940, Saunders v. Reilly, 105 N. Y. 19, 59 Am. Rep. 476, 12 N. E. 172, Fairbanks v. Welshans, 55 Neb. 380, 75 N. W. 871, Krueger v. Speith, 8 Mont. 492, 20 Pac. 668, 3 L. R. A.

294, Roach v. Brannon, 57 Miss. 500, Goodhar v. Cary, 4 Woods, 666, 16 Fed. 319, Sickman v. Abernathy, 14 Colo. 179, 180, 23 Pac. 449, 450, and Jones v. Fletcher, 42 Ark. 451, all holding partnership creditors have no lien on partnership assets, and their right to firm assets may be defeated by bona fide transfer.

Partnership.—Where one partner sells half the firm's effects to a third person, with the other's consent, and such other subsequently sells the other half to same person, sale is prima facie valid, p. 128.

Approved and principle applied in Ellison v. Lucas, 87 Ga. 227, 27 Am. St. Rep. 244, 13 S. E. 445, Coffin v. Day, 34 Fed. 690, Huis-kamp v. Moline Wagon Co., 121 U. S. 323, 324, 30 L. 976, 7 S. Ct. 905, Woodmansie v. Holcomb, 34 Kan. 38, 7 Pac. 605, Sexton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 381, 8 S. W. 566, and Myers v. Tyson, 2 Kan. App. 469, 43 Pac. 92, all holding transfer in good faith by one partner, with consent of partnership, good as against creditors of firm; Hudgins v. Rix, 60 Ark. 22, 28 S. W. 424, holding purchase by one partner of partnership assets not per se fraudulent; Hanford v. Prouty, 133 Ill. 352, 24 N. E. 568, holding sale by one partner of all his interest good as against firm creditors; Thayer v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 303, 64 N. W. 1016, 30 L. R. A. 558, holding sale by one partner to another releases equities of firm creditors; Douglas v. Alder, 13 Utah, 311, 312, 44 Pac. 708, partner who sells his interest, with consent of firm, loses his equity; Temman v. McKean, 46 Mo. App. 492, holding sale by partner who has acquired the assets of firm good as against firm creditors; Fitzpatrick v. Flanagan, 106 U. S. 655, 27 L. 213, 1 S. Ct. 374, holding creditors cannot recover property of firm which has passed into hands of bona fide holder; Rouse v. Wallace, 10 Colo. App. 97, 50 Pac. 367, holding rights of creditors depend upon the existence of equities between the partners; Bates v. Collender, 3 Dak. 264, 16 N. W. 509, dissolution and distribution of assets does not affect partner's right to exemption laws; Harris v. Meyer, 84 Wis. 147, 53 N. W. 1127, holding partner purchasing the interest of firm may convey it to secure individual debts; Patton v. Leftwich, 86 Va. 426, 19 Am. St. Rep. 906, 10 S. E. 688, 6 L. R. A. 572, and n., holding surviving partner may make assignment and give preferences; Batchelor v. Sanger, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 113, 38 S. W. 360, holding members of insolvent firm may prefer individual debts; Durant v. Pierson, 124 N. Y. 453, 21 Am. St. Rep. 691, 26 N. E. 1097, 12 L. R. A. 149, holding, in absence of fraud, firm may prefer creditors; Goddard-Peck, etc., Co. v. McCune, 122 Mo. 431, 25 S. W. 905, 29 L. R. A. 687, and n., holding assets of insolvent firm before dissolution may, with firm's consent, be applied to satisfaction of individual debts; McDonald v. Cash, 57 Mo. App. 545, holding application of firm property by insolvent partnership not per se fraudulent; Arnold

v. Hagerman, 45 N. J. Eq. 208, 17 Atl. 99, holding transfer by retiring partner to one who continues the business is good as against firm creditors; Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 171, 21 N. E. 545, 4 L. R. A. 538, holding chattel mortgage executed by partnership to secure individual debts good as against firm creditors; Bedford v. McDonald, 102 Tenn. 365, 52 S. W. 158, holding transfer of firm assets to one knowing firm to be insolvent is fraudulent; Johnston v. Shoe Co., 5 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 24 S. W. 581, holding member of insolvent firm cannot, without consent of partners, execute mortgage to secure individual debts; Reynolds v. Johnson, 54 Ark. 452, 16 S. W. 125, holding insolvent firm may, in good faith, mortgage partnership property to secure individual debts; Simmons, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 147 Ind. 321, 46 N. E. 647, holding mortgage of firm property, with consent of partnership, good as against firm creditors; Smith v. Smith, 87 Iowa, 99, 43 Am. St. Rep. 362, 54 N. W. 74, holding mortgage of firm property to secure pre-existing debt good as against firm creditors; Batchelder v. Altheimer, 10 Mo. App. 189, holding appeal to equity cannot be made by partnership creditor until he exhausts his remedy at law; Dahlman v. Jacobs, 5 McCrary, 132, 15 Fed. 864, holding equity will not set aside fraudulent conveyance until creditor has established his claim at law; Fogg v. H. & K. R. Co., 5 McCrary, 451, 17 Fed. 872, holding creditors at large must reduce their claims to judgment before equity will intervene; Johnson v. McClary, 131 Ind. 106, 30 N. E. 888, holding receiver may recover property transferred without consent.

Partnership.—Without a lien, a partnership creditor has only the right to prosecute his claim in the ordinary courts of law, p. 129.

Affirmed, arguendo, in Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 336, 22 Pac. 507, Robinson v. Allen, 85 Va. 730, 8 S. E. 839, Excelsior Mills Co. v. Hanover, 102 Wis. 317, 78 N. W. 740, Broadway Nat. Bank v. Wood, 165 Mass. 316, 43 N. E. 102, Hibernia Ins. Co. v. New Orleans Transfer Co., 5 McCrary, 400, 17 Fed. 480, and Savings Bank v. National Bank, 53 Vt. 91. See notes, 43 Am. St. Rep. 375, 51 Am. St. Rep. 907, and 66 Am. St. Rep. 277.

Distinguished in Bartlett v. Meyer-Schmidt, etc., Co., 65 Ark. 293, 45 S. W. 1065, Collier v. Hanna, 71 Md. 260, 17 Atl. 1019, Putney v. Whitmire, 66 Fed. 388, Blair v. Shaeffer, 33 Fed. 222, Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 3 McCrary, 371, 10 Fed. 598, Johnson v. Strauss, 4 Hughes, 628, 26 Fed. 62, and Jackson Bank v. Durfey, 72 Miss. 976, 977, 48 Am. St. Rep. 598, 600, 18 So. 457, 31 L. R. A. 471.

99 U. S. 130-137, 25 L. 345, WILKERSON v. UTAH.

Territories have right to legislate in all matters not inconsistent with Federal Constitution and laws, p. 130.

Criminal law.—Capital punishment by shooting is not cruel or unusual, p. 135.

Cited in In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 447, 34 L. 524, 10 S. Ct. 933, holding execution by electricity is not cruel or unusual.

Criminal law.—Where Utah penal code provided death penalty for murder, and directed the trial court to “impose the punishment prescribed,” court may sentence prisoner to be publicly shot, a mode of capital punishment authorized by Utah statute of 1852, p. 137.

99 U. S. 138-142, 25 L. 315, BURBANK v. SEMMES.

Judicial sale.—A marshal's deed, which includes land not mentioned in the information, monition or decree, conveys no title to such parcel, p. 142.

Cited in National Bank v. Heyer, — W. Va. —, 32 S. E. 1001, holding sale of property under decree which does not authorize it passes no title.

99 U. S. 143-146, 25 L. 271, BIEBINGER v. CONTINENTAL BANK.

Mortgage.—A bank cannot claim an equitable mortgage against a bankrupt, because of the deposit of a deed, where it is not claimed that money was advanced upon the faith of the deposit, p. 146.

Cited in Reynes v. Dumont, 130 U. S. 392, 32 L. 945, 9 S. Ct. 496, holding where bonds are specially deposited and no advances made upon them, bank has no lien; Harding v. Giddings, 73 Fed. 341, 34 U. S. App. 642, holding payment of debt releases the collateral security.

99 U. S. 147-149, 25 L. 272, RAILROAD CO. v. MCKINLEY.

Removal of causes.—After judgment in State court, right to new trial must be absolutely perfected before cause may be removed; hence though reversal and new trial were ordered by Iowa appellate court, the cause was held not removable until expiration of sixty days, within which time a petition for rehearing might be filed, and in this case was actually filed and allowed, p. 148.

Cited in Jackson v. Gould, 74 Me. 574, holding cause not removable after final judgment; Stone v. Sargent, 129 Mass. 509, holding cause may be removed after consent hearing before auditor; Field v. Williams, 24 Fed. 514, holding cause may be removed after decision on demurrer; Baltimore R. R. Co. v. Bates, 119 U. S. 467, 30 L. 438, 7 S. Ct. 286, removal may be had after new trial granted; Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 597, 28 L. 1094, 5 S. Ct. 642, holding party procuring, is estopped from objecting that removal was not in time; Henen v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 895, holding State court has the right to pass on bond and sufficiency of sureties; B. & O. R. R. Co. v. P., W. & K. R. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 860, holding where record does not show cause. State court may deny removal; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ethier, 44 Mich. 145, 6 N. W. 201, holding where necessary steps are not taken for a year, petition should be denied. Approved obiter in Elliot v. Stocks, 67 Ala. 299.

99 U. S. 149-151, 25 L. 430, KLEIN v. NEW ORLEANS.

Exemptions.—Lands held by city for public purposes and ground rents which are part of revenues may not be levied upon, p. 150.

Approved and principle applied in The Fidelity, 16 Blatchf. 571, F. C. 4,758, holding tug used by government may not be libelled; Hitchcock v. Wharf Co., 4 Woods, 305, 50 Fed. 269, holding stock held by city in a wharf exempt from execution; Ellis v. Pratt City, 111 Ala. 631, 56 Am. St. Rep. 78, 20 So. 650, 33 L. R. A. 265, holding insurance money received for public building is exempt; Emery County v. Burren, 14 Utah, 331, 333, 60 Am. St. Rep. 900, 901, 47 Pac. 92, 37 L. R. A. 733, 734, property consisting of scrapers, planes, stray brands, are exempt from execution; Galveston Wharf Co. v. Galveston, 63 Tex. 23, holding city cannot subject its interest in wharf company to taxation; Pipe Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 635, 16 S. E. 864, 20 L. R. A. 751, holding franchise and water works being built by corporation to supply city are subject to lien; Kline v. Parish of Ascension, 33 La. Ann. 566, rents of land belonging to parish not necessary for public use may be seized; Oyster Police Steamers of Maryland, 31 Fed. 768, holding oyster police steamers subject to the inspection regulations of United States.

Municipal corporations exercise sovereign powers and are the local agencies of the government creating them, p. 150.

99 U. S. 152-161, 25 L. 348, UNITED STATES v. FORT SCOTT.

Municipal corporations.—City improvement bonds containing the promise of the city to pay principal and interest, bind all the city's taxable property, though issued under an ordinance declaring them payable solely from special assessments upon the property improved thereby, pp. 159, 160.

Cited in State v. Engle, — Fla. —, 24 So. 542, holding payment of valid bonds may be coerced like payment of any other county indebtedness; Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 675, 27 Pac. 560, holding city liable generally, although authorized to pay bonds out of special assessment; Fowler v. City of Superior, 85 Wis. 420, 54 N. W. 803, holding bonds payable out of improvement assessments are general liabilities of county. Affirmed, arguendo, in Fort Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 162, 28 L. 640, 5 S. Ct. 63, Covington v. McKenna, 99 Ky. 514, 36 S. W. 520, and Atkinson v. Great Falls, 16 Mont. 375, 40 Pac. 879.

99 U. S. 161-168, 25 L. 317, HARRIS v. McGOVERN.

Ejectment cannot be maintained in California unless the party was seized or possessed of the premises within five years, p. 165.

Adverse possession.—When statute begins to run it will not be impeded by any subsequent disability, p. 168.

Cited in Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 657, 37 L. 320, 13 S. Ct. 470, and Ewell v. Chicago Ry. Co., 29 Fed. 58, both holding the same as principal case.

99 U. S. 168-179, 25 L. 383, GORDON v. GILFOIL.

Mortgage.—In Louisiana order of seizure and sale does not merge the mortgage debt, p. 175.

Limitation of actions.—In Louisiana an order of seizure and sale interrupts the running of the statute against the personal liability on mortgage notes, p. 178.

Courts.—Pendency of suit in State court is no ground for plea of abatement to suit on same matter in Federal court; hence, though seizure and sale for foreclosure of mortgage have been instituted in State court, suit on debt is maintainable in the Federal court, p. 178.

The following cases reaffirm this principle: Green v. Underwood, 86 Fed. 429, 57 U. S. App. 539, Rogers v. Pitt, 96 Fed. 677, Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. 642, Ryan v. Seaboard, etc., R. R. Co., 89 Fed. 407, Brendal v. Church, 82 Fed. 262, Gamble v. City of San Diego, 79 Fed. 500, Shaw v. Lyman, 79 Fed. 3, Deming v. Orient Ins. Co., 78 Fed. 4, Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 332, Short v. Hepburn, 75 Fed. 113, 41 U. S. App. 520, First National Bank v. Deuel Co., 74 Fed. 375, Woodbury v. Alleghaney, 72 Fed. 374, North Muskegon v. Clark, 62 Fed. 698, 22 U. S. App. 522, Wilcox Guano Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 61 Fed. 200, Regale v. Greenwood, 60 Fed. 786, Marshall v. Otto, 59 Fed. 252, Howlett v. Central Imp. Co., 56 Fed. 162, Gates v. Bucki, 53 Fed. 965, 12 U. S. App. 69, Leggett v. Glenn, 51 Fed. 389, 4 U. S. App. 438, Converse v. Dairy Co., 45 Fed. 20, Pierce v. Feagans, 39 Fed. 588, Washburn v. Scott, 22 Fed. 711, Sharon v. Hill, 10 Sawy. 306, 22 Fed. 30, Sharon v. Terry, 13 Sawy. 392, Dwight v. Central Vt. R. R. Co., 20 Blatchf. 205, 9 Fed. 789, Latham v. Chaffee, 7 Fed. 523, and Ahlhauser v. Butler, 50 Fed. 709. Cited also in Mix v. Creditors, 39 La. Ann. 626, 2 So. 393, State v. Railroad Co., 42 La. Ann. 18, 7 So. 86, Bourgeois v. Jacobs, 45 La. Ann. 1314, 14 So. 70, Kilpatrick v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 38 Neb. 641, 41 Am. St. Rep. 757, 57 N. W. 671, and Willson v. Milliken, — Ky. —, 44 S. W. 661, 662, 663, 664, 42 L. R. A. 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 458, 466, all holding that pendency of action in Federal courts does not abate action in State courts; Barnes v. Dow, 59 Vt. 547, 10 Atl. 264, holding court of equity will assume jurisdiction, although action pending between same parties involving same subject-matter.

99 U. S. 180-183, 25 L. 451, BURT v. PANJAUD.

Trial.— Error in overruling an objection to a juror is cured where it does not appear that he sat upon the panel, or that his exclusion abridged party's right of challenge, p. 181.

Cited in Ford v. Umatilla Co., 15 Or. 324, 16 Pac. 39, and Andrews v. State, 21 Fla. 605, both holding that erroneous ruling on challenge, is cured if jury is procured before peremptories are exhausted; Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 956, holding where it does not appear that the juror was excluded for reason assigned, it is not error.

Jury.— A juror upon his examination is not bound to disclose his guilt of a crime, or any fact which would disgrace him, p. 181.

Cited in Atwood v. Weems, 99 U. S. 184, 185, 25 L. 471, holding right to have juror discharged for failing to take oath, as required by section 821, United States revised statutes, is limited to district attorney.

Ejectment.— Actual possession of the premises or receipt of rent by plaintiff prior to eviction, is prima facie evidence of title, p. 182.

Cited in Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 123, 26 N. W. 892, holding actual possession of mining claim is a good title against an intruder; Haws v. Copper Mining Co., 160 U. S. 317, 40 L. 441, 16 S. Ct. 288, holding possession or receipt of rents sufficient as against intruder; Spitznagle v. Vanhessch, 13 Neb. 341, 14 N. W. 418, and Sherin v. Larson, 28 Minn. 525, 11 N. W. 71, both holding possession of ancestor good title against intruder; Lancy v. Brok, 110 Ill. 616, holding where no circumstances to contrary, possession indicates ownership in fee; Parker v. Fort Worth Ry. Co., 71 Tex. 134, 8 S. W. 541, Mining Co. v. Briscoe, 47 Fed. 278, and Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 91, 44 N. W. 424, all holding possession is prima facie evidence of title; Probst v. Trustees, etc., 3 N. Mex. 270, 5 Pac. 705, paper title not necessary in defense against trespasser.

Distinguished in People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 123.

99 U. S. 183-188, 25 L. 471, ATWOOD v. WEEMS.

Trial.— Revised statutes, section 821, authorizing district attorney to apply test oath to jury panel at commencement of term, is inapplicable to parties to civil suits, p. 184.

Appeal and error.— If ruling was right on other grounds, judge's opinion that law was unconstitutional is not error, p. 185.

Taxation.— Under act of Congress of 1862, for direct taxation in insurrectionary districts, if the party liable for taxes, or his tenant or friend, was ready and willing to pay and was told payment would not be accepted, this defeats the sale, p. 187.

Cited in Hills v. National Bank, 12 Fed. 95, holding when it is reasonably certain tender of taxes will be refused, no tender is necessary; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 200, 203, 27 L. 174, 175, 1 S. Ct. 244, 246, and Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 282, 29 L. 190, 5 S. Ct. 910, both holding tender, as far as certificate of sale is concerned, is equivalent to payment; State v. Johnson, 30 Fla. 507, 11 So. 857, holding it is the duty of the collector to receive taxes; Wilbert v. Michel, 42 La. Ann. 856, 8 So. 608, holding State cannot convey any better title than she has acquired; Hills v. Exchange Bank, 105 U. S. 321, 26 L. 1053, and Royal v. Virginal, 116 U. S. 579, 29 L. 737, 6 S. Ct. 513, both holding lawful tender of taxes equivalent to payment; dissenting opinion in Sims v. Walshe, 49 La. Ann. 792, 21 So. 866.

Distinguished in Emery v. Union Society, 79 Me. 342, 9 Atl. 892, and Morrison v. Jacoby, 114 Ind. 95, 15 Atl. 807.

99 U. S. 188-191, 25 L. 473, KETCHUM v. BUCKLEY.

War.— Upon close of war appointment of military governor did not affect general laws of the State respecting settlement of estates, nor remove probate officers, p. 190.

Cited in Hyatt v. McBurney, 18 S. C. 222. See note in 89 Am. Dec. 262.

99 U. S. 191-201, 25 L. 319, EXPRESS CO. v. RAILROAD CO.

Receiver.— Bill against receiver without consent of court is a contempt, p. 198.

Courts.— To support Federal jurisdiction, citizenship of complainant need not be proved unless it is denied, p. 199.

Cited in Imperial Roofing Co. v. Wyman, 38 Fed. 576, 3 L. R. A. 505, and n., holding denial of diverse citizenship must be by special plea in abatement.

Corporations.— Contract of corporation is presumed to be infra vires until contrary is shown, p. 199.

Cited in Burden v. Burden, 159 N. Y. 305, 54 N. E. 22, holding burden of proof is on plaintiff to show action of corporation was illegal; Commonwealth Trust Co. v. Cummings, 83 Fed. 768, holding not necessary for corporation to allege its power to contract.

Receiver.— Where railroad is in the hands of receiver, he is the only necessary party in an action for specific performance against the railroad, p. 199.

Specific performance.— Contracts for specific performance are not confined to realty, p. 200.

Specific performance.— Equity never enforces specific performance where power of revocation exists, p. 201.

Cited in Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 455, 41 Am. Rep. 722, 11 N. W. 268, holding where lessees have power to revoke lease, equity will not compel specific performance; Dow v. Railroad Co., 67 N. H. 65, 36 Atl. 543, holding equity will restrain railroads from carrying out an invalid lease.

Distinguished in Newgass v. Atlantic Ry. Co., 72 Fed. 714, 715.

Specific performance.—An express company's contract whereby a railroad was to furnish it necessary facilities for conducting express business over its lines, in consideration of money loaned, is not enforceable against a receiver of the road representing mortgage bondholders, since that would be in effect a form of satisfaction or payment, pp. 200, 201.

Cited and principle applied in Central Trust Co. v. Marietta R. R. Co., 51 Fed. 16, 16 L. R. A. 91, and n., holding contract to transport marble will not be enforced against receiver, although freight has been paid; Ames v. Union Pac. Co., 60 Fed. 970, 971, holding receiver is not bound to carry out provisions of lease; Farmers' Trust Co. v. Cape Fear R. R. Co., 73 Fed. 715, holding freight contract cannot be enforced against receiver; Brown v. Warner, 78 Tex. 546, 22 Am. St. Rep. 70, 14 S. W. 1033, 11 L. R. A. 395, holding receiver not bound to carry out contract for maintenance of switch; Scott v. Rainier R. R. Co., 13 Wash. 113, 42 Pac. 532, holding receiver not bound to carry out contract for sawing and delivering logs; Union Trust Co. v. Motor Road Co., 49 Fed. 269, holding receiver will not be directed to pay for grading and macadamizing between tracks; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Farmers' Loan Co., 81 Fed. 258, 49 U. S. App. 470, holding if leases be renounced by receiver, no part of deficiencies can be paid out of the corpus of the trust; Sun Flower Oil Co. v. Wilson, 142 U. S. 323, 35 L. 1028, 12 S. Ct. 237, holding receiver may return property held under contract of purchase; N. Pac. R. R. Co. v. Heflin, 48 U. S. App. 564, 83 Fed. 94, holding receiver not responsible for tort committed before appointment; United States v. De Coursey, 82 Fed. 304, holding receiver not criminally responsible under interstate commerce act for failure to carry out traffic arrangement; Link Belt Co. v. Hughes, 174 Ill. 160, 51 N. E. 180, and Spencer v. Columbian Exposition, 163 Ill. 126, 45 N. E. 253, both holding where receiver continues in possession of premises conducting the business, lease is binding upon him; Philadelphia Coal Co. v. Daube, 71 Fed. 587, holding guaranty that a firm will pay for coal inures to the benefit of receiver; Breed v. Glasgow Ins. Co., 92 Fed. 766, holding persons having contractual relations with debtor are bound by order appointing receiver; Kan., etc., Ry. v. Bayles, 19 Colo. 355, 35 Pac. 746, holding contracts made by preceding receiver do not bind his successor.

99 U. S. 201-212, 25 L. 431, GODDEN v. KIMMELL.

Equity.—State claims are never favored in equity, p. 201.

Approved and principle relied upon, as follows: Woolensak v. Reiher, 115 U. S. 102, 29 L. 352, 5 S. Ct. 1140, holding delay of two years in applying for reissue of patent, is laches; Speidle v. Henricl, 120 U. S. 387, 30 L. 720, 7 S. Ct. 612, holding bill filed after fifty years to recover trust funds is stale; Mackall v. Casilear, 137 U. S. 566, 34 L. 779, 11 S. Ct. 181, holding where, by reason of death, court cannot do exact justice, relief will be denied; Etting v. Marx, 4 Hughes, 323, 4 Fed. 684, holding acquiescence for twelve years in settlement of executor's accounts bars recovery; United States v. Deebe, 4 McCrary, 17, 17 Fed. 40, holding, although no statute of limitations in existence, lapse of time may bar recovery; Kittle v. Hall, 24 Blatchf. 188, 29 Fed. 511, holding acquiescence for number of years in the infringement of patent bars recovery; Foster v. Mansfield Co., 36 Fed. 639, holding fraudulent sale will not be set aside where party has acquiesced for period of ten years; Lemoine v. Dunklin Co., 51 Fed. 492, 10 U. S. App. 227 (see S. C., 38 Fed. 570), holding delay of twenty-two years after repudiation of trust to county constitutes laches; Puckering v. Terhermann, 41 Fed. 378, holding delay of eighteen years, by surety who has discharge lien, to demand subrogation constitutes laches; Kenny v. Contner, 43 Fed. 711, holding lapse of fifteen years will bar action by heirs to set aside deed of testator; Van Fleet v. Sledge, 45 Fed. 748, holding, after delay of nine years, reformation of indorsement will be denied; Naddo v. Barden, 47 Fed. 790, holding lapse of twenty years defeats action to establish involuntary trust in land; St. Paul Ry. Co. v. Sage, 49 Fed. 318, 4 U. S. App. 160, holding where all the facts were matters of record, it was laches for plaintiff to delay for fourteen years its assertion of title; Rugan v. Sabin, 53 Fed. 420, 10 U. S. App. 519, holding fraudulent sale of land cannot be rescinded by heirs who acquiesced for period of seven years; Percy v. Cockrill, 53 Fed. 876, 10 U. S. App. 574, holding collusive sale of property after lapse of fifteen years will not be disturbed; Prince's Paint Co. v. Prince Mfg. Co., 57 Fed. 944, 17 U. S. App. 145, holding acquiescence in use of trademark for eight years bars recovery; Kemp v. Nickerson, 66 Fed. 683, holding action by heir, after twenty-three years, to set aside will, is stale; Jones v. Perkins, 76 Fed. 84, holding after lapse of seven years suit to force decedent to make complainant his heir is barred; Hemmick v. Standard Oil Co., 91 Fed. 334, holding acquiescence in payments under a lease for period of years bars accounting; Scheffel v. Hays, 58 Fed. 460, 19 U. S. App. 220, holding victim of fraudulent sale must act promptly, and a lapse of three years bars a recovery; Curtis v. Larkin, 94 Fed. 255, holding it is laches for party to wait for a year after the repudiation of his claim to a mine, he having knowledge that corporation is to be formed and large improvements made; Hagerman v. Bates, 5 Colo. App. 402, 38 Pac. 1104, holding standing by for an unreasonable time while valuable improvements are being made on mining claim bars recovery; Schlawig v. Purslow, 59 Fed. 853, 19 U. S. App. 501, holding standing by for a period of ten years, permitting valuable improvements to be made, bars recovery; Wetzel v. Minnesota, etc., Transfer Co., 65 Fed. 26, 27 U. S. App. 594, holding where valuable improvements have been made, delay for forty years to assert right under land warrant bars recovery; Dugan v. O'Donnell, 68 Fed. 992, holding after seventeen years equity will afford no relief to recover estate; Church of Christ v. Reorganized Church, 70 Fed. 188, 36 U. S. App. 110, holding where land is charged with trust, acquiescence for period of years will bar recovery; Lant v. Manley, 71 Fed. 15, holding, after fifteen years, action to set aside a deed made in fraud of creditors, is barred; Seculovich v. Morton, 101 Cal. 677, 40 Am. St. Rep. 107, 36 Pac. 387, holding, after lapse of twenty-five years, action to enforce a trust in land is barred; Coles v. Vanneman, 51 N. J. Eq. 320, 18 Atl. 471, holding lapse of eight years before suit to set aside surrender of mortgage bars recovery; Hodges v. Council, 86 N. C. 184, holding suit by ward, commenced more than three years after reaching majority, against sureties on guardian's bond, is barred; Bolton v. Dickens, 4 Lea, 577, partner who delays for twelve years to compel accounting is guilty of laches; Perkins v. Lane, 82 Va. 64, holding, where parties have died and records destroyed, a lapse of years will bar an accounting; Wickham v. Sprague, 18 Wash. 471, 51 Pac. 1057, holding action by ward, thirty years after her majority, against her guardian's estate, to recover proceeds of the sale of land, is barred; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 287, 2 Am. St. Rep. 793, 14 Pac. 792, holding action by personal representative of partner against personal representative of another partner, after lapse of twenty-five years, is stale; Parker v. Kuhn, 21 Neb. 427, 32 N. W. 83, failure to commence action for period of years to redeem land is barred; De Grauw v. Mechan, 48 N. J. Eq. 225, 21 Atl. 195, holding delay, involving lapse of time, changed conditions, death of witness, improvements, bars recovery; Horbach v. Marsh, 37 Neb. 38, 55 N. W. 291, holding lapse of four years before commencing action to set aside judicial sale bars recovery; Barden v. Duluth, 28 Fed. 15, holding failure to foreclose certificates against city lots for period of thirteen years bars recovery; Mueller v. Mueller, 95 Fed. 159, holding acquiescence in use of patent will bar equitable relief; Old Times Distillery Co. v. Casey, — Ky. —, 47 S. W. 611, 42 L. R. A. 468, holding where two distillers use same trademark for ten years, the one having the prior right is estopped; Whitney v. Fox, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. 1149, 17 S. Ct. 717, holding equity will sometimes refuse relief where suit is brought within the period of the statute; Bartlett v. Ambrose, 78 Fed. 844, 42 U. S. App. 381, holding person may not be guilty of laches although his claim to recover land is barred by statute.

Equity.—Answer to bill is conclusive unless disproved by two witnesses, or by one witness and confirmatory circumstances, p. 206.

Equity, in many cases, acts upon analogy of statutes of limitations at law, p. 210.

Approved in Rhino v. Emery, 65 Fed. 835, holding bill charging testatrix and devisee with fraud will not be entertained after period in which to contest the will has expired; Ballou v. Sherwood, 32 Neb. 695, 49 N. W. 798, holding adverse possession which has ripened into a title will defeat specific performance; Coles v. Ballard, 78 Va. 147, holding, if claim not barred at law, mere lapse of time will not prevent recovery; Van Winckle v. Blackford, 33 W. Va. 584, 11 S. E. 30, holding, in case of concurrent jurisdiction, courts of equity apply the statute in analogy to courts of law; Kropp v. Kropp, 97 Wis. 145, 72 N. W. 383, holding, where statute gives longer period, delay of four years in bringing action to reform mortgage is not laches; Borden v. Duluth, 28 Fed. 15, holding equity follows the law; Metropolitan Bank v. Dispatch Co., 149 U. S. 448, 37 L. 803, 13 S. Ct. 948, holding courts of equity in case of concurrent jurisdiction consider themselves bound by statute; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 62, 56 U. S. App. 375, 376, where suit is commenced to set aside deed within the period of the statute, burden of showing special circumstance why equity should deny relief is upon defendant; New York Land Co. v. Hyland, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 616, 28 S. W. 213, holding Texas statute applies to both equitable and legal actions.

Equity.—In prosecuting a stale claim, reason for the delay should be set out and explained in the bill, p. 211.

Approved and relied upon in Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 332, 36 L. 726, 12 S. Ct. 867, Ware v. Galveston City Co., 146 U. S. 115, 36 L. 910, 13 S. Ct. 38, Hardt v. Heidweyer, 152 U. S. 559, 38 L. 552, 14 S. Ct. 674, Teall v. Slaven, 14 Sawy. 374, 40 Fed. 781, and Taylor v. Holmes, 14 Fed. 509, all holding bill must contain distinct averments as to the time when the fraud, mistake, concealment or misrepresentation was discovered; Hinchman v. Kelley, 54 Fed. 66, 7 U. S. App. 481, holding where laches appears on the face of the bill, advantage may be taken of it by demurrer; Lemoine v. Dunklin County, 38 Fed. 570, holding where bill shows relation of trustor and trustee, and no intervening rights, and lapse of thirty years, it is good as against demurrer. Cited, arguendo, in Parks v. Satterthwaite, 132 Ind. 414, 32 N. E. 83. Distinguished in Fowler v. True, 76 Me. 45, Wissler v. Craigs, 80 Va. 29, and Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 280, 10 Pac. 685. See notes to 2 Am. St. Rep. 799, 23 Am. St. Rep. 149, 150, 151, 40 Am. St. Rep. 574, and 54 Am. Dec. 130.

99 U. S. 213-214, 25 L. 265, VANSANT v. GAS-LIGHT CO.

Appeal and error.—Citation is necessary except where appeal is allowed in open court during term at which judgment below was rendered, pp. 213, 214.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 214-220, 25 L. 410, SUPERVISORS v. GALBRAITH.

Municipal corporations.—Statutory requirement that bonds issued by county in payment of stock in railroad shall be made payable to railroad and “their successors and assigns” is directory; hence their issue payable to A., or bearer, does not invalidate them where they contain recital of compliance with authorizing act, p. 217.

Approved in Linton v. Carter, 23 Fed. 539, holding word “obligations” in an act authorizing municipality to issue bonds, includes bonds payable to bearer; D’Esterre v. Brooklyn, 90 Fed. 588, holding leaving the payee’s name blank does not affect validity of bonds, and makes them payable to bearer. See 51 Am. St. Rep. 854, note.

Municipal corporations.—Recital in bonds that they were issued in conformity to statutes is conclusive, p. 218.

Cited in Woodruff v. Okolona, 57 Miss. 808, holding that recitals are not conclusive as to liability of county, and overruling doctrine of principal case. See note in 98 Am. Dec. 669.

Municipal corporations.—No place of payment being designated by authorizing statute, held competent to make municipal bonds payable in New York, p. 218.

See note in 98 Am. Dec. 678.

Contracts.—Law of place of performance governs construction of contract, p. 218.

Cited in Cæsar v. Capell, 83 Fed. 418, holding where foreign corporation does business in defiance of the law of the State, in suit to foreclose mortgage given to company, the law of its domicile governs; Phipps v. Harding, 70 Fed. 471, 34 U. S. App. 148, 30 L. R. A. 515, holding joint maker of note liable according to law of place where note is payable; Sturdivant v. Memphis Bank, 60 Fed. 733, 23 U. S. App. 300, holding note given in one State, payable in another, is governed by the law of the latter.

Municipal corporations.—Where municipal bonds are assigned in blank, holder may fill in blank, and meantime they pass by delivery and have all the properties of commercial paper, p. 218.

Municipal corporations.—Where statute authorized submission of bond issue to voters, one submission does not exhaust the power, but the matter may be again voted upon after statutory notice, p. 218.

Cited in Kansas City, etc., R. R. v. Rich Twp., 45 Kan. 294, 25 Pac. 602, holding irregularities in the first subscription were cured by the second; Bunch v. Fluvanna Co., 86 Va. 458, 10 S. E. 534, arguendo. See 98 Am. Dec. 672, note.

99 U. S. 221-224, 25 L. 321, FARRELL v. UNITED STATES.

Internal revenue.—Under act of 1868, where distilled spirits deposited in bonded warehouse are destroyed by fire, the obligors on the bond are not relieved from payment of tax, p. 224.

Cited in United States v. Peace, 48 Fed. 714, holding destruction of spirits by fire does not constitute removal so as to make tax payable.

Distinguished in Heger v. Union Ins. Co., 17 Fed. 500.

99 U. S. 225-229, 25 L. 273, UNITED STATES v. GLAB.

Internal revenue.—Under revised statutes, section 3232, requiring annual traders' licenses, partner who succeeds to the business of a firm of brewers may carry on the business under the old license until the expiration of the year, p. 228.

Cited in United States v. Davis, 37 Fed. 468, 469, holding succeeding partner in business of retail liquors and cigars, although he has moved, may carry on business under license issued to firm; St. Charles v. Hackman, 133 Mo. 645, 34 S. W. 881, arguendo.

99 U. S. 229-234, 25 L. 373, KING v. UNITED STATES.

Internal revenue.—Where railroad paid to collector overdue revenue tax on its bonds, his sureties cannot defend suit for his failure to account for the money, on ground that assessor had not previously received the proper returns of such property for assessment, from the taxpayer. Action of debt may be maintained though no assessment made, pp. 231-233.

Cited in United States v. L. & R. Co., 1 Fed. 701, holding, where statute describes the subject, and fixes rate, taxes may be recovered in action of debt.

United States.—Money received by officer of United States in his official capacity belongs to the government, p. 233.

Cited in Berrien Co. Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 Mich. 85, 7 N. W. 706, Meads v. United States, 81 Fed. 688, 54 U. S. App. 158, Potter v. United States, 107 U. S. 130, 27 L. 331, 1 S. Ct. 528, and Smith v. United States, 170 U. S. 379, 42 L. 1077, 18 S. Ct. 629, all holding that money unlawfully collected by public officer belongs to government; Blaco v. State, 58 Neb. 566, 78 N. W. 1059, holding sureties on official bond cannot defend on ground that money embezzled was received by public officer irregularly.

Internal revenue.—Revised statutes, section 825, giving Federal district attorneys fee of 2 per cent. on recoveries under revenue laws, means 2 per cent. of the recovery, not of the judgment, p. 234.

Cited in United States v. Wolters, 51 Fed. 898, holding issuance of execution in revenue case entitles clerk to 1 per cent. of amount; Bell's Gap Ry. Co. v. Penn., 134 U. S. 240, 33 L. 896, 10 S. Ct. 536, arguendo.

Distinguished in State v. Railroad Co., 54 S. C. 575, 32 S. E. 695, and United States v. Pacific R. R., 1 McCrary, 7, 1 Fed. 102.

99 U. S. 235-256, 25 L. 339, FOSDICK v. SCHALL.

Attachment.—Where personal property is seized and sold under attachment, liability of the property is determined by the law of the situs, p. 250.

Mortgage.—Lien of mortgage on after-acquired property attaches subject to all the conditions with which it is incumbered when it comes into the hands of mortgagor, p. 251.

Mortgages.—Possession of receiver is possession of court, and he holds for the benefit of whomsoever in the end it shall be found to concern, p. 251.

Cited in Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 458, 31 U. S. App. 644, holding receiver mere agent of court, and not responsible for injuries while operating road; Davis v. Bonney, 89 Va. 760, 17 S. E. 231, holding appointment of receiver determines no right, nor does it affect the property in any way; New York, etc., R. R. v. New York, etc., R. R., 58 Fed. 278, holding receivers are custodians of the property, and hold as mere agents of the court; Meyer v. Car Co., 102 U. S. 10, 26 L. 60, holding possession of receiver is for the benefit of whomsoever it may concern.

Railroads.—Lien of mortgage covering after-acquired property, does not attach to cars sold conditionally to the railroad company, the title being reserved by vendor, p. 251.

The doctrine that vendor's right to retake property is not affected by a mortgage covering after-acquired property, is applied in the following cases: Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Shenandoah, etc., R. R., 86 Va. 9, 10, 11, 19 Am. St. Rep. 864, 865, 866, 9 S. E. 762, 763, to cars sold to railroad; General Electric Co. v. Transit Equipment Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 474, 476, 42 Atl. 106, 107, to motors, controller, trolley poles, electric generators, switch board, where they may be removed without injury to the corpus; Wood v. Holly Mfg. Co., 100 Ala. 352, 46 Am. St. Rep. 66, 13 So. 954, to pumping engines fastened by bolts and taps; Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 252, 6 Am. St. Rep. 896, 14 Atl. 283, to engine, boiler and machinery annexed to realty; Hardesty v. Pile, 15 Fed. 779, to rolling stock of railroad; Western Union Tel. Co. v. B. & S. Ry. Co., 3 McCrary, 140, 11 Fed. 7, to telegraph poles; Meyer v. Car Co., 102 U. S. 9, 12, 26 L. 59, 61, and Fosdick v. Car Co., 99 U. S. 256, 257, 25 L. 344, to railroad cars; Hudekoper v. Locomotive Works, 99 U. S. 260, 25 L. 345, to railroad engines; Manhattan Co. v. Sioux City Ry. Co., 76 Fed. 661, to electric generators; Warren v. Liddel, 110 Ala. 247, 20 So.

93, to sale of machinery, although void as to creditors under registry laws; Call v. Seymour, 40 Ohio St. 673, holding conditional sale of threshing machine good against attaching creditors; Central Trust Co. v. Marietta, etc., Ry., 48 Fed. 874, 2 U. S. App. 95, holding vendor failing to comply with recordation act has prior claim to mortgagee of after-acquired property; Fairbanks v. Eureka Co., 67 Ala. 112, holding conditional vendor may recover property from purchaser of vendee; McGourkey v. Toledo, etc., R. R. Co., 146 U. S. 551, 36 L. 1085, 13 S. Ct. 175, holding conditional sales of rolling stock have been universally respected; In re Binford, 3 Hughes, 299, F. C. 1,411, holding sale of goods by vendee does not affect conditional vendor's right of recovery; Hall v. Larey, 73 Ga. 699, holding conditional sale of personalty between the parties is valid; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 185, 19 N. E. 757, 3 L. R. A. 36, and n., holding mortgage of after-acquired property attaches only to interest of mortgagor at time of annexation; Loomis v. Davenport R. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 495, 496, 17 Fed. 305, and Harris v. Youngston Bridge Co., 90 Fed. 328, 62 U. S. App. 123, both holding vendor's lien upon land paramount to mortgage of after-acquired property; New York Trust Co. v. Capital Ry. Co., 77 Fed. 531, and Phoenix Iron Works v. Trust Co., 83 Fed. 759, 54 U. S. App. 414, both holding conditional sale of machinery, which becomes part of realty, is subject to prior mortgage; Porter v. Pittsburgh Steel Co., 122 U. S. 283, 30 L. 1211, 7 S. Ct. 1208, holding bridges sold conditionally inure to the benefit of the mortgagee; Evans v. Kister, 92 Fed. 834, 836, holding mortgagee of after-acquired property not a creditor or subsequent purchaser for value; Hart v. Barney, etc., Mfg. Co., 7 Fed. 552, holding where conditional sale is not recorded, attaching creditors have superior right to vendor; National Bank v. Goodyear, 90 Ga. 728, 16 S. E. 964, holding consignment of goods to sell is a bailment and not a sale; Union, etc., Transit Co. v. Western Land Co., 59 Fed. 53, 18 U. S. App. 438, holding recordation acts do not apply to bailment of goods. See notes in 42 Am. Rep. 106, and 89 Am. Dec. 127, 128. Cited, arguendo, in Bosworth v. Terminal R. Assn., 80 Fed. 971, 53 U. S. App. 305, Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kanawha, etc., Ry., 58 Fed. 14, 16 U. S. App. 37, Trust Co. v. Locomotive Works, 135 U. S. 225, 34 L. 104, 10 S. Ct. 742, Kilpatrick v. Kansas City B. R. Co., 38 Neb. 645, 57 N. W. 672, Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., Petitioner, 129 U. S. 213, 32 L. 657, 9 S. Ct. 266, Cook v. Cole, 55 Iowa, 73, 7 N. W. 421, Clyde v. Richmond Road, 56 Fed. 541, 542, Bosworth v. St. Louis Terminal R. R., 174 U. S. 185, 19 S. Ct. 626, Stewart v. Potomac Ferry Co., 5 Hughes, 383, 12 Fed. 305, Farmers' Trust Co. v. Mission, I. & N. Ry. Co., 21 Fed. 267, 272, Sage v. Central R. R. Co., 99 U. S. 345, 25 L. 398, Beaches' Appeal, 58 Conn. 473, 20 Atl. 476, Redewill v. Gillen, 3 N. Mex. 530, 4 N. Mex. 80, 12 Pac. 530, and Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Shenandoah Val. R. R., 33 W. Va. 788, 11 S. E. 68.

Distinguished in Hassall v. Wilcox, 130 U. S. 504, 32 L. 1005, 9 S. Ct. 593, George v. St. Louis Cable Ry., 44 Fed. 120, The Allianca, 65 Fed. 246, St. Louis Trust Co. v. Riley, 70 Fed. 34, 37, 36 U. S. App. 100, 30 L. R. A. 458, Farmers' Trust Co. v. Cape Fear R. R., 73 Fed. 715, Union Trust Co. v. Morrison, 125 U. S. 612, 31 L. 831, 8 S. Ct. 1010, Wood v. Guarantee Trust Co., 128 U. S. 420, 421, 32 L. 473, 9 S. Ct. 132, International Trust Co. v. Brick, etc., Co., 95 Fed. 858, Merchants' Bank v. Moore, 106 Ala. 649, 17 So. 706, Hanna v. State Trust Co., 70 Fed. 6, 36 U. S. App. 61, 30 L. R. A. 204, Ford v. Central Trust Co., 70 Fed. 145, 36 U. S. App. 203, Farmers' Trust Co. v. Detroit R. Co., 71 Fed. 36, Terre Haute, etc., R. R. v. Harrison, 88 Fed. 924, 60 U. S. App. 287, Central Trust Co. v. R. & C. R. Co., 94 Fed. 280, Reinhardt v. Augusta Mining Co., 94 Fed. 906, Felton v. Cincinnati, 95 Fed. 342, Central Trust Co. v. Thurman, 94 Ga. 742, 20 S. E. 143, Ex parte Brown, 15 S. C. 533, Perkins v. Bank, 43 S. C. 46, 20 S. E. 761, Phinzy v. Augusta R. R. Co., 63 Fed. 924, State v. E. & K. R. R. Co., 6 Lea, 365, 366, 367, and Ryan v. Hayes, 62 Tex. 49, 50, 51. See valuable notes to 41 Am. St. Rep. 759, 54 Am. St. Rep. 403, 408, 411, 412, 415, 417, 420, 427, 431, 432, and 67 Am. St. Rep. 90, 91, 92, 93.

Railroads.—Upon application of mortgagees for receiver, pending foreclosure, the court may, in its discretion, direct payment out of income, of debts for labor, supplies, equipment, and permanent improvement of mortgaged property, e. g., for rental of cars, p. 252.

Cited and relied upon in New England Co. v. Carnegie Co., 75 Fed. 56, 58, 33 U. S. App. 491 (and see note to 8 Biss. 320, F. C. 14,258); Central Trust Co. v. Utah Cent. Ry. Co., 16 Utah, 17, 50 Pac. 814, Farmers' Loan Co. v. Kansas City N. W. R. Co., 53 Fed. 185, all holding court may impose as condition of appointing receiver, the payment of debts for supplies, etc.; Union Trust Co. v. Walker, 107 U. S. 596, 27 L. 490, 2 S. Ct. 299, holding assignee of preferred claim entitled to preference; Southern Co. v. Carnegie Co., 76 Fed. 495, 42 U. S. App. 145, holding when receiver appointed, conditions imposed binding upon mortgagee; Putnam v. Jacksonville, etc., Ry., 61 Fed. 445, but holder of labor claims may not have receiver appointed without first getting judgment. In the following citing cases preferential claims have been allowed as follows: Keelyn v. Carolina, etc., Co., 90 Fed. 29, 30, to persons furnishing labor to telegraph and telephone companies; Hall v. Planing Mill Co., 16 Mo. App. 459, to liens of mechanics upon machinery; Litzenberger v. Jarvis-Conklin Co., 8 Utah, 19, 28 Pac. 872, to wages earned sixty days prior to appointment of receiver; Farmers' Loan Co. v. Vicksburgh & M. R. Co., 33 Fed. 783, to money borrowed within a year to pay taxes, employees, etc.; Atkins v. Petersburg R. R., 3 Hughes, 313, 317, F. C. 604, to money borrowed to pay employees; Bellingham Bay Imp. Co. v. Fairhaven Ry. Co., 17 Wash. 377, 379, 49 Pac. 515, to claim for labor and supplies not barred by statute of limitations; McElhenny v. Binz, 80 Tex. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 26 Am. St. Rep. 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 13 S. W. 660, 661, 662, to creditors furnishing labor and materials in construction of railroad; Grand Trunk Co. v. Central Vermont Co., 88 Fed. 621, to claims for supplies incurred six months before appointment; Farmers' Loan Co. v. Kansas City N. W. R. Co., 53 Fed. 189, to persons who furnish labor and supplies; Bear Lake Irrigation Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 16, 41 L. 333, 17 S. Ct. 11, to contractors constructing ditch for irrigation company on public lands; V. & A. Coal Co. v. Central R. R. Co., 170 U. S. 364, 365, 42 L. 1071, 18 S. Ct. 661, to persons selling coal to railroad in the hands of receiver; Taylor v. Philadelphia, etc., R. R., 7 Fed. 381, to employees and materialmen whose claims accrued prior to appointment; Dow v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co., 20 Fed. 267, to operating expenses accruing within six months prior to appointment; Frank v. Denver & R. G. Ry. Co., 23 Fed. 126, 127, to claim for rolling stock sold conditionally; Thomas v. Peoria Ry. Co., 36 Fed. 818, 820, to amount due for leasing cars; Bound v. S. C. T. Co., 47 Fed. 31, 32, to amount due for rails; Finance Co. v. Charleston R. Co., 61 Fed. 371, in North Carolina, to a judgment for injuries; Clark v. Central R. R. Co., 66 Fed. 806, 30 U. S. App. 263, to amount due for coal in bin at time of appointment; Hall v. Frost, 99 U. S. 392, 25 L. 419, to amount due for machinery furnished receiver; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 780, 28 L. 597, 4 S. Ct. 677, to debt for fuel; Wood v. New York & N. E. Co., 70 Fed. 743, 746, to claim for coupling links and pins, and tank steel furnished within four months prior to appointment; Jones v. Central Trust Co., 73 Fed. 573, 43 U. S. App. 224, to claim of sureties who release property from levy; Southern Co. v. Carnegie, 76 Fed. 499, 42 U. S. App. 145, to supply creditors where earnings have come into hands of receiver; Southern Ry. Co. v. Tillett, 76 Fed. 509, 42 U. S. App. 173, to claims for repair of road, contracted a reasonable time before appointment; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Irrigation Co., 79 Fed. 40, to claims for labor and repairs contracted by irrigation company; Guarantee Indemnity Co. v. Tacoma R. R. Co., 83 Fed. 367, 48 U. S. App. 673, to claim for cable furnished street railroad; Drennen v. Deposit Co., 115 Ala. 606, 609, 611, 613, 616, 617, 619, 622, 627, 629, 630, 634, 636, 67 Am. St. Rep. 77, 80, 81, 83, 86, 87, 88, 23 So. 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 174, 175, 177, 188, 39 L. R. A. 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 633, 634, 635, 636, applying rule to claims of employees who contribute to permanent improvement of coal mine and railroad, accruing within six months before appointment; Green v. Coast Line R. R., 97 Ga. 23, 54 Am. St. Rep. 385, 24 S. E. 817, 33 L. R. A. 809, in Georgia, judgment for damages for tort; Frazier v. Railroad Co., 88 Tenn. 165, 12 S. W. 544, in Tennessee, to claim arising out of damages to person; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 76 Tex. 431, 18 Am. St. Rep. 68, 13 S. W. 466, to claim for injuries to person while road was in hands of receiver; Randolph v. Trust Co., 91 Tex. 613, 44 S. W. 73, in Texas, to all judgments obtained before appointment; Williams v. Virginia, etc., B. R., 33 Gratt. 628, to current debts, contracted before appointment, within reasonable limits; Ellis v. Water Co., 86 Tex. 111, 23 S. W. 859, to receiver's certificates, issued to keep water works in operation; In re Tallahassee Mfg. Co., 64 Ala. 599, holding earnings of factory in hands of receiver should be applied to payment of general creditors.

In the following citing cases the claims were held not to be preferential: Farmers' Trust Co. v. Green Bay R., 45 Fed. 665, claim against railroad for death; Central Trust Co. v. N. Y. R. R. Co., 30 Fed. 897, judgment for personal injuries; Central Trust Co. v. Tennessee Ry. Co., 80 Fed. 630, advertising debt of railroad; Lackawanna Coal Co. v. Farmers' Trust Co., 79 Fed. 207, 52 U. S. App. 102, claim for large amount of rails incurred about two years before appointment of receiver; Finance Co. v. Charleston R. R. Co., 52 Fed. 679, 680, claim for legal services rendered railroad company; Easton v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 38 Fed. 14, claim against railroad for goods lost by fire; Louisville Co. v. Central Trust Co., 87 Fed. 504, 59 U. S. App. 700, former track rentals in absence of special equities; Central Trust Co. v. Charlotte C. R. Co., 65 Fed. 268, 269, and Quincy R. R. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 103, 36 L. 639, 12 S. Ct. 794, Central Trust Co. v. Wabash Ry. Co., 46 Fed. 29, 33, and New York R. Co. v. New York W. R. Co., 58 Fed. 281, rentals of leased lines; McCormick v. Salem Con. St. Ry. Co., 34 Or. 547, 549, 56 Pac. 519, heater furnished street railroad; American Loan Co. v. East & West R. R. Co., 46 Fed. 103, debt contracted for materials of construction furnished more than six months before appointment of receiver; Whiteley v. Trust Co., 76 Fed. 77, 43 U. S. App. 643, 34 L. R. A. 305, liability of sureties upon supersedeas bond given by railroad apparently solvent; Morgan's Co. v. Texas, etc., B. R., 137 U. S. 197, 34 L. 634, 11 S. Ct. 69, money loaned to railroad generally, although used in payment of interest on bonds or of operating expenses; Finance Co. v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., 49 Fed. 694, 695, claim for furnishing rations to railroad used by its employees, unless earnings have been diverted; Farmers' Trust Co. v. N. P. R. R. Co., 74 Fed. 432, judgment for negligent killing of stock; St. Louis Trust Co. v. Riley, 70 Fed. 33, 36 U. S. App. 100, 30 L. R. A. 457, damages for injuries against street railroad; United States Trust Co. v. Contract Co., 81 Fed. 464, 54 U. S. App. 90, advances made by one road to another under a common management; Buhlender v. C. O. & S. W. R. Co., 91 Fed. 11, 62 U. S. App. 13, claim for rails sold to individual on his own credit, to be used by railroad; Manchester Locomotive Works v. Truesdale, 44 Minn. 118, 46 N. W. 302, 9 L. R. A. 143, 144, and n., purchase price of locomotive due more than six months before appointment of receiver; Penn. v. Calhoun, 121 U. S. 252, 30 L. 915, 7 S. Ct. 907, money loaned to railroad by bank; Addison v. Lewis, 75 Va. 709, 710, 711, borrowed money used in payment of president's salary and for current expenses; National Bank of Augusta v. K. & W. R. Co., 63 Fed. 25, president's salary. Cited and principle applied also in Hooper v. Central Trust Co., 81 Md. 591, 32 Atl. 514, 29 L. R. A. 272, holding in case of private corporation, no priority given receiver's certificates; Seventh National Bank v. Shenandoah Iron Co., 35 Fed. 438, 439, holding doctrine of preferences is confined to railroad corporations; Roht v. Attrill, 106 N. Y. 436, 60 Am. Rep. 462, 13 N. E. 286, holding certificate issued by receiver of hotel corporation gives no preference over bondholders; Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Roanoke Co., 68 Fed. 624, holding courts have no power to issue receivers' certificates to carry on business of private corporation; Baltimore Loan Assn. v. Alderson, 90 Fed. 147, 61 U. S. App. 645, holding court cannot authorize receiver to issue certificates for purpose of improving property of private corporation; Farmers' Trust Co. v. Creek Coal Co., 50 Fed. 482, 16 L. R. A. 604, and n., holding court has no authority to direct receiver to issue certificates to carry on coal mine; Bound v. S. C. Ry. Co., 50 Fed. 314, 315, holding employee of navigation company has no prior equity over mortgagee; Sniveley v. Loomis Coal Co., 69 Fed. 205, holding claims for labor and materials furnished mining company not entitled to preference; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Irrigation Co., 79 Fed. 509, holding scrip issued by water company for services, not a preferred claim; Cal. Safe Deposit Co. v. Yakima Investment Co., 82 Fed. 544, holding claim against irrigation company for constructing lateral ditches not preferred; Lock v. Turnpike Co., 100 Tenn. 173, 47 S. W. 135, holding turnpike road not liable for injuries occurring through negligence of receiver; Reyburn v. Consumers' Gas Co., 29 Fed. 563, holding debts for gas meters subordinate to mortgage; New York R. R. Co. v. N. Y. W. R. Co., 58 Fed. 280, holding receivers have the option but are not bound to adopt leases; Cutting v. Tavares A. R. Co., 61 Fed. 156, 23 U. S. App. 363, United States Trust Co. v. New York, etc., R. R. Co., 25 Fed. 802, 803, and Farmers' Loan Co. v. Or. Pac. R. R. Co., 31 Or. 246, 248, 65 Am. St. Rep. 824, 825, 48 Pac. 707, 708, 38 L. R. A. 426, all holding no preferential claims can be paid unless order so directs; Hand v. Savannah R. R. Co., 17 S. C. 270, 271, holding equity of preferred creditors limited to income; Central Trust Co. v. St. Louis Co., 41 Fed. 554, holding court at time of appointment should designate the preferred claims; Blair v. St. Louis, H. & K. R. R. Co., 19 Fed. 862, court may permit claims to be filed in order to determine the question of preference.

Distinguished in The Kate, 63 Fed. 715.

Railroad mortgages are peculiar in their character, and affect peculiar interests, p. 252.

Affirmed in Compton v. Jesup, 167 U. S. 31, 42 L. 66, 17 S. Ct. 806.

Railroad mortgagee impliedly agrees that current debts shall be paid from current receipts, p. 252.

Cited in Central Trust Co. v. East Tenn. R. Co., 80 Fed. 627, 47 U. S. App. 663, holding court should use fund in paying current expenses in same manner as company would be bound in equity to use it.

Railroads.—Until possession taken by mortgagee, the whole earnings belong to railroad company, and are subject to its control, p. 253.

Cited in Jones v. Riddle, 70 Ala. 226, Giles v. Stanton, 86 Tex. 628, 26 S. W. 618, Roberts v. Denver, etc., R. R., 8 Colo. App. 510, 512, 46 Pac. 882, 883, Farmers' Trust Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 53 Fed. 184, White v. Pulley, 27 Fed. 441, and In re Tallahassee Mfg. Co., 64 Ala. 597, all holding that income is subject to claims of general creditors until mortgagee takes possession.

Mortgages.—Appointment of receiver is a matter of discretion, p. 253.

Affirmed in American Biscuit Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 725, and Williamson v. Virginia, etc., R. R., 33 Gratt. 637.

Railroads.—Where there has been a diversion of income in order to pay bonded interest, or for permanent improvements, prior to foreclosure proceedings, income during receivership may be applied to discharge of obligations incurred and allowed to accumulate, for labor, supplies, etc., to keep road a going concern, hence, payment of rental for use during receivership, of cars sold on installment to railroad, but unpaid for, held allowable, but claim for rent prior to receivership disallowed, pp. 253-255.

Cited and doctrine approved in Finance Co. v. Charleston, etc., R. R., 48 Fed. 189, International Trust Co. v. Brick Co., 95 Fed. 859, 860, United States Trust Co. v. Souther, 107 U. S. 594, 595, 27 L. 489, 2 S. Ct. 296, 298, Union Trust Co. v. Morrison, 125 U. S. 612, 31 L. 831, 8 S. Ct. 1010, Calhoun v. St. Louis R. R. Co., 9 Biss. 331, 14 Fed. 10, and Williamson v. Virginia, etc., R. R., 33 Gratt. 630, 639, 640. Cited in Hunt v. Memphis Gas-L. Co., 95 Tenn. 143, 144, 31 S. W. 1008, holding where there has been no diversion, claims for coal furnished gas company not preferred; Coe v. Midland Ry. Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 130, 131, and Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga S. R. Co., 69 Fed. 296, both holding where there has been no diversion, and no terms imposed at time of appointment, claims for services are not preferred; Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee R. R., 80 Fed. 625, 47 U. S. App. 663, holding where it is uncertain whether interest was paid out of borrowed money or income, no question of diversion arises.

Railroads.—Cases may arise where equity will direct that the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property be first applied to payment of current debts, p. 254.

Cited in Union Trust Co. v. Midland Co., 117 U. S. 462, 29 L. 973, 6 S. Ct. 824, holding same as principal case; Farmers' Trust Co. v. Trust, etc., Co., — Tex. Civ. App. —, 41 S. W. 115, holding receiver having been appointed by second mortgagee, payment of interest on first mortgage not a diversion; Finance Co. v. Charleston R. Co., 52 Fed. 525, 527, holding where diversion has been made good by sale of receiver's certificates, no preference will be given out of proceeds of sale; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 782, 783, 28 L. 598, 599, 4 S. Ct. 678, 679, holding, where sale is ordered, provision may be made for restoration of diverted fund; Kneeland v. Brass Foundry, etc., Works, 140 U. S. 596, 35 L. 545, 11 S. Ct. 859, holding supplies purchased on credit of receiver, first charge on fund realized.

99 U. S. 256-257, 25 L. 344, FOSDICK v. CAR CO.

Mortgage.—Lien of mortgagee of after-acquired property is subject to the paramount claim of vendor, who reserves title until price paid, p. 257.

Distinguished in St. Louis Trust Co. v. Riley, 70 Fed. 34, 36 U. S. App. 100, 30 L. R. A. 458, and National Bank v. Goodyear, 90 Ga. 728, 16 S. E. 964.

99 U. S. 258-260, 25 L. 344, HUIDEKOPER v. LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.

Railroads.—Balance due upon locomotives sold conditionally, vendors retaining title, is a general claim, entitled to no preference out of funds in receiver's hands on foreclosure of mortgage on road, p. 260.

The above rule is cited and applied in the following cases, where no preference was allowed: Manchester Locomotive Works v. Truesdale, 44 Minn. 118, 46 N. W. 302, 9 L. R. A. 143, and n., to balance due on conditional sale of locomotive; Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Shenandoah Val. R. R., 86 Va. 10, 19 Am. St. Rep. 866, 9 S. E. 762, to balance due upon cars sold conditionally; United States Trust Co. v. New York, W. S. & R. R. Co., 25 Fed. 803, to claim for clocks sold railroad, payment of which was not provided for in order appointing receiver; American Loan, etc., Co. v. E. & W. Co., 46 Fed. 103, there being no diversion, to claim for materials furnished more than six months before appointment; Addison v. Lewis, 75 Va. 710, to claim for officer's salary, and to money borrowed upon the general credit of the company; New York R. Co. v. New York L. E. R. Co., 58 Fed. 281, to rental accruing under railroad lease prior to appointment; St. Louis Trust Co. v. Riley, 70 Fed. 34, 35, 30 U. S. App. 100, 30 L. R. A. 458, claim for injuries received six months before appointment; Ryan v. Hayes, 62 Tex. 49, holding railroad company not liable for injuries received while road in hands of receiver; Union Trust Co. v. Morrison, 125 U. S. 612, 31 L. 831, 8 S. Ct. 1010, holding liability of surety on bond given, at request of receiver, to release cars, is a preferred claim; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 783, 28 L. 599, 4 S. Ct. 679, holding bills for fuel are preferred and may be paid out of corpus.

99 U. S. 261-265, 25 L. 435, CAMPBELL v. RANKIN.

Ejectment.—In actions of ejectment or trespass, possession at time of eviction is prima facie evidence of title, p. 262.

Cited and rule applied in Haws v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 166 U. S. 317, 40 L. 441, 16 S. Ct. 288, Aurora Hill Min. Co. v. Eighty-five Mining Co., 12 Sawy. 364, 34 Fed. 520, Fuller v. Harris, 23 Fed. 819, Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 123, 26 N. W. 892, Patchen v. Keeley, 19 Nev. 413, 14 Pac. 352, and McKay v. McDougall, 19 Mont. 496, 48 Pac. 991, all holding possession of mining claim sufficient evidence of title as against trespasser; North Noonday v. Orient Mining Co., 6 Sawy. 508, 11 Fed. 128, holding, irrespective of mining laws, possession of mining claim is valid, and intruder a trespasser; Brady v. Husby, 21 Nev. 458, 33 Pac. 803, holding reference to stake sufficient compliance with law to make a valid location; Probst v. Trustees, etc., 3 N. Mex. 270, affirming rule.

Judgments.—When same question was in issue and judgment rendered, it is conclusive in subsequent action between same parties, p. 263.

Cited in Hoyner v. Stanley, 8 Sawy. 219, 13 Fed. 221, holding determination of title to land res adjudicata, in subsequent suits between parties and privies; Flanagan v. Thompson, 4 Hughes, 425, 9 Fed. 179, holding, although different subject-matter, if the issue is the same, parties are bound by former judgment; David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 57 Fed. 989, 18 U. S. App. 349, holding decree as to validity of patent, conclusive in regard to alleged anticipations; Stearns v. Lawrence, 83 Fed. 745, 54 U. S. App. 546, holding finding against president of bank as to purchase of note conclusive in action of receiver to charge president; Darling v. McDonald, 101 Ill. 374, holding judgment of court having jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter, res adjudicata; Whiting v. Burger, 78 Me. 296, 4 Atl. 697, holding judgment in one State bar to further prosecution in another; Blodgett v. Dow, 81 Me. 201, 16 Atl. 660, holding judgment rendered upon report of referee is a bar; Pupiper v. Calloway, — Wis. —, 80 N. W. 918, holding judgment is to be considered with reference to pleadings, and is as broad as the issues; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 397, 42 L. 211, 17 S. Ct. 914, holding judgment rendered on the same facts, res adjudicata; Solly v. Clayton, 12 Colo. 40, 20 Pac. 356, and German Nat. Bank v. School D., 25 Fed. 634, both holding, where point upon which judgment is based is uncertain, it is not res adjudicata; Southern Pac. R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 49, 50, 42 L. 377, 18 S. Ct. 27, 28, holding, although different cause of action, fact in issue directly determined is binding upon the parties. Cited in Smith v. Brittenham, 94 Ill. 626, holding errors occurring upon prior appeal will not be considered upon subsequent appeal. Cited in dissenting opinion in Fischer v. Johnson, 139 Mo. 440, 41 S. W. 205. Cited, arguendo, in St. Joseph R. R. Co. v. Steele, 63 Fed. 872. See extensive note in 85 Am. Dec. 209.

Judgments.—Where it cannot be ascertained from the record the precise issue upon which judgment was rendered, it may be ascertained by parol, p. 263.

Cited in Wither v. Sims, 80 Va. 660, Tyler Mining Co. v. Sweeney, 54 Fed. 288, 7 U. S. App. 463, Southern Minn. Ry. Co. v. St. Paul R. Co., 55 Fed. 695, 696, 12 U. S. App. 320, Morgan v. Burr, 58 N. H. 472, Hornbuckle v. Stafford, 111 U. S. 393, 28 L. 469, 4 S. Ct. 517, and Last Chance Mining Co. v. Tyler Mining Co., 157 U. S. 688, 39 L. 862, 15 S. Ct. 735, all holding parol evidence is admissible to show what was actually decided. Cited in McMakin v. Fowler, 34 S. C. 288, 13 S. E. 536, holding charge of judge may be resorted to for purpose of ascertaining issues submitted to jury.

Trial.—Affidavit, on motion for continuance, not introduced in evidence, cannot be considered at the trial, p. 264.

Mines and minerals.—Local regulations under act of 1872, respecting record of mining claims, cannot exclude parol proof of actual possession of mining claim, p. 264.

99 U. S. 265-272, 25 L. 322, UNITED STATES v. PUGH.

Statutes.—In the case of a doubtful and ambiguous law, contemporaneous construction by those whose duty it is to carry it into effect, is entitled to great weight, p. 269.

Cited and doctrine approved in Five Per Cent. Cases, 110 U. S. 485, 28 L. 202, 4 S. Ct. 218, Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 571, 28 L. 1080, 5 S. Ct. 650, Hahn v. United States, 107 U. S. 406, 27 L. 529, 2 S. Ct. 497, Swift Co. v. United States, 105 U. S. 695, 26 L. 1109, Westfield v. Tioga Co., 150 Pa. St. 163, 24 Atl. 704, United States v. Hill, 120 U. S. 183, 30 L. 632, 7 S. Ct. 517. Cited in Swayne v. Hager, 13 Sawy. 621, 37 Fed. 783, applying principle to definition of goods in tariff act; Hewitt v. Schultz, 7 N. Dak. 611, 76 N. W. 233, applying principle to construction placed by officers on act granting indemnity lands to railroad; United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 37 Fed. 555, holding construction of land grant followed for fifteen years will not be disturbed; Round v. United States, 38 Fed. 667, holding construction of law relating to compensation of commissioner should not be disturbed; Grossett v. Townsend, 86 Fed. 912, 56 U. S. App. 721, holding contemporary construction of shipping agreement should be followed; Barker v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 102, holding contemporary construction of law regarding fines imposed by city court should be followed; Clark's Run, etc., Co. v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky. 532, 29 S. W. 361, holding construction placed on charter of turnpike road should be followed; Westbrook v. Miller, 56 Mich. 152, 22 N. W. 257, holding construction of statute allowing deputy auditor to act for principal should be followed; Northern Pac. R. R. v. Barnes, 2 N. Dak. 383, 51 N. W. 410, holding construction placed upon organic act of territory should be followed; Pitts v. Logan County, 3 Okl. 741, 41 Pac. 591, holding construction of laws with reference to accounting by clerks of territorial courts should be followed.

Court of Claims' judgment as to the legal effect of its findings upon the ultimate circumstantial facts of a case, is subject to review in the Supreme Court, and such findings should be so framed as to clearly present the question of their legal effect, p. 271.

Cited and approved in United States v. New York Indians, 173 U. S. 470, 19 S. Ct. 490, holding court not bound to insert all the evidence in the finding; Edwin I. Morrison, 153 U. S. 216, 38 L. 694, 14 S. Ct. 829, holding sufficiency of findings are determined by the interpretation which the law puts upon them; Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 U. S. 503, 27 L. 343, 1 S. Ct. 593, holding finding indemnity of reinsurance as a matter of law instead of as matter of fact, does not affect sufficiency of finding; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 372, 29 L. 158, 5 S. Ct. 868, holding where legal inference can be drawn from facts found, direct finding of negligence unnecessary; McClure v. United States, 116 U. S. 151, 29 L. 574, 6 S. Ct. 324, holding not necessary to find incidental facts; Williams v. United States, 137 U. S. 136, 34 L. 598, 11 S. Ct. 51, holding where correct inference may be drawn from facts found, finding of fact as conclusion of law will not affect the judgment.

War.—Restitution of captured property decreed under acts of 1863 and 1864, where circumstances and presumption that officers did their duty, justified the inference that proceeds had been paid into the treasury, pp. 267-271.

99 U. S. 273-285, 25 L. 412, TRANSPORTATION CO. v. WHEELING.

Commerce.—Taxes levied by a State on ships, as instruments of commerce, is a tonnage tax, and unconstitutional, p. 277.

Cited in Morn v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 74, 28 L. 655, 5 S. Ct. 40, holding license imposed on tugboats plying to and from gulf of Mexico, is unconstitutional; New Orleans v. Eclipse Tow-Boat Co., 33 La. Ann. 648, 649, 39 Am. Rep. 280, 281, holding license tax imposed upon owners of tugboats running on Mississippi to the Gulf is not a tax on tonnage or regulation of commerce; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 374, 27 L. 423, 2 S. Ct. 264, holding State has power to impose license fee upon ferry-keepers for boats used in interstate commerce.

Commerce.—Taxes levied by a State upon ships or vessels, as property, are not prohibited by the Federal Constitution; hence, boats enrolled and licensed as coasting vessels under Federal laws, may be taxed by city which is their home port, and where principal office of owners is situated, p. 279.

Cited in Linehan R. T. Co. v. Pendergrass, 70 Fed. 2, 36 U. S. App. 48, holding boat engaged in interstate commerce is not exempt from taxation; Oteri v. Parker, 42 La. Ann. 379, 7 So. 571, holding vessels are subject, like any other property, to State taxation.

Taxation.—Power of the State to tax reaches all property except those means employed by the Federal government to carry out its constitutional powers, p. 279.

Approved in People v. Wemple, 138 N. Y. 11, 33 N. E. 723, 19 L. R. A. 698, holding business which is exclusively that of interstate commerce may not be taxed; Union, etc., Transit Co. v. Lynch, 18 Utah, 387, 55 Pac. 641, holding leased cars within the State, owned by foreign corporation, are taxable; State v. Fulker, 43 Kan. 241, 22 Pac. 1022, 7 L. R. A. 185, and n., holding intoxicating liquors transported from other State, are subject to State laws. Cited in People v. United States, 93 Ill. 36, 34 Am. Rep. 158, and Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 177, 29 L. 854, 6 S. Ct. 684, both holding land acquired by the United States by tax sale, while title is in the government, is exempt; Pullman's Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 32, 35 L. 620, 11 S. Ct. 881, holding tax imposed upon foreign corporation upon basis of number of miles its cars traverse the State, is void; Pullman Southern Car Co. v. Nolan, 22 Fed. 280, holding privilege tax, imposed on sleeping-car company carrying interstate passengers, is void.

Municipal corporations.—Assessments for municipal purposes of ships must be against the owner and in the municipality in which he resides, p. 280.

Cited in Johnson v. Merchants' Line, 37 Fla. 518, 523, 19 So. 646, 648, 37 L. R. A. 526, 527, and n., and Gunther v. Baltimore, 55 Md. 460, both holding interest of owner of vessel taxable in the port of registry.

99 U. S. 286-290, 25 L. 352, TICE v. UNITED STATES.

United States.—Contract of treasury department with T., for use of distiller's meters, as modified by commissioner of internal revenue, 1870, construed and held not to give T. a claim for reimbursement for meters on hand when contract was terminated in 1871, pp. 287-290.

99 U. S. 291-297, 25 L. 324, MYRICK v. THOMPSON.

Appeal and error.—Upon writ of error Supreme Court will not review findings of State trial court, adopted by State appellate court, p. 294.

Indians.—Agreement by attorney in fact for Sioux half-breeds, to transfer lands on which scrip issued to the Indians under act of 1854 should be located, to a third person for a money consideration, held not to violate such act of 1854 or the treaty of Prairie du Chien of 1831, pp. 295-297.

Courts.—Where Federal question is correctly decided by State court, Supreme Court will affirm judgment without determining question not of a Federal character, p. 297.

Cited, arguendo, in Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405.

99 U. S. 298-309, 25 L. 473, PHELPS v. McDONALD.

Bankruptcy.—Right of indemnity due a British subject resident in United States for unlawful destruction of property by United States, allowed by treaty of 1871, vests in his assignee in bankruptcy, p. 304.

Cited in Williams v. Herd, 140 U. S. 544, 545, 35 L. 556, 11 S. Ct. 889, holding award due from United States, growing out of Alabama claims, passes to assignee; Calder v. Henderson, 54 Fed. 807, 2 U. S. App. 627, holding claim against United States for bounty on sugar passes to the assignee; Grant v. Bodwell, 78 Me. 464, 7 Atl. 14, holding claim against United States, growing out of Alabama claims, passes to administrator. Cited in Taft v. Marsily, 120 N. Y. 478, 480, 24 N. E. 927, and Heard v. Sturgis, 146 Mass. 548, 553, 16 N. E. 440, 443, both holding money paid by United States as balance of Geneva award constitutes a gift and does not pass to assignee; John Shillito Co. v. McClung, 51 Fed. 877, 6 U. S. App. 128, holding assignment of unliquidated claims against United States for duties is void.

Bankruptcy.—Provision of bankrupt law that all suits by or against assignee must be brought within two years has no application to suit by assignee against bankrupt, p. 306.

Cited in Bowen v. Del., L. & W. R. R. Co., 153 N. Y. 488, 489, 60 Am. St. Rep. 675, 676, 47 N. E. 911, and Dushane v. Beall, 161 U. S. 515, 40 L. 792, 16 S. Ct. 638, both holding limitation in act is applicable to suits only over property of bankrupt to which adverse claims existed at time of assignment; Phelps v. Elliott, 35 Fed. 457, holding suit by assignee to recover bonds fraudulently disposed of must be commenced within two years; Thomas v. Blythe, 55 Fed. 964, 8 U. S. App. 414, holding limitation inapplicable to suit by assignee to secure fund held by bankrupt in fraud of the act; Leech v. Dawson, 23 Fed. 656, 657, limitation applies to suit by assignee to recover land claimed by bankrupt as a homestead.

Equity.—Where necessary parties are before a court of equity it is immaterial that the res of the controversy is beyond the jurisdiction, p. 308.

Cited and principle applied in Hawkins v. Ireland, 64 Minn. 344, 58 Am. St. Rep. 537, 67 N. W. 75, Hayden v. Yale, 45 Ia. Ann. 371, 40 Am. St. Rep. 241, 12 So. 637, and Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 119, 33 L. 544, 10 S. Ct. 273, all holding that equity may restrain creditor of insolvent from prosecuting action in another State; Schindelholz v. Cullum, 55 Fed. 889, 12 U. S. App. 242, holding court appointing receiver to take charge of lands outside of State has no jurisdiction to restrain citizen of latter State from proceeding by attachment against the land; Municipal Imp. Co. v. Gardiner, 62 Fed. 956, holding suit to enforce contract for conveyance of land is a proceeding in personam; Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., 86 Fed. 998, 999, holding courts may restrain parties from prosecuting action in other tribunals; Baltimore Trust Assn. v. Alderson, 90 Fed. 146, 61 U. S. App. 644, holding court may not put its receiver in possession of real estate outside of its jurisdiction; Craft v. Ind., etc., Ry., 166 Ill. 593, 46 N. E. 1136, holding court may decree sale of land outside of its jurisdiction in accordance with deed of trust; Manley v. Carter, 7 Kan. App. 88, 52 Pac. 915, holding equity will enforce trust of land although situated in another State; Eaton v. McCall, 86 Me. 348, 41 Am. St. Rep. 562, 29 Atl. 1103, holding, unless special circumstances exist, equity will not compel a release of the equity of redemption upon land beyond the jurisdiction; Wyeth v. Lang, 54 Mo. App. 151, holding petition to restrain prosecution of action in other State must show case of oppression or fraud. Affirmed, arguing, in Bachman v. Lawson, 109 U. S. 663, 27 L. 1068, 3 S. Ct. 481, Dulaney v. Schudder, 94 Fed. 8, 9, and Phelps v. Elliott, 23 Blatchf. 471, 26 Fed. 881; dissenting opinion in Allen v. Woodruff, 96 Ill. 31.

Distinguished in In re Herdic, 40 Fed. 361, and In re Bank's Will, 87 Md. 442, 40 Atl. 274.

99 U. S. 309-325, 25 L. 387, UNIVERSITY v. PEOPLE.

Constitutional law.—Decision of State court, construing a contract or statute, is not a law impairing the obligation of contracts within the meaning of the Constitution, p. 320.

Cited in New Orleans Water Works v. Louisiana Sugar Co., 125 U. S. 36, 31 L. 614, 8 S. Ct. 751, holding constitutional provisions is aimed at legislative power and not at decisions of courts; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 392, 30 L. 1060, 7 S. Ct. 919, holding judgment of State court, interpreting contract, involves no Federal question under the removal act; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 495, 32 L. 493, 9 S. Ct. 136, holding State laws, with reference to assignments for benefit of creditors, do not impair obligation of contracts; Mobile R. R. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 495, 38 L. 797, 14 S. Ct. 971, holding where legislature has power to exempt, decision of court that act is unconstitutional impairs obligation of contract.

Courts.—Supreme Court has jurisdiction to determine whether a State decision, holding that a law did not create a contract because nugatory under the State Constitution, was correctly decided, p. 321.

Constitutional law.—Obligation of a charter, exempting all property of university from taxation, is impaired by subsequent act limiting exemption to property in immediate use, p. 325.

Approved and principle applied in University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 162, 9 S. W. 894, holding leasing of lands by university does not affect its charter exemption; Gains v. Whitworth, 8 Lea, 603, 615, holding exemption of lands from taxation donated to university does not inure to benefit of purchasers; New Orleans v. Poydras Asylum, 33 La. Ann. 856, 862, 865, holding charter exempting orphan asylum from taxation is a contract protected by Federal Constitution; Willamette University v. Knight, — Or. —, 56 Pac. 125, holding exemption of property for educational purposes does not exempt property leased for revenue; M. E. Church v. Hinton, 92 Tenn. 200, 21 S. W. 324, 19 L. R. A. 295, and n., holding outfit of publishing house, if net proceeds are applied to religious purposes, comes within the exemption; Commissioners v. Colorado Seminary, 12 Colo. 502, 504, 21 Pac. 492, holding exemption of property, as may be necessary to carry out design, operates upon such property only as is in actual use; Morris v. Lone Star Chapter, etc., 68 Tex. 704, 5 S. W. 522, holding renting part of building, though proceeds be donated to charity, subjects such part to taxation; Hogg v. Mackay, 23 Or. 341, 31 Pac. 780, holding Constitution is violated by relieving railroad of taxation; Grand Lodge of Masons v. New Orleans, 44 La. Ann. 665, 11 So. 151, holding exemption, granted on considerations of public policy, may be repealed; State Board of Assessors v. Paterson, etc., R. R., 50 N. J. L. 450, 14

Atl. 612, and Manistee, etc., R. R. v. Commissioner, 118 Mich. 351, 76 N. W. 634, both holding a contract exempting railroads must be supported by a consideration; People v. Soldiers' Home, 95 Ill. 568, holding charter exempting property amounts to a contract; Chicago v. Baptist, etc., Union, 115 Ill. 25, 2 N. E. 255, holding charter relieving theological society from taxation is void. See 72 Am. Dec. 684, note.

Distinguished in People v. Theological Seminary, 174 Ill. 183, 51 N. E. 199.

99 U. S. 325-334, 25 L. 390, BANK v. PARTEE.

Assignments for benefit of creditors.—Person acting in pursuance of original offer contained in deed of assignment is presumed to accept condition of deed for benefit of creditors, p. 329.

Cited in National Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 266, 4 N. E. 795, holding time of acceptance by creditors of an assignment, not of essence of contract.

Husband and wife.—Married woman cannot be permitted to retain benefits of a transaction and at same time disavow it, p. 329.

Husband and wife.—In Mississippi a married woman is, as to her contracts, subject to disability of coverture, and creditor in his bill must allege a separate estate and that debt is a charge upon it, p. 331.

Cited in T. T. Hayden Carriage Co. v. Pier, 74 Wis. 586, 43 N. W. 504, holding liability of married woman on bond, not relating to her separate estate, determined by rules of the common law; Prentiss v. Paisley, 25 Fla. 929, 7 So. 56, 7 L. R. A. 644, and n., holding, in suit to set aside sale of land on ground of fraud, error to decree personal judgment against married woman; McAnally v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 109 Ala. 113, 55 Am. St. Rep. 924, 19 So. 493, 34 L. R. A. 225, and n., holding wife cannot bind herself by contract to pay her insane husband's board in asylum. Affirmed, arguendo, in Wilder v. Commissioners, etc., 41 Fed. 514, Howard v. Huron, 6 S. Dak. 190, 191, 60 N. W. 807, 26 L. R. A. 502, Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 67, 28 L. 354, 4 S. Ct. 304, and Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 75, 42 L. 667, 18 S. Ct. 287.

99 U. S. 334-348, 25 L. 394, SAGE v. CENTRAL R. R. CO.

Mortgage.—Under mortgage, authorizing trustee to buy in mortgaged railroad at request of majority of bondholders, court, in foreclosing, may authorize trustee to bid and purchase road and organize new corporation, p. 341.

Cited in Pennsylvania Transportation Co.'s Appeal, 101 Pa. St. 582, and Mackintosh v. Flint P. M. R. Co., 34 Fed. 591, both holding agreements between bondholders and stockholders respecting foreclosure and purchase valid; Hackettstown Bank v. Brewing Co., 74 Fed. 113, 38 U. S. App. 681, holding corrupt agreement by majority naming conditions in bonds will not be enforced.

Appeal and error.—Orders not appealed from, made prior to decree of foreclosure and before intervention by appellants, cannot be complained of by them, p. 345.

Cited in Elwell v. Fosdick, 134 U. S. 512, 33 L. 1002, 10 S. Ct. 601, holding release by trustee of right of appeal and errors in decree binding on bondholders.

Railroads.—Upon decree foreclosing railroad mortgage, held proper in rendering decree of sale to reserve rights of judgment creditors for labor, materials and supplies furnished to railroad, p. 345.

Cited in Langdon v. Railroad Co., 54 Vt. 610, holding final decree may be made as to ascertained debts and bill retained for enforcement of other liens.

Mortgages.—Legality of notice of foreclosure sale is not affected by change in the name of the newspaper, p. 347.

Cited in Perkins v. Keller, 43 Mich. 57, 4 N. W. 562, holding change of place of publication of order of sale does not invalidate it; Donohue v. Parkman, 161 Mass. 413, 42 Am. St. Rep. 416, 37 N. E. 205, arguendo.

99 U. S. 348-355, 25 L. 303, HOGUE v. RAILROAD CO.

Corporations.—Act of legislature not expressly excepted in a charter is applicable to it, p. 354.

Taxation.—Intention of legislature to grant immunity from taxation must be clear beyond a reasonable doubt; hence railroad enjoying exemption from taxation under original charter, held not to retain same under subsequent consolidation act, p. 355.

Cited in Citizens' Savings Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 647, 19 S. Ct. 534, holding exemption from taxation of savings bank does not affect power to amend; Covington v. Kentucky, 173 U. S. 239, 19 S. Ct. 386, holding exemption in charter of water works subject to repeal under general law; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 424, holding reservation of right to repeal applies to tax exemption conferred by same act; Memphis R. R. Co. v. Berry, 41 Ark. 445, and State v. Whitworth, 8 Lea, 606, 623, both holding exemption does not inure to the benefit of purchaser; Vicksburg, etc., R. R. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 668, 29 L. 771, 6 S. Ct. 627, and Dow v. Northern R. R., 67 N. H. 49, 36 Atl. 534, both holding exemption from taxation strictly construed; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 14, 36 L. 58, 12 S. Ct. 350, holding immunity, unless otherwise expressly declared, may be withdrawn; McCandless v. Railroad Co., 38 S. C. 111, 112, 16 S. E. 431, 432, 18 L. R. A. 443, 444, holding where no exemption in charter, railroad may be made liable for fire by sparks; Ex parte Chamberlain, 55 Fed. 707, holding railroad in hands of receiver bound to pay taxes; Charlotte, etc., R. R. v. Gibbes, 27 S. C. 392, 4 S. E. 51, holding, under reservation in general law, act requiring railroad to pay for support of commission, is valid. Cited, arguendo, in Railroad Commissioners v. Railroad Co., 22 S. C. 231; dissenting opinion in Commonwealth v. Farmers' Bank, 97 Ky. 626, 31 S. W. 1021.

99 U. S. 355-361, 25 L. 476, DENVER v. ROANE.

Partnership.—Bill in equity may be maintained by personal representatives of deceased partner against survivors for an accounting and discovery, p. 357.

Partnership.—Surviving partner is entitled to no allowance for winding up the business, unless otherwise stipulated; and this rule applies to partnership between attorneys, p. 358.

Cited in Little v. Caldwell, 101 Cal. 560, 40 Am. St. Rep. 93, 36 Pac. 108, holding surviving law partner must complete the business of firm and is entitled to no compensation; Osment v. McElrath, 68 Cal. 471, 58 Am. Rep. 20, 9 Pac. 734, holding after dissolution of law partnership each partner entitled to share in fees of unfinished business; Justice v. Lairy, 19 Ind. App. 279, 65 Am. St. Rep. 410, 49 N. E. 461, holding member of law firm appointed circuit judge has no interest in fees earned by other member in winding up the business.

Partnership.—Where attorney-at-law refuses to act as a partner and repudiates his obligation to aid in prosecution of one of firm's cases, he is not entitled to fees subsequently earned in the cause, p. 361.

Cited in Shæffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 258, 37 L. 725, 13 S. Ct. 859, and Elair v. Shæfer, 33 Fed. 224, both holding where agent acts fraudulently he forfeits all right to compensation under the contract. See extensive notes in 40 Am. St. Rep. 570, and 69 Am. St. Rep. 422.

99 U. S. 362-371, 25 L. 416, BROOKLYN v. INSURANCE CO.

Municipal corporations.—Holder of bonds is bound to take notice of statute under which they are issued, but is under no legal obligation to inquire as to precise form or terms of subscription; hence it is no defense that railroad failed to build road or that municipal officers improperly delivered over the bonds, p. 368.

Cited in Brown v. Bon Homme County, 1 S. Dak. 228, 46 N. W. 177, holding municipality is estopped from denying recital in bonds that they were issued in accordance with law; Shepard v. Tulare Irr. Dist., 94 Fed. 6, holding where bonds recite their issuance according to law, allegation of regularity not necessary; Dennison v. Columbus, 62 Fed. 778, holding where different road from one contemplated was built, city is bound by recitals; Insurance Co. v. Bruce, 105 U. S. 333, 26 L. 1123, holding municipality is estopped as against recitals that conditions imposed upon issuance of bonds were not performed.

Judgments.—Suit adjudging invalidity of municipal railroad-aid bonds does not affect holder not served with process or who did not appear, p. 370.

Cited in Smith v. Woolfolk, 115 U. S. 149, 29 L. 360, 5 S. Ct. 1180, Brooks v. Dunn, 51 Fed. 146, Laughlin v. New Orleans Ice Co., 35 La. Ann. 1186, Hobson v. Peake, 44 La. Ann. 387, 10 So. 763, Wilson v. St. Louis Ry. Co., 108 Mo. 597, 32 Am. St. Rep. 629, 18 S. W. 292, and Eastman v. Dearborn, 63 N. H. 366, all holding in personal actions constructive service of summons insufficient to give court jurisdiction; Tregea v. Modesto Irr. Dist., 164 U. S. 187, 41 L. 398, 17 S. Ct. 55, Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 693, 30 L. 529, 7 S. Ct. 365, County of Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 413, 25 L. 1018, Empire v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 92, 25 L. 880, and Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 545, 27 L. 430, 2 S. Ct. 718, all holding doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to actions relating to negotiable securities; Lackett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. 32, holding judgment, although irregular, is not void where court has jurisdiction of person and subject-matter; National Bank v. Peabody, 55 Vt. 497, 45 Am. Rep. 635, holding judgment procured by publication, good as to attached property.

Appeal and error.—In absence of bill of exceptions, appellate court will consider that all the issues were tried, though the jury was sworn to try only the "issue," p. 371.

Cited, arguendo, in Roberts v. Bolles, 101 U. S. 129, 25 L. 884, and United States v. Town of Brooklyn, 10 Biss. 467, 8 Fed. 474.

Distinguished in Green v. Dyersburg, 2 Flipp. 502, F. C. 5,756.

99 U. S. 372-377, 25 L. 479, UNITED STATES v. WINCHESTER.

Admiralty jurisdiction of District Courts extends only to seizures on navigable waters, p. 374.

War.—Executive order of seizure is the foundation of all proceedings under the confiscation act; hence seizure of property on land by naval forces without such order is invalid, p. 376.

Cited in Henry v. Carson, 96 Ind. 424, holding record must show seizure of property by executive order.

Distinguished in Oakes v. United States, 174 U. S. 424, 19 S. Ct. 668.

99 U. S. 378-382, 25 L. 453, VAN NORDEN v. MORTON.

Injunction will not lie to recover dredgeboat seized by sheriff, replevin or action for damages being adequate remedy, p. 379.

Cited in Clark v. Shaw, 24 Blatchf. 98, 28 Fed. 357, holding money in hands of marshal, collected by executions, cannot be attached; Rio Grande Ry. Co. v. Gomilla, 28 Fed. 338, holding Federal court on petition will direct property in hands of marshal about to be illegally sold to be turned over to administrator; Heyman v. Covell, 44 Mich. 336, 38 Am. Rep. 275, 6 N. W. 848, holding replevin will lie in State court against Federal marshal.

Courts.—Where new right is granted by State or new remedy given, jurisdiction of such cases in Federal courts, as law or equity, must be determined by their essential character; legal and equitable claims cannot blend together in one suit, p. 380.

Cited in Grether v. Wright, 75 Fed. 745, 43 U. S. App. 770, holding where State gives remedy by injunction against illegal assessment Federal courts will grant same remedy; Alderson v. Dole, 74 Fed. 30, 33 U. S. App. 460, holding, although State courts permit creditors to sue stockholders in equity, the procedure in Federal courts is at law; Waite v. O'Neill, 72 Fed. 355, holding where right to specific performance is doubtful, Federal court will decree proper relief; Wilson v. Smith, 66 Fed. 83, holding action at common law for legacy may be removed; Buisenden v. Chamberlain, 53 Fed. 310, holding common law, as used in removal act, includes statutory action for death; Elliot v. Schaler, 50 Fed. 457, holding proceeding by administrator to sell land, although in State court equitable when removed must be tried at law; Alexander v. Mortgage Co. of Scotland, 47 Fed. 134, holding, although lien may be established by filing conveyance in clerk's office when right is asserted in Federal courts, it must be in equity; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. R., 33 Fed. 914, holding whether remedy given to recover damages for right of way is in law or equity is determined by the essential character of the case; Snyder v. Pharo, 25 Fed. 400, holding, although allowable in State court, equitable set-off to promissory note cannot be pleaded in Federal courts; Näumburg v. Hyatt, 24 Fed. 900, holding where creditors are allowed to interplead in State courts, same proceedings may be had in Federal courts; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Miner, 11 Sawy. 285, 286, 25 Fed. 536, holding right to interplead adverse claimants may be enforced in equity; New Orleans v. Construction Co., 129 U. S. 46, 47, 32 L. 607, 9 S. Ct. 223, 224, holding remedies in Federal courts not controlled by decisions in State courts; Alger v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 700, holding Federal courts will not entertain action to rescind sale where party guilty of laches or before his eviction; Missouri, etc., Trust Co. v. Krumseig, 77 Fed. 43, 40 U. S. App. 620, holding State law giving relief in equity against usurious contract will be followed in Federal courts; Cummings v. National Bank, 101 U. S. 157, 25 L. 904, holding State remedy by injunction against illegal tax can only be enforced in equity; Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 292, 19 S. Ct. 196, holding injunction to restrain illegal assessment of land is the appropriate remedy; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 125, 36 L. 371, 12 S. Ct. 662, holding, in case of eviction, equity will give no relief till party has established his action at law; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 286, 28 L. 149, 4 S. Ct. 31, holding equity will afford relief to claimant of property seized under process of Federal courts. Hayward v. Andrews, 106 U. S. 678, 27 L. 273, 1 S. Ct. 549, holding assignee cannot sue in equity merely because he cannot sue in his own name at law; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 171, 29 L. 88, 5 S. Ct. 805, holding Federal court will, as a rule, administer the same equity as State court; Cherokee Nation v. Kansas Ry. Co., 135 U. S. 651, 34 L. 300, 10 S. Ct. 969, holding legal and equitable courts cannot be united in the Federal courts. Cited, arguendo, in Jackson v. Gould, 74 Me. 577, Chandler v. Thompson, 30 Fed. 44, New Orleans v. Morris, 105 U. S. 602, 26 L. 1185, and Thomas v. American, etc., Mortgage Co., 47 Fed. 554, 12 L. R. A. 686, and n.

99 U. S. 382-389, 25 L. 305, RYAN v. RAILROAD CO.

Public lands.—Under grant to Oregon and California railroad in 1866, when road was located and maps made, the right of the company to the odd sections became fixed, p. 386.

Cited in Southern Pacific Co. v. Orton, 6 Sawy. 198, 32 Fed. 479, and Southern, etc., R. R. v. Dull, 10 Sawy. 512, 514, 22 Fed. 493, both holding same as principal case; Vance v. Burlington, etc., R. R., 12 Neb. 288, 11 N. W. 334, holding where lateral limits are given, no specific selection is necessary. Cited, arguendo, in United States v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 8 Sawy. 91, 11 Fed. 456.

Public lands.—With respect to lieu lands, the right of California and Oregon railroad, under act of 1866 granting alternate sections, was only float, and attached to no specific tract until actually selected, p. 386.

Cited in Elling v. Thexton, 7 Mont. 339, 343, 16 Pac. 934, 935, St. Paul, etc., R. R. v. Ward, 47 Minn. 44, 49 N. W. 403, Grandin v. La Bar, 3 N. Dak. 453, 57 N. W. 243, M., K. & T. R. R. v. Noyes, 25 Kan. 348, A., T. & Santa Fe R. R. v. Rockwood, 25 Kan. 298, Sioux City, etc., R. R. v. Countryman, 83 Iowa, 180, 49 N. W. 74, Northern Pac. R. R. v. Amacker, 49 Fed. 533, 7 U. S. App. 33, Northern Pac. R. R. v. St. Paul, etc., R. R., 26 Fed. 562, Köhler v. Barin, 25 Fed. 165, 166, United States v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 11 Sawy. 441, 442, 444, 445, 26 Fed. 481, 482, 483, 484, St. Paul R. R. v. Winona R. R., 112 U. S. 731, 28 L. 876, 5 S. Ct. 340, Cedar Rapids R. R. v. Herring, 110 U. S. 39, 28 L. 61, 3 S. Ct. 493, and United States v. Winona, etc., R. R., 67 Fed. 967, 32 U. S. App. 272, all holding railroad acquires no right to lieu lands until selected; United States

v. Mullan, 7 Sawy. 473, 10 Fed. 790, holding State has no title to lieu lands until selection; Iowa Falls R. R. v. Beck, 67 Iowa, 429, 25 N. W. 690, holding indemnity land not claimed or selected open to pre-emption; St. Paul R. R. v. Sage, 71 Fed. 46, 36 U. S. App. 340, holding lieu lands, until selected, are subject to sale by government; Southern Pac. R. R. v. Wood, 124 Cal. 482, 57 Pac. 390, holding selection of lieu lands does not operate by relation as of date of grant; Jackson v. La Moure Co., 1 N. Dak. 240, 46 N. W. 450, and Wisconsin R. R. v. Price Co., 133 U. S. 512, 33 L. 695, 10 S. Ct. 347, both holding that until selection lieu lands not liable to taxation; Wisconsin, etc., R. R. v. Price Co., 64 Wis. 592, 26 N. W. 98, holding, after selection, equity in lieu lands subject to taxation.

Distinguished in Southern, etc., R. R. v. Wiggs, 14 Sawy. 571, 43 Fed. 335, and Lake Superior Ship Canal Co. v. Cunningham, 44 Fed. 830, 842.

Public lands.—Selection of lieu lands by railroad to which alternate sections were granted, and patent therefor, are superior to subsequent entry and patent under homestead laws, pp. 387-389.

99 U. S. 389-392, 25 L. 419, HALE v. FROST.

Railroads.—Net earnings of railroad in hands of receiver on foreclosure proceeding may be applied to payment of claims having superior equities to those of bondholders, such as for materials and supplies used in operating road, p. 392.

Cited and doctrine applied in following cases, in which claims were held preferential: New York, etc., Indemnity Co. v. Tacoma R. & M. Co., 83 Fed. 367, 48 U. S. App. 673, cable sold to railroad; Wood v. New York & N. E. Co., 70 Fed. 743, 746, labor claims necessary to keep road a going concern; Frank v. Denver, etc., R. R., 23 Fed. 127, demands for rolling stock; Giles v. Stanton, 86 Tex. 628, 26 S. W. 618, statutory liens upon earnings prior to appointment; Ames v. U. Pac. R. R. Co., 74 Fed. 345, and Williamson v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 33 Gratt. 628, 630, 638, 639, claims for operating expenses; Texas Pac. R. R. v. Johnson, 76 Tex. 431, 18 Am. St. Rep. 68, 13 S. W. 466, holding, if receiver has invested earnings in betterments, corpus responsible for operating expenses; Bellingham Bay Imp. Co. v. Fairhaven R. R., 17 Wash. 375, 49 Pac. 515, holding preferential claims not barred should be paid; Central Trust Co. v. Utah Central R. R. Co., 16 Utah, 19, 50 Pac. 815, McIlhenny v. Binz, 80 Tex. 13, 14, 17, 19, 26 Am. St. Rep. 719, 720, 724, 726, 13 S. W. 660, 661, 662 663, Central Trust Co. v. Thurman, 94 Ga. 741, 742, 20 S. E. 143, New York Guarantee Co. v. Tacoma R. R. & M. Co., 83 Fed. 370, 48 U. S. App. 678, Central Trust Co. v. East Tenn. R. R., 80 Fed. 629, 47 U. S. App. 663, Northern Pac. R. R. v. Lamont, 69 Fed. 24, 32 U. S. App. 480, and Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 53 Fed. 187, all holding there is no arbitrary six months' rule with reference to preferential debts; McCormac v. Salem Con. St. Ry., 34 Or. 549, 56 Pac. 519, holding court may impose as condition of appointing receiver the payment of preferential debts; American Trust, etc., Bank v. McGettigan, 152 Ind. 587, 71 Am. St. Rep. 350, 52 N. E. 795, holding equitable and legal liens existing at time of appointment preferred; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Woodbridge Canal, etc., Co., 79 Fed. 41, holding rule applied by analogy to irrigation company; Drennan v. Mercantile Trust, etc., Co., 115 Ala. 606, 67 Am. St. Rep. 77, 23 So. 166, 39 L. R. A. 625, rule applied to manufacturing and mining corporation; The Allianca, 65 Fed. 246, and Stewart v. Potomac Ferry Co., 5 Hughes, 383, 12 Fed. 305, both holding courts have applied to railroads principles assimilated to admiralty law. In the following cases the claims were held to be unpreferred: Manchester Locomotive Works v. Truesdale, 44 Minn. 118, 46 N. W. 302, 9 L. R. A. 143, and n., balance for locomotive sold more than six months before appointment; Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Shenandoah Val. R. R., 86 Va. 9, 19 Am. St. Rep. 865, 9 S. E. 762, claim for money borrowed to pay wages; American Trust Co. v. E. & W. R. R. Co., 46 Fed. 103, 104, there being no diversion construction debt contracted more than six months before appointment; St. Louis Trust Co. v. Riley, 70 Fed. 34, 36 U. S. App. 100, 30 L. R. A. 458, injuries caused by negligence more than five months before appointment; Hiles v. Case, 9 Biss. 550, 14 Fed. 142, and In re Dexterville, etc., Boom Co., 4 Fed. 874, claims for losses by fire from sparks; Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 86 Fed. 77, claim for repair of bridge contracted more than six months before appointment. See valuable notes in 54 Am. St. Rep. 417, 432, and 71 Am. St. Rep. 377.

Distinguished in Addison v. Lewis, 75 Va. 709, 710, State v. Edgefield R. R., 6 Lea, 365, and Lock v. Turnpike Co., 100 Tenn. 173, 47 S. W. 135.

99 U. S. 393-398, 25 L. 455, HARTMAN v. BEAN.

Internal revenue.—High wines remaining in bonded warehouse, although sold to an innocent purchaser, are subject to corrected tax and to interest penalty and charges, pp. 393-398.

Cited in George v. Fourth National Bank, 41 Fed. 263, holding whiskey in warehouse, although sold, is subject to all assessments made against distiller.

99 U. S. 398-401, 25 L. 437, SMITH v. RAILROAD CO.

Courts.—Jurisdiction of Federal courts cannot be affected by State legislation, and they will enforce equitable rights created by State laws where they have jurisdiction of subject-matter and parties, p. 401.

Cited in Buford v. Holley, 28 Fed. 682, holding State statute giving simple contract creditor right to file creditor's bill will be followed by Federal courts; Pulliam v. Pulliam, 10 Fed. 78, holding State statute as to presentation of claims against deceased will be followed by Federal courts; Goldsmith v. Gilliland, 10 Sawy. 609, 22 Fed. 866, holding Federal courts will take jurisdiction of suit under State law in the nature of bill of peace; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 113, 35 L. 361, 11 S. Ct. 715, holding State law giving remedy in equity to contract creditors to subject property to lien will not be followed by Federal courts.

Actions.— Mere contract creditor of a corporation cannot enforce his claim against its debtor for want of privity, no assignment of such claim having been made, pp. 400, 401.

Cited in Cates v. Allen, 149 U. S. 458, 37 L. 808, 13 S. Ct. 885, holding where cause removed to Federal courts, simple contract debtor cannot maintain action to set aside sale made in fraud of creditors; National Tube Co. v. Ballou, 146 U. S. 524, 36 L. 1072, 13 S. Ct. 166, holding United States courts will not entertain creditor's bill where it is not alleged that debt has been established by judgment; Dawson v. Coffey, 12 Or. 519, 8 Pac. 841, holding simple contract creditors cannot maintain action to set aside conveyance on ground of fraud; Putney v. Whitmire, 66 Fed. 388, holding simple contract creditor cannot maintain creditor's bill; United States v. Engate, 48 Fed. 254, holding simple contract creditor is one whose claim has not been reduced to judgment; Talley v. Curtin, 54 Fed. 45, 8 U. S. App. 347, holding where claim is not disputed in pleadings, it may be the basis of creditor's bill; Goff v. Kelley, 74 Fed. 331, holding bill of intervention by simple contract creditor will not be entertained; Greenwood v. Strange, 77 Fed. 499, holding Federal courts sitting in equity have no jurisdiction to enforce mere money demand; McKeldin v. Gouldy, 91 Tenn. 681, 20 S. W. 232, holding equity cannot aid contract creditor to subject equitable assets to his claim; Smith v. Commissioners, 43 Kan. 621, 23 Pac. 643, holding simple contract creditor cannot maintain action to recover bonds due his debtor; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 755, 30 L. 829, 7 S. Ct. 762, holding only judgment creditor can enforce stockholder's liability; Mellier v. Bartlett, 106 Mo. 391, 17 S. W. 298, holding where creditor permits his judgment to lapse he cannot maintain action to set aside fraudulent conveyance; Dawson v. Sims, 14 Or. 562, 13 Pac. 507, holding attachment lien sufficient to maintain creditor's bill; Twell v. Twell, 6 Mont. 25, 9 Pac. 541, holding creditor's bill may be maintained where defendant has left the State and transferred his property in order to avoid paying alimony; Pulman v. Stebbins, 51 Fed. 10, 12, holding where corporation has been dissolved, corporation creditors may be sued by contract creditors.

Distinguished in National Bank v. Root, 107 Ind. 229, 8 N. E. 107. See extensive notes in 43 Am. St. Rep. 380, and 66 Am. St. Rep. 276, 287.

Creditor's suit must be preceded by judgment at law establishing his claim, p. 401.

99 U. S. 402-434, 25 L. 274, UNION PAC. R. R. CO. v. UNITED STATES.

Railroads.—Net earnings are ascertained by deducting from gross earnings ordinary expenses of organization and operation and for bona fide improvements, but not including interest paid on bonded debt, p. 420.

Cited in Belfast, etc., R. R. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 453, 1 Atl. 366, holding net earnings are to be estimated after payment of mortgage debts and interest; Mobile, etc., R. R. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 498, 38 L. 798, 14 S. Ct. 972, holding interest on bonded debt must be paid before dividends; New York R. R. v. Nickals, 110 U. S. 308, 30 L. 368, 7 S. Ct. 215, reversing 21 Blatchf. 181, 15 Fed. 579, holding where earnings are used in constructing double tracks, preferred stockholders not entitled to dividends; S. P. R. R. Co. v. Board of R. R. Commrs., 78 Fed. 264, 266, holding commissioners fixing rates should exclude betterments, but allow for reasonable renewals, improvement of roadbed, track and equipment; Commonwealth v. Railroad Co., 164 Pa. St. 261, 30 Atl. 146, holding, in ascertaining net earnings for purpose of taxation, rental for rolling stock and equipment should be deducted; State v. Assessors, 48 La. Ann. 1159, 20 So. 671, holding assessment on basis of earning capacity excludes payment of old debts; Barry v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 27 Fed. 5, holding loss incurred by sale of bonds to pay old indebtedness is not a charge against net earnings; Railway v. Shinn, 52 Ark. 97, 12 S. W. 184, holding contract for part of gross earnings includes earnings of wagon road operated in conjunction with railroad; Sioux City, etc., R. R. v. United States, 110 U. S. 207, 28 L. 121, 3 S. Ct. 567, holding, under internal revenue act, net earnings includes payment of interest on bonds.

Distinguished in Ruhlender v. Chesapeake R. R. Co., 91 Fed. 12, 62 U. S. App. 16, and San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 583, 62 Am. St. Rep. 284, 50 Pac. 642, 38 L. R. A. 468, See elaborate note in 99 Am. Dec. 762.

Railroads.—Union Pacific held to have been completed within meaning of act of 1862 requiring payment of 5 per cent. of net earnings to government after its completion, when so reported by its president and accepted by the United States for purposes of bond issue, pp. 418-420.

Railroads.—The question of dividends and expenditures for betterments is one of policy, usually left to discretion of directors, p. 421.

Cited in Excelsior W. & M. Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 145, 27 Pac. 47, holding, in absence of fraud, declaration of dividends will not be disturbed.

Railroads.—Five per centum of earnings payable to the government each year by Union Pacific railroad, under act of 1862, is to be estimated after the payment of interest on first-mortgage bonds, p. 424.

Cited in United States v. Sioux City & Pacific R. R. Co., 99 U. S. 492, 25 L. 292, holding, if interest on first-mortgage bonds absorbed earnings, government not entitled to its percentage; United States v. Central, etc., R. R., 138 U. S. 85, 34 L. 896, 11 S. Ct. 285, holding betterments and improvements not to be considered in arriving at amount of net earnings. Affirmed generally in United States v. Kansas Pac. R. R. Co., 99 U. S. 456, 25 L. 291, and United States v. Central, etc., R. R., 99 U. S. 450, 25 L. 288.

99 U. S. 434-441, 25 L. 457, PARSONS v. JACKSON.

Bonds.—Uncertainty of amount payable deprives bonds of their negotiability; hence bonds for £225 in London or $1,000 in New York, the company's president not having fixed place of payment, are not negotiable, p. 439.

See note in 64 Am. Dec. 439.

Bonds.—Past due and unpaid coupons attached to bonds, held evidence of dishonor sufficient to put purchasers on inquiry, p. 440.

Cited in Bangor Power Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. 521, 523, holding caveat emptor applies to negotiable paper which has been drawn and signed, but not issued; Simmons v. Taylor, 38 Fed. 687, holding persons purchasing bonds, having attached unpaid coupons, not bona fide holders; Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 339, holding bond payable before maturity, with overdue interest coupons attached, is dishonored paper; Stern Bros. v. Bank, 34 La. Ann. 1120, holding overdue, detached coupons of public bonds dishonored paper; Mercantile Deposit Co. v. Low, 87 Fed. 246, holding purchaser knowing of agreement giving committee power to control bonds cannot recover; Rouede v. Jersey City, 18 Fed. 722, F. C. 12,031a, Railway Co. v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 762, 26 L. 557, Martin v. Salina R. R. Co., 79 Ala. 615, 617, and Fairex v. Bier, 37 La. Ann. 825, all holding bonds with overdue, unpaid interest coupons attached do not put purchaser on inquiry; Long Island Loan, etc., Co. v. Columbus R. R., 65 Fed. 457, holding fact that interest on bonds is not paid insufficient to put purchaser on inquiry. Cited generally in Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513, 25 L. 461. See notes to 100 Am. Dec. 197, 98 Am. Dec. 684, and 98 Am. Dec. 683.

Bonds.—Where bonds are offered for a low price it is a circumstance calculated to raise suspicion of their validity, p. 441.

Cited in Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 341, holding, that bonds are purchased for less than one-half of the accrued interest, important circumstance in determining bona fides.

Bonds.— Purchaser of bonds with overdue coupons, sold at small price and containing unfilled blanks, held charged with notice of fact that they had been stolen during war before issuance, pp. 439-441.

99 U. S. 441-449, 25 L. 327, KEELY v. SANDERS.

Taxation.— Description of land in notice of sale for taxes is sufficient if it informs owner of claim against his property, p. 443.

Cited in Poland v. Dreyfous, 48 La. Ann. 85, 18 So. 907, holding assessment giving changed names by which boundaries are known sufficient to support tax sale; Textor v. Shipley, 86 Md. 441, 38 Atl. 933, holding levy describing city, corner of street and character of building sufficient.

Taxation.— Commissioner's certificate, in accordance with acts of Congress of 1862 and 1863, is prima facie evidence of regularity of sale and title of purchaser, p. 444.

Cited in In re Douglas, 41 La. Ann. 768, 6 So. 676, and Henderson v. Ellerman, 47 La. Ann. 314, 16 So. 824, both holding legislature may make tax deed conclusive evidence of compliance with every requirement; State v. Central Pac. R. R., 21 Nev. 267, 30 Pac. 691, holding legislature may fix time, amount and manner of imposing taxes, and that certificate shall be evidence of compliance with all prerequisites. Cited, arguendo, in Keely v. Weir, 38 Fed. 292, Sherry v. McKinley, 99 U. S. 497, 498, 25 L. 330, and Fox v. Stafford, 90 N. C. 301, dissenting opinion in Cooper v. Freeman Lumber Co., 61 Ark. 48, 32 S. W. 496, and Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 179, 29 L. 855, 6 S. Ct. 685. See note in 4 Am. St. Rep. 188.

Taxation.— Sale of all of tract without subdivision, though tax but small proportion of the value, is at most an irregularity, not an invalidity, p. 445.

Taxation.— Proceeding to collect taxes is a proceeding in rem, of which owners are bound to take notice, p. 445.

Constitutional law.— Whether military authority has been established is a political, not a judicial, question, p. 446.

Evidence.— Law presumes persons acting in public office have been duly appointed, p. 447.

99 U. S. 449-455, 25 L. 287, UNITED STATES v. CENTRAL PACIFIC R. R. CO.

Railroads.— Central Pacific railroad, formed by consolidation of Central and Western Pacific, succeeded to all the rights and duties of the original companies under acts of 1862, p. 450.

Affirmed in United States v. Stanford, 70 Fed. 361, 44 U. S. App. 68.

Railroads.—Date of completion of Central Pacific railroad for purpose of fixing date when government entitled to 5 per cent. of net earnings, held same as in case of Union Pacific, p. 454.

99 U. S. 455-460, 25 L. 289, UNITED STATES v. KANSAS PAC. R. R. CO.

Railroads.—Government subsidy bonds are a lien, and 5 per cent. of earnings of Kansas Pacific railway are only demandable upon the aided portion of the railroad, p. 458.

Cited in United States v. Central, etc., R. R. Co., 118 U. S. 230, 30 L. 175, 6 S. Ct. 1040, and United States v. Alabama R. R. Co., 142 U. S. 622, 35 L. 1136, 12 S. Ct. 308, both holding government cannot withhold payment for services of roads not aided, although owned and controlled by aided roads; United States v. Denver, etc., R. R., 99 U. S. 462, 25 L. 292, holding lien of bonds extends only to aided portion of road.

Railroads.—In estimating net earnings to fix per cent. due government on its loan, under Pacific Railroad aid act of 1862, depreciation, construction and equipment account should be deducted from gross income, p. 459.

Cited in Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 34 Fed. 609, holding as to preferred stockholders, steel-rail betterments should not be charged to operating expenses; Southern, etc., R. R. v. Commrs., 78 Fed. 266, holding expenses for station buildings, shops, etc., are charges against earnings; Schmidt v. Louisville, etc., R. R., 95 Ky. 299, 25 S. W. 496, holding expense of handling business and proportionate part of operating expenses of leased road should be charged against gross earnings; State v. Assessors, 48 La. Ann. 1159, 20 So. 671, holding where earning capacity forms basis of assessment, payment of old debts should not be deducted; Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405, holding "pro rata" means disposition of fund in proportion to some standard.

99 U. S. 460-462, 25 L. 291, UNITED STATES v. DENVER PAC. R. R. CO.

Railroads.—Government subsidy bonds are a lien, and percentage of earnings is only demandable from the Kansas Pacific railway upon the aided portion of the railroad; hence government has no lien upon line of the Denver Pacific railway, which constituted the extension thereof, p. 462.

Approved in United States v. Central, etc., R. R., 118 U. S. 240, 30 L. 175, 6 S. Ct. 1040.

99 U. S. 463-482, 25 L. 438, RAILWAY CO. v. ALLING.

Appeal and error.—Supreme Court will not order dismissal of appeal taken by corporation, acting through its officers and directors, at instance of strangers to the decree, who have become stockholders in the concern, p. 472.

Railroads.— Act of June 8, 1872, to Denver and Rio Grande railway, was a grant of an immediate beneficial easement in a right of way through the Grande cañon, and when in good faith appropriated, title took effect as of the date of the act, p. 475.

Cited in Noble v. Union River Logging R. R. Co., 147 U. S. 176, 37 L. 127, 13 S. Ct. 274, holding "right of way hereby granted," is a present grant; New York Indians v. United States, 170 U. S. 17, 42 L. 933, 18 S. Ct. 534, holding words "agree to set apart," in grant to Indians, imports present grant; N. P. R. R. Co. v. St. Paul, etc., R. R., 26 Fed. 551, holding grant being in present, priority of grant determines title as to cross roads; Lewis v. Rio Grande Western R. R., 17 Utah, 511, 54 Pac. 982, holding grant takes effect as of date of location of road; Bybee v. Oregon, etc., R. R. Co., 11 Sawy. 485, 26 Fed. 590, holding grant to railroad is a present grant and paramount to ditch location; Denver, etc., R. R. v. Hancum, 19 Colo. 166, 34 Pac. 839, holding construction of road without filing map entitles road to land grant; Kansas City, etc., R. R. v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 120 Mo. 69, 31 S. W. 453, holding survey and location is part of construction of road; Jackson v. Dines, 13 Colo. 95, 96, 21 Pac. 919, 920, holding grants to railroads have the effect of law and a deed.

Distinguished in Radke v. Winona, etc., R. R., 39 Minn. 265, 39 N. W. 625, Spokane Falls R. R. v. Ziegler, 64 Fed. 961, 29 U. S. App. 69, Sioux City v. Chicago, etc., R. R., 27 Fed. 776, McKeoin v. Northern Pac. R. R., 45 Fed. 465, and Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Van Cleave, 52 Kan. 673, 33 Pac. 475.

Railroads.— Denver and Rio Grande railway, acting under act of 1877 extending its license to build railroad through the Grande cañon, must be presumed to have consented to act of 1875, declaring that any other railway might have right of way through such cañon, p. 480.

Cited and above doctrine affirmed in Denver, etc., R. R. v. Denver, etc., R. R., 5 McCrary, 444, 17 Fed. 867, holding where impracticable to put down more than one road, equity should establish the conditions upon which second road should be allowed to use cañon; Montana, etc., R. R. v. Helena, etc., R. R., 6 Mont. 424, 12 Pac. 920 (see dissenting opinion, 6 Mont. 432, 437), holding necessity is a question for decision in the District Court in which cañon is located; Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 50, 34 L. 859, 11 S. Ct. 258, holding agreement to use right of way binding upon subsequent purchasers; Indianapolis Street Ry. v. Citizens' Street Ry. Co., 127 Ind. 392, 24 N. E. 1061, 8 L. R. A. 548, holding street railway company first occupying street has exclusive right; Africa v. Alderman, 70 Fed. 736, 741, holding where street does not permit of two tracks, elder company entitled to priority; Union, etc., R. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc.,

R. R., 163 U. S. 602, 41 L. 278, 16 S. Ct. 1188, holding contract by which railroad permits other road to use track not ultra vires; Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Union, etc., R. R., 74 Fed. 992, Schmidt v. Louisville, etc., R. R., 101 Ky. 482, 41 S. W. 1027, 38 L. R. A. 822, both holding specific performance will be granted to carry out track contracts. Distinguished in Hamilton v. Spokane, etc., R. R., 2 Idaho, 907, 28 Pac. 411, United States v. Denver R. R., 150 U. S. 10, 37 L. 978, 14 S. Ct. 14, San Francisco Ry. v. Gould, 122 Cal. 605, 55 Pac. 413, and United States v. Denver, etc., R. R., 31 Fed. 888. Cited in dissenting opinion in Omnibus R. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 57 Cal. 179.

Miscellaneous.—Ex parte Railway Co., 101 U. S. 711, 25 L. 872.

99 U. S. 482-491, 25 L. 375, MONTGOMERY v. SAMARY.

Mortgages.—In Louisiana, where mortgaged premises were sold by sheriff on foreclosure and upon monition duly published, the sale was confirmed and homologated by the court, held, that the sale became res adjudicata, conclusive of rights of the parties, p. 491.

Cited in Roberts v. Zansler, 34 La. Ann. 209, affirming doctrine of principal case. See note to 29 Am. St. Rep. 491.

99 U. S. 491-492, 25 L. 292, UNITED STATES v. SIOUX CITY R. R. CO.

Railroads.—In ascertaining net earnings, for purpose of setting aside the 5 per cent. payable to the government therefrom, by a government-aided railroad, held, that interest paid on first mortgage bonds should first be deducted from income; hence, where net earnings all absorbed by such bonds, government cannot claim 5 per cent., p. 492.

Cited in Hazard v. Dillon, 34 Fed. 491.

99 U. S. 493-496, 25 L. 481, CLARK v. UNITED STATES.

United States.—On May 1, 1862, New Orleans ceased to be rebel territory, and action to recover cotton seized by government must be brought within six years from said date, under act of 1863, barring claim in Court of Claims after six years, p. 495.

Cited in Hammond v Johnston, 93 Mo. 221, 6 S. W. 92, holding statute of limitations was suspended as to residents of Tennessee from April 19, 1861, to April 2, 1866.

99 U. S. 496-498, 25 L. 330, SHERRY v. McKINLEY.

Taxation.—Sale under acts of Congress, 1862, 1863, taxing certain insurrectionary districts, upheld, the commissioner's certificate of sale, in due form, being prima facie evidence of regularity, p. 496.

Cited in Edwards v. Sims, 40 Kan. 242, 19 Pac. 714, holding recitals in tax deed must be given construction which words import; Cooper v. Freeman Lumber Co., 61 Ark. 48, 32 S. W. 496, holding legislature may prescribe time and manner of listing property and of levying and assessing taxes; Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 594, 26 L. 256, holding Congress may make warrant against public debtor conclusive evidence of facts recited; In re Douglas, 41 La. Ann. 768, 6 So. 676, holding legislature may validate tax proceedings which it might have authorized; Henderson v. Ellerman, 47 La. Ann. 314, 16 So. 824, holding certificate of commissioner evidence of compliance with preliminary requisites. See note to 4 Am. St. Rep. 188.

99 U. S. 499-504, 25 L. 330, WILSON v. SALAMANCA.

Municipal corporations.—It is no defense against bona fide holder of municipal bonds that they were issued in excess of the proportion allowed by law to county, p. 504.

Cited in Coler v. County Commrs., 6 N. Mex. 131, 136, 27 Pac. 629, 631, holding county is estopped as against recitals to show that statutory amount was exceeded; Sherman County v. Simmons, 109 U. S. 737, 27 L. 1094, 3 S. Ct. 504, holding bona fide holder not bound to go behind the law and recitals to inquire amount of county indebtedness; Gunnison County v. Rollins, 173 U. S. 271, 19 S. Ct. 396, holding recitals that constitutional limit had not been exceeded, binding on county; State v. Commissioners, 39 Kan. 659, 7 Am. St. Rep. 570, 19 Pac. 926, holding county estopped from showing irregularities in election; Dudley v. Lake County, 80 Fed. 677, 49 U. S. App. 346, holding, in absence of public record, county estopped from showing outside indebtedness making bonds void; Dallas County v. McKenzie, 110 U. S. 687, 28 L. 286, 4 S. Ct. 184, holding recitals in bonds as to manner of issuance are binding upon the county; Chaffee County v. Potter, 142 U. S. 364, 35 L. 1043, 12 S. Ct. 219, holding recital that constitutional limit had not been exceeded binding upon the county; Nolan County v. State, 83 Tex. 195, 17 S. W. 827, holding, where county has authority, recital in bonds binding.

Distinguished in Francis v. Howard County, 50 Fed. 57, and Kelley v. Millan, 21 Fed. 861. See note, 64 Am. Dec. 437.

Municipal corporations.—Right to receive county subscription to railroad stock, and to receive county bonds in payment therefor, having been perfected by favorable county vote before consolidation of aided railroad with another, passes to the consolidated company, p. 504.

Cited in Livingston County v. Portsmouth Bank, 128 U. S. 119, 122, 126, 32 L. 365, 366, 367, 9 S. Ct. 24, 25, 27, County of Tipton v. Locomotive Works, 103 U. S. 533, 26 L. 344, New Buffalo v. Iron Company, 105 U. S. 76, 26 L. 1025, and Menasha v. Hazard, 102 U. S. 95, 26 L. 85, all holding bonds voted in favor of one company may be issued to consolidated company. See note to 98 Am. Dec. 671.

99 U. S. 505-508, 25 L. 354, GRIGSBY v. PURCELL.

Courts—Appeal will be dismissed by Supreme Court, unless transcript is filed and case docketed during the term to which made returnable, and this may be done on the court's motion, p. 506.

Cited in Killian v. Clark, 111 U. S. 784, 28 L. 599, 4 S. Ct. 700, Fayolle v. Texas, etc., R. R., 124 U. S. 523, 31 L. 534, 8 S. Ct. 589, The Tornado, 109 U. S. 117, 27 L. 877, 3 S. Ct. 83, and Wood Harvester Co. v. Heidel, 4 N. Dak. 432, 61 N. W. 157, all holding appeal will be dismissed for failure to file transcript during the term; The S. S. Osborn, 105 U. S. 451, 26 L. 1066, holding cross-appellant must enter appearance and give security, although his adversary has docketed case against him; Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 168, 27 L. 689, 2 S. Ct. 426, holding cross-appeals must be prosecuted like other appeals; Morrison v. Kuhn, 80 Fed. 741, 52 U. S. App. 180, holding cross-appeals not diligently prosecuted may be dismissed; Credit Co. v. Ark. Cent. R. R. Co., 128 U. S. 259, 32 L. 449, 9 S. Ct. 107, holding appeal must be perfected during term, and time cannot be arrested by nunc pro tunc order; Radford v. Folsom, 123 U. S. 727, 31 L. 293, 8 S. Ct. 335, holding acceptance of bond after term does not operate as new appeal; Farmers, etc., Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. R., 73 Fed. 317, 34 U. S. App. 626, holding citation may be waived or substituted by proof of equivalent notice; Hewitt v. Filbert, 116 U. S. 145, 29 L. 582, 6 S. Ct. 320, holding citation is necessary to give appellate court jurisdiction; Green v. Elbert, 137 U. S. 622, 34 L. 795, 11 S. Ct. 190, holding motion to dismiss may be made before hearing or by the court sua sponte; Bucki v. Atlantic Lumber Co., 63 Fed. 765, holding appeal not prosecuted with diligence will be dismissed by court of its own motion; State v. Demarest, 110 U. S. 401, 28 L. 191, 4 S. Ct. 25, holding, unless transcript is filed within term, court will, of its own motion, dismiss the appeal; Norton v. Brownsville, 129 U. S. 506, 32 L. 785, 9 S. Ct. 331, and Green v. Elbert, 137 U. S. 621, 34 L. 795, 11 S. Ct. 190, both holding, if motion to dismiss not made, transcript may be filed at succeeding term, after which appeal is functus officio.

99 U. S. 508, 25 L. 355, THOMAS v. PURCELL.

Adjudged in conformity with Grigsby v. Purcell, supra.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 508-512, 25 L. 482, UNITED STATES v. GERMANIE.

Pensions.—Commissioner of pensions not being a head of department, surgeon appointed by him is not government officer within meaning of act of 1825, punishing Federal officers guilty of extortion, p. 509.

Cited in United States v. Mullan, 71 Fed. 689, holding member of Indian police not an officer; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 327, 34 L. 630, 11 S. Ct. 108, holding merchant appraiser not an officer; United States v. Smith, 124 U. S. 532, 31 L. 536, 8 S. Ct. 597, holding clerk of collector of customs not an officer of United States; United States v. Mouat, 124 U. S. 307, 31 L. 464, 8 S. Ct. 506, holding paymaster's clerk appointed by paymaster not an officer; State v. Broome, 61 N. J. L. 116, 38 Atl. 842, holding architect employed for construction of public building not an officer; Moll v. Sbisa, 51 La. Ann. 292, 25 So. 142, holding clerk of court an officer; People v. Duane, 121 N. Y. 375, 24 N. E. 847, holding retired army officer not an officer of the United States; United States v. Perkins, 116 U. S. 484, 29 L. 700, 6 S. Ct. 450, holding cadet is an officer of the United States; United States v. McCrory, 91 Fed. 296, 63 U. S. App. 362, holding letter carriers are officers of the United States; Brown v. Smith, 88 Fed. 565, and Thompson v. Poole, 70 Fed. 727, both holding receivers of national bank appointed by comptroller are officers; Lewis v. Jersey City, 51 N. J. L. 242, 17 Atl. 112, holding bridge-tender an officer. See valuable note in 63 Am. St. Rep. 189, 190.

Distinguished in United States v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 128, 30 L. 595, 7 S. Ct. 468, United States v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. 64, 65, and Rogers v. United States, 32 Fed. 801.

99 U. S. 513-539, 25 L. 460, JACKSON v. LUDELING.

Railroads.—Purchasers of railroad at foreclosure, guilty of fraud, are nevertheless entitled to compensation for reconstructing, repairing and putting road in working order, p. 528.

Cited in Wood v. Nichols, 33 La. Ann. 751, holding administrator purchasing property, the sale being annulled, is entitled to reimbursement for constructions and improvements. Cited, arguendo, in Chadwick v. Old Colony R. R. Co., 171 Mass. 243, 50 N. E. 630, State v. Railroad Co., 34 La. Ann. 949, 950, and Doe v. Rae, 31 Fed. 99. See also New Orleans, etc., R. R. v. Delamore, 114 U. S. 509, 29 L. 247, 5 S. Ct. 1013.

Distinguished in Loos v. Wilkinson, 113 N. Y. 495, 10 Am. St. Rep. 500, 21 N. E. 394, 4 L. R. A. 357, and n., and Dean v. Feeley, 69 Ga. 821.

99 U. S. 539-546, 25 L. 355, YULEE v. VOSE.

Removal of causes.—Where cause has been determined as to resident defendants and they are out of the case, non-resident defendant may procure removal, p. 544.

Cited, Coakerley v. Great Northern R. R. Co., 70 Fed. 279, filing amended complaint, leaving out residents, enables non-resident to remove; Tremper v. Schwabacher, 84 Fed. 416, holding defendant may procure removal where other defendants have not been served and have not appeared.

Removal of causes.—State court is not bound to surrender its jurisdiction unless record shows case for removal, p. 545.

Cited in Bixby v. Blair, 56 Iowa, 420, 9 N. W. 320, holding affidavits accompanying petition should be considered part thereof; National Bank v. Dodge, 42 N. J. L. 318, 320, holding determination of Federal court is paramount, and if in favor of removal all proceedings after filing petition are coram non judge; Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 432, 29 L. 962, 6 S. Ct. 799, holding State court not bound to surrender jurisdiction unless petition shows right; Monroe v. Williamson, 81 Fed. 984, holding presentation of proper petition and bond jurisdictional prerequisites; Brown v. Murray, 43 Fed. 615, holding where petition was not called to attention of court, it not being in session, this does not affect the right; Hickman v. Missouri Co., 151 Mo. 654, 52 S. W. 353, holding suit instituted by State cannot be removed on ground of diverse citizenship.

Removal of causes.—Party has the right of removal at any time before trial, p. 546.

Cited in Brayley v. Hedges, 53 Iowa, 584, 5 N. W. 749, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Bates, 119 U. S. 467, 30 L. 438, 7 S. Ct. 286, and Broadhead v. Shoemaker, 44 Fed. 523, 11 L. R. A. 570, and n., all holding removal may be had after new trial granted; Kalamazoo Wagon Co. v. Snavely, 34 Fed. 824, holding removal may be had where defendant procures dismissal to be set aside and cause set for trial; McLean v. St. Paul, etc., Ry., 16 Blatchf. 317, F. C. 8,892, holding removal may be had by averring diverse residence without alleging it existed at commencement of action; Miller v. Tobin, 9 Sawy. 412, 18 Fed. 616, holding removal may be had after order overruling demurrer; Removal Cases, 100 U. S. 474, 25 L. 600, holding, in order to bar removal, trial must be in actual progress.

Distinguished in Rosenthal v. Coates, 148 U. S. 147, 37 L. 400, 13 S. Ct. 577, and Brooks v. Clark, 119 U. S. 511, 512, 30 L. 485, 7 S. Ct. 304, where removal was under act of 1875.

99 U. S. 547-560, 25 L. 357, HARTELL v. TILGHMAN.

Courts.—Federal courts have no jurisdiction, in absence of diverse citizenship, of causes of action arising out of contracts for the use of patent, where defendants admit its validity, p. 555.

Cited in McCarthy Hall Co. v. Glænzer, 24 Blatchf. 269, 270, 30 Fed. 387, Adams v. Meyrose, 2 McCrary, 362, 7 Fed. 209, Ingalls v. Tice, 14 Fed. 352, Jencks v. Langdon Mills, 27 Fed. 624, Willis v. McCullen, 29 Fed. 641, Williams v. Star Sand Co., 35 Fed. 370, Densmore v. Three Rivers Mfg. Co., 38 Fed. 749, 750, Standard Den- tal Mfg. Co. v. National Tooth Co., 95 Fed. 294, and Dale Tile Co. v. Hyatt, 125 U. S. 52, 53, 31 L. 686, 8 S. Ct. 758, 759, all holding Federal courts have no jurisdiction of controversies growing out of license contracts; Silver v. Holt, 84 Fed. 811, holding suit for accounting for use of copyright presents no Federal question; Fetter v. Newhall, 21 Blatchf. 449, 17 Fed. 844, holding, where party uses one claim and infringes another, Federal courts have jurisdiction; Seibert Co. v. Detroit Co., 34 Fed. 221, holding where citizenship is diverse, Federal court has jurisdiction to annul license contract; McKay v. Jackman, 17 Fed. 644, holding in suit to recover royalties where citizenship is diverse, successful party entitled to costs; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 269, 32 L. 444, 9 S. Ct. 106, holding Court of Claims has jurisdiction of demands of patentees against United States; Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co., 80 Fed. 3, 46 U. S. App. 717, holding suit to restrain collection of tax on patent rights does not arise under patent laws, and must be taken direct from Circuit to Supreme Court; Waterman v. Shipman, 130 N. Y. 307, 29 N. E. 113, holding action to determine existence of license, involves no Federal question; Pliable Shoe Co. v. Bryant, 81 Fed. 522, and Wren v. Annin, 34 Fed. 435, both holding suit to compel assignment of patent involves no Federal question; Montgomery Palace Stock-Car Co. v. Street-Car Line, 43 Fed. 331, holding Federal courts have no jurisdiction to determine question of assignment; Prime v. Brandon Mfg. Co., 16 Blatchf. 467, F. C. 11,421, holding an agreement to transfer an extension involves no Federal question; Siebert Co. v. Detroit Co., 34 Fed. 220, holding Federal courts have no jurisdiction of suit to collect royalties from licensee; Albright v. Teas, 106 U. S. 619, 620, 27 L. 298, 1 S. Ct. 555, 556, affirming 13 Fed. 412, holding suit for money due for transfer of patent involves no Federal question; Manhattan R. R. Co. v. New York, 18 Fed. 199, holding, unless Federal question involved, case does not arise under Constitution or laws of United States; White v. Lee, 3 Fed. 223, 224, holding breach of covenant does not, per se, work forfeiture of patent license; Winter v. Swinburne, 10 Biss. 463, 8 Fed. 55, holding Federal courts will not aid execution of admiralty money decree by creditor's bill; Havanna, etc., Drill Co. v. Ashurst, 148 Ill. 139, 35 N. E. 880, holding State courts have jurisdiction of contracts for use of patents; Mayer v. Hardy, 127 N. Y. 132, 27 N. E. 838, holding State courts have jurisdiction to construe license agreement; Hubbard v. Allen, 123 Pa. St. 208, 16 Atl. 774, holding State court has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce payment of royalties; Fuller, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Bartlett, 68 Wis. 79, 60 Am. Rep. 839, 31 N. W. 749, holding State court has jurisdiction to compel assignment of patents; Hyatt v. Ingalls, 124 N. Y. 102, 104, 26 N. E. 287, 288, holding State court has jurisdiction of action to forfeit license and recover royalties; Pentlarge v. Beaston, 18 Blatchf. 42, 44, 1 Fed. 865, 867, holding, where it is alleged article is covered by foreign patent, State court has jurisdiction to set aside agreement. Cited, arguendo, in Adamas v. Meyrose, 10 Fed. 673, Vail v. Hammond, 60 Conn. 384, 25 Am. St. Rep. 336, 22 Atl. 957, Curran v. Craig, 22 Fed. 102, Terry v. Schreveport, 28 Fed. 211, 213, and Atkins v. Parke, 61 Fed. 957, 22 U. S. App. 404.

Distinguished in Continental Co. v. Clark, 100 N. Y. 369, 3 N. E. 336, Lord v. Cannon, 75 Ga. 307, Pacific Contracting Co. v. Union Paving Co., 80 Fed. 738, Heaton Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 291, 47 U. S. App. 146, 35 L. R. A. 780, Dunham v. Bent, 72 Fed. 61, Wood Co. v. Harvester Co., 61 Fed. 258, James v. Berger, 58 Fed. 1007, American Box Co. v. Crossman, 57 Fed. 1026, American Button Co. v. Empire Nail Co., 47 Fed. 742, Washburn Mfg. Co. v. Cincinnati Barbed-Wire Co., 42 Fed. 678, Hammacher v. Wilson, 26 Fed. 240, Seibert v. Manning, 32 Fed. 626, 627, Lilienthal v. Washburn, 4 Woods, 68, 8 Fed. 709, Smith v. Standard Laundry Machinery Co., 20 Blatchf. 362, 19 Fed. 826, Campbell v. James, 18 Blatchf. 98, 2 Fed. 345, Pratt v. Paris Gas-Light Co., 168 U. S. 260, 42 L. 460, 18 S. Ct. 64, and White v. Rankin, 144 U. S. 636, 638, 639, 36 L. 572, 573, 12 S. Ct. 771, 772.

99 U. S. 560-566, 25 L. 484, COLBY v. REED.

Contracts.— Unless contract so provides, demand of performance need not be in writing, p. 564.

Contracts.— Where, on breach of contract, amount due plaintiff is clear, excessive demand will not defeat recovery, p. 564.

Contracts.— In action for breach of contract to deliver corporate stock, court will not compel plaintiff to accept such stock tendered in open court, in mitigation for damages, p. 566.

Cited in Owen v. Weston, 63 N. H. 602, 56 Am. Rep. 550, 4 Atl. 802, and Twill v. Lawrence, 59 N. H. 501, both holding, in actions of replevin or trover, defendant may be allowed to surrender all, or a part of the property in mitigation of damages. Cited, arguendo, in Fletcher v. Chamberlain, 61 N. H. 495, and Wiswall v. Harriman, 62 N. H. 672.

99 U. S. 567-573, 25 L. 378, McBURNEY v. CARSON.

Statutes.— Remedial statute of 1872, providing for constructive service in Circuit Court, in suits to establish a lien, where defendant not within the district, held applicable to pending causes, p. 569.

Trial.— Objection that defendants to an amended bill are necessary parties to supplemental bill, must be made at trial, p. 570.

Cited in McArthur v. Allen, 3 Fed. 321, holding executors not necessary parties to will contest.

Trustee.—Where trustee accepts Confederate money in payment of mortgage, beneficiary may repudiate and enforce the lien of the mortgage, p. 572.

Cited in Taylor v. Dugger, 66 Ala. 450, and Ople v. Castleman, 32 Fed. 514, both holding payment of mortgage to trustee in Confederate money not binding on non-consenting heirs. Cited, arguendo, in Hyatt v. McBurney, 18 S. C. 207, Carson v. Dunham, 149 Mass. 55, 14 Am. St. Rep. 399, 20 N. E. 313, 3 L. R. A. 205, and n., Carson v. Dunham, 121 U. S. 424, 429, 30 L. 993, 995, 7 S. Ct. 1031, 1033, and Carson v. Hyatt, 118 U. S. 281, 30 L. 168, 6 S. Ct. 1051. See elaborate note in 40 Am. Dec. 510.

Executors and administrators.—Where will creates a trust, but names no trustee, executor must act, and his sureties are liable for his default, as well in matters of the trust as of administration, p. 572.

99 U. S. 573-577, 25 L. 292, ELLIOTT v. RAILROAD CO.

Penalties are never extended by implication, and, unless expressly imposed, cannot be enforced, p. 576.

Cited in Rogers v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 48 Kan. 474, 29 Pac. 762, holding penalty does not attach to taxes admitted to be due and tendered.

Internal revenue.—Penalty due from corporation under act of 1864, for failure to make return or pay tax, was not intended to be increased by act of 1870, p. 577.

99 U. S. 578-582, 25 L. 420, PENCE v. LANGDON.

Trial.—Direction to find can be properly given to the jury only when the state of the evidence leaves no room for doubt, p. 580.

Affirmed in Finney v. Northern Pac. R. R., 3 Dak. 283, 16 N. W. 505.

Contracts.—Notice of rescission given on Sunday is not void, p. 580.

Sales.—Vendee of stock left on deposit with him, is not bound to receive and tender it back before exercising right of rescission for fraud, p. 580.

Appeal and error.—Where finding of jury is proper, failure of court to construe written evidence is not reversible error, p. 580.

Cited in Minneapolis, etc., R. R. v. Columbus, etc., Mill Co., 119 U. S. 152, 30 L. 377, 7 S. Ct. 170, holding question of law submitted to jury not ground of exception if they decide it right.

Contracts.—Party seeking rescission must act promptly, p. 581.

Cited in Bemett v. La Dow, 66 Fed. 195, holding continuing to treat contract as existing after discovery of fraud, constitutes affirmation; Hoyt v. Latham, 143 U. S. 567, 36 L. 265, 12 S. Ct. 573, holding beneficiary who waits to see if sale will prove profitable is guilty of laches; Mudsill Mining Co. v. Watrous, 61 Fed. 186, 22 U. S. App. 12, holding erection of mill to test value of ore of salted mine, does not operate as a waiver; Oliver v. Lansing, 48 Neb. 357, 67 N. W. 199, holding publication that plaintiff had done wrong in commencing suit, does not prevent rescission; Fitzgerald v. Construction Co., 44 Neb. 494, 62 N. W. 910, holding wrongdoer cannot impose extreme diligence as condition of rescission; Engleman v. Taylor, — W. Va. —, 33 S. E. 940, holding although means of knowledge open, party induced to rely on representations may rescind; Kearney, etc., Elevator Co. v. Union Pac. Ry., 97 Iowa, 725, 59 Am. St. Rep. 439, 66 N. W. 1061, holding election to rescind, defeats right of stoppage in transitu; Gay v. Osborn, 102 Wis. 646, 78 N. W. 1080, holding ratification irrevocably fixes rights of parties; Ankeny v. Clark, 1 Wash. 557, 20 Pac. 587, holding where vendor gives bond for deed, he is entitled to bond upon rescission; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 30, 20 Am. St. Rep. 208, 24 Pac. 711, 9 L. R. A. 380, holding party may ratify and sue for damages, or may rescind. See notes in 74 Am. Dec. 661, 662.

Contracts.—Where defense to suit for rescission for fraud, alleges failure to rescind promptly, burden of proving knowledge and time of discovery of fraud is on defendant, p. 582.

Cited and above doctrine affirmed in Guild v. Parker, 43 N. J. L. 437, Mudsill Mining Co. v. Watrous, 61 Fed. 188, 22 U. S. App. 12, and Murray v. Heinze, 17 Mont. 368, 42 Pac. 1063, all holding waiver is a relinquishment of a known right.

99 U. S. 582-592, 25 L. 331, UNITED STATES v. COUNTY OF MACON.

Municipal corporations.—Every holder of bonds is chargeable with notice of statute under which bond is issued; hence, if municipality has no power to levy tax to pay them, holder cannot require it, p. 590.

Cited in Quincy v. Jackson, 113 U. S. 338, 28 L. 1003, 5 S. Ct. 546, Harshmann v. Knox County, 122 U. S. 316, 30 L. 1154, 7 S. Ct. 1175, Scotland County Court v. Hill, 140 U. S. 46, 35 L. 353, 11 S. Ct. 699, and United States v. School District of Monona, 20 Fed. 295, all holding authorization to incur indebtedness imports authority to levy taxes to pay therefor; Commissioners v. Call, 123 N. C. 311, 31 S. E. 482, 44 L. R. A. 253, holding purchaser of bonds bound by constitutional provisions; Forbes v. County Commrs., 23 Colo. 349, 47 Pac. 390, holding mode provided by legislature for payment of county warrants is exclusive; United States v. Town of Cicero, 50 Fed. 149, 9 U. S. App. 10, holding bondholders bound to know the provision made for payment; Beaulieu v. City of Pleasant Hill, 4 McCrary, 557, 14 Fed. 225, holding purchasers of bonds take them under limitation of taxing power; United States v. Town of Cicero, 41 Fed. 86, holding, where special power of taxation is given, there is no power by implication; Byrne v. Parish of East Carroll, 45 La. Ann. 395, 12 So. 522, holding condition that contractor should be paid out of fund if voted favorably, is binding; United States v. Key West, 78 Fed. 91, 41 U. S. App. 726, holding, if authority creating the debt limits the tax, bondholders are bound; Raton Water Works v. Town of Raton, — N. Mex. —, 49 Pac. 905, holding town may not exceed special tax authorized to build water works; Ralls County Court v. United States, 105 U. S. 736, 738, 26 L. 1222, holding law confining taxation to fixed per centum, inapplicable to extraordinary debt. Cited, arguendo, in Knox County Court v. United States, 109 U. S. 230, 27 L. 915, 3 S. Ct. 132, Knox County v. National Bank, 147 U. S. 94, 37 L. 94, 13 S. Ct. 268, United States v. Knox County, 51 Fed. 881, 882, and Roberts v. Denver, etc., R. R., 8 Colo. App. 510, 46 Pac. 882, affirmed on authority of principal case, in United States v. Macon County, 144 U. S. 568, 36 L. 544, 12 S. Ct. 921. See note in 85 Am. Dec. 545.

Distinguished in State v. City, 36 La. Ann. 689, and Kimball v. Board of Commissioners, 21 Fed. 147, 148.

Municipal corporations.—Mandamus will not lie to compel municipal corporation to levy tax to pay its bonds, where municipality is without power to do so, p. 591.

Cited in Railroad Co. v. Barker, 6 Wyo. 399, 71 Am. St. Rep. 947, 45 Pac. 503, holding county cannot be compelled to levy taxes in excess of law, to pay bonds; Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 631, 74 N. W. 1003, holding where power of county is limited, levy beyond limitation will not be compelled; State v. Trannell, 106 Mo. 517, 17 S. W. 503, holding authorized tax is the only fund out of which bonds may be paid; Portland Bank v. Montesano, 14 Wash. 573, 45 Pac. 159, holding where corporations have levied to extent authorized, mandamus will not lie; United States v. Macon Co. Court, 35 Fed. 483, holding where law provides special tax, mandamus will not lie to compel larger levy; Stryker v. Board of Commissioners, 77 Fed. 574, 40 U. S. App. 583, holding mandamus will not lie to compel corporation to levy tax in excess of law; Clough v. Curtis, 2 Idaho, 494, 22 Pac. 10, holding mandamus will not lie to compel secretary of territory to expunge record.

Judgment creditor against county on its bonds, has no right to a levy of taxes which he did not have before judgment; it gives creditor no new rights in respect to means of payment, p. 591.

Cited in Sheppard v. Tulare Irr. District, 94 Fed. 5, holding judgment upon bonds does not enlarge fund out of which they are payable; Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 651, 653, 48 Am. St. Rep. 172, 174, 40 Pac. 1036, 1037, holding judgment upon claim payable out of revenue of one year, will not be enforced against revenue of another; Clay County v. McAleer, 115 U. S. 618, 29 L. 483, 6 S. Ct. 200, holding judgment creditor cannot compel levy by mandamus where county has exhausted its right.

Distinguished in Tague v. Taxing District, 36 Fed. 152.

99 U. S. 592, 25 L. 333, COUNTY OF MACON v. HUIDEKOPER.

Adjudged in conformity with United States v. County Court of Macon County, supra.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 592-593, 25 L. 293, TERHUNE v. PHILLIPS.

Evidence—Patents.—Supreme Court will take judicial notice that a thing patented was in general use before patent was issued, p. 593.

Cited in King v. Gallun, 109 U. S. 101, 102, 27 L. 871, 3 S. Ct. 86, 87, holding courts will take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge bearing on inventions; Black Diamond Co. v. Excelsior Co., 156 U. S. 616, 39 L. 555, 15 S. Ct. 484, holding notice will be taken of devices in common use for purpose of determining patentability. In the following cases, court took judicial notice that articles were not patentable: Office Specialty Mfg. Co. v. Fenton, etc., Mfg. Co., 174 U. S. 497, 19 S. Ct. 643, handholds for grasping books; Quirolo v. Ardito, 17 Blatchf. 401, 1 Fed. 610, stand for stereoscope; McCloskey v. DuBois, 19 Blatchf. 207, 8 Fed. 711, traps used for drainage; Reed v. Lawrence, 29 Fed. 919, spring tooth harrows; Legowski Pigeon Co. v. American Clay-Bird Co., 34 Fed. 332, spring latch; Phillips v. Detroit, 111 U. S. 606, 28 L. 533, 4 S. Ct. 502, construction of pavement. Cited in West v. Rae, 33 Fed. 47, Root v. Sontag, 47 Fed. 310, and Heaton Co. v. Schlochtmeier, 69 Fed. 595, all holding where court from its common knowledge, and without reference to pleadings, can say patent is void, a demurrer will be sustained; Wasson v. National Bank, 107 Ind. 220, 8 N. E. 103, holding courts will take judicial notice of what constitutes money capital of State; Eureka Vinegar Co. v. Gazette Printing Co., 35 Fed. 571, holding court will take judicial notice that cider is an alcoholic beverage. Cited, arguendo, in Eagleton Mfg. Co. v. West Bradley Mfg. Co., 18 Blatchf. 225, 2 Fed. 781. See 89 Am. Dec. 663, 694, note.

Distinguished in Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 761.

Patents.—Substitution of metal for wood in showcases is destitute of patentable invention, p. 593.

Cited in Potts v. Creager, 155 U. S. 608, 39 L. 279, 15 S. Ct. 199, affirming 44 Fed. 683, holding substitution of steel for glass scrapers is not invention; Florsheim v. Schilling, 137 U. S. 76, 34 L. 579, 11 S. Ct. 24, affirming 26 Fed. 260, holding substitution not involving change of method or novelty, not patentable; National Sheet, etc., Co. v. Garwood, 35 Fed. 660, holding substitution of material in the manufacture of tiles not patentable.

99 U. S. 593, 25 L. 399, ALVORD v. UNITED STATES.

Courts.— Counsel entering appearance under rule 9 of Supreme Court, will be held responsible for all that entry implies, until relieved by substitution of attorneys or otherwise, p. 593.

Courts.— Motion in Supreme Court to reinstate case, dismissed under rule 16, because not ready when reached, denied, p. 593.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 594-606, 25 L. 399, WHISKEY CASES.

District attorney has no right to agree to give immunity to accomplice testifying against one tried for offense against United States, p. 604.

Cited in Whitney v. State, 53 Neb. 305, 73 N. W. 702, holding agreement with prosecuting attorney, without consent of court, affords defendant no protection; State v. Judge, 48 La. Ann. 128, 18 So. 951, 35 L. R. A. 717, and n., holding district attorney may not enter "nolle" after conviction. See valuable notes in 40 Am. St. Rep. 768, 769, 774, and 31 Am. Rep. 522.

Distinguished in Camron v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 182, 40 Am. St. Rep. 766, 22 S. W. 682, Ex parte Greenhow, — Tex. Cr. —, 53 S. W. 1026.

Pardon.— Fact that accomplice has testified fully and fairly in accordance with contract with district attorney, who has promised immunity from punishment, is not a bar, but he is entitled equitably to a pardon, p. 605.

Cited in State v. Lyon, 81 N. C. 602, 31 Am. Rep. 520, holding fact that accomplice testifies, gives him equitable right to pardon, but does not bar prosecution; Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. 964, holding equitable right to pardon does not do away with constitutional right that no person need be witness against himself; Long v. State, 86 Ala. 44, 5 So. 448, holding a witness who testifies without promise is not entitled to equity; United States v. Simmons, 7 Fed. 713, holding conspirator who testifies is entitled to immunity, but not entitled to reward of informer; United States v. Hinz, 13 Sawy. 276, 278, 35 Fed. 279, 280, holding defendant testifying frankly entitled to "nolle" and court will postpone trial in order that application may be made for pardon; State v. Moran, 15 Or. 271, 14 Pac. 424, holding where, under agreement, defendant testified at inquest and then escaped, his testimony may be used against him.

99 U. S. 607, 25 L. 446, WHITNEY v. COOK.

Courts.—Under Supreme Court rule 6, where record shows color of right to dismissal, motion to dismiss may be united with motion to affirm, p. 607.

Cited in Hinckley v. Morton, 103 U. S. 765, 26 L. 607, The Alaska, 130 U. S. 208, 32 L. 925, 9 S. Ct. 463, and Chanute v. Trader, 132 U. S. 213, 33 L. 346, 10 S. Ct. 68, all holding same as principal case; School District v. Hall, 106 U. S. 429, 27 L. 237, 1 S. Ct. 417, and Davies v. Corbin, 113 U. S. 689, 28 L. 1150, 5 S. Ct. 696, both holding unless there is color of right to dismiss, court will not entertain motion to affirm.

Distinguished in Dzialynski v. Bank, 23 Fla. 45, 46, 1 So. 339.

99 U. S. 608-610, 25 L. 362, NATIONAL BANK v. BANK OF COMMERCE.

Courts.—Where writ of error to judgment entered below, October 5th, was made returnable in Supreme Court on "second Monday in October next," held, that return day might be amended under revised statutes, section 1005, and made returnable two months after an application made at that term, p. 609.

Cited in Walton v. Marietta Chair Co., 157 U. S. 346, 39 L. 727, 15 S. Ct. 628, holding writ of error may be amended by substituting name of administrator; County Commrs. v. Atlantic, etc., R. R., 3 N. Mex. 440, 441, 9 Pac. 523, 524, holding teste in writ mere matter of form, and may be amended and return day added. Approved, arguendo, in Sammis v. Wightman, 25 Fla. 553, 6 So. 174.

99 U. S. 610-619, 25 L. 421, STRINGFELLOW v. CAIN.

Appeal and error.—Where case was tried by jury, appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court from judgment of territorial court, is by appeal, p. 611.

Followed in Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 35, 29 L. 54, 5 S. Ct. 758. Cited and relied upon in Hecht v. Boughton, 105 U. S. 236, 26 L. 1018, holding whether appeal or writ of error depends upon whether case was tried by court or by jury; United States v. Hailey, 118 U. S. 235, 30 L. 173, 6 S. Ct. 1049, holding where suit is at law, review is by writ of error; Muhlenberg Co. v. Dyer, 65 Fed. 635, 31 U. S. App. 109, holding mandamus being proceeding at law, review is by writ of error. Cited, arguendo, in Cameron v. United States, 148 U. S. 305, 37 L. 460, 13 S. Ct. 597.

Courts.—Findings of District Court, adopted by territorial appellate court, held sufficient statement of case, under act of 1874, on appeal to Supreme Court, p. 614.

Cited in Haws v. Victoria Mining Co., 160 U. S. 313, 315, 40 L. 439, 440, 16 S. Ct. 286, 287, Wasach Mining Co. v. Crescent Mining

Co., 148 U. S. 297, 37 L. 457, 13 S. Ct. 601, Cannon v. Pratt, 99 U. S. 619, 621, 25 L. 447, Davis v. Fredericks, 104 U. S. 619, 26 L. 849, and Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 502, 34 L. 763, 11 S. Ct. 166, all holding bill of exceptions signed by trial judge may be used in Supreme Court of United States; O'Reilly v. Campbell, 116 U. S. 420, 29 L. 669, 6 S. Ct. 422, holding where territorial Supreme Court makes no findings, those of District Court may be used; Eilers v. Boatman, 111 U. S. 357, 28 L. 455, 4 S. Ct. 432, holding statement of fact as conclusion of law will be treated as statement of fact. Cited in Mammoth Mining Co. v. Salt Lake Machine Co., 151 U. S. 450, 38 L. 230, 14 S. Ct. 385, Haws v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 160 U. S. 311, 313, 40 L. 438, 439, 16 S. Ct. 285, 286, Bear Lake Irrigation Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 18, 41 L. 334, 17 S. Ct. 12, Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 323, 42 L. 482, 18 S. Ct. 133, Idaho Land Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 515, 33 L. 437, 10 S. Ct. 179, San Pedro Co. v. United States, 146 U. S. 131, 36 L. 914, 13 S. Ct. 97, and Næglin v. De Cordova, 171 U. S. 640, 19 S. Ct. 36, all holding where findings support the judgment it will be affirmed. Cited, arguendo, in Ogden City v. Armstrong, 168 U. S. 235, 42 L. 451, 18 S. Ct. 102, Salina Stock Co. v. Salina Creek Co., 163 U. S. 117, 41 L. 93, 16 S. Ct. 1039, Neslin v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 104 U. S. 429, 26 L. 803, and Gray v. Howe, 108 U. S. 13, 14, 27 L. 634, 1 S. Ct. 137.

Public lands.—Under act of 1867, establishing trust for benefit of townsite occupants, an occupant's rights might descend, under Utah laws, to his widow and children, but where sold by them to non-resident, their rights were extinguished, p. 617.

Cited in Missionary Society v. Dalles, 107 U. S. 346, 27 L. 548, 2 S. Ct. 680, holding person who abandons public land waives all title and interest in it; Clawson v. Wallace, 16 Utah, 306, 52 Pac. 10, Guthrie v. Beamer, 3 Okl. 662, 41 Pac. 650, Hagar v. Wikoff, 2 Okl. 587, 39 Pac. 283, United States v. Tithing Yard, 9 Utah, 281, 34 Pac. 58, all holding townsite occupant has such an interest as he may sell and convey; Lockwitz v. Larson, 16 Utah, 280, 52 Pac. 281, holding trustee must convey to one who derives title from occupant; Drake v. Reggel, 10 Utah, 384, 37 Pac. 584, holding where right exists in a class, its laches, or actions, binds those unborn; West v. Child, 8 Utah, 229, 30 Pac. 756, holding interest of widow and children is lost unless possession is retained; Goldberg v. Kidd, 5 S. Dak. 180, 58 N. W. 577, holding occupant at time of entry is the real owner; Cannon v. Pratt, 99 U. S. 622, 25 L. 448, holding person in possession is entitled to conveyance; Jones v. Improvement Co., 53 Ark. 194, 13 S. W. 1096, holding when patent issues to mayor, equitable title vests in the occupants; Pueblo v. Budd, 19 Colo. 592, 36 Pac. 603, holding ceasing to occupy does not affect occupant's right if he retains dominion over prop.

erty. Affirmed, generally, in Folsom v. Dewey, 103 U. S. 738, 26 L. 470.

99 U. S. 619-624, 25 L. 446, CANNON v. PRATT.

Appeal and error.—Case tried without jury by territorial court must be brought to Supreme Court by appeal, p. 620.

Affirmed in Cameron v. United States, 148 U. S. 305, 37 L. 460, 13 S. Ct. 597, and Næglin v. De Cordoba, 171 U. S. 640, 19 S. Ct. 36.

Courts.—Findings of District Court, adopted by appellate court of territory, may be used on appeal to Supreme Court, under act of 1874, p. 622.

Cited in San Pedro Co. v. United States, 146 U. S. 131, 36 L. 914, 13 S. Ct. 97, and Idaho Land Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 515, 33 L. 437, 10 S. Ct. 179, both holding, on appeal the weight and sufficiency of evidence will not be considered. Cited, arguendo, in Gray v. Howe, 108 U. S. 13, 27 L. 634, 1 S. Ct. 137.

Public lands.—Under act of 1867, establishing trust for townsite occupants, person in possession of townsite lot is entitled to the conveyance, p. 623.

Cited in Guthrie v. Beamer, 3 Okl. 662, 41 Pac. 650, holding occupant has such an interest as he may convey.

Appeal and error.—Error in excluding cumulative testimony is not ground for reversal unless injury is shown, p. 623.

Cited in United States v. Shapleigh, 54 Fed. 137, 12 U. S. App. 26, Sipes v. Seymour, 76 Fed. 118, 40 U. S. App. 185, and Lancaster v. Collins, 115 U. S. 227, 29 L. 375, 6 S. Ct. 35, all holding judgment will not be reversed unless error was prejudicial; Kingman v. O'Callaghan, 4 S. Dak. 635, 57 N. W. 914, holding presumption in cases of equity is that improper evidence was disregarded.

99 U. S. 624-628, 25 L. 333, COMMISSIONERS v. LELLEN.

Counties — Mandamus.—Where mandamus is awarded against a county in Kansas, the writ may be directed to the board of county commissioners and served upon the clerk; it does not abate if membership of board is changed. In this case peremptory writ was issued against the board, and alternative against its members, p. 627.

Cited in Wren v. City of Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 214, holding mandamus against common council is properly brought against it as a body; Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 484, 26 L. 523, holding mandamus may commence with one set of officers and terminate with another; Norwalk Light Co. v. Common Council, 71 Conn.

390, 42 Atl. 85, holding better practice for writ to run against the board; State v. Judge, 38 La. Ann. 45, 48, 58 Am. Rep. 159, 161, holding court has jurisdiction to punish members disobeying writ, where it is directed against the board; Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 193, 9 Atl. 817, holding mandamus issued to selectmen binds their successors; Brown v. Assessors, 53 N. J. L. 158, 20 Atl. 966, holding mandamus directed to board, binding on members and successors; Osborn v. Kammer, 96 Va. 229, 31 S. E. 20, holding order directing councilmen to make levy is an order directed to the council; United States v. Lauderdale County, 10 Fed. 462, holding officer who resigns is bound to obey unless his successor has qualified; Fox v. Trinidad Water-Works Co., 7 Colo. App. 405, 43 Pac. 1053, holding writ cannot be enforced against city treasurer who has turned over his funds to successor; State v. Warner, 55 Wis. 287, 13 N. W. 260, holding where there is continuing duty on secretary of State to audit claims, writ will bind his successor; State v. Supervisors, 67 Wis. 278, 30 N. W. 362, holding writ may be served by delivering a copy and exhibiting original; Board of Commissioners v. Young, 3 Wyo. 687, 29 Pac. 1004, holding suit must be brought in the corporate name established by law; Knox County v. Harshman, 133 U. S. 156, 33 L. 588, 10 S. Ct. 258, holding, in suit against county, summons may be served on clerk of county court. Affirmed, generally, in Leavenworth v. Kinney, 154 U. S. 642, 25 L. 336, 14 S. Ct. 1198.

Distinguished in Attorney-General v. Mayor of New Bedford, 128 Mass. 312, United States v. Elizabeth, 24 Fed. 851, United States v. Labette County, 2 McCrary, 31, 7 Fed. 323, Warner Valley Co. v. Smith, 165 U. S. 31, 33, 41 L. 623, 17 S. Ct. 227, and United States v. Butterworth, 169 U. S. 604, 42 L. 874, 18 S. Ct. 442.

99 U. S. 628-635, 25 L. 448, NATIONAL BANK v. CASE.

Corporations.—Where the G. Bank, holding stock of a national bank as pledgee, took over the same, causing a new certificate to be issued to it, in its own name, it became liable as a stockholder, nor could it thereafter evade liability by a colorable transfer under agreement to reconvey, p. 631.

Approved and relied upon in National Pipe Works v. Oconto Water Co., 68 Fed. 1011, Poole v. West Point Cheese Assn., 30 Fed. 518, State v. Bank of New England, 70 Minn. 401, 68 Am. St. Rep. 540, 73 N. W. 154, National Commercial Bank v. McDonnell, 92 Ala. 392, 9 So. 150, Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 203, Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 593, 31 N. W. 342, Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 516, 41 L. 846, 847, 848, 851, 17 S. Ct. 467, 468, 472, and Pauly v. State Loan & Trust Co., 165 U. S. 611, 613, 614, 616, 624, all holding pledgee of stock having legal title is liable as a stockholder; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 593, 29 Am. St. Rep. 164, 27 Pac. 676, holding registered owner of bank stock liable although procured to enable him to negotiate loan; Scott v. Latimer, 89 Fed. 853, 858, 60 U. S. App. 738, 745, holding one who for years has been stockholder in national bank is liable, although his subscription was procured by fraud; Witters v. Sowles, 24 Blatchf. 559, 32 Fed. 136, holding in valid sale of national bank stock for taxes does not change status of shareholder; Bowden v. Johnson, 107 U. S. 261, 27 L. 390, 2 S. Ct. 254, holding transfer by holder to avoid liability does not affect his status; Case v. Small, 4 Woods, 81, 10 Fed. 724, holding a person who purchases stock and has it transferred to a third person in trust is a shareholder; Davis v. Stevens, 17 Blatchf. 262, F. C. 3,653, holding person who, to conceal his ownership, takes stock in national bank in name of third person, is a shareholder; Hobart v. Johnson, 19 Blatchf. 362, 8 Fed. 495, holding married woman who purchases national bank stock through an agent is a shareholder; Stuart v. Hayden, 72 Fed. 405, 36 U. S. App. 462, holding transfer of national bank stock to escape liability, is void; Foster v. Lincoln, 79 Fed. 172, 45 U. S. App. 623, holding transfer of national bank stock to a daughter, in order to escape liability, is void; McKim v. Glenn, 66 Md. 484, 8 Atl. 132, holding broker who purchases stock for a customer, but who appears as owner, is liable as stockholder; Hammond v. Strauss, 53 Md. 16, holding standing on books, and receipt of dividends, unequivocal evidence of being stockholder; Shipley v. City of Terre Haute, 74 Ind. 300, holding city subscribing to stock in railroad liable as stockholder; Ricaud v. Wilmington Trust Co., 70 Fed. 428, 25 U. S. App. 434, holding executor who has bank stock transferred to him without designating estate, is not a stockholder; Welles v. Larrabee, 36 Fed. 869, 2 L. R. A. 473, and Baker v. Old National Bank, 86 Fed. 1009, 63 U. S. App. 37, both holding pledgee of national bank stock designated on the books as pledgee, not a stockholder; Simmons v. Hill, 96 Mo. 685, 10 S. W. 63, 2 L. R. A. 478, holding one who levies upon transferred stock and obtains no title, is not a stockholder; Cronin v. Patrick Co., 4 Hughes, 533, 89 Fed. 83, holding title does not pass to registered bond until transferred on books of obligor; Anderson v. Philadelphia Warehouse Co., 111 U. S. 483, 28 L. 480, 4 S. Ct. 527, holding unregistered pledgee, in good faith, incurs no liability. Cited in dissenting opinion in Meares v. Finlayson, 55 S. C. 118, 32 S. E. 989. Cited, arguendo, in Western National Bank v. Armstrong, 152 U. S. 354, 38 L. 474, 14 S. Ct. 575, In re South Mt., etc., Mining Co., 7 Sawy. 31, 5 Fed. 405, Corieck v. Richards, 3 Lea, 28, In re Argus Printing Co., 1 N. Dak. 437, 447, 26 Am. St. Rep. 642, 650, 48 N. W. 348, 351, 12 L. R. A. 784, 788, and n., Hebberd v. Land & Cattle Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 34, 36 Atl. 128, Richards v. National Bank, 148 Mass. 195, 19 N. E. 356, 1 L. R. A. 784, and Foster v. Broad, — Mich. —, 79 N. W. 703.

Distinguished in Robinson v. Southern National Bank, 94 Fed. 966, Sykes v. Holloway, 81 Fed. 436, 437, 439, Beal v. Essex Savings Bank, 67 Fed. 818, 33 U. S. App. 101, Lesassuer v. Kennedy, 36 La. Ann. 542. See elaborate notes in 75 Am. Dec. 321, 3 Am. St. Rep. 832, 841, 865, 57 Am. St. Rep. 81, and 68 Am. St. Rep. 542, 544, 545.

Corporations.—Transfer by stockholder for mere purpose of avoiding liability to corporate creditors, is a nullity as to them, p. 632.

Approved in Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 7, 42 L. 641, 18 S. Ct. 276, holding stockholder of national bank liable, notwithstanding transfer. See note to preceding syllabus.

Estoppel.—Bank cannot escape liability as stockholder in an insolvent concern by setting up its violation of law in becoming such, p. 633.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 79 Fed. 52, 53, 33 U. S. App. 747, holding national bank registered as stockholder in another national bank is estopped from denying its liability; Simons v. Fisher, 55 Fed. 909, 17 U. S. App. 1, 20 L. R. A. 557, holding bank cannot set up its want of legal capacity against payee of accommodation note made solely for its benefit; California Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 367, 42 L. 200, 17 S. Ct. 833, and Kennedy v. Savings Bank, 101 Cal. 498, 40 Am. St. Rep. 71, 35 Pac. 1040, both holding incidentally to its business, one national bank may become stockholder in another; Chemical National Bank v. Havermale, 120 Cal. 604, 65 Am. St. Rep. 208, 52 Pac. 1072, holding purchase of national bank stock by other national bank is ultra vires and void; United States v. Baxter, 46 Fed. 353, holding no man may set up in his own defense that he has violated the law. See 36 Am. St. Rep. 140, valuable note.

Distinguished in Citizens' State Bank v. Hawkins, 71 Fed. 371, 34 U. S. App. 423, Norwalk Savings Bank v. Metal Spinning Co., 14 Ohio C. C. 6, and Dayton National Bank v. Merchants' National Bank, 37 Ohio St. 215.

Banks and banking.—Determination of comptroller is conclusive as to the extent to which liability of stockholders of insolvent national banks shall be enforced, p. 635.

Cited and above doctrine affirmed in Columbia National Bank v. Matthews, 85 Fed. 939, O'Connor v. Witherby, 111 Cal. 528, 44 Pac. 228, and Fisher v. Simons, 64 Fed. 314, 28 U. S. App. 95, all holding receiver cannot recover on note made for accommodation of national bank; Hepburn v. Kincannon, 74 Miss. 693, 21 So. 570, holding receiver of national bank may recover on note given in payment of capital stock. Affirmed, generally, in Young v. Wempe, 46 Fed. 355.

99 U. S. 635-645, 25 L. 336, TRANSPORTATION CO. v. CHICAGO.

Nuisance.—That which the law recognizes cannot be a nuisance, so as to give common-law right of action, p. 640.

Municipal corporation constructing tunnel, by authority of legislature, under navigable river which crosses street, not liable for consequential damages to persons specially injured, pp. 640, 641.

Cited in Green Navigation Co. v. Chesapeake R. R. Co., 88 Ky. 8, 10 S. W. 8, 2 L. R. A. 543, and n., holding where Congress does not interfere, State may build bridge which obstructs navigation; Huse v. Glover, 11 Biss. 556, 15 Fed. 296, holding navigable waters wholly within State not outside of its jurisdiction.

Municipal corporation, in improving streets, acts as agent of State, p. 641.

Cited in State v. Railroad Co., 140 Mo. 550, 62 Am. St. Rep. 748, 41 S. W. 957, 38 L. R. A. 221, holding State acts through city as its agent in granting franchise to street railroad.

Torts.—Acts done in exercise of governmental powers, not directly encroaching on private property, although its use may be impaired in consequence, do not constitute a taking for public use, entitling injured person to compensation, p. 642.

Cited in the following cases, in which it was held there was no taking for public use: Talbot v. New York, etc., R. R., 151 N. Y. 162, 45 N. E. 384, change of grade on account of building bridge; Atwater v. Trustees, 124 N. Y. 608, 610, 27 N. E. 387, 388, erection of coffer-dam in building bridge, causing plaintiff's land to overflow for a season; City of Omaha v. Flood, 57 Neb. 729, 77 N. W. 381, street grading causing damage to abutting property-owner; Kehrer v. Richmond City, 81 Va. 748, damages resulting from elevating grade; Genois v. St. Paul, 35 Minn. 331, 29 N. W. 130, and Garraux v. Greenville, 53 S. C. 578, 31 S. E. 597, damages resulting from changing grade; Stein v. Lafayette, 6 Ind. App. 418, 33 N. E. 913, lowering grade so as to prevent ingress and egress; Archer v. City of Denver, 10 Colo. App. 418, 52 Pac. 88, fixing grade of street so as to prevent drainage; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 497, 500, 6 Pac. 320, 322, 56 Am. Rep. 111, damages resulting from street improvements; Wabash R. R. Co. v. Defiance, 167 U. S. 98, 42 L. 92, 17 S. Ct. 752, removing bridge crossing railroad and grading street to level of road; Colclough v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 186, 65 N. W. 1040, construction of viaduct the whole width of street; Home Building Co. v. Roanoke, 91 Va. 59, 62, 20 S. E. 897, building in a street of approach to a bridge; Seldon v. Jacksonville, 28 Fla. 588, 20 Am. St. Rep. 293, 10 So. 463, 14 L. R. A. 379, and n., erection in street of viaduct, preventing egress and ingress; Lane v. Harbor, Commissioners, 70 Conn. 695, 40 Atl. 1061, construction of new channel so as to cut off wharf; Holyoke Water Co. v. Connecticut River Co., 52 Conn. 575, works constructed in aid of navigation; Green v. State, 73 Cal. 37, 14 Pac. 613, damages resulting from construction of canal; High Bridge Lumber Co. v. United States, 69 Fed. 324, 326, 37 U. S. App. 234, temporary flooding as the result of improving navigable river; Mills v. United States, 46 Fed. 740, 742, 12 L. R. A. 677, 678, and n., construction of government dam which prevents drainage; Rutz v. St. Louis, 3 McCrary, 265, 10 Fed. 341, erection of dyke in navigable waters; Willis v. Winona City, 59 Minn. 34, 60 N. W. 815, building in street of approach to bridge supported by iron columns; Garrett v. Lake Roland Ry., 79 Md. 282, 286, 29 Atl. 832, 833, 24 L. R. A. 397, 399, erection in center of street of stone abutment; O'Brien v. Baltimore Belt R. R., 74 Md. 372, 374, 22 Atl. 143, 13 L. R. A. 129, 130, and n., construction in street of railroad by open cuts; Indiana, etc., R. R. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 547, 59 Am. Rep. 228, 11 N. E. 469, construction of railroad embankment in street; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 95, 96, 97, 19 S. Ct. 111, 112, permitting railroad to construct buildings and tracks in street; Ottawa, etc., R. R. v. Larson, 40 Kan. 308, 19 Pac. 664, 2 L. R. A. 63, and n., construction of railroad in street; Black River Imp. Co. v. La Crosse, etc., Trans. Co., 54 Wis. 681, 41 Am. Rep. 72, 11 N. W. 453, diversion of water from riparian owners in order to improve navigation; Payne v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 112 Mo. 17, 20, 20 S. W. 324, 325, 17 L. R. A. 631, 632, erection of dam by city, causing occasional overflow; Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 497, 48 N. E. 615, construction of sewers along line of natural drainage, causing pollution of stream; Cummings v. City of Seymour, 79 Ind. 499, 41 Am. Rep. 624, using highway by municipality for drainage purposes; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 275, 41 L. 1001, 17 S. Ct. 580, injury suffered by riparian owner from improvements in navigation; Benner v. Atlantic D. Co., 134 N. Y. 162, 30 Am. St. Rep. 654, 31 N. E. 330, 17 L. R. A. 224, and n., injury to plaintiff's house, caused by vibration of blast fired to remove obstruction in harbor. Cited in Costigan v. Penn. R. R. Co., 54 N. J. L. 240, 23 Atl. 812, holding building railroad embankment so as to force sale on abutting owner is a nuisance; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 164, 31 L. 640, 8 S. Ct. 821, holding city is liable for constructing viaduct, causing premises to overflow; Stearns v. City of Richmond, 88 Va. 907, 29 Am. St. Rep. 762, 14 S. E. 849, holding damages to walls twenty feet from street, caused by excavation, may be recovered; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 536, 16 Am. St. Rep. 608, 41 N. W. 682, 3 L. R. A. 253, and n., holding raising of embankment in street so as to bury part of house is a taking; Panse v. City of Atlanta, 98 Ga. 99, 58 Am. St. Rep. 293, 26 S. E. 491, holding damages may be recovered by lessee where city builds bridge so close as to prevent ingress; Rutz v. St. Louis, 2 McCrary, 346, 7 Fed. 439, holding petition alleging overflow of land from building a dyke, good on demurrer; Cohen v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 193, 1 N. E. 591, holding rule of principal case not followed in Ohio; Van de Vere v. Kansas City, 107 Mo. 88, 28 Am. St. Rep. 398, 17 S. W. 696, holding city will not be enjoined in consequence of noise and bustle incident to fire house; Cantini v. Tillman, 54 Fed. 974, holding prohibitory laws are not a taking of property for public use; Markey v. Queens Co., 154 N. Y. 683, 49 N. E. 73, 39 L. R. A. 54, holding county not liable for injuries sustained as result of defective bridge; Burford v. Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 106, 18 N. W. 572, holding municipal ordinance permitting coasting does not make city liable to pedestrians.

Cited, arguendo, in Rhea v. Newport, N. & M. R. R. Co., 50 Fed. 20, 23, Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 668, 31 L. 213, 8 S. Ct. 300, Monongahela Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 333, 37 L. 470, 13 S. Ct. 629, Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 587, 42 L. 287, 17 S. Ct. 981, Hughes v. N. P. R. R. Co., 9 Sawy. 328, 18 Fed. 117, Smith v. Gould, 59 Wis. 642, 18 N. W. 462, Town of East Montpelier v. Wheelock, 70 Vt. 396, 41 Atl. 434, City Council v. Maddox, 89 Ala. 183, 184, 7 So. 434, Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 159, 58 Am. Rep. 557, 10 Pac. 397, Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 311, 49 Pac. 191, and Denner v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 120, 125, 2 Pac. 10, 13. See elaborate note in 66 Am. Dec. 438, 16 Am. St. Rep. 612.

Distinguished in Telephone Co. v. United Electric Co., 42 Fed. 279, 283, 12 L. R. A. 548, 550, Rohan v. Port Jervis Gas-Light Co., 122 N. Y. 26, 25 N. E. 248, 9 L. R. A. 717, and n., Story v. New York Elev. R. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 154, 176, 184, 185, 43 Am. Rep. 158, Whitefield v. Town of Carrollton, 50 Mo. App. 103; Meyers v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 276, Mathews v. St. Louis, etc., Ry., 121 Mo. 319, 24 S. W. 597, 25 L. R. A. 169, and n., Railroad Co. v. Levee Commrs., 49 La. Ann. 572, 21 So. 766, Pensacola, etc., R. R. v. State, 25 Fla. 327, 5 So. 840, 3 L. R. A. 667, and n., Hot Springs R. R. v. Williamson, 45 Ark. 436, Johnson v. Parksburch, 16 W. Va. 420, 37 Am. Rep. 783, Mason v. Harper's Ferry, 17 W. Va. 420, Parke v. Seattle, 5 Wash. 9, 34 Am. St. Rep. 844, 31 Pac. 312, 20 L. R. A. 71, 5 Wash. 19, 21, 34, 32 Pac. 85, 86, 90, Holyoke Co. v. Conn. River Co., 22 Blatchf. 144, 20 Fed. 79, Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon Ry., etc., Co., 26 Or. 228, 46 Am. St. Rep. 622, 37 Pac. 1017, 29 L. R. A. 90.

Adjoining landowners.—One excavating on his own land must not remove land so near his neighbors that it will crumble away under its own weight, p. 645.

Adjoining landowners.—Right of lateral support does not extend to that which is placed upon the soil, increasing downward and lateral pressure, p. 645.

Cited in Ulrick v. Dakota Loan, etc., Co., 2 S. Dak. 291, 49 N. W. 1055, holding owner entitled to support of land in its natural condition; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 4, 56 Am. Rep. 582, holding owner has no right to support of his building from soil of adjoining owner. See notes to 30 Am. St. Rep. 836, 33 Am. St. Rep. 453, 34 Am. St. Rep. 848, 66 Am. Dec. 648.

99 U. S. 645-659, 25 L. 487, SPRING CO. v. EDGAR.

Animals.—Whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack mankind, with knowledge of its dangerous propensities, is prima facie liable to the person injured; hence defendant held liable to one injured by buck deer allowed to roam about defendant's park, kept open and accessible to the public, p. 656.

Cited in Benoit v. Railroad Co., 154 N. Y. 225, 48 N. E. 524, holding the fact that a horse has once run away does not, of itself, constitute a vicious tendency; Twig v. Ryland, 62 Md. 386, 50 Am. Rep. 226, holding burden is on plaintiff to show defendant knew dog was vicious; Bormann v. Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 525, 67 N. W. 925, 33 L. R. A. 654, holding employee assumes risk of injury from elk and deer.

Witnesses.—In action for injury by buck deer, expert testimony as to its propensities held admissible, p. 657.

Cited in Stevens v. Minneapolis, 42 Minn. 138, 43 N. W. 843, holding not error to permit expert testimony as to value of services; Lynch v. Grayson, 5 N. Mex. 504, 25 Pac. 997, holding experts may testify that cattle may be infected with Texas fever without its being visible; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Green, 77 Ind. 595, holding testimony admissible as to what constitutes a reasonable time in appointment of insurance agent; Bryan v. Town of Branford, 50 Conn. 249, holding engineer may testify as to probable cost of bridge; Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Novak, 61 Fed. 580, 15 U. S. App. 400, holding conductor may testify as to the necessity of having two brakemen; Erhardt v. Ballin, 55 Fed. 970, 14 U. S. App. 376, holding expert may testify as to commercial designation "hemmed handkerchiefs;" Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Harkins, 55 Fed. 936, 17 U. S. App. 27, holding expert may testify that revolving shafting is dangerous; St. Louis, etc., R. R. v. Bradley, 54 Fed. 633, 13 U. S. App. 68, holding opinion may be given as to effect of embankment in causing overflow; Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 481, 41 L. 235, 16 S. Ct. 1069, holding opinion of witnesses admissible that cattle were suffering from Texas fever; Soquet v. State, 72 Wis. 667, holding physician who has had no experience cannot testify as to the symptoms of arsenical poisoning.

Witnesses.—Whether witness is an expert is a preliminary question to be determined by the court, p. 658.

Cited in Mutual Ins. Co. v. Alvord, 61 Fed. 756, 21 U. S. App. 228, holding whether a witness is an expert is a matter of discretion with the court; Inland Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 559, 35 L. 273, 11 S. Ct. 656, holding whether a person is an expert is a question of law, and decision of court is conclusive.

Trial.—In determining the correctness of a charge the whole scope and bearing of it must be taken together, p. 659.

Cited in Pray v. Cadwell, 50 Mich. 224, 15 N. W. 93, and Bauskett v. Keitt, 22 S. C. 191, both holding the accuracy of the charge is to be decided from a consideration of the whole.

99 U. S. 660-668, 25 L. 306, EVANSTON v. GUNN.

Trial.—Specified objection to evidence is waiver of all others, p. 665.

Cited in Toplitz v. Hedden, 146 U. S. 255, 36 L. 962, 13 S. Ct. 71, holding where no ground of objection is stated, not error to admit copy of agreement; Hamilton v. South Nev. G. & M. Co., 13 Sawy. 120, 33 Fed. 568, holding objection that testimony is irrelevant and incompetent is too general; Fischer v. Neil, 6 Fed. 90, holding hearsay, unless objected to, admissible; Wheaton v. Beecher, 49 Mich. 352, 13 N. W. 770, holding exception must be confined to grounds of objection; Railway Co. v. Hackett, 58 Ark. 389, 41 Am. St. Rep. 108, 24 S. W. 883, holding objection that railroad company had no knowledge of employee's unfitness waives other objections.

Evidence.—Official registers, kept by persons in public office, are admissible in evidence; e. g., records of United States signal service officer to prove wind and snow, p. 666.

Cited in State v. Spaulding, 60 Vt. 234, 14 Atl. 771, holding copy of record in office of internal revenue collector admissible; Goodrich v. Senate, 92 Me. 251, 42 Atl. 410, holding calendar of sheriff, containing register of prisoners, prima facie evidence; Standard Elevator Co. v. Crane Elevator Co., 76 Fed. 790, 46 U. S. App. 411, holding certified copy of patent office records sufficient proof of assignment; Daly v. Webster, 56 Fed. 486, 1 U. S. App. 573, holding entry by clerk of District Court, showing deposit of "title," evidence in copyright suit; White v. United States, 164 U. S. 104, 41 L. 366, 17 S. Ct. 39, holding entries by jailer of date of receiving prisoners admissible.

Distinguished in Rollins v. Board of Commissioners, 90 Fed. 579, 62 U. S. App. 262.

Municipal corporations.—Municipality is liable for injuries to person, resulting from defective sidewalk; e. g., from stepping into a hole improperly covered over, p. 667.

Cited in Boston v. Crowley, 38 Fed. 204, and Greenwood v. Town of Westport, 63 Conn. 591, 60 Atl. 569, both holding town liable for negligent operation of draw over navigable stream; Lenzen v. New Braunfels, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 351, 35 S. W. 348, holding town responsible for failure to furnish water to extinguish fires; City of Galveston v. Posnanisky, 62 Tex. 129, holding city responsible for injuries resulting from defective walk.

Municipal corporations.—In action for injury from defective sidewalk, it is no defense that municipality was changing from township to village organization, or that the authority to make the annual appropriations from the village funds was in abeyance, p. 667.

Appeal and error.—In determining correctness of charge to jury it must be taken as a whole; error will not be declared merely because a portion is unsound if read apart, p. 668.

Cited in Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Linney, 59 Fed. 49, 19 U. S. App. 315, holding charge as to duty of railroad to furnish safe coupling must be taken as a whole; Schutz v. Jordan, 32 Fed. 62, holding misapprehension as to law not error if court correctly instructed; Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 111, 15 N. W. 39, holding instruction of court as to payment must be taken as a whole; Baltimore, etc., R. R. v. Mackey, 157 U. S. 87, 39 L. 629, 15 S. Ct. 495, holding charge of jury must be taken as a whole; Spalding v. Castro, 153 U. S. 39, 38 L. 627, 14 S. Ct. 768, holding charge, if correct, as applied to case will be sustained without reference to its general correctness; Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Miller, 92 Fed. 70, 63 U. S. App. 729, holding charge, with reference to suicide, taken as a whole, is correct; St. Louis, etc., R. R. v. Needham, 69 Fed. 826, 32 U. S. App. 635, holding erroneous instruction as to duty of master cured by subsequent instruction:

99 U. S. 668-674, 25 L. 265, LYON v. POLLOCK.

Principal and agent.—Letter expressing desire to sell held a sufficient authorization to enter into contract of sale but not to make conveyance, p. 672.

Cited in Farrel v. Edwards, 8 S. Dak. 431, 66 N. W. 813, holding authority to sell may be derived from letters and telegrams; Glass v. Rowe, 103 Mo. 536, 15 S. W. 340, holding power to sell includes power to make a valid contract; Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 190, holding letter expressing willingness to sell authorizes agent to enter into contract; Kleinhans v. Jones, 68 Fed. 746, 37 U. S. App. 185, holding parties may be bound by letters and telegrams. Followed in Lyon v. Hernandez, 99 U. S. 674, note, 25 L. 267.

Distinguished in Carstens v. McReavy, 1 Wash. 364, 25 Pac. 472.

Deed executed by agent, without proper power of attorney, though not good as conveyance, held good as contract to convey, and basis for decree ordering conveyance, p. 674.

99 U. S. 674, 25 L. 267, LYON v. HERNANDEZ.

Adjudged in conformity with Lyon v. Pollock, supra.

Not cited.

99 U. S. 674-676, 25 L. 308, PERRIS v. HEXAMER.

Copyright.—To infringe a copyright a substantial copy of the whole or part of book must be used, p. 675.

Cited in Morrison v. Pettibone, 87 Fed. 332, holding copies of photographs must be so perfected as to establish identity before constituting infringement; Simms v. Stanton, 75 Fed. 10, holding later writer on physiognomy may make a fair use of prior works; Burnell v. Chown, 69 Fed. 995, 996, holding no infringement where person, by original efforts, obtained information as to financial standing of business men; White Dental Co. v. Sibley, 38 Fed. 752, holding defendant's chart of teeth not being copy of plaintiff's, constitutes no infringement; Munson v. New York, 18 Blatchf. 238, 3 Fed. 338, holding bond and coupon register not subject to copyright.

Copyright of map does not entitle to exclusive use of signs and key adopted to render delineations intelligible, p. 676.

99 U. S. 676-683, 25 L. 404, ORLEANS v. PLATT.

Trial.—Where testimony is all one way, party has no right to ask a charge which assumes it is otherwise, p. 678.

Trial.—If facts are undisputed it is competent for court to direct the verdict, p. 678.

Cited and above doctrine affirmed in Bank of Sherman v. Apperson, 4 Fed. 28, Rauber v. Sundback, 1 S. Dak. 271, 46 N. W. 928, Helena National Bank v. Telegraph Co., 20 Mont. 394, 63 Am. St. Rep. 635, 51 Pac. 834, Finney v. Northern Pac. R. R. Co., 3 Dak. 283, 16 N. W. 505, and National Exchange Bank v. White, 30 Fed. 415.

Bills and notes.—Promissory note is sufficient consideration for sale of municipal bonds, p. 679.

Municipal corporations.—Railroad-aid bonds, issued under authority from county judge, and pending certiorari on appeal from his order, are valid in bona fide hands, though appellate court subsequently entered judgment of reversal, p. 681.

Municipal corporations.—Recitals in its bonds are binding upon municipality; hence where they show that the bond issue was made under the circumstances giving the requisite power, the municipality is estopped to dispute it, p. 682.

Cited in Color v. Rhoda School Township, 6 S. Dak. 653, 63 N. W. 162, holding recital that bonds were issued as the result of election, based on petition, binding upon county; Pompton v. Cooper Union, 101 U. S. 204, 25 L. 805, holding recitals that all the preliminary requirements had been complied with, binding upon county; Walker v. Detroit Transit R. R., 47 Mich. 350, 11 N. W. 192, holding company estopped from denying authority of person who issued the bonds; Lane v. Embden, 72 Me. 362, and White v. Santa Cruz, 69 Fed. 634, both holding recitals that requirement of statute has been complied with, binding upon the town; Rich v. Town of Mentz, 21 Blatchf. 496, 18 Fed. 55, holding where question is doubtful, bonds should be upheld; Gunnison County v. Rollins, 173 U. S. 264, 19 S. Ct. 393, holding municipality is estopped from denying truth of recitals; Lyons v. Munson, 99 U. S. 685, 686, 25 L. 451, holding where statutory authority is not denied, recitals operate as an estoppel; State v. Hart, 46 La. Ann. 51, 14 So. 511, holding fraud in diverting bonds from purpose intended does not affect innocent holder; Lytle v. Lansing, 147 U. S. 62, 37 L. 81, 13 S. Ct. 256, holding, where bonds are void, burden is on holder to show bona fides. Cited generally in Strough v. Board of Suprs., 119 N. Y. 215, 23 N. E. 553, Meyer v. Richards, 163 U. S. 413, 41 L. 210, 16 S. Ct. 1158 (affirming 46 Fed. 728), and State v. Caffrey, 49 La. Ann. 1769, 22 So. 1016. See valuable notes in 98 Am. Dec. 674, 684, 685, 51 Am. St. Rep. 824.

Distinguished in Hurt v. Hamilton, 25 Kan. 79, Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 245, 247, 10 So. 723, 724, Town of Lyons v. Chamberlain, 89 N. Y. 587, Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 290, 26 L. 140, Lewis v. Barbour Co., 1 McCrary, 463, 3 Fed. 194, and Audes v. Ely, 158 U. S. 317, 39 L. 1000, 15 S. Ct. 956.

Lis pendens.—Doctrine of lis pendens has no application to commercial securities, p. 682.

Cited in Tregea v. Modesto Irr. Co., 164 U. S. 187, 41 L. 398, 17 S. Ct. 55, holding adjudication that bonds are void not binding on innocent holder. Distinguished in Stevens v. Railroad Co., 4 Fed. 102. Cited, arguendo, in Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 467, 15 Pac. 857, and Salisbury v. County, 59 N. H. 362.

99 U. S. 684-686, 25 L. 451, LYONS v. MUNSON.

Municipal corporations.—Judgment of County Court, having jurisdiction, and charged with duty of deciding an application of taxpayers for issue of county bonds, is final until reversal, p. 686.

Cited in Andes v. Ely, 158 U. S. 317, 39 L. 1000, 15 S. Ct. 956, holding judgment as to legality of bond issue cannot be attacked collaterally; Scarborough v. Eubank, — Tex. —, 53 S. W. 575, holding decision of officers as to competency of signers of petition for removal of county seat conclusive. Distinguished in Town of Lyons v. Chamberlain, 89 N. Y. 588.

Municipal corporations.—Bona fide holder of municipal bonds is not bound to look further than the recitals therein, where the municipality possessed the requisite power to issue them, p. 686.

99 U. S. 686-699, 25 L. 491, BLOCK v. COMMISSIONERS.

Judgment is conclusive evidence of every fact upon which it was necessarily founded; hence county bondholder is estopped by judgment against their validity to which he was party, p. 693.

Cited in Snell v. Campbell, 24 Fed. 883, holding former adjudication, as to validity of tax, conclusive in action to set aside tax sale; Sauls v. Freeman, 24 Fla. 224, 12 Am. St. Rep. 199, 4 So. 532, holding judgment of mandamus to call an election for removal of county seat, bar to an injunction to prevent removal; Davis-Bradley M. Co. v. Eagle Co., 57 Fed. 990, 18 U. S. App. 349, holding decree in patent suit conclusive as to anticipations. Cited, arguendo, in Washington Imp. Co. v. Kansas Pac. Ry., 5 Dill. 490, F. C. 17,242, and Louis v. Brown Township, 109 U. S. 166, 27 L. 893, 3 S. Ct. 94.

Municipal corporations.—Innocent purchaser of coupons need not look further than to ascertain that the county had legislative authority to issue the bonds, p. 694.

Cited in Brown v. Milliken, 42 Kan. 776, 23 Pac. 169, holding township estopped from showing irregularities as against innocent holder; St. Paul v. Lamprecht County, 88 Fed. 453, 60 U. S. App. 86, holding issuance of bonds is a determination that preliminary requisites were complied with; Heed v. Cowley, 82 Fed. 719, holding recitals that qualified majority voted for bond issuance, binding upon county; Denison v. Columbus, 62 Fed. 778, holding decision that conditions of issuance have been performed, conclusive in favor of innocent holder. Affirmed, arguendo, in Rich v. Town of Mentz, 21 Blatchf. 406, 18 Fed. 55, Sheehan v. Martin, 10 Mo. App. 288, and Bank v. Stateville, 84 N. C. 174.

Judgment.—One who is not a party to a suit, declaring municipal bonds invalid, is not bound by the judgment, p. 695.

Municipal corporations.—Under Kansas statute, a bond-aided railroad company may be described in the submission to popular vote without mentioning its corporate name, p. 698.

Cited in Ninth National Bank v. Knox County, 37 Fed. 81, holding where route is described, order submitting question of subscription to voters need not specify name of corporation.

Municipal corporations.—Determination of commissioner as to railroad-aid bond election, that the requisite number voted favorably, is conclusive in favor of innocent holder, it is immaterial that subsequent to their issuance, a later board of commissioners discovered errors in the count, p. 696.

Cited in Smallwood v. Newbern, 90 N. C. 40, holding declaration by proper authority of result of bond election, conclusive in favor of innocent holder; Lewis v. Comanche County, 35 Fed. 348, holding decision as to poll-books conclusive in favor of innocent holder. Cited, arguendo, in Norment v. Charlotte, 85 N. C. 392.

Courts.—Federal courts are not bound to follow decisions of State courts in suits to determine legality of municipal bonds, made after their issuance, and after rights of holders had become fixed, p. 699.

Cited in Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 73 Fed. 730, holding judgment of State court, for recovery of license fees, binding on Federal courts. See elaborate note in 98 Am. Dec. 681.

99 U. S. 700-769, 25 L. 504, SINKING FUND CASES.

Constitutional law.—Act of Congress should not be declared void except in a clear case, p. 718.

Cited in Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 393, 40 L. 194, 16 S. Ct. 46, holding every presumption in favor of State law involving abatement of nuisance. Cited in dissenting opinion, in Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 106, 41 L. 647, 17 S. Ct. 274, dissenting opinion in Pollack v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U. S. 699, 39 L. 1147, 15 S. Ct. 944, and dissenting opinion in Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 27, 27 L. 845. Affirmed, arguendo, in State v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 504, 37 N. E. 948.

Constitutional law.—One branch of the government should not encroach upon the other, p. 718.

Cited and doctrine approved in the following cases, in which the acts therein mentioned were held to be legislative: People v. Board of Education, 54 Cal. 376, action of board in adopting series of readers; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 197, 198, 8 Pac. 854, imposing power on judges to fix stenographers' salaries; Wulzen v. Board of Supervisors, 101 Cal. 24, 40 Am. St. Rep. 26, 35 Pac. 356, opening and extension of street; Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 113 Cal. 670, 45 Pac. 857, order of city council for street improvement; Norwalk St. R. R. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 594, 37 Atl. 1086, regulation, location, construction and operation of streets. Cited in Board of Commissioners v. Northern Pac. R. R., 10 Mont. 420, 25 Pac. 1060, holding power to tax not a judicial purpose; Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 442, 21 N. E. 272, 4 L. R. A. 99, and n., holding power to appoint to office is an executive purpose; Clough v. Curtis, 134 U. S. 371, 33 L. 949, 10 S. Ct. 576, holding Federal courts will not assume to determine which of two bodies is the lawful legislative assembly. Cited, arguendo, in Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 137, 10 N. E. 609, and State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 26, 22 N. E. 646. See notes in 40 Am. St. Rep. 38, 13 Am. St. Rep. 135, and 18 Am. Dec. 236.

United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals, p. 719.

Cited in In re Pacific Railway Commission, 12 Sawy. 589, 590, 592, 32 Fed. 260, 261, 262, holding Central Pacific Railroad Company and United States stand upon equal footing as debtor and creditor; United States v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 433, 40 L. 760, 16 S. Ct. 584, affirming 70 Fed. 357, 360, 44 U. S. App. 68, 69 Fed. 38, holding Pacific railroad acts constituted a contract and imposed no personal liability upon stockholders of aided companies; United States v. Board of R. R. Commrs., 71 Fed. 439, 441, holding government has such interest in aided road as to give it the right of intervention in suit brought by State to establish rates.

Corporations.—Central Pacific railroad being a corporation created for public purposes, is subject to legislative control so far as its business affects public interests, p. 719.

Constitutional law.—Reservation of power to amend or repeal corporate charter gives State power to control all rights, privileges and immunities granted by State; hence, under such power, a government-aided railway may be required to make provision in advance for payment of its existing debts by the establishment of a sinking fund, pp. 720, 721.

Cited and doctrine applied in the following cases, in which the exercise of the reserve power was held to be lawful: Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 14, 36 L. 59, 12 S. Ct. 350, repeal of immunity from taxation; Mayor v. Twenty-third St. R. R. Co., 113 N. Y. 318, 21 N. E. 62, providing for payment by railroad of percentage of gross receipts instead of license; Buffalo, etc., R. R. v. Buffalo, etc., R. R., 111 N. Y. 141, 19 N. E. 66, 2 L. R. A. 387, act reducing fares agreed upon between railroads; State Board, etc. v. Morris, etc., R. R., 49 N. J. L. 222, 7 Atl. 840, act changing mode of ascertaining cost of railroad for purposes of taxation; Attorney-General v. Tooker, 111 Mich. 506, 69 N. W. 932, act giving minority stockholders right of cumulative voting; Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 476, 27 L. 412, 2 S. Ct. 274, congressional legislation for management and distribution of profits for benefit of stockholders; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 353, 28 L. 176, 4 S. Ct. 51, and Spring Valley Water Works v. Bartlett, 8 Sawy. 572, 574, 576, 579, 580, 582, 583, 584, 588, 590, 16 Fed. 628, 630, 631, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 641, 643, acts changing body authorized to fix water rates; Northern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Trail County, 115 U. S. 609, 29 L. 479, 6 S. Ct. 203, holding Congress may compel land-grant road to pay cost of surveying, selecting and conveying land; Phinney v. Sheppard, 88 Md. 638, 42 Atl. 60, holding State may change name of corporation; Webster v. Female Seminary, 78 Md. 206, 28 Atl. 26, holding State may authorize female seminary to lease part of its buildings; Jackson v. Walsh, 75 Md. 312, 23 Atl. 779, holding State may provide for representation in board of trustees of agricultural college; St. Louis, etc., R. R. v. Paul, 64 Ark. 87, 89, 62 Am. St. Rep. 157, 159, 40 S. W. 706, 707, 37 L. R. A. 506, State may impose penalty on railroad companies for failure to pay employees at time of discharge; Leep v. Railway Co., 58 Ark. 415, 431, 41 Am.

St. Rep. 113, 126, 25 S. W. 77, 82, 23 L. R. A. 268, 273, holding State may provide for continuance of wages of employees of corporations if not paid at time of discharge; Greenwood v. Freight Co., 105 U. S. 21, 26 L. 965, holding rights, franchises and powers are lost by repeal; Louisville, etc., R. R. v. Williams, — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 287, and Louisville, etc., R. R. v. Williams, — Ky. —, 45 S. W. 230, both holding legislature may change charter of railroad, with reference to limitation of actions; Norwood v. New York R. R., 161 Mass. 266, 37 N. E. 201, holding grade of railroad may be changed; United States v. Central, etc., R. R., 138 U. S. 87, 34 L. 896, 11 S. Ct. 286, holding Congress may prospectively determine what are net earnings of railroad; Sioux City R. R. Co. v. Sioux City, 78 Iowa, 746, 39 N. W. 500, holding additional burden of paving outside of track may be imposed upon railroad; Bullard v. Northern Pac. R. R., 10 Mont. 181, 25 Pac. 123, 11 L. R. A. 250, and n., holding right to regulate commerce paramount to right of railroads to enter into rebate contracts; Scotfield v. Railway Co., 43 Ohio St. 619, 3 N. E. 920, holding courts had power to prevent discrimination in freight rates; State v. Hamilton, 47 Ohio St. 83, 86, 23 N. E. 942, 943, holding gas company's vested rights not impaired by city erecting its own works; Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 580, 28 L. 1087, 5 S. Ct. 684, holding when corporation becomes insolvent or exceeds its franchise, State may reclaim charter; Opinion of the Justices, 66 N. H. 641, 33 Atl. 1083, holding State may take railroad under power of eminent domain; Ragan v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 621, 42 Am. Rep. 686, holding common carrier bound to carry at equal rates for customers in like condition; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 544, 42 L. 848, 18 S. Ct. 433, holding railroad company cannot fix its rates with reference solely to its own interest; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 474, 38 L. 1056, 14 S. Ct. 1132, holding act authorizing Circuit Courts to use their powers in aid of inquiries before interstate commission constitutional; Larkin v. Safarans, 15 Fed. 149, holding congressional act enlarging jurisdiction of Circuit Court of Appeals, applies to pending actions; United States v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 50 Fed. 36, holding telegraph franchise granted to railroad company is inalienable; Heath v. Union Oil & Paint Co., 83 Fed. 777, holding insolvency act, releasing attachment levied before passage, impairs obligation of contract; Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Tompkins, 90 Fed. 367, holding rates established by railroad commission are prima facie reasonable; Coast Line R. R. v. Savannah, 30 Fed. 650, 654, holding railroad cannot be compelled to pave greater portion of street than required by its charter; Downing v. Board of Agriculture, 129 Ind. 449, 28 N. E. 126, 12 L. R. A. 666, holding act transferring property of agricultural society unconstitutional; Story v. New York Elev. R. R., 90 N. Y. 161, holding building elevated road is taking of property for public use, where city sells lots under agreement to maintain streets; Detroit v. Detroit, etc., R. R., 43 Mich. 147, 5 N. W. 280, holding ordinance forbidding turnpike road to maintain gates within extended limits of town is unconstitutional; Railroad Tax. Case, 8 Sawy. 280, 13 Fed. 756, holding corporations may not be assessed differently from individuals; Parrotts' Chinese Case, 6 Sawy. 355, 357, 358, 1 Fed. 487, 489, 490, holding State law forbidding corporations to employ Chinese is unconstitutional.

Cited in following cases, in which the exercise of the police power of the State was upheld: State v. Peel Splint Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 838, 15 S. E. 1011, 17 L. R. A. 396, act making it a misdemeanor for corporations to issue scrip to its employees and providing manner of weighing coal; State v. Holden, 14 Utah, 90, 46 Pac. 760, 37 L. R. A. 106, eight-hour law as applied to miners; Commonwealth v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. St. 325, 30 Atl. 222, 25 L. R. A. 256, act regulating insurance; Eagle Ins. Co. v. Ohio, 153 U. S. 455, 38 L. 780, 14 S. Ct. 870, statute requiring returns to be made to State by insurance company; Austin v. State, 101 Tenn. 573, 70 Am. St. Rep. 709, 48 S. W. 308, act preventing bringing cigarettes into State; McCullough v. Brown, 41 S. C. 243, 19 S. E. 471, 23 L. R. A. 420, act giving State exclusive right to sell intoxicating liquors; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. 210, 8 S. Ct. 297, State prohibitory legislation; Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 413, 41 N. W. 752, 3 L. R. A. 361, local-option laws; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 684, 32 L. 256, 8 S. Ct. 995, prohibiting sale of oleomargarine; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 537, 36 L. 253, 12 S. Ct. 473, People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 11, 16, 15 Am. St. Rep. 467, 471, 22 N. E. 674, 675, 5 L. R. A. 564, 566, and n., and State v. Brass, 2 N. Dak. 500, 52 N. W. 414, acts providing maximum charges for grain elevators; White v. Highline Canal Co., 22 Colo. 197, 201, 43 Pac. 1030, 1031, 31 L. R. A. 830, 831, statute regulating distribution of water by irrigating companies; Smith v. Bivens, 56 Fed. 356, holding excepting piece of land from right of distraint for trespass not valid exercise of police power. Approved, arguendo, in West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. R. Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 481, 29 Atl. 344, Covington v. Kentucky, 173 U. S. 239, 19 S. Ct. 386, Gebhard v. Canadian Southern R. R., 17 Blatchf. 420, 1 Fed. 390, Canadian Southern R. R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 542, 27 L. 1026, 3 S. Ct. 373, United States v. Union, etc., R. Co., 160 U. S. 33, 37, 40 L. 330, 332, 16 S. Ct. 202, 204, United States v. Telegraph Co., 160 U. S. 67, 40 L. 342, 16 S. Ct. 215, United States v. Central, etc., R. R., 118 U. S. 238, 30 L. 174, 6 S. Ct. 1039, Southern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Poole, 12 Sawy. 546, 32 Fed. 456, Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 740, 27 L. 458, 2 S. Ct. 152, St. Louis R. R. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 409, 19 S. Ct. 421, and Citizens' Savings Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 647, 19 S. Ct. 534. Cited in dissenting opinions in Spring Valley Water Co. v. San Francisco, 61 Cal. 16, Brass v. Stoesser, 153 U. S. 405, 38 L. 762, 14 S. Ct. 862, and Central Pac. R. R. v. California, 162 U. S. 160, 40 L. 926, 16 S. Ct. 792. See notes in 7 Am. St. Rep. 721, 724, 25 Am. St. Rep. 889, and 44 Am. St. Rep. 613.

Distinguished in Stevens v. Memphis, etc., R. R., 114 U. S. 698, 29 L. 293, 5 S. Ct. 991, lien created under Tennessee act of 1852 for its railroad-aid bonds, was to secure the State, not the bondholders; Dow v. Railroad, 67 N. H. 35, 36 Atl. 538, Watson Seminary v. Pike Co., 149 Mo. 67, 50 S. W. 882, 45 L. R. A. 679, S. P. R. R. v. Commissioners, 78 Fed. 254, People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 49, 7 Am. St. Rep. 703, 18 N. E. 703, 2 L. R. A. 264, and n., and Atlantic, etc., R. R. v. Mingus, 7 N. Mex. 399, 34 Pac. 605.

Railroads are a peculiar species of property and railroad corporations are peculiar corporations, and it is especially fitting that the government should by its supervision protect investments in their stocks and bonds from loss through improvident management, p. 722.

Cited in State v. Central R. R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 300, 4 Atl. 617.

Corporations.—Stockholders have no right to earnings against the just demands of creditors, p. 724.

Railroads.—United States occupies towards Central Pacific railroad a dual relation, as sovereign and creditor; it is their duty as sovereign to see that the stockholders do not appropriate income which equitably belongs to creditors, pp. 724, 725.

Cited in In re Pacific Ry. Commsn., 12 Sawy. 590, 32 Fed. 261, examining powers of railway commission.

Constitutional law.—Act of Congress of 1878, requiring Central Pacific railroad to pay certain moneys into sinking fund to provide payment of its debts, does not deprive company of its property without due process of law, p. 725.

Railroads.—Though the sinking fund provided for payment of Central Pacific railroad's debt to the United States, by act of 1878, makes the secretary of the treasury custodian of the fund, it is not a present payment pro tanto, but only a sinking fund for payment as debt matures, p. 725.

Distinguished in Tennessee Bond Cases, 114 U. S. 698, 29 L. 293, 5 S. Ct. 991.

Railroads.—Though the Central Pacific railroad was a California corporation, yet to extent of powers and privileges granted it by United States by acts of 1862 and 1864, Congress retained right of amendment and of regulating its administration, so far as not inconsistent with requirements of original State charter; hence Congress might require establishment of sinking fund, p. 730.

Cited in United States v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 433, 40 L. 760, 16 S. Ct. 584, affirming 69 Fed. 46, holding when State corporation accepted grant it submitted itself to congressional control; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Union Pac. R. R., 1 McCrary, 592, 3 Fed. 731, holding State corporations accepting the benefits of Pacific railroad acts are subject to all their provisions; Central Pacific R. R. v. California, 162 U. S. 119, 40 L. 912, 16 S. Ct. 776, holding State corporation remains such, although it has received Federal assistance and franchises.

Constitutional law.—Act of 1878, requiring Central Pacific railroad to establish a sinking fund to meet its obligations to the government, varied the existing contract and was an exercise of judicial powers forbidden to the legislative department, per Field, J., dissenting, pp. 759, 760.

Cited in In re Pacific Ry. Commsn., 12 Sawy. 592, 593, 594, 32 Fed. 262, 263, holding United States cannot institute a compulsory investigation into affairs of Central Pacific.

Miscellaneous.—Miscited in Cortesy v. Territory, 7 N. Mex. 97, 32 Pac. 507, 19 L. R. A. 356.

The Citations in the foregoing annotations include all from the following Reports and all preceding them in each State or series:

U. S.	175	Mo. App.	79
Law. Ed.	42	Mont.	22
Fed. Rep.	96	Neb.	56
U. S. Ap.	63	Nev.	23
(excepting 58)		N. H.	67
Ala.	119	N. J. Eq.	57
Ariz.	1	N. J. L.	62
Ark.	65	N. M.	8
Cal.	125	N. Y.	160
Colo.	25	N. C.	123
Colo. Ap.	12	N. D.	8
Conn.	71	Ohio	60
Dak.	6	Or.	33
Del. Pennewill	1	Pa.	192
Fla.	39	R. I.	19
Ga.	107	S. C.	54
Ida.	2	S. D.	10
Ill.	181	Tenn.	102
Ind.	152	Tex.	92
Ind. Ap.	22	Tex. Civ.	19
Iowa	107	Tex. Cr.	38
Kans.	60	Utah	18
Kans. Ap.	7	Vt.	70
Ky.	101	Va.	96
La. Ann.	51	Wash.	29
Md.	89	W. Va.	45
Me.	92	Wis.	102
Mass.	173	Wyo.	6
Mich.	117	Am. Dec.	100
Minn.	73	Am. Rep.	60
Miss.	76	Am. St. Rep.	71
Mo.	150	L. R. A.	45

with duplicate references to the Reporter System and later cases, including

Sup. Ct.	19	N. E.	53
Atl.	43	N. W.	80
Pac.	58	S. E.	33
So.	25	S. W.	53

CASES

ARGUED AND DECIDED

IN THE

SUPREME COURT

OF THE

UNITED STATES,

IN OCTOBER TERM, 1879.

Vol. 100.

REFERENCE TABLE

OF SUCH CASES

DECIDED IN U. S. SUPREME COURT,

OCTOBER TERM, 1879,

AND REPORTED HEREIN, 1880.

VOL. 100.

AS HAVE ALSO BEEN REPORTED IN

10. OTTO.

10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.	10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.
1	Ex parte French,	529	82	Trade-Mark Cases:
4-5		530		United States v. Steffens,
6	Tintzman v. National Bank,	530		United States v. Witteman,
6		531		United States v. Johnson,	550
7-8	Garneau v. Dozier,	536	91-94
8-9	Soule v. United States,	536	94-96	" " "	552
9-12	" " "	537	96-99	" " "	553
12	" " "	538	99	" " "	554
13-21	Ex parte Reed,	538	100	Hurt v. Hollingsworth,	569
21-23		539	100-103	" " "	570
24	Railroad Company v. Fraloff,	531	103-104	" " "	571
24-25	" " "	532	104-106	Ricker v. Powell,	527
25-28	" " "	533	106-109	" " "	528
28-31	" " "	534	109-110	" " "	529
31-32	" " "	535	110-112	Elastic Fabrics Company v. Smith,	547
33	United States v. Hirsch,	539	112-113	Railroad Company v. Trook,	571
34-36	" " "	540	113	Lansdale v. Daniels,	587
36	" " "	541	113-116	" " "	588
37	Mining Company v. Taylor,	541	116-119	" " "	589
40-42	" " "	542	119	" " "	590
42	" " "	543	119	United States v. Curtis,
43	National Bank v. Insurance Com-			Curtis v. United States,	571
	pany,	547	123-124	" " "	572
43-46	Tillson v. United States,	543	124	Hatch v. Oil Company,	554
46-47	" " "	544	128-139	" " "	555
47-48	Fairfield v. County of Gallatin,	544	130-133	" " "	556
49-51	" " "	545	133-135	" " "	557
51-54	" " "	546	136-138	" " "	558
54-55	" " "	547	138	Brownsville v. Cavazos,	574
55	Cowell v. Springs Company,	547	139-140	" " "	575
56-57	" " "	548	140-143	" " "	576
57-60	" " "	549	143-145	" " "	577
60-61	" " "	550	145-146	Moore v. Simonds,	590
61	Emigrant Co. v. County of Adams,	563	146-147	" " "	591
62-64	" " "	564	147-148	Paving Company v. Mulford,	591
64-67	" " "	565	149-151	Clark v. Trust Company,	573
67-70	" " "	566	151-153	" " "	574
70-71	" " "	567	153	Hinckley v. Railroad Company,	591
72	Holden v. Trust Company,	567	154-156	" " "	592
72-74	" " "	568	156-157	" " "	593
75	Arthur v. Herold,	568	158-159	Dow v. Johnson,	632
77-78	" " "	569	159-162	" " "	633
78-81	Railway Company v. Twombly,	550	162-165	" " "	634

REFERENCE TABLE.

10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.	10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.
165-167	Dow v. Johnson,	635	333-336	Virginia v. Rives,	675
167-170	" "	636	336-338	" "	676
170-173	" "	637	339	Ex parte Virginia,	676
173-176	" "	638	340-341	" "	677
176-179	" "	639	341-344	" "	678
179-182	" "	640	344-347	" "	679
182-185	" "	641	347-350	" "	680
185-187	" "	642	350-353	" "	681
188-190	" "	643	353-356	" "	682
190-193	" "	644	356-358	" "	683
193-195	" "	645	358-361	" "	684
195-196	Savings Bank v. Ward,	621	361-364	" "	685
196-199	" "	622	364-367	" "	686
199-202	" "	623	367-370	" "	687
202-204	" "	624	370	" "	688
204-207	" "	625	371	Ex parte Siebold,	717
207-208	" "	626	373-375	" "	718
208-210	Phillips v. Moore,	603	375-378	" "	719
210-213	" "	604	378-381	" "	720
213	Hough v. Railway Company,	612	381-384	" "	721
214	" "	613	384-386	" "	722
214-216	" "	614	386-389	" "	723
216-219	" "	615	389-392	" "	724
219-222	" "	616	392-395	" "	725
222-225	" "	617	395-398	" "	726
225-226	" "	618	398-399	" "	727
226	Craig v. Smith,	577	399-401	Ex parte Clarke,	715
227-230	" "	578	401-404	" "	716
230-232	" "	579	404	" "	717
232-234	" "	580	404-406	" "	727
235	United States v. Perryman,	645	406-408	" "	728
235-238	" "	646	409-411	" "	729
238	" "	647	411-414	" "	730
239	Oates v. National Bank,	580	414-417	" "	731
239-241	" "	581	417-420	" "	732
241-244	" "	582	420-422	" "	733
244-247	" "	583	423-425	Packet Company v. St. Louis,	688
247-250	" "	584	425-427	" "	689
250	" "	585	427-430	" "	690
251-253	Trenouth v. San Francisco,	626	430	Vicksburg v. Tobin,	690
253-255	" "	627	430-433	" "	691
255-257	" "	628	433	" "	692
257	Tennessee v. Davis,	648	434	Guy v. Baltimore,	743
260-261	" "	649	437-439	" "	744
261-264	" "	650	439-442	" "	745
264-267	" "	651	442-444	" "	746
267-270	" "	652	444-445	Pierce v. Wade,	735
270-273	" "	653	445	Pierce v. Tough, Note,	735
273-276	" "	654	446-448	Case v. Bank,	695
276-279	" "	655	448-451	" "	696
279-282	" "	656	451-453	" "	697
282-285	" "	657	453-456	" "	698
285-287	" "	658	457	Removal Cases:
288-290	" "	659		Meyer v. Construction Com-
290-293	" "	660		pany,
293-296	" "	661		Construction Company v.
296-299	" "	662		Meyer,
299-302	" "	663		Railroad Co. v. Meyer,	593
302	" "	664	468	" "	597
303-305	Strauder v. West Virginia,	664	468-471	" "	598
305-308	" "	665	471-474	" "	599
308-311	" "	666	474-477	" "	600
311-312	" "	667	477-479	" "	601
313	Virginia v. Rives,	667	479-483	" "	602
314-316	" "	668	483-484	Hauenstein v. Lynham,	628
316-319	" "	669	484-487	" "	629
319-322	" "	670	487-490	" "	630
322-325	" "	671	490-491	" "	631
325-328	" "	672	491	Kirtland v. Hotchkiss,	558
328-330	" "	673	496-497	" "	561
330-333	" "	674	497-499	" "	562

REFERENCE TABLE.

10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.	10 Otto.	Title.	Here in.
500-501	Parish v. United States,	763	615-617	Insurance Company v. Gridley,	747
501-504	" " "	764	617	Kidd v. Johnson,	769
504-506	" " "	765	617-620	" " "	770
507	" " "	766	620	" " "	771
508-512	United States v. Bowen,	631	621-625	Wills v. Russell,	607
512-514	" " "	632	625-628	" " "	608
514-521	Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith,	699	628-629	" " "	609
521-523	" " "	700	630-639	Savings Bank v. Creswell,	713
523-526	" " "	701	639-642	" " "	714
526-529	" " "	702	642-643	" " "	715
529-532	" " "	703	644-646	Railroad Company v. Schutte,	605
532-535	" " "	704	646-648	" " "	606
535	" " "	705	648-655	Improvement Company v. Slack,	609
535	Mount Pleasant v. Cornell, Note ,	699	655-658	" " "	610
536-538	United States v. Murray,	756	658-659	" " "	611
538	" " "	757	659-660	Railway Company v. Slack,	611
539-541	People v. Weaver,	705	660-661	" " "	612
541-544	" " "	706	661-662	Railroad Company v. Blair,	587
544-547	" " "	707	663	United States v. Lippitt,	747
547	Williams v. Weaver,	708	665-667	" " "	748
547-548	" " "	709	667-670	" " "	749
548	" " "	710	670	" " "	750
548-557	Newton v. Commissioners,	710	671-672	Burns v. Meyer,	738
557-560	" " "	711	672	" " "	739
560-563	" " "	712	673	Branch v. United States,	759
563	" " "	713	673	" " "	760
564	Meeks v. Olpherts,	735	673-674	" " "	761
564-567	" " "	736	675	Nagle v. Rutledge,	772
567-570	" " "	737	676	Machine Company v. Gage,	754
570-571	" " "	738	676-679	" " "	755
571-573	Montgomery v. Sawyer,	692	679	" " "	756
573-576	" " "	693	680-684	Embry v. United States,	772
576-578	" " "	694	684-685	" " "	773
578	Dickerson v. Colgrove,	618	686	National Bank v. Burkhardt,	766
578-581	" " "	619	686-688	" " "	767
581-584	" " "	620	688-691	" " "	768
584	" " "	621	691-693	" " "	769
585-591	County of Cass v. Gillett,	585	693-695	Manning v. Insurance Company,	761
591-594	" " "	586	695-697	" " "	762
594	" " "	587	697-699	" " "	763
595-598	Railroad Co. v. Collector,	647	699-700	National Bank v. Graham,	750
598-599	" " "	648	700-703	" " "	751
599-600	Jones v. Blackwell,	752	703-704	" " "	752
600-603	" " "	753	704	Cox v. National Bank,)
603-605	" " "	754		Clardy v. National Bank, }	739
605	Shaw v. Railroad Company,	757	709-711	" " "	740
611	" " "	758	711-714	" " "	741
611-613	" " "	759	714-717	" " "	742
614-615	Insurance Company v. Gridley,	746	717-718	" " "	743

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 100.

A.		B.
Adams County, Am. Emigrant Co. v.	563	Bank, First Nat., of Cin., v. Burkhardt,	766
American Emigrant Co. v. County of Adams,	563	Bank, First Nat., of Montgomery, Oates v.	580
Arthur, Coll., v. Herold,	568	Bank, First Nat., of Mt. Pleasant, Tinstman v.	530
		Bank, Nat., of Carlisle, v. Graham,	750
		Bank, Nat., of N. Y., Cox v.	739
Ballard Paving Co. v. Mulford,	591	Bank, Nat., of Republic, v. Miller,	529
Baltimore, Mayor, etc., Guy v.	743	Bank, Nat. Sav., of D. C. v. Creswell,
Balt. & P. R. R. Co. v. Trook,	571	Com.,	713
Bank, Citizens', Case, Receiver, v.	695	Bank, Nat. Sav., of D. C. v. Ward,	621

CASES REPORTED.

B.		G.
Bank, Nat., St. Louis v. U. S. Ins. Co.,	547	Garnau v. Dosier, v.	536
Beckwith, Town of Mt. Pleasant v.	699	Giblin, McIntyre v.	572
Blackwell, Jones, Exrx., v.	752	Gillett, Cass County v.	585
Blair, Chicago & Pacific R. R. Co. v.	587	Gilman, C. & S. R. R. Co., Hinckley, Receiver, v.	591
Bowen, United States v.	631	Glendale Elastic Fabric Co. v. Smith,	547
Bowie, Weatherly v.	606	Graham, First Nat. Bk. of Carlisle v.	750
Branch, Admr., v. United States,	759	Gridley, N. W. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v.	746
Brownsville v. Cavazos, Exr.,	574	Guy v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore,	743
Burkhardt, First Nat. Bk. of Cin. v.	766
Burns v. Meyer,	788	H.
C.		Habeas Corpus Cases,
Case, Receiver, v. Citizens' Bk.,	695	Halliday, The Louisville v.	715, 717
Cass County v. Gillett,	585	Hatch v. Standard Oil Co. of Cleveland,	771
Cavazos, Exr., City of Brownsville v.	574	Hauenstein v. Lynham,	554
Chicago & Pacific R. R. Co. v. Blair,	587	Herold, Arthur, Coll., v.	628
Citizens' Bk., Case, Receiver, v.	695	Hinckley, Receiver, v. Gilman, C. & S. R. R. Co.,	568
City and Co. of San Francisco, Treasurer v.	626	Hirsch, United States v.	591
"Clardy v. National Bank,"	739	Holden v. Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co.,	539
"Clark v. Trust Co.,"	573	Hollingsworth, Hurt v.	567
Clark, Trustee, v. Eaton, Comr.,	573	Hotchkiss, Kirtland v.	569
Clarke, Ex Parte ,	715	Hough v. Texas & Pacific R. R. Co.,	558
Colgrove, Dickerson v.	618	Howe Machine Co. v. Gage,	612
Colorado Springs Co., Cowell v.	547	Hurt v. Hollingsworth,	754
Comrs. of Mahoning Co., Newton v.	710		569
Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., Sea v.	772	I.
Construction Co., Del. R. R. v. Meyer, Trustee,	593	Improvement Co., Ky., v. Slack, Coll.,	609
County of Adams, Am. Emigrant Co. v.	563	Ins. Co., Conn. Mut. L., Sea v.	772
County of Cass v. Gillett,	585	Ins. Co., John Hancock Mut. L., Manning v.	761
County of Gallatin, Fairfield v.	544	Ins. Co., Knickerbocker L. v. Schneider, Admr.,	694
Cornell, Exr., Town of Mt. Pleasant v.	699	Ins. Co., N. W. Mut. L., v. Gridley,	746
Cowell v. Col. Springs Co.,	547	Ins. Co., U. S., St. L. Nat. Bank v.	547
Cox v. Nat. Bank of N. Y.	739
Craig v. Smith,	577	J.
Creswell, Comr., Nat. Sav. Bk. of D. C. v.	713	John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., Manning v.	761
Curtis v. United States,	571	Johnson, Dow v.	632
D.		Johnson, Kidd v.	769
Daniels, Lansdale v.	587	Johnson, United States v.	550
Davis, Tennessee v.	648	Jones, Exrx., v. Blackwell,	752
Delaware R. R. Construction Co. v. Meyer, Trustee,	593	K.
Dickerson v. Colgrove,	618	Kentucky Improvement Co. v. Slack, Coll.,	609
Dosier, Garnau v.	536	Kidd v. Johnson,	769
Dow v. Johnson,	632	Kirtland v. Hotchkiss,	558
E.		Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Schneider, Admr.,	694
Eaton, Comr., Clark, Trustee, v.	573	L.
Embry v. United States,	772	Lammers v. Nissen,	562
Emigrant Co., Am., v. County of Adams,	563	Lansdale v. Daniels,	587
Ex Parte Clarke,	715	Lippitt, United States v.	747
Ex Parte French,	529	Little Rock & Ft. Smith Ry. Co., Shaw v.	757
Ex Parte Reed,	538	Louisville, The, v. Halliday,	771
Ex Parte Siebold,	717	Lynham, Hauenstein v.	628
Ex Parte Virginia,	667, 676	M.
F.		McDonald, North, Assignee, v.	535
Fairfield v. County of Gallatin,	544	McIntyre v. Giblin,	572
First Nat. Bk. of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt,	766	Mahoning Co., Comrs. of, Newton v.	710
First Nat. Bk. of Montgomery, Oates v.	580	Manning v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co.,	761
First Nat. Bk. of Mt. Pleasant, Tinsman v.	580	Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, Guy v.	743
Florida Cent. R. R. Co. v. Schulte,	605	Meeks v. Olpherts,	735
Fraloff, N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co. v.	531	Meyer, Burns v.	738
Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co., Holden v.	567	Meyer, Trustee, v. Delaware R. R. Const. Co.,	593
French, Ex Parte ,	529	Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Slack, Coll.,	647
G.		Miller, Nat. Bank of Republic v.	529
Gage, Howe Machine Co. v.	754	Mining Co., Union Consol. Silver, v. Taylor,	541
Gaines, Comptroller, U. S., ex rel. v.	733	Montgomery v. Sawyer,	692
Gallatin County, Fairfield v.	544

CASES REPORTED.

M.

Moore, Phillips v.	603
Moore v. Simonds, Admr.,	590
Mount Pleasant, Town of, v. Beckwith,	699
Mount Pleasant, Town of, v. Cornell, Exr.,	699
Mulford, Ballard Paving Co., v.	591
Murray, United States v.	756

N.

Nagle v. Rutledge,	772
"National Bank, Clardy v."	739
National Bank of Carlisle v. Graham,	750
National Bank of N. Y., Cox v.	739
National Bk. of Republic v. Miller,	529
"National Bk., Tintsmen v."	530
National Sav. Bk. of D. C. v. Creswell, Com. . . .	713
National Sav. Bk. of D. C. v. Ward,	621
Newton v. Comrs. of Mahoning County,	710
New York, People of, ex rel. , v. Weaver,	705
Nissen, Lammers v.	562
North, Assignee, v. McDonald,	535
Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Gridley,	688
Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, . . .	746
N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff,	531

O.

Oates v. First Nat. Bk. of Montgomery,	580
Olpherts, Meeks v.	735

P.

Packet Co., N. W. Union, v. St. Louis,	688
Parish v. United States,	763
Paving Co., Ballard, v. Mulford,	591
People of N. Y., ex rel. , v. Weaver,	705
Perryman, United States v.	645
Phillips v. Moore,	603
Pierce v. Tough,	735
Pierce v. Wade,	735
Powell, Ricker v.	527

R.

R. R. Co., Balt. & P., v. Trook,	571
R. R. Co., Chicago & Pacific, v. Blair,	587
R. R. Co., Florida Cent., v. Schulte,	605
R. R. Co., Gilman, C. & S., Hinckley, Receiver, v.	591
R. R. Co., Mich. Cent., v. Slack, Coll.,	647
R. R. Co., N. Y. C. & H. R., v. Fraloff,	531
"R. R. Co. v. Shutte,"	605
R. R. Co., Texas & Pacific, Hough v.	612
Ry. Co., Eastern Kentucky, v. Slack, Coll., . . .	611
Ry. Co., Kansas Pacific, v. Twombly, Admr.,	550
Ry. Co., Little Rock & Ft. Smith, Shaw v. . . .	757
Reed, Ex Parte ,	538
"Removal Cases,"	593
Ricker v. Powell,	527
"Rives, Virginia v."	667
Russell, Coll., Wills v.	607
Rutledge, Nagle v.	772

S.

St. Louis Nat. Bank v. U. S. Ins. Co.,	547
St. Louis, N. W. Union Packet Co. v.	688
San Francisco, City and Co. of, Trenouth v. . . .	626
Savings, etc., Co., Freedman's, Holden v. . . .	567
Sawyer, Montgomery v.	692
Schneider, Admr., Knick. L. Ins. Co. v. . . .	694

S.

Schulte, Florida Cent. R. R. Co. v.	605
Sea v. Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co.,	772
Shaw v. Little Rock & Ft. Smith Ry. Co. . . .	757
"Shutte, Railroad Co. v."	605
Siebold, Ex Parte ,	717
Simonds, Admr., Moore v.	590
Slack, Coll., Eastern Kentucky Ry. Co. v. . . .	611
Slack, Coll., Kentucky Improvement Co. v. . . .	609
Slack, Coll., Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. v. . . .	647
Smith, Craig v.	577
Smith, Glendale Elastic Fabric Co. v.	547
Soule v. United States,	536
Standard Oil Co. of Cleveland, Hatch v. . . .	554
Steffens, United States v.	550
Strauder v. West Virginia,	664

T.

Taylor, Union Consol. Silver Min. Co. v. . . .	541
Tennessee v. Davis,	648
Texas & Pacific R. R. Co., Hough v.	612
The Louisville v. Halliday,	771
Tillson v. United States,	543
Tintsmen v. First Nat. Bk. of Mt. Pleasant, . . .	530
"Tintsmen v. Nat. Bk.,"	530
Tobin, Mayor, etc., of Vicksburg v.	690
Tough, Pierce v.	735
Town of Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith,	699
Town of Mt. Pleasant v. Cornell, Exr.,	699
"Trade-Mark Cases,"	550
Trenouth v. City and Co. of San Francisco, . . .	626
Trook, Balt. & P. R. R. Co., v.	571
"Trust Co., Clark v."	573
Twombly, Admr., Kan. Pac. Ry. Co. v. . . .	550

U.

Union Consol. Silver Min. Co. v. Taylor, . . .	541
United States v. Bowen,	631
United States, Branch, Admr., v.	759
United States v. Curtis,	571
United States, Embry v.	772
United States, ex rel. , v. Gaines, Comptroller, . . .	733
United States v. Hirsch,	539
United States Ins. Co., St. L. Nat. Bank v. . . .	547
United States v. Johnson,	550
United States v. Lippitt,	747
United States v. Murray,	756
United States v. Perryman,	645
United States, Soule v.	536
United States v. Steffens,	550
United States Tillson v.	543
United States v. Wittemann,	550

V.

Vicksburg, Mayor, etc., v. Tobin,	690
Virginia, Ex Parte ,	667, 676
"Virginia v. Rives,"	667

W.

Wade, Pierce v.	735
Ward, Nat. Sav. Bank of D. C. v.	621
Weatherly v. Bowie,	606
Weaver, People of N. Y., ex rel. , v.	705
Weaver, Williams v.	708
West Virginia, Strauder v.	664
Williams v. Weaver,	708
Wills v. Russell, Coll.,	607
Wittemann, United States v.	550

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

AT OCTOBER TERM, 1879.

SHERMAN A. RICKER, Appt.,

v.

NATHAN POWELL ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 104-110.)

Bill of review—requisites to—leave to file.

1. A bill of review on the ground of newly discovered matter, can only be filed on special leave, which depends on the sound discretion of the court to which the application is made.

2. The party asking for a bill of review must generally show that he has performed the decree; especially if it be a decree for the payment of money, and he must likewise pay the costs.

3. The right to file a bill of review without leave exists only when the bill is brought for error of law alone.

[No. 933.]

Submitted Oct. 15, 1879. Decided Oct. 27, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Melville W. Fuller and William C. Goudy, for appellant.

Messrs. Julius Rosenthal, A. M. Pence and E. S. Isham, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court refusing the appellant leave to file a bill of review in that court. The facts are as follows:

On the 8th of April, 1869, one H. H. Walker mortgaged to Powell, the appellee, the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 5, T. 38, N. R. 14 E., 40 acres, to secure a note for \$40,500, payable twelve months after date, with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. The land was afterwards subdivided into blocks, and sold and conveyed at different times to different purchasers. On the 23d of July, 1874, Powell filed a bill in equity in the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois to foreclose this mortgage, making all persons parties who held title to the land under conveyances by the mortgagor. Among other parties were the appellant, Ricker, as owner of block No. 14; one Orvis, as owner of the south 100 feet of block No. 16; and Rogers, Greenbaum & Foreman, having a claim, by way of mortgage or deed of trust, on the north 201 feet of block 16. Ricker, in his answer, claimed that his block 14 should not be sold until after block 18 and the two portions of block 16, above described, had been exhausted. The several questions presented were litigated between the defendants, there being no defense as against Powell, the mortgagee; and on the 5th of June, 1875, a decree was rendered finding due him the sum of \$14,853.33, and establishing his lien on the whole forty acres, but directing that the property be sold in the following order, to wit: 1. The north 201 feet of block 16, subject to the claim thereon of Rogers, Greenbaum & Foreman. 2. The south 100 feet of block 16. 3. Block 14. 4. The interest of Rogers, Greenbaum & Foreman in the north 201 feet of block 16. The estate of Greenbaum and others was not defined in the decree, but in their answer it was described as a deed of trust to Rogers, executed by one Kinney, to secure a note of \$12,000 given to Samuel J. Walker, bearing date Nov. 25, 1872, payable three years after date, with interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, and owned by Greenbaum & Foreman.

From this decree Orvis, as owner of the south 100 feet of block 16, appealed to this court, and the case was docketed here Sept. 23, 1875. The appeal came on for hearing at the last term, and the errors assigned were, in substance, that block 18 and the north 201 feet of block 16, without any reservation in favor of Greenbaum and others, should have been sold before the south 100 feet of block 16. Ricker did not appeal, but he appeared by counsel and filed a brief on the hearing of the appeal of Orvis. Early in the term the decree of the circuit court was affirmed, so far as the order of the sale was concerned. Later, a rehearing was granted and further arguments filed, but on the second hearing the same decree of affirmance was entered. The final mandate was sent down from here May 15, 1879, and on the 21st of the same month Ricker petitioned the circuit court for leave to file a bill of review, on the ground of errors of law apparent on the face of the record, and which are the same as those presented in this court on the appeal of Orvis; on the ground of fraud and surprise in the entry of the original decree, he having been led to suppose that the decree would be entered for the sale of the north 201 feet of block 16, without any reservation in favor of Greenbaum and others, and not knowing that anything had been done to the contrary until he got the printed record in December, 1877, or January, 1878, when it was too late for him to appeal; and also on the ground of having discovered, since the original decree, evidence to show that when he, Ricker, bought block 14, the mortgagor was the owner of the note now held by Greenbaum & Foreman, and that he did not transfer it until September or October, 1873, and then only as collateral security for an antecedent debt which he owed of $9,000 or $9,500. No offer was made to perform the decree, so far as Powell was concerned, and the decree itself still remains unsatisfied.

NOTE.—Order of sale of mortgaged premises. See note to Orvis v. Powell, ante, 238.

See 10 OTTO.

Upon this showing the circuit court refused leave to file the bill of review, and this appeal from that refusal has been taken.

Without intending to decide that an appeal will lie to this court from an order of the circuit court refusing leave to file a bill of review for newly discovered matter, we are satisfied the refusal in this case was right. There is no dispute with Powell either as to the amount due him or as to his right to have the mortgaged property sold. The only controversies in the case are between the defendants as to the order in which their respective interests in the property shall be subjected. In these controversies Powell has no concern. His security is ample, and it is of no importance how he gets the money, which is his due, provided he gets it. He has already been kept out of it nearly five years because of the disputes between the different parties in interest as to their rights as between themselves. The delay thus far he has been compelled to submit to, because the parties were entitled to what was done as a matter of right. Now, however, they are asking a favor, for a bill of review on the ground of newly discovered matter can only be filed on special leave, which depends on the sound discretion of the court to which the application is made. Thomas v. Harvie, 10 Wheat., 146; Rubber Co. v. Good-year, 9 Wall., 805 [76 U. S., XIX., 828]; Story, Eq. Pl., 421 c; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 4th ed., 1577. "It may be refused, although the facts, if admitted, would change the decree, when the court, looking to all the circumstances, shall deem it productive of mischief to innocent parties, or for any other cause, unadvisable." Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 417; Griggs v. Gear, 3 Gilm. [8 Ill.], 2.

As the decree stands, a very considerable portion of the mortgaged property must be sold before that of Ricker can be reached. If that sells for enough to pay the debt, the bill of review would be unnecessary. What it actually is worth, or what it will be likely to bring at the sale, nowhere appears.

The rule is well settled, subject, however, to some exceptions, that "Before a bill of review * * * can be filed the decree must be first obeyed and performed. * * * Thus, if money is directed to be paid it ought to be paid before the bill of review is filed; though it may afterwards be ordered to be refunded." 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 4th ed., 1582; Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 406. Chancellor Kent thus states the rule and the reason of it in Wiser v. Blachly, 2 Johns. Ch., 488: "In the first place, the party asking for a bill of review must generally show that he has performed the decree; especially if it be * * * a decree for the payment of money, and he must likewise pay the costs, and nothing will excuse the party from this duty but evidence of his inability to perform it. Williams v. Mellish, 1 Vern., 117; Fittion v. Macclesfield, 1 Vern., 264; Cooper, Eq. Pl., 90; note to Bish. of Durham v. Liddell, 2 Bro. (P. C.), 63. This appears to be a settled rule, laid down both in the ancient and modern books; but the petitioners have paid no attention to this rule, for there is no offer to perform any part of the decree or even to bring the money into court, or any pretext of poverty, want of assets, or other inability to do it. There is wisdom in the establishment of such a provision, and it ought to be duly enforced. Its object is to prevent abuse in the administration of justice, by filing of bills of review for delay and vexation, or otherwise protracting the litigation, to the discouragement and distress of the adverse party." These words of this learned Chancellor are peculiarly applicable to the facts of this case. The decree, so far as Powell is concerned, is for money, and that it be paid to him. There is no pretense of any performance of this decree, or any offer to perform. The money is all due, and ought to be paid. The effort on the part of Ricker is to increase the liability of the first piece of property to be sold, not with any view to protect the interests of Powell, but only his own. Orvis, whose property stands second in the order of sale, is in no position now to insist that the interest of Greenbaum & Foreman should be sold before his property, because that question was settled here on his appeal. The dispute now is between Greenbaum & Foreman and Ricker as to whether their property or his should be sold first. The true way is to let the sale go on according to the decree until the property of Ricker is reached. Then let him pay Powell the balance remaining due, and, if he chooses and can get the necessary leave, file his bill of review to reverse that part of the decree which puts the sale of the interest of Greenbaum & Foreman after his, and thereby charge what he may be compelled to pay on them instead of himself. He makes no such offer in his bill, and fails entirely to give any reason why he does not. Clearly, under these circumstances, he was not entitled to the leave he asked, and his petition was properly denied.

It is contended, however, that the right to file a bill of review can only be denied when the bill is for newly discovered matter alone, and that as this bill is for errors of law, as well as newly discovered matter, the refusal of leave was equivalent to the denial of a strict legal right, which did not in any manner depend on the discretion of the court. The proposition may, with equal propriety, be stated the other way, to wit: that the right to file a bill of review without leave exists only when the bill is brought for error of law alone, and as this bill is for newly discovered matter as well as error of law, it can only be filed on leave, which rests in the sound discretion of the court. The application was for leave to file the bill as a whole, and not in parts; and if as a whole it required leave, the part which, if it stood alone, could be put on file without, must stand or fall with the incumbrances that have been attached to it. This bill, as a whole, could only be filed with leave, and consequently as Ricker has, by the form of proceedings adopted, voluntarily waived his strict legal right to file for errors of law without leave, he must abide the rules applicable to cases where leave is required.

As to the errors of law assigned, the bill is evidently bad, because the decree was rendered more than two years before the petition for leave to file was presented. Thomas v. Harvie, supra; but there is nothing now to prevent Ricker from asking leave to file another bill for the newly discovered matter, if he performs the decree as to Powell. Or he may wait until the property has been sold, which by the decree must be subjected before his, and then, on paying the balance remaining due, apply for leave to bring in the newly discovered evidence against Greenbaum & Foreman, and have their rights determined according to the facts as they shall thus be made to appear. But however that may be, upon the application as made below the leave was properly refused, and the decree to that effect is, consequently, affirmed.

Cited—2 McCrary, 229; 3 McCrary, 486.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, Plff. in Err.,

REES J. MILLER.

Jurisdiction as to amount—special allowance of writ of error.

1. When the matter in dispute, in a case brought from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, is less than $2,500, the judgment is not reviewable here.

2. The special allowance of a writ of error to reverse a former judgment in the same cause under which a reversal was had, cannot be made applicable to this writ.

[No. 240.]

Submitted Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Nov. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

On motion to dismiss.

Mr. R. D. Murray, for defendant in error, cited 20 How., 481 (61 U. S., XV., 974).

Mr. J. H. Bradley, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The value of the matter in dispute in this case is less than $2,500 and, therefore, under our ruling in R. R. Co. v. Grant [ante, 231], the judgment is not now reviewable here. The special allowance of a writ of error to reverse a former judgment in the same cause, under which a reversal was had, cannot be made applicable to this writ, because the case as now presented is entirely different from what it was before. In fact, after the case went back, it was made to conform to what, as was suggested in the opinion reported in 10 Wall., 157 [77 U. S., XIX., 899], might perhaps entitle the plaintiff to recover.

The motion to dismiss is granted, each party to pay his own costs.

Ex Parte IRA G. FRENCH.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 1-5.)

Bonds on stay of execution—severable judgment—informal writ.

See 10 OTTO.

1. Where a writ of error has been sued out to obtain the reversal of an entire judgment, and a stay of execution is sought only as to certain specified parts, and the judgment is severable as between the defendants, the bonds for such stay are sufficient, where they are far in excess in each instance of the amount recovered against the several defendants who seek the stay.

2. Where all the defendants want the judgment reviewed, but a part only desire to have the execution against them stayed, they may all join in the writ, and separate when they ask for a stay.

3. If the writ is informal, the remedy is by motion to vacate the writ, and not by mandamus to have the judgment carried into execution.

[No. 8, Orig.]

Submitted Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Nov. 3, 1879.

PETITION for mandamus.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. John Reynolds and S. O. Houghton, for petitioner.

Messrs. A. T. Britton and W. H. Smith, opposed.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the showing made on this application, it appears that French the petitioner brought a suit in ejectment in the Circuit Court for the District of California, against Lincoln, O'Ness, Onesti, De Silva and others, to recover the possession of a large tract of land. On the trial the court found, among other things, that the defendant Lincoln was in the separate possession of a specific portion of the tract, and the defendants O'Ness, Onesti and De Silva in the possession of another portion. Judgment was rendered, October 7, 1878, in favor of French against all the defendants jointly, for the recovery of the entire tract and the costs of suit, amounting to $959.25; and against Lincoln separately for $330, damages for withholding possession; and against O'Ness, Onesti and De Silva for $225, for like cause. Other separate judgments for damages were rendered against the other defendants, the aggregate of all the money judgments being $6,091.

On the 28th of October a writ of error from this court was sued out in the name of all the defendants, and the circuit court on the same day made the following order:

"And now, on motion of the defendants' attorneys, it is ordered that the amount of the bond to stay the execution of the judgment in this case, as to the possession of the land found by the findings filed herein to be in the separate possession of the defendant Lincoln, and also as to the judgment against him for damages and costs, be and the same is hereby fixed at $3,000. And it is further ordered that the amount of the bond to stay the execution of the judgment as to the land found by the findings filed herein to be in the separate possession of the defendants O'Ness, Onesti and De Silva, and also to stay the execution of the judgment against them for costs and damages, be and the same is hereby fixed at $3,000."

On the following day separate bonds were filed by the defendants named in this order for the designated amounts, and conditioned as required by law for the stay of execution, which were approved and accepted in due form by the Circuit Judge, and on the 31st of October the following order was made by the circuit court:

"A writ of error having been sued out and perfected by the defendants in said action, and defendant L. M. Lincoln having given the proper bond to operate as a supersedeas as to the judgment against him, and the defendants, Onesti, O'Ness and De Silva, having given a similar bond as to the judgment against them: ordered, that proceedings be stayed as to the moneys recovered against said Lincoln, and as to the sixty acres of land found by the court to be in his possession, as described in the findings in said cause; and also that the proceedings be stayed as to the judgment for damages and costs against said O'Ness, Onesti and De Silva, and as to the land found to be in their possession, as described in the findings of the court in this cause; and that a writ of restitution and execution issue as to the remaining defendants, and the remainder of the land recovered in the action."

Afterwards, French applied to the clerk of the circuit court to issue execution against all the defendants, as well those who had filed supersedeas bonds as the others; and this being refused, he moved the court to vacate its order of October 31, and direct the complete execution of the judgment. This also being refused, he now prays "That a writ of mandamus issue from this court to the circuit court, * * directing said circuit court to proceed and completely execute its said judgment, notwithstanding said writ of error and said orders of said circuit court."

The argument in support of this application is, that as when the judgment or decree is for the recovery of money not otherwise secured, the rule of this court (Rule 29) requires the bond for stay of execution to be for the whole amount of the judgment or decree; and as in this case the writ of error was sued out by all the defendants, and the aggregate of all the money judgments against them severally is more than $6,000, the bonds that have been executed are insufficient, and therefore no stay of execution has been lawfully perfected. The object of the rule, which was made to put into form the practice that had prevailed before its promulgation, is to secure the eventual payment or performance of the judgment or decree, the execution of which is stayed by the supersedeas, in case the appeal or writ of error is not prosecuted to effect. Here, although the writ of error has been sued out to obtain the reversal of the entire judgment, a stay of execution is sought only as to certain specified parts. The judgment is severable as between the defendants, and has actually been severed by the court below for the purposes of the stay of execution. We see no impropriety in this, as in legal effect the judgment as it stands is against each of the several defendants for the lands they respectively occupy, and the damages they are respectively liable to pay. In this view of the case the bonds are sufficient in amount and form. So far as the money parts of the judgment are concerned, they are far in excess in each instance of the amount recovered against the several defendants who seek the stay; and as to the damages on account of the detention of the property, we decided in Jerome v. McCarter, 21 Wall., 17 [88 U. S., XXII., 515], that the amount of the bond rested in the discretion of the judge or justice who signed the citation or allowed the supersedeas, and would not be reconsidered here.

It said, however, that if the judgment is separate, so that each defendant is entitled to a stay independently of the others, each must sue out his separate writ of error. To this we do not agree. The writ and the supersedeas are two separate things, and the writ can be sustained without a supersedeas. All the defendants want the judgment reviewed, but a part only desire to have the execution against them stayed; and we see no reason why they may not all join in the writ, and separate when they ask for a stay. There is certainly no settled practice against it, and very strong reasons can be found in its favor. The whole question is one of practice and not of statutory law. "Good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error or the appellant * * * shall answer all damages and costs," "if he fail to make his plea good," is all the statute, R. S., sec. 1000, requires; and the rules of practice are satisfied if the indemnity is commensurate with the damages that may follow from the stay which is effected. But if the writ is informal, the remedy is by motion to vacate the writ, and not by mandamus to have the judgment carried into execution.

The petition is denied.

J. O. TINSTMAN, Plf. in Err.,

v.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MOUNT PLEASANT.

(See S. C., "Tinstman v. Natl. Bk.," 10 Otto, 6.)

Jurisdiction as to amount.

Where the only controversy was as to the liability of the defendant for the difference between what he admitted to be due and what the plaintiff claimed, or $3,134.20, this is the amount actually in dispute; and as it is less than $5,000, this court has no jurisdiction.

[No. 842.]

Submitted Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Nov. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

On motion to dismiss.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. D. T. Watson, in support of motion.

Mr. Welty McCullogh, contra.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In Gray v. Blanchard, 97 U. S., 564 [XXIV., 1108], we held that a case must be dismissed, if, on examination of the whole record, it appeared that the value of the matter actually in dispute between the parties was less than our jurisdictional amount. This writ of error was brought by the defendant below to reverse a judgment against him of more than $5,000; but on looking into the record, we find that the case was heard on an agreed statement of facts in the nature of a special verdict, in which it appeared that the plaintiff claimed of the defendant $8,233.79, and interest from June 4, 1876. The defendant admitted that he owed this amount $5,099.59, for which the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment. The only controversy was as to the liability of the defendant for the difference between what he admitted to be due and what the plaintiff claimed, or $3,134.20. This, then, is the amount actually in dispute, and as it is less than $5,000, we have no jurisdiction.

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court depends on amount; interest cannot be added to give jurisdiction; how value of thing demanded may be shown; what cases reviewable without regard to sum in controversy. See note to Gordon v. Ogden, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 33.

The motion to dismiss is granted.

Cited—106 U. S., 582; 108 U. S., 174; 110 U. S., 53, 304, 388.

NEW YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

OLGA DE MALUTA FRALOFF.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 24-32.)

Carriers of passengers—liability for baggage—artifice—disclosure—what is baggage—excess of—statute.

*1. It is competent for passenger carriers by specific regulations distinctly brought to the knowledge of the passenger, which are reasonable and not inconsistent with any statute or its duties to the public, to protect itself against liability as insurers of baggage exceeding a fixed amount in value, except upon additional compensation proportioned to the risk.

2. As a condition precedent to any contract for the transportation of baggage, the carrier may require information from the passenger as to its value, and demand extra compensation for any excess beyond that which the passenger may reasonably demand to be transported as baggage under the contract to carry the person.

3. The carrier may be discharged from liability for the full value of the passenger's baggage if the latter, by any device or artifice puts off inquiry as to such value, whereby is imposed upon the carrier a responsibility beyond what it is bound to assume, in consideration of the ordinary fare charged for the transportation of the person.

4. In absence of legislation, or of special regulations by the carrier, or of conduct by the passenger misleading the carrier as to value of baggage, the failure of the passenger, unasked, to disclose the value of his baggage is not, in itself, a fraud upon the carrier.

5. To the extent that articles, carried by a passenger for his personal use when traveling, exceed in quantity and value such as are ordinarily or usually carried by passengers of like station and pursuing like journeys, they are not baggage for which the carrier, by general law, is responsible as insurer.

6. Whether a passenger has carried such an excess of baggage is not a pure question of law for the sole or final determination of the court, but a question of fact for the jury, under proper guidance as to the law of the case. And its determination of the facts—no error of law appearing—is not subject to re-examination in this court.

7. Section 4281, of Revised Statutes, has no reference to the liability of carriers by land for the baggage of passengers.

[No. 33.]

Argued Apr. 15, 1879. Decided Nov. 3, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.
The case is stated by the court.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice HARLAN.

NOTE.—What is included in baggage for which carrier is liable. See note to Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. Co. v. Swift, 79 U. S., XX., 422.

See 10 OTTO.

Mr. Elliott F. Shepard, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff below was guilty of unfair dealing, amounting to fraud towards defendant, and deprived defendant of just compensation, and prevented it from protecting itself against the immense risk, to which she subjected it without notice.

1 Story, Eq., 187; Gale v. Gale, 19 Barb., 249; Bacon v. Bronson, 7 Johns. Ch., 194; Bates v. Hewitt, L. R., 2 Q. B., 595; Richards v. Westcott, 2 Bosw., 589; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 616; Chic. & A. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 19 Ill., 578; Am. Exp. Co. v. Perkins, 42 Ill., 458; Relf v. Rapp, 3 Watts & S., 21; Kuter v. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co., 1 Biss., 35; Hellman v. Holladay, 1 Woolw., 365; Orange Co. Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend., 85; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y., 35; Pardee v. Drew, 25 Wend., 459; Great N. Railway v. Shepherd, 14 Eng. L. & E., 368.

It is fraud not to disclose the true value of articles intrusted to the care of a common carrier.

Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y., 542; Clay v. Wilan, 1 H. Bl., 298; Isett v. Mountain, 4 East, 371; Nicholson v. Willan, 5 East, 507; Bigbold v. Waterhouse, 1 Mau. & S., 259; Batson v. Donovan, 4 B. & Ald., 21, and opinion of Holroyd, J.; Parrott v. Anderson, 14 Eng. L. & E., 371.

The carrier made no contract, and had no obligation to carry any baggage for this passenger. Her right (if any) to have her baggage carried, arose only from the indulgence and courtesy of the carrier, which did not include articles of such prodigious value.

(1.) The common law liability of carriers as insurers, applicable to freight, never extended to passengers and baggage.

Aston v. Heaven, 2 Esp., 533; Feital v. R. R. Co., 109 Mass., 398; McPadden v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 44 N. Y., 478; Readhead v. Railway L. R., 2 Q. B., 412; Meier v. Pa. R. Co., 64 Pa., 225; Pitts., Ft. W. & C. R. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa., 512; Withers v. North Kent R. R. Co., 3 H. & N., 969; Cleveland v. New Jersey St. Bt. Co., 68 N. Y., 310; Queen's Bench, Cockburn, C. J., Stokes v. East. Cos. Railway, 2 Post. & F., 691; Wonder v. Balt. & O. R. R. Co., 32 Md., 411; Boyce v. Anderson, 2 Pet., 150; Bowen v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 18 N. Y., 408; Curtis v. Roch. & S. R. R. Co., 18 N. Y., 534; Hammack v. White, 11 C. B. (N. S.), 587, 594; Frink v. Potter, 17 Ill., 406; Munroe v. Leach, 7 Met., 274; Crocheron v. N. Ferry Co., 56 N. Y., 656; Dougan v. Champlain Trans. Co., 56 N. Y., 1.

If there is any common law regulation in New York State as to baggage, it is to be gathered from decisions in that State (3 Pet., 659) and it remains as stated and limited by Judge Nelson, in 1832, in Orange Co. Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend., 116; and, as he says, it grows out of the "custom or the courtesy of the carrier; * * * but courts ought not to allow this gratuity or custom to be abused; * * * nor to include articles not within the object or intent of the indulgence of the carrier."

Nordmeyer v. Loescher, 1 Hilt., 449; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill, 586; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 594; Dexter v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. R. Co., 42 N. Y., 326.

The American courts have decided that carriers are not liable for the following articles in a passenger's baggage, however convenient or useful to the passenger:

Not for silverware. Bell v. Drew, 4 E. D.

Smith, 59; Knowlton v. Harlem R. R. Co. (not reported), Marine Court, N. Y. City, 1874.

Not for merchandise or samples. Pardee v. Drew, 25 Wend., 459; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill, 589. Same rule in England. Great Nor. Railway Co. v. Shepherd, 14 Eng. L. & E., 368; Green v. Hudson River R. R. Co., MS.

Not for jewelry. Richards v. Westcott, 2 Bos., 589; Nevins v. Bay St. Co., 4 Bos., 225; The "Ionic," 5 Blatchf., 538; Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall., 263 (79 U. S., XX., 423).

Not for presents for friends. Nevins v. Bay St. Steamboat Co., 4 Bos., 225. (Even though cloth for a dress.) Dexter v. Syracuse, etc., R. R. Co., 42 N. Y., 326.

Not for Masonic regalia (although it is apparel); Nevins Bay State Co. (supra).

Not for money. Orange County Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend., 85. "The Ionic," supra. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 19 Ill., 578; Hickox v. Navigatuck R. R. Co., 31 Conn., 284.

Not for anything carried for the purpose of transportation. Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 594.

Not for two pistols. Both had been allowed by the jury, and the appellate court struck out one. Chi., R. I. & Pac. R. R. Co. v. Collins, 56 Ill., 212.

Not for an article of great value. Hellman v. Holaday, 1 Woolw., Miller, J., 365.

Not for unpublished manuscripts. Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. Co. v. Swift (supra).

Not for a trunk of laces. Dibble v. Brown, 12 Ga., 218, 227.

The general railroad law of New York provides for the carriage of ordinary baggage only, which these priceless cobwebs, these heirlooms, more valuable than gold or gems, and like nothing seen in this country before or since, are not.

Carriers are liable for ordinary baggage only, in moderate quantities, such as is usually taken by travellers; but plaintiff sues for extraordinary articles in immoderate quantities.

Nordmeyer v. Loescher, 1 Hill., 499; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill, 586; Dexter v. Syracuse, etc. R. R. Co., 42 N. Y., 326; Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. Co. v. Swift (supra).

Mr. James W. Gerard, for defendant in error:

As to the correctness of the law laid down by the Judge below, that carriers are responsible for reasonable and ordinary baggage for the journey according to the passenger's condition, we claim that the plaintiff can recover for the value of such articles of baggage as are shown to be suitable to her station in life; and the value and amount is to be estimated, not for the mere portion of her transit on which the baggage was lost, but may embrace the general contemplated journey, and may include such an allowance for apparel under various circumstances or accidents, and for sojourning by the way, as a reasonably prudent person would consider it necessary to make.

Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 594; Nevins v. Bay State, 4 Bos., 225.

Furthermore, the question, what articles in a passenger's trunk were necessary for the journey, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury.

Rawson v. Penn. R. R. Co., 2 Abb. N. S., 220; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 594.

Whether, therefore, the articles lost were or were not ordinary and reasonable luggage under the circumstances of the case, was a question of fact for the jury; and the general evidence in the case showed that the laces lost were commonly worn by the plaintiff, and could be changed from one dress to another, and were so used by her, and that they were part of a lady's dress generally worn by people of her position in life.

As to the great value of the laces in question, we have not claimed their full value, nor have the jury given it to us. All we have claimed is a reasonable satisfaction for such part of the loss as we would be entitled to recover under such circumstances. What is a reasonable amount was properly, under the court's direction, left to the jury, they having the right to apply their reason and their judgment to the case, under all the evidence given, just as they are always allowed to do in cases of this character, as is well sustained by authority.

Laces were evidently, by the common law, articles for the value of which a loss could have been recovered. The fact of the special exemption of them and other articles under the English Carriers Act, demonstrates that.

Cases show that judgments have been recovered against carriers as baggage, for dueling pistols, Woods v. Devin, 13 Ill., 746; valuable jewelry, McGill v. Roiland, 3 Barr., 451; Rawson v. Pa. R. R. Co., 2 Abb. Pr. (N. S.), 220; five franc pieces, Cam. & Amb. R. R. Co. v. Baldant, 16 Pa., 67; feather beds, looking-glasses, dishes, Parmalee v. Fischer, 22 Ill., 212; watches, Jones v. Voorhees, 10 Ohio, 145; money, Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y., 594; manuscript books, Hopkins v. Westcott, 6 Blatchf., 64; see, also, Dexter v. Syracuse, etc. R. R. Co., 42 N. Y., 326; Glasco v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 36 Barb., 558; Nevins v. Bay St. S. Co., 4 Bosw., N. Y., 225.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered against the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, in an action to recover the value of certain articles of wearing apparel alleged to have been taken from the trunk of the defendant in error while a passenger upon the cars of the Company, and while the trunk was in its charge for transportation as part of her baggage.

There was evidence before the jury tending to establish the following facts:

The defendant in error, a subject of the Czar of Russia, possessing large wealth, and enjoying high social position among her own people, after traveling in Europe, Asia and Africa, spending some time in London and Paris, visited America in the year 1869, for the double purpose of benefiting her health and seeing this country. She brought with her to the United States six trunks of ordinary travel-worn appearance, containing a large quantity of wearing apparel, including many elegant, costly dresses, and also rare and valuable laces, which she had been accustomed to wear upon different dresses when on visits, or frequenting theaters, or attending dinners, balls and receptions. A portion of the laces was made by her ancestors upon their estates in Russia. After remaining some weeks in the City of New York she started upon a journey westward, going first to Albany, and taking with her, among other things, two of the trunks brought to this country. Her ultimate purpose was to visit a warmer climate and, upon reaching Chicago, to determine whether to visit California, New Orleans, Havana and, probably, Rio Janeiro. After passing a day or so at Albany, she took passage on the cars of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company for Niagara Falls, delivering to the authorized agents of the Company for transportation as her baggage the two trunks above described, which contained the larger portion of the dress laces brought with her from Europe. Upon arriving at Niagara Falls she ascertained that one of the trunks, during transportation from Albany to the Falls, had been materially injured, its locks broken, its contents disturbed and more than two hundred yards of dress-lace abstracted from the trunk in which it had been carefully placed before she left the City of New York. The Company declined to pay the sum demanded as the value of the missing laces; and, having denied all liability therefor, this action was instituted to recover the damages which the defendant in error claimed to have sustained by reason of the loss of her property.

Upon the first trial of the case in 1873, the jury, being unable to agree, was discharged. A second trial took place in the year 1875. Upon the conclusion of the evidence in chief at the last trial, the Company moved a dismissal of the action, and, at the same time, submitted numerous instructions which it asked to be then given to the jury, among which was one peremptorily directing a verdict in its favor. That motion was overruled, and the court declined to instruct the jury as requested. Subsequently, upon the conclusion of the evidence upon both sides, the motion for a peremptory instruction in behalf of the Company was renewed, and again overruled. The court thereupon gave its charge, to which the Company filed numerous exceptions, and also submitted written requests, forty-two in number, for instructions to the jury. The court refused to instruct the jury as asked, or otherwise than as shown in its own charge. To the action of the court in the several respects indicated, the Company excepted in due form. The jury returned a verdict against the Company for the sum of $10,000, although the evidence, in some of its aspects, placed the value of the missing laces very far in excess of that amount.

It would extend this opinion to an improper length and could serve no useful purpose, were we to enter upon a discussion of the various exceptions, unusual in their number, to the action of the court in the admission and exclusion of evidence, as well as in refusing to charge the jury as requested by the Company. Certain controlling propositions are presented for our consideration, and upon their determination the substantial rights of parties seem to depend. If, in respect of these propositions, no error was committed, the judgment should be affirmed without any reference to points of a minor and merely technical nature, which do not involve the merits of the case, or the just rights of the parties.

In behalf of the Company it is earnestly claimed that the court erred in not giving a peremptory instruction for a verdict in its behalf. This position, however, is wholly untenable. Had there been no serious controversy about the facts, and had the law upon the undisputed evidence precluded any recovery whatever against the Company, such an instruction would have been proper. Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall., 369 [68 U. S., XVII., 646]; Parks v. Ross, 11 How., 372; Richardson v. Boston, 19 How., 269 [60 U. S., XV., 642]; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall., 121 [89 U. S., XXII., 782]. The court could not have given such an instruction in this case without usurping the functions of the jury. This will, however, more clearly appear from what is said in the course of this opinion.

The main contention of the Company, upon the trial below, was, that good faith required the defendant in error, when delivering her trunks for transportation, to inform its agents of the peculiar character and extraordinary value of the laces in question; and that her failure in that respect, whether intentional or not, was, in itself, a fraud upon the carrier, which should prevent any recovery in this action.

The circuit court refused and, in our opinion, rightly, to so instruct the jury. We are not referred to any legislative enactment restricting or limiting the responsibility of passenger carriers by land for articles carried as baggage. Nor is it pretended that the plaintiff in error had, at the date of these transactions, established or promulgated any regulation as to the quantity or the value of baggage which passengers upon its cars might carry, without extra compensation, under the general contract to carry the person. Further, it is not claimed that any inquiry was made of the defendant in error, either when the trunks were taken into the custody of the carrier, or at any time prior to the alleged loss, as to the value of their contents. It is undoubtedly competent for carriers of passengers, by specific regulations, distinctly brought to the knowledge of the passenger, which are reasonable in their character and not inconsistent with any statute or their duties to the public, to protect themselves against liability, as insurers, for baggage exceeding a fixed amount in value, except upon additional compensation, proportioned to the risk. And in order that such regulations may be practically effective, and the carrier advised of the full extent of its responsibility and, consequently, of the degree of precaution necessary upon its part, it may rightfully require, as a condition precedent to any contract for the transportation of baggage, information from the passenger as to its value; and if the value thus disclosed exceeds that which the passenger may reasonably demand to be transported as baggage without extra compensation, the carrier, at its option, can make such additional charge as the risk fairly justifies. It is also undoubtedly true that the carrier may be discharged from liability for the full value of the passenger's baggage, if the latter, by false statements, or by any device or artifice, puts off inquiry as to such value, whereby is imposed upon the carrier responsibility beyond what it was bound to assume in consideration of the ordinary fare charged for the transportation of the person. But, in the absence of legislation limiting the responsibility of carriers for the baggage of passengers; in the absence of reasonable regulations upon the subject, by the carrier, of which the passenger has knowledge; in the absence of inquiry of the passenger as to the value of the articles carried, under the name of baggage, for his personal use and convenience when traveling; and in the absence of conduct upon the part of the passenger misleading the carrier as to the value of his baggage, the court cannot, as matter of law, declare, as it was in effect requested in this case to do, that the mere failure of the passenger, unasked, to disclose the value of his baggage is a fraud upon the carrier, which defeats all right of recovery. The instructions asked by the Company virtually assumed that the general law governing the rights, duties and responsibilities of passenger carriers prescribed a definite, fixed limit of value, beyond which the carrier was not liable for baggage, except under a special contract or upon previous notice as to value. We are not, however, referred to any adjudged case, or to any elementary treatise which sustains that proposition, without qualification. In the very nature of things, no such rule could be established by the courts in virtue of any inherent power they possess. The quantity or kind or value of the baggage which a passenger may carry under the contract for the transportation of his person depends upon a variety of circumstances which do not exist in every case. "That which one traveler," says Erle, C. J., in Phelps v. Northwestern Railway Co., 19 C. B. (N. S.), 321, "would consider indispensable, would be deemed superfluous and unnecessary by another. But the general habits and wants of mankind will be taken in the mind of the carrier when he receives a passenger for conveyance." Some of the cases seem to announce the broad doctrine that, by general law, in the absence of legislation, or special regulations by the carrier, of the character indicated, a passenger may take, without extra compensation, such articles adapted to personal use, as his necessities, comfort, convenience, or even gratification may suggest; and that whatever may be the quantity or value of such articles, the carrier is responsible for all damage or loss to them, from whatever source, unless from the act of God or the public enemy. But that, in our judgment, is not an accurate statement of the law. Whether articles of wearing apparel, in any particular case, constitute baggage, as that term is understood in the law, for which the carrier is responsible as insurer, depends upon the inquiry whether they are such in quantity and value as passengers under like circumstances ordinarily or usually carry for personal use when traveling. "The implied undertaking," says Mr. Angell, "of the proprietors of stage-coaches, railroads and steamboats to carry in safety the baggage of passengers is not unlimited, and cannot be extended beyond ordinary baggage, or such baggage as a traveller usually carries with him for his personal convenience." Ang. Car., sec. 115. In R. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall., 272 [79 U. S., XX., 428], this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Field, said that the contract to carry the person "Only implies an undertaking to transport such a limited quantity of articles as are ordinarily taken by travelers for their personal use and convenience, such quantity depending, of course, upon the station of the party, the object and length of his journey, and many other considerations." To the same effect is a decision of the Queen's Bench in Macrow v. Great W. R. Co., L. R., 6 Q. B., 612, where Chief Justice Cockburn announced the true rule to be "That whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of the journey, must be considered as personal luggage." 2 Pars. Cont., 199. To the extent, therefore, that the articles carried by the passenger for his personal use exceed in quantity and value such as are ordinarily or usually carried by passengers of like station and pursuing like journeys, they are not baggage for which the carrier, by general law, is responsible as insurer. In cases of abuse by the passenger, of the privilege which the law gives him, the carrier secures such exemption from responsibility; not however because the passenger, uninquired of, failed to disclose the character and value of the articles carried, but because the articles themselves, in excess of the amount usually or ordinarily carried, under like circumstances, would not constitute baggage within the true meaning of the law. The laces in question confessedly constituted a part of the wearing apparel of the defendant in error. They were adapted to and exclusively designed for personal use, according to her convenience, comfort or tastes, during the extended journey upon which she had entered. They were not merchandise, nor is there any evidence that they were intended for sale or for purposes of business. Whether they were such articles, in quantity and value, as passengers of like station and under like circumstances ordinarily or usually carry for their personal use, and to subserve their convenience, gratification or comfort while traveling, was not a pure question of law for the sole or final determination of the court, but a question of fact for the jury, under proper guidance from the court as to the law governing such cases. It was for the jury to say to what extent, if any, the baggage of defendant in error exceeded in quantity and value that which was usually carried without extra compensation, and to disallow any claim for such excess.

Upon examining the carefully guarded instructions given to the jury, we are unable to see that the court below omitted anything essential to a clear comprehension of the issues, or announced any principle or doctrine not in harmony with settled law. After submitting to the jury the disputed question as to whether the laces were, in fact, in the trunk of the defendant in error, when delivered to the Company at Albany for transportation to Niagara Falls, the court charged the jury, in substance, that every traveler was entitled to provide for the exigencies of his journey in the way of baggage; was not limited to articles which were absolutely essential, but could carry such as were usually carried by persons traveling, for their comfort, convenience and gratification upon such journeys; that the liability of carriers could not be maintained to the extent of making them responsible for such unusual articles as the exceptional fancies, habits or idiosyncrasies of some particular individual may prompt him to carry; that their responsibility as insurers was limited to such articles as it was customary or reasonable for travelers of the same class, in general, to take for such journeys as the one which was the subject of inquiry, and did not extend to those which the caprice of a particular traveler might lead that traveler to take; that if the Company delivered to the defendant in error, aside from the laces in question, baggage which had been carried and which was sufficient for her as reasonable baggage, within the rules laid down, she was not entitled to recover; that if she carried the laces in question for the purpose of having them safely kept and stored by railroad companies and hotel-keepers, and not for the purpose of using them, as occasion might require, for her gratification, comfort or convenience, the Company was not liable; that if any portion of the missing articles were reasonable and proper for her to carry, and all was not, they should allow her the value of that portion.

Looking at the whole scope and bearing of the charge, and interpreting what was said, as it must, necessarily, have been understood both by the court and jury, we do not perceive that any error was committed to the prejudice of the Company, or of which it can complain. No error of law appearing upon the record, this court cannot reverse the judgment because, upon examination of the evidence, we may be of the opinion that the jury should have returned a verdict for a less amount. If the jury acted upon a gross mistake of facts, or were governed by some improper influence or bias, the remedy, therefore, rested with the court below, under its general power to set aside the verdict. But that court, finding that the verdict was abundantly sustained by the evidence and that there was no ground to suppose that the jury had not performed their duty impartially and justly, refused to disturb the verdict and overruled a motion for new trial. Whether its action, in that particular, was erroneous or not, our power is restricted by the Constitution to the determination of the questions of law arising upon the record. Our authority does not extend to a re-examination of facts which have been tried by the jury under instructions correctly defining the legal rights of parties. Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet., 446; Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How., 167 [62 U. S., XVI., 93]; Ins. Co. v. Folsom, 18 Wall., 249 [85 U. S., XXI., 833].

It is, perhaps, proper to refer to one other point suggested in the elaborate brief of counsel for the Company. Our attention is called to section 4281 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that "If any shipper of platina, gold, gold-dust, coins, jewelry, * * * trinkets, * * * silk in a manufactured or unmanufactured form, whether wrought up or not wrought up with any other material, furs or laces, or any of them, contained in any parcel, package or bundle, shall lade the same as freight or baggage on any vessel, without, at the time of such lading, giving to the master, clerk, agent or owner of such vessel receiving the same, a written notice of the true character and value thereof, and having the same entered on the bill of lading therefor, the master and owner of such vessel shall not be liable as carriers thereof in any form or manner; nor shall any such master or owner be liable for any of such goods beyond the value and according to the character thereof, so notified and entered."

See 10 OTTO.

It is sufficient to say that the section has no application whatever to this case. It has reference alone to the liability of carriers by water who transport goods and merchandise of the kind designated. It has no reference to carriers by land, and does not assume to declare or restrict their liability for the baggage of passengers.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case. I do not think that two hundred and seventy-five yards of lace, claimed by the owner to be worth $75,000, and found by the jury to be of the value of $10,000, can, as a matter of law, be properly considered as baggage of a passenger, for the loss of which the Railroad Company, in the absence of any special agreement, should be held liable; and I am authorized to state that Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Strong concur in this view.

Cited—103 U. S., 265; 104 U. S., 512; 107 U. S., 456; 109 U. S., 385; 112 U. S., 340.

ORLANDO NORTH ET AL, Assignees of RUSSEL THORP, a Bankrupt, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM McDONALD ET AL.

Nonsuit, when allowable.

This court will not disturb a judgment of nonsuit, where, if the case had been left to the jury and a judgment been rendered against the defendants, it would set it aside as against evidence.

[No. 41.]

Submitted Nov. 4, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Wyoming.

An action was brought in the District Court of Uintah County, by Orlando North and L. Newman, assignees in bankruptcy of Russel Thorp, against William McDonald and Harvey Booth, to recover the value of a large amount of horses, cattle, mules and other personal property alleged to have been sold by said bankrupt to the defendants on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1874, in contravention of the provisions of the Bankrupt Law of the United States. The venue in said action was subsequently changed to Sweetwater County. The petition in bankruptcy, upon which said Thorp was adjudicated a bankrupt, was filed in the third district court on the 17th day of December, 1874. The personal property herein referred to was sold to the defendants in the district court for the sum of $3,005, while it was alleged in said plaintiff's petition, that said property, so as aforesaid transferred, was worth the sum of $6,450.

The case came on for trial at the October Sweetwater Term, 1875, before Chief Justice Fisher and a jury. After the testimony of the plaintiffs had closed, the defendants moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that said testimony failed to show the existence of a cause of action in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants, which motion was, after the argument of counsel, granted by the court. A motion was subsequently made by counsel for the plaintiffs, to set aside such nonsuit, which second named motion was overruled and judgment ordered for the defendants against the plaintiffs for costs. The only error now complained of in the court below, and to be passed upon by this court, is the granting of said motion for nonsuit.

Messrs. C. W. Bramel and W. W. Corlett, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edward P. Johnson, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs below evidently intended to bring this action under section 5129 of the Revised Statutes; but the averments in their petition are only sufficient to make a case under section 5046. While the court would certainly have been justified in leaving the question of fraud to the jury upon the evidence as it stood, we think, if a judgment had been rendered against the defendants, it might with propriety have been set aside, as being contrary to what had been proven. For this reason, although it might have been more in accordance with correct practice not to take the case from the jury, we will not disturb the judgment. No request was made for leave to amend the petition, and we must consider the case here as made by the pleadings, and not as the parties may have intended to make it.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOSEPH GARNAU, Appt.,

v.

DOSIER, WEYL & COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 7, 8.)

Transcript, how authenticated.

A transcript of the record is sufficiently authenticated, for the purposes of an appeal or a writ of error to this court, if it is signed by the deputy in the name of and for the clerk, and sealed with the seal of the court below.

[No. 301.]

Submitted Nov. 3, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

On motion to dismiss.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. E. E. Wood and Edward Boyd, for appellees, in support of motion.

Mr. Robert H. Parkinson, for appellant, opposed.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Since the Act of June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 330, R. S., 558, 624, 678, authorizing the appointment of deputies of the Clerks of the Courts of the United States, a transcript of the record is sufficiently authenticated for the purposes of an appeal or a writ of error to this court, if it is signed by the deputy in the name of and for the Clerk of Court from which the appeal comes, or to which the writ of error is directed, and sealed with the seal of that court. The transcript sent up in this case comes within this rule.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

FRANK SOULE ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 8-12.)

Internal Revenue Collector—sureties—rights of—new bond.

1. The Fifth Auditor is the proper officer to audit the accounts of an Internal Revenue Collector.

2. Sureties of such collector are liable for moneys received by him under an Act passed subsequently to the execution of their bond.

3. Errors of computation against the United States are no more vested rights in favor of sureties than in favor of the principal.

4. A direction of the Commissioner to the Collector to execute a new bond, must be considered as the direction of the Secretary, as the Commissioner is a subordinate officer of the Treasury Department.

[No. 14.]

Submitted Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. W. W. Morrow, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Internal Revenue Collectors are required, before entering upon the duties of their office, to execute a bond for such amount as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary, with not less than five sureties, conditioned that the collector shall faithfully perform his duties, and account for and pay over to the United States all public moneys which may come into his hands and possession. 13 Stat. at L., 225.

Pursuant to that requirement, the defendant first named, having been appointed such collector, on the 12th of January, 1867, gave the bond described in the complaint, and the other defendants signed the same as his sureties, the charge in the complaint being that the collector failed to perform the conditions of the bond.

Service having been made, the defendants appeared and pleaded as follows: (1) That the allegations of the complaint are not true. (2) That the bond is void because executed under duress. (3) Performance.

Subsequently the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff. Exceptions were filed by the defendants, and they sued out the present writ of error, and removed the cause into this court.

Errors assigned here are as follows:

I. That the court erred in admitting in evidence the transcript of accounts as audited by the Fifth Auditor.

II. That the court erred in instructing the jury that the sureties were liable for the item charged in the transcript as the excess collected on the amount of gauger's fees.

III. That the court erred in instructing the jury that the transcript was prima facie evidence of the correctness of the item charged therein as the amount of error by the assessor in footing lists, as per report of the supervisor.

IV. That the court erred in instructing the jury that, upon the evidence given, the bond was a voluntary bond and was not extorted, and that the collector and his sureties were liable upon it.

V. That the court erred in instructing the jury that the direction to the collector contained in the letter of the Commissioner to execute the bond, he having previously given one, must be considered as the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Five things are established by the Act of Congress: (1) That it is the duty of the Commissioner to pay over daily to the Treasurer all public moneys which may come into his possession. (2) That the Treasurer is required to give proper receipts for the money, and keep a faithful account of the same. (3) That it is also the duty of the Commissioner, at the end of each month, to render true and faithful accounts of all public moneys received or paid out or paid to the Treasurer, and to exhibit proper vouchers for the same. (4) That it is the duty of the Fifth Auditor to receive such vouchers and examine the same, and to certify the balance, if any, and to transmit the accounts with the vouchers and certificate to the first comptroller for his decision thereon. (5) That it is the duty of the Commissioner, when such accounts are settled as provided in that section, to transmit a copy thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury. 13 Stat. at L., 223.

Argument to show that by the true construction of that section the Fifth Auditor is the proper officer to audit such accounts is scarcely necessary, as it is clear that the Act contemplates that they should be audited, and that it does not devolve the duty upon any other officer. Conclusive support to that theory, if more be needed, is also derived from the first paragraph of section 277 of the Revised Statutes, which, among other things, provides that the Fifth Auditor shall receive and examine all reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which, of course, embraces such accounts as that of the collector in this case, as it includes all the accounts rendered in the department of the Commissioner. R. S., 2d ed., sec. 277, p. 46.

2. Authority to appoint gaugers was conferred by the 53d section of the Act imposing taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and for other purposes. 15 Stat. at L., 147. Fees for gauging and inspecting, as prescribed by the Commissioner, were to be paid to the collector by the owner or producer of the articles to be gauged and inspected. Such fees were to be retained by the collector until the last day of each month, when the aggregate amount of fees so retained was, under regulation of the Commissioner, to be paid to the officers performing that duty, not to exceed, however, the rate of $3,000 per annum.

Four hundred and ninety-four dollars and thirty-eight cents, money collected from that source in excess of what the collector had paid out, remained in his hands, and was charged in the accounts as settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury. Due exception was taken by the See 10 Otto.

U. S., Book 25.

sureties to the ruling of the court, that they were liable for that charge. No objection was made to the charge as against the collector, but the objection was that the sureties were not liable, because the money was received under the subsequent Act.

Viewed in that light, it must be assumed that the charge was a proper one as against the collector and, inasmuch as it was money collected by law of the owner or producer of the articles to be gauged and inspected, it was clearly public money in his hands to which he had no legal right. By the terms of the bond in suit the sureties are to become responsible if their principal does not justly and faithfully account for and pay over to the United States all public moneys which may come into his hands or possession. Beyond doubt, the amount went into his hands and possession as public money, and in the judgment of the court here, the ruling of the court below, that the sureties are liable for it, is correct. U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall., 493-502 [81 U. S., XX., 726-8]; U. S. v. Singer, 15 Wall., 111-121 [82 U. S., XXI., 49-51].

3. When suit is brought in any case of delinquency of a revenue officer or other person accountable for public money, a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department, certified by the register, and authenticated under the seal of the department, * * * shall be submitted as evidence; and the court trying the cause shall be authorized to grant judgment and award execution accordingly. R. S., sec. 886; Bruce v. U. S., 17 How., 439 [58 U. S., XV., 130]; Smith v. U. S., 5 Pet., 292; Cox v. U. S., 6 Pet., 172; Hoyt v. U. S., 10 How., 109.

Treasury settlements of the kind are only prima facie evidence of the correctness of the balance certified; but it is as competent for the accounting officers to correct mistakes and to restate the balance as it is for a judge to change his decree during the term in which it was entered. U. S. v. Eckford, 1 How., 250. Errors of computation against the United States are no more vested rights in favor of sureties than in favor of the principal. All such mistakes in cases like the present may be corrected by a restatement of the account.

4. Sufficient appears to show that the principal defendant was appointed collector March 28, 1865, in the recess of the Senate, to hold until the expiration of the then next session of Congress, and no longer. On the 25th of July following, he was appointed to the same office by the President and was confirmed by the Senate. Due notice of his appointment was given, and he was furnished with a blank form of bond, which, on November 2, 1866, he executed with sureties; but the bond being several and not joint and several, as it should be, he was officially requested to execute a new bond correcting that error. In pursuance of that request, on the 12th of January of the next year he executed the bond described in the complaint, and from the date of the first bond to the date of the second his accounts were settled by the treasury officers under the first bond. When the second bond was offered in evidence, the defendant objected to its admissibility; but the court overruled the objection, and instructed the jury that it was not extorted, which instruction constitutes the fourth exception.

Evidence to support the charge of duress is entirely wanting. Instead of that, the defendant testified that he did not remember that he made any objection to executing the bond, and supposed that he did it because the Commissioner had given such directions.

5. Exception was also taken to the instruction of the court that the direction of the Commissioner to execute a new bond must be considered as the direction of the Secretary, which is so obviously correct as to require no argument in its support, as it is matter of common knowledge that the Commissioner is a subordinate officer of the Treasury Department. Dugan v. U. S., 3 Wheat., 172; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720; Hamilton v. Dillin, 21 Wall., 73 [88 U. S., XXII., 528].

Suffice it to say that in view of these suggestions it is clear that there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Ex Parte ALVIN R. REED.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 13-23.)

Naval court-martial—regulations of the navy—revision of sentence—jurisdiction—habeas corpus.

1. A naval court-martial has jurisdiction to try a paymaster's clerk.

2. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to establish "Regulations of the Navy," with the approval of the President, which have the force of law.

3. The authority who ordered the court is competent to direct it to reconsider its proceedings and sentence, for the purpose of correcting any mistake which may have been committed. The proceedings must be sent back for revision before the court shall have been dissolved.

4. Where such court has jurisdiction over the person and the case, its proceedings cannot be collaterally impeached for any mere error or irregularity. Every act of a court beyond its jurisdiction is void.

5. A writ of habeas corpus cannot be made to perform the functions of a writ of error. To warrant the discharge of the petitioner upon such writ, the sentence under which he is held must be, not merely erroneous and voidable, but absolutely void.

[No. 5, Original.]

Argued Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus. The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Mr. Geo. S. Boutwell, for petitioner.

Mr. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., in opposition.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no controversy in this case about the facts. The questions we are called on to consider are all questions of law. A brief summary of the facts will, therefore, be sufficient.

The petitioner, Reed, was the clerk of a paymaster in the Navy of the United States. He was duly appointed, and had accepted by a letter, wherein, as required, he bound himself "To be subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the navy and the discipline of the vessel." His name was placed on the proper muster-roll, and he entered upon the discharge of his duties. While serving in this capacity, charges of malfeasance were preferred against him, and on the 26th of June, 1878, he was directed by Rear-Admiral Nichols to appear and answer before a general court-martial, convened pursuant to the order of that officer on board the United States ship Essex, then stationed at Rio Janerio, in Brazil. The court found the petitioner guilty, and sentenced him accordingly. The admiral declined to approve the sentence and remitted the proceedings back to the court, that the sentence might be revised. The court thereupon pronounced the following sentence in substitution for the former one:

"That the said Alvin R. Reed, paymaster's clerk, U. S. Navy, be imprisoned in such place as the honorable Secretary of the Navy may designate, for the term of two years; to lose all pay which may become due him during such confinement, excepting the sum of $10 per month, this loss amounting to $1,960; to be fined in the sum of $500, which fine must be paid before or at the end of the term of confinement. Should such fine not be paid at end of the term of confinement, to be detained in confinement without pay until such fine be paid, and at the expiration of the term of confinement to be dishonorably dismissed from the naval service of the United States."

This sentence was different from the preceding one in two particulars, and in both it was more severe. It was approved by the admiral, and ordered to be carried out. The court was subsequently dissolved. While in confinement, under the sentence, on board a naval vessel at Boston, the petitioner sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and brought his case before the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts. After a full hearing, that court adjudged against him, and ordered him back into the custody of the naval officer to whom the writ was addressed. The petitioner thereupon made this application in order that the conclusions reached by the circuit court may be reviewed by this tribunal.

It is supposed that courts-martial were intended originally to be a partial substitute for the court of chivalry of former times. 3 Christian's Bl., 68, 108; Bouv. L. Dic., tit. Courts-martial. The difference between military law and martial law is too well known to require any remark. 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 241, n. a.

"* * * The common law * * * knew no distinction between citizen and soldier; so that if a life-guardsman deserted, he could only be sued for a breach of contract; and if he struck his officer, he was only liable to an indictment or an action of battery." 2 Campbell, Lives of Ch., 91.

The constitutionality of the Acts of Congress touching army and navy courts-martial in this country, if there could ever have been a doubt about it, is no longer an open question in this court. Const., art. 1, sec. 8 and amendment 5. In Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65 [61 U. S., XV., 388], the subject was fully considered and their validity affirmed.

The regularity of the original organization of the court here in question is not denied.

Three points in support of the petition have been brought to our attention. It is insisted:

1. That the court had no jurisdiction to try a paymaster's clerk.

2. That when the first sentence was pronounced, the power of the court was exhausted, and that the second sentence was, therefore, a nullity.

3. That the court could revise its former sentence only on the ground of mistake, and that there was no mistake and, consequently, no power of revision.

The first of these propositions is clearly not maintainable.

Where the punishment is death, or fine and imprisonment, the jurisdiction in question is extended to all persons "in the naval service of the United States," R. S., sec. 1624, arts. 4, 14; and it embraces, besides the frauds enumerated, "any other fraud against the United States." R. S., sec. 1624, art. 14.

In case of conviction, adequate punishment is required to be adjudged. R. S., sec. 1624, art. 51.

Except where the sentence is death or the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, it may be executed when confirmed by the officer ordering the court. R. S., sec. 1624, art. 53.

The place of paymaster's clerk is an important one in the machinery of the navy. Their appointment must be approved by the commander of the ship. Their acceptance and agreement to submit to the laws and regulations for the government and discipline of the navy must be in writing, and filed in the department. They must take an oath and bind themselves to serve until discharged. The discharge must be by the appointing power, and approved in the same manner as the appointment. They are required to wear the uniform of the service; they have a fixed rank; they are upon the payroll, and are paid accordingly. They may also become entitled to a pension and to bounty land. Navy Reg. of August 7, 1876, p. 95; In re Bogart, 2 Sawy., 396; U. S. v. Bogart, 3 Ben., 257; R. S., secs. 4695, 2426.

The good order and efficiency of the service depend largely upon the faithful performance of their duties.

If these officers are not in the naval service, it may well be asked, who are.

The second and third points will be considered together.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to establish "Regulations of the Navy," with the approval of the President. 12 Stat. at L., 565; R. S., sec. 1547. Such "Regulations for the Administration of Law and Justice" were issued on the 15th of April 1870. Thereby it is declared as follows:

"The authority who ordered the court is competent to direct it to reconsider its proceedings and sentence for the purpose of correcting any mistake which may have been committed.

It is not in the power of the revising authority to compel a court to change its sentence, where, upon being reconvened by him, they have refused to modify it, nor directly or indirectly to enlarge the measure of punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial.

The proceedings must be sent back for revision before the court shall have been dissolved." Reg., ch. 5, secs. 262-264.

Such regulations have the force of law. Gratiot v. U. S., 4 How., 80.

The proceedings with respect to the revision of the second sentence were in conformity to these provisions.

It is clear that the court was not dissolved until after the approval of the second sentence by the admiral.

See 10 OTTO.

The court had jurisdiction over the person and the case. It is the organism provided by law and clothed with the duty of administering justice in this class of cases. Having had such jurisdiction, its proceedings cannot be collaterally impeached for any mere error or irregularity, if there were such, committed within the sphere of its authority. Its judgments, when approved as required, rest on the same basis and are surrounded by the same considerations which give conclusiveness to the judgments of other legal tribunals, including as well the lowest as the highest, under like circumstances. The exercise of discretion, within authorized limits, cannot be assigned for error and made the subject of review by an appellate court.

We do not overlook the point that there must be jurisdiction to give the judgment rendered, as well as to hear and determine the cause. If a magistrate having authority to fine for assault and battery should sentence the offender to be imprisoned in the penitentiary, or to suffer the punishment prescribed for homicide, his judgment would be as much a nullity as if the preliminary jurisdiction to hear and determine had not existed. Every act of a court beyond its jurisdiction is void. Nash ("Cornett") v. Williams, 20 Wall., 226 [87 U. S., XXII., 254]; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S., 274 [XXIII., 914]; 7 Wait, Act. and Def., 181. Here there was no defect of jurisdiction as to anything that was done. Beyond this we need not look into the record. Whatever was done, that the court could do under any circumstances, we must presume was properly done. If error was committed in the rightful exercise of authority, we cannot correct it.

A writ of habeas corpus cannot be made to perform the functions of a writ of error. To warrant the discharge of the petitioner, the sentence under which he is held must be, not merely erroneous and voidable, but absolutely void. Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheat., 38; Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 193; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2 [71 U. S., XVIII., 281].

The application of the petitioner is, therefore, denied.

Cited—109 U. S., 340; 6 Sawy., 241.

UNITED STATES, Plff.,

v.

HERMAN HIRSCH ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 33-36.)

Crimes under revenue laws—limitations as to.

1. The crimes of a false classification of goods as to value and quality, and effecting an entry of goods at less than the true weight or measure, arise under the revenue laws and are barred by the five years' Statute of Limitations.

2. A conspiracy to defraud the United States out of duties on imported merchandise, is not a crime, arising under the revenue laws, and is barred by the three years' Statute of Limitations.

[No. 179.]

Argued Oct. 23, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

ON a certificate of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The question on which the Judges were divided, sufficiently appears in the opinion of the Court.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for plaintiff.

Messrs. Weeks & Foster and Geo. Hadly, for respondents.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were prosecuted on an indictment with four different counts, to all of which they pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The indictment was found on the 3d day of February, 1877, and the offenses were charged to have been committed on the 13th of September, 1873.

The first two counts are framed under section 5440 of the Revised Statutes, and set out a conspiracy to defraud the United States of the duties on certain goods imported from abroad.

The other two counts are drawn under section 5445, and charge the defendants with a false entry of the goods at the custom-house, by a fraudulent notice and by a false classification as to quality and value.

The Judges of the circuit court certify a division of opinion on the question, "whether the trial is barred by section 1044, the indictment having been found more than three years after the commission of the alleged offense, or whether it is within the provision of section 1046, as having been found within five years next after the commission of the offense."

Section 1044 enacts that "No person shall be prosecuted for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found within three years next after such offense shall have been committed." It is clear that this section is a bar to the prosecution, unless the case comes within the provision of section 1046. It is there declared that "No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the revenue laws, or the slave trade laws of the United States, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within five years next after the committing of such crime."

The question before us then is, whether the indictment describes crimes arising under the revenue laws of the United States. There can be little doubt that the crimes set out in the third and fourth counts, conforming as they do to the description of the offense found in section 5445, of a false classification of goods as to value and quality, and effecting an entry of goods at less than the true weight or measure, arise under the revenue laws. The section is one intended solely for the protection of the revenue arising from customs, and is found originally in the Act of March 4, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 737, which is entitled "An Act to Prevent Frauds Upon the Revenue, and for Other Purposes." That this section which is section 3 of that statute is a revenue law, is beyond question, and the offense defined by it is, therefore, a crime arising under the revenue laws of the United States.

With regard to the first two counts, the answer is not so clear.

The gravamen of the offense here is the conspiracy. For this there must be more than one person engaged. And though by the statute something more than the common law definition of a conspiracy is necessary to complete the offense, to wit: some act done to effect the object of the conspiracy, it remains true that the combination of minds in an unlawful purpose is the foundation of the offense, and no party could be convicted on the overt Act under this section who had not joined in the previous conspiracy.

Nor does the section, as found in the Revised Statutes or in the original Act, make any special reference to the revenue or to revenue laws. Its language is: "If two or more persons conspire, either to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties shall be liable," etc.

The conspiracy here described is a conspiracy to commit any offense against the United States. The fraud mentioned is any fraud against the United States. The fraud may be against the coin, or to cheat the Government of its land or other property. The offense against the United States may be treason, and persons have been convicted under this statute for a conspiracy to do the acts which are defined to be treason.

Since, then, the section does not mention the revenue or the revenue laws, but is one which in terms includes every form of conspiracy against the United States, and every form of conspiracy to defraud the Government, it is difficult to see how the crimes which it creates and which are punishable under it, can be said to arise under the revenue laws. Specific acts which are violations of the laws made to protect the revenue may be said to be crimes arising under the revenue laws, as are those in the third and fourth counts; but a conspiracy to defraud the Government, though it may be directed to the revenue as its object, is punishable by the general law against all conspiracies, and can hardly be said, in any just sense, to arise under the revenue laws.

In support of the opposite view, it is said that section 5440 was originally section 30 of the Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 484, and as that statute was a revenue law, this section must be held also to be a revenue law.

It must be admitted that, in construing any part of the Revised Statutes, it is admissible, and often necessary, to recur to its connection in the Act of which it was originally a part.

The force of the argument arising from finding an enactment in a statute directed mainly to a particular subject is much diminished by our experience of the manner in which incongruous legislation is combined in the same bill as passed by the two Houses of Congress. The important principle which was revolutionary in the law of evidence, by which parties to suits and persons having a pecuniary interest in the results are made competent witnesses, is found in a few words, inserted as a proviso to an appropriation bill.

The Act of 1867 is entitled "An Act to Amend Existing Laws Relating to Internal Revenue, and for Other Purposes," and it consists of thirty-four sections. Every section, except the one defining conspiracies, has reference to internal revenue and, if the argument is worth anything, the statute must be limited to that kind of revenue.

But the title indicates that other purposes than revenue may be found in the provisions of the Act.

Looking, then, to the section in question, which makes no mention of revenue whatever, which enacts a law against conspiracies in the most general terms, we are of opinion that it was one of the other purposes of the Act to pass this general penal statute, and that an offense punishable under that section alone is not a crime arising under the revenue laws, though the overt act necessary to be alleged may be one affecting the revenue of the United States.

It follows that the plea of the Statute of Limitations of three years is good in bar of the first two counts of the indictment, and is bad as to the third and fourth; and it is ordered to be so certified to the Circuit Court.

UNION CONSOLIDATED SILVER MINING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

JAMES D. TAYLOR.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 37-42.)

Possession of tenant in common, not adverse—Nevada Statute of Limitations—finding of facts—mining claim—immaterial evidence.

1. The possession of one tenant in common is not adverse to his co-tenants.

2. The Statutes of Limitations of Nevada are held by the Supreme Court of that State to except foreign corporations from their protection.

3. A special finding of facts by the court need only find the ultimate facts, not the evidence.

4. A written conveyance is not necessary to the transfer of a mining claim.

5. The admission of immaterial or irrelevant evidence is no sufficient reason for reversing a judgment, when it is apparent that it cannot have affected the verdict or the finding injuriously to the plaintiff in error.

[No. 35.]

Submitted Apr. 18, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nevada.

The case is stated by the court.

Exhibits A. and C. referred to in the opinion, are as follows:

Exhibit A, attached to the deposition of John W. Mackey.

Mining deed. Book A, page 456, C. C. R.

Cook & Payne to A. Kennedy & Co.

VIRGINIA CITY, Sept. 20, 1859.

This is to certify that we, D. B. Cook, J. Cook and E. Payne, have this day sold, bargained and conveyed all our rights and interest in a certain set of mining claims, to A. Kennedy & Co., said claims being situated as follows: lying and being in the Virginia district, north of the Comstock claims, and situated on the Comstock and Penrod vein; for and in consideration of which, A. Kennedy & Co. agree to prospect the same thoroughly, and when pay dirt is struck, then Cook, Payne & Co., agree to pay one half of the expense and come in equal partners to the same, Kennedy & Co., receiving one undivided half of six hundred feet.

D. B. COOK,
JAMES COOK,
E. PAYNE.

Witness.

S. McFadden.

Filed Sept. 7, '60 at 2½ P. M.

See 10 OTTO.

Rec'd Sept. 8, '60 at 3 P. M., page 548, Vol. B, Kinsey's records.

To the admission in evidence of the said exhibit A, counsel for defendant excepted, on the grounds that the same is not a deed and not an instrument under seal; that it conveys no interest in the premises; that it contains no words of grant or conveyance, and is immaterial and is irrelevant to the issues.

Exhibit C.

GOLD HILL, Utah Territory, }

July 20, 1859. }

This is  show that I, Edward Payne, have this day admitted David B. Cook into the claim north of the Comstock and Co.'s stakes, as an equal partner in the six hundred feet of the quartz lead, and known as the Comstock lead and running north of the Comstock stakes, and also give the power to manage that claim, to work or let as he, D. B. Cook, sees fit.

EDWARD PAYNE,

JAMES COOK.

Recorded at request of C. H. Reynolds, August 29, 1862, at 4½ P. M.

Exhibit C was objected to, on the same ground as Exhibit A.

Messrs. D. L. Smoot and H. L. Thornton, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. W. E. F. Deal, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover the possession of an undivided interest, equal to five feet, of a mining claim and lode, part of the Comstock lode, and situate in the Virginia Mining District, in Storey County, State of Nevada. Under an agreement of the parties the case was tried by the circuit court without a jury. A finding of facts was made and on that finding a judgment was given for the plaintiff, Taylor, that he recover the undivided five feet for which he sued. The Mining Company now assigns four errors, in the record; the second, third and fourth raise the question whether upon the special finding of facts the plaintiff below was entitled to the judgment which was given. These assignments, therefore, may be considered together. The court found as facts that the parties were tenants in common of the mining claim known as the Union claim, for an undivided interest in which the suit was brought; that they claimed and derived title from the same source, namely: Payne and Cook, the original locators of the claim; that one Solomon Wood, on the 11th day of October, 1862, was the owner of at least an undivided fifty feet of the claim, having derived his title thereto regularly from the original locators, and that on that day he sold and conveyed by deed to the plaintiff an undivided five feet of the claim, describing it as "Five undivided feet interest in the claims of the Union Company, located upon the Comstock silver lode; said claims consist of three hundred feet bounded north by the claims of the Sierra Nevada Silver Mining Company, and on the south by the claims of the Ophir Silver Mining Company." The court further found that during the years 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863 and 1864, the original locators of the Union claim, and others deriving title from them, including Wood, the immediate grantor of the plaintiff and the plaintiff himself, expended over $30,000 in prospecting and developing the claim, though the plaintiff personally had done no work upon it since 1863, nor had any been done for him, except so far as the work done by his co-tenants can be considered work done for him; still further the court found that after the plaintiff's title had been acquired, namely: on the 30th day of September, 1863, C. H. Reynolds and others, all of whom had derived title from the original locators of the mining claim, sold and conveyed all their interests therein to a California corporation, styled the Union Gold and Silver Mining Company; and that, on the 27th day of May, 1874, that company sold and conveyed all its interest in the Union claim to the defendant, a California corporation, organized in and under the laws of that State.

The court further found that the defendant and its grantors had been in possession of the ground in controversy during more than two years before the commencement of this action; and were in possession when the suit was brought, and had been for more than five months before that time in possession of the Union claim, which extends on the Comstock lode a distance of three hundred feet, including the ground in dispute. Another fact found is that the plaintiff made no demand to be let into possession of the premises before commencing his action, but that the defendant was in the exclusive adverse possession before that time, and had in fact ousted the plaintiff from the possession.

Upon these facts it is evident that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, unless he was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Claiming, as both parties did, under Payne and Cook, the regularity and validity of the location of the mining claim is not in question. And when, in 1862, the plaintiff purchased from one of the owners of the claim an undivided interest therein, and went into possession with his grantor and with others deriving title from the original locators, expending large sums in prospecting and developing it (acts which the state statute declares shall constitute adverse possession), he became a tenant in common with those who were then the owners. He was such when the Union Gold and Silver Mining Company purchased the interest of other owners. By that purchase that Company succeeded to a tenancy in common with him, and so did the defendant when it became the purchaser. And though, after 1863, the plaintiff did no work personally upon the property, he did not thereby lose the possession he had after his purchase from Wood. The possession of his co-tenants was his possession. They held it for him until he was ousted. That this is a settled rule of law is not denied. And we find nothing in the statutes of Nevada to which we have been referred that is at variance with the rule, even when applicable to mining claims. That it does apply is expressly held in Van Valkenburg v. Huff, 1 Nev., 142. It follows that neither the defendant nor its grantor had any possession adverse to the plaintiff prior to the time when the ouster was made, and no ouster is found to have been made two years before the suit was brought. The finding that the defendants were in possession more than two years before suit was brought, is not a finding of an adverse possession during all that period, such as to constitute a bar under the Statute of Limitations. Such a bar, therefore, does not exist, unless the ouster took place anterior to the commencement of those two years; and as that is a matter of defense, it should appear affirmatively, to be of any avail.

It is, however, useless to enlarge upon this, for the findings show clearly that the defendant has no protection under the Statutes of Limitation. The plaintiff was in possession with others who derived their title from the original locators, until the Union Gold and Silver Mining Company, a California corporation, acquired their title, in September, 1863. After that time the Statute could not run against him in favor of that corporation or its grantee, the defendant, also a foreign corporation. The Statutes of Limitations of Nevada are held by the Supreme Court of that State to except foreign corporations from their protection. Robinson v. Silver M. Co., 5 Nev., 44; Bartow v. Silver M. Co., 10 Nev., 386. Hence, those statutes cannot be set up by the defendant as a defense in this case; and as the circuit court found as a fact that the plaintiff had been ousted by the defendant from his property, no reason appears why he was not entitled to recover according to the interest which he held prior to the ouster.

It is insisted, however, that, if entitled to recover at all, judgment should have been given for no more than two and a half undivided feet of the mining claim. This position cannot be maintained. It is true the original locators claimed six hundred feet extending along the Comstock vein, but of more than three hundred feet they never had an undisputed title, and that three hundred feet lies next to the claim of the Ophir Company on the south. Indeed, the finding is express, that the Union claim begins at a point fifteen hundred feet north of the claim of the Ophir Company, and extends northward on the Comstock lode three hundred feet, including the ground in dispute. Of that claim Solomon Wood, the plaintiff's grantor, was the owner of at least fifty feet undivided; and he sold and conveyed to the plaintiff five undivided feet interest therein, describing the claim as consisting of three hundred feet, bounded on the south by the claim of the Ophir Company. There can be no doubt, therefore, what was intended to be conveyed. Plainly, it was five undivided feet of that three hundred, and, therefore, whether the whole claim in fact consisted of three hundred or six hundred feet can make no difference. Owning, as Wood did, fifty feet undivided, it was in his power to convey, as he did, an undivided interest of five feet in the southern three hundred.

It is objected by the plaintiff in error that the special finding of the court was not sufficiently full and formal to justify any judgment; that it did not find the essential facts, but left presumptions of fact to be drawn; that it did not find how Solomon Wood became the owner, or set out in words the conveyances under which the parties claimed. Whether a special finding of facts by the court must have all the requisites of a special verdict, it is not necessary now to assert or deny, for all that is essential to such a verdict is an ascertainment of the ultimate facts. A jury is not to find evidence. We think the ultimate facts were sufficiently found in this case. The ownership of Wood in 1862 was an ultimate fact, and even if Taylor had no other right to the possession than that which he derived from Wood by conveyance, it was not necessary to set forth the chain of conveyances by which Wood became the owner. A transfer of possession is sufficient. They would have been but evidence of Wood's ownership. Besides, a written conveyance is not necessary to the transfer of a mining claim. Table Mt. Tun. Co. v. Stranahan, 20 Cal., 198. But Wood was in possession when he sold to Taylor, and Taylor then went into joint possession within. That possession is enough to justify a recovery by him against a disseisor.

The only other assignment of error is the first, and it needs no consideration. Apart from the fact that the defendant claims under Payne and Cook, and is, therefore, not at liberty to dispute their title, it is impossible to discover how it could have been injured by the reception of Exhibits A and C. The instrument C was certainly sufficient to transfer an interest in the mining claim, and the mining rules, at worst, were only immaterial. The admission of immaterial or irrelevant evidence is no sufficient reason for reversing a judgment, when it is apparent, as in this case, that it cannot have affected the verdict or the finding injuriously to the plaintiff in error.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field did not sit in this case.

ROBERT TILLSON ET AL., Partners, as ROBERT TILLSON & Co., Appts.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 43-47.)

Interest, when allowed by Court of Claims.

1. Where an Act referring a claim for damages to the Court of Claims did not authorize it to allow interest, none can be allowed.
2. In addition to the practice which has long prevailed in the departments, of not allowing interest on claims presented, the statute under which the Court of Claims is organized expressly declares "That no interest shall be allowed on any claim, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for interest."

[No. 21.]

Argued Oct. 28, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

This action was instituted pursuant to the following Act of Congress:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the claim of Robert Tillson & Company, of Quincy, Illinois, for loss and damage growing out of the failure of the Government of the United States to keep and perform the contract or contracts, as to time and manner of payment, under which certain horse equipments and infantry accoutrements were manufactured between the months of September, 1862, and July, 1864, by said Tillson & Company for said Government, be and the same is hereby referred to the Court of Claims, and such court is authorized and directed to investigate the same, and to ascertain, determine and adjudge the amount equitably due said firm, if any, for such loss and damage." Approved June 23, 1874.

See 10 Otto.

The findings of fact by the Court of Claims were as follows:

I. The claimants and the defendant entered into the various contracts and agreements set forth in the petition.

II. The claimants, at various times between the 9th October, 1862, and the 24th October, 1864, delivered horse equipments and infantry accoutrements, under said contracts and agreements, to the defendant's officers at the United States Arsenal in St. Louis, to the amount of $494,972.66.

III. There were one hundred and fifteen distinct deliveries of the above described goods made by the claimants, extending from the 9th October, 1862, to the 24th October, 1864, and the goods delivered were then, at the respective times of delivery, inspected and approved by the defendant's officers, and bills therefor were duly authenticated by the proper officers of the ordnance department, as provided by the contract, and no negligence or delay is attributable to the officers of the ordnance department in regard to the inspection of the goods or the issuing of the vouchers. The vouchers so received by the claimants were by them presented to the ordnance office in Washington, and were by the ordnance office transmitted to the Treasury, to be audited and paid, and no delay in so transmitting them is attributable to the ordnance office. After the vouchers reached the Treasury Department, intervals of different length occurred before they were audited and drafts issued in payment thereof. The shortest interval between the receipt of a voucher by the Treasury Department and the issuing of the draft in payment was seven days, and the longest was one hundred and fourteen days; the average was thirty-six days. During the period of the fulfillment of their contracts and agreements before described, the claimants' business necessities compelled them to borrow money by hypothecating or selling their vouchers, and the rate of discount paid by them generally was ten per cent per annum.

IV. A portion of the payments made to claimants on the vouchers before described were made, to the extent of twenty-five per cent thereof, by certificates of indebtedness, issued under the Act 1st March, 1862 12 Stat. at L., 352. These certificates were sent by mail to the claimants, accompanied by ordinary treasury drafts for the remaining seventy-five per cent of the payments. The claimants neither solicited such certificates, nor objected to them. Being below par in the market, the claimants sold them at a discount of seven and a half per cent. The total amount of the certificates so issued to them was $77,000, and the discount or loss suffered by the claimants in disposing of them for cash, was $5,775.

The court rendered judgment dismissing claimants' petition.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter, H. E. Paine and B. F. Grafton, for appellants.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We have no doubt it was the wish of those who procured the passage of the special statute under which the Court of Claims took jurisdiction of this suit, to obtain from Congress authority for that court to give a judgment against the United States at least for interest, in case it should be found that payments on the contracts held by the claimants had been unreasonably delayed. But if Congress had desired to grant such authority, it would have been easy to have said so in express terms; and because it did not say so, we are led irresistibly to the conclusion that it did not intend to give any such power. By the statute, the court was required to investigate the claim, and "Ascertain, determine and adjudge the amount equitably due such firm, if any, for such loss or damage." There is nowhere any intimation that the investigation is to be conducted otherwise than judicially. The reference was made to the court as a court, and not to the Judges as arbitrators. The determination is to be made according to the fixed rules which govern that court in the adjudication of causes, and not at the discretion of the judges. The same principles of jurisprudence and the same statutory regulations as to practice are to be applied here that would be if the case had come into the court under its general jurisdiction. It is to be ascertained and determined what, if anything, is due the claimants from the Government, according to the rules of law applicable to the settlement in that court of controversies between the Government and its citizens. The special statute does not even provide that the adjustment shall be made upon principles applicable to suits between citizens. To our minds the word "equitably," as here used, means no more than that the rules of law applicable to the case shall be construed liberally in favor of the claimants.

As between citizens, no allowance could be made for loss of profits consequent on the advance in the price of materials while payments were withheld, nor for the discount on the certificates of indebtedness sold in the market. Such damages are too remote. Interest, however, would have been recoverable as against a citizen, if the payments were unreasonably delayed. But with the Government the rule is different, for in addition to the practice which has long prevailed in the departments of not allowing interest on claims presented, except it is in some way specially provided for, the statute under which the Court of Claims is organized expressly declares "That no interest shall be allowed on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment thereon in the Court of Claims, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for interest." R. S., sec. 1091. This is conclusive. No interest was stipulated for in this contract, and the prohibition against its allowance has not been removed in favor of the claimants.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE B. FAIRFIELD, Plff. in Err.,

v.

COUNTY OF GALLATIN.

(See, S. C., 10 Otto, 47-55.)

Donations to railroad companies—case overruled—state decisions—when conclusive.

1. In Illinois, donations by counties or other municipalities, to railroad companies were not prohibited by the new State Constitution of 1870, where they had been authorized, by a prior statute and by a vote of the people of the County or municipality before the adoption of such Constitution.

2. Town of Concord v. Portsmouth Savings Bank, 92 U. S., XXIII., 628, overruled.

3. This court will adopt and follow the decisions of the state courts in the construction of their own constitution and statutes.

4. This court will change its decision construing a State Constitution when no rights have been acquired under it, and when, before the decision was made, the highest tribunal of the State had interpreted the constitution differently, and that interpretation has within the State become a fixed rule of property.

[No. 526.]

Submitted Jan. 15, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

This action was instituted in the court below by the plaintiff in error against the defendant in error upon certain coupons. Judgment was rendered for the County and the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cullom, Scholes & Mather, O. J. Bailey and J. H. Sedgwick, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. A. L. Knapp and Duff, Bowman & Wilson, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts of this case, so far as they are needed to exhibit the question presented by the writ of error, are very few. The defendant, on and prior to Feb. 28, 1868, was a lawfully organized and existing County of the State of Illinois, through which was located the railroad of the Illinois Southeastern Railway Company, a company incorporated on the 25th of Feb., 1867. The County was authorized by the Legislature of the State to donate to the railroad company, as a bonus or inducement towards the building of the railroad, any sum not exceeding $100,000, and was authorized to order the clerk of the county court, or Board of Supervisors of the County, to issue county bonds to the amount donated, and deliver them to the company, provided that no donation exceeding $50,000 should be made until after the question of such larger donation should have been submitted to the legal voters of the County, at an election called and conducted in the usual manner. The statute further enacted, that if a majority of the ballots cast at such an election should be in favor of a donation, it should be the duty of the county court or Board of Supervisors to donate some amount, not less than $50,000 nor more than $100,000, to the company, and to order the issue of county bonds for the amount so donated.

On the 28th of Feb., 1868, in pursuance of these statutory enactments, an election of the legal voters of the County was held to determine whether the County would donate $100,000

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court to declare state law void as in conflict with State Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws; power of state courts to construe their own statutes. See note to Jackson v. Lamphire, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 280.

It is for state courts to construe their own statutes; Supreme Court will not review their decisions except when specially authorized to by statute. See note to Com. Bk. v. Buckingham, 46 U. S. (5 How.), 317.

of its bonds in aid of the said road, and the election resulted in authorizing their issue. The bonds were accordingly issued by the County Judge and county clerk, under the direction of the county court, and they were delivered to the railroad company on the 6th or 8th of October, 1870, after the conditions precedent to their delivery had been fulfilled. The plaintiff is the holder of coupons belonging to said issue, having purchased them before due, in the usual course of his business.

The defense set up is, in substance, that in consequence of a provision in the New Constitution of the State, which came into force July 2, 1870, the authority to issue and deliver the bonds had ceased to exist before the issue was made. The section of the Constitution relied upon is in the following words: "No county, city, town, township or other municipality shall ever become subscriber to the capital stock of any railroad or private corporation, or make donation to, or loan its credit in aid of such corporation: Provided, however, That the adoption of this article shall not be construed as affecting the right of any such municipality to make such subscriptions, where the same have been authorized under existing laws, by a vote of the people of such municipalities, prior to such adoption."

The question presented, then, is, whether a donation to a railroad company, by a county empowered by the Legislature to make such a donation, when approved by a majority of the legal voters of the county at an election held for that purpose, is forbidden by this clause of the Constitution, if it was authorized under laws then existing by a vote of the people of the county prior to the adoption of the Constitution? What should be the answer to the question depends upon the construction that must be given to the section thus quoted. Are donations, thus authorized by a popular vote, within the prohibition, or are they excepted out of it by the proviso?

In Concord v. Bk., 92 U. S., 625 [XXIII., 628], we had occasion to construe this section of the State Constitution. We then held that donations by counties or other municipalities to railroad companies were prohibited by it, and that they could not lawfully be made after July 2, 1870, though they had been authorized by a prior statute and by a vote of the people of the county or municipality before the adoption of the Constitution. We were fully aware that it is the peculiar province of the Supreme Court of a State to interpret its organic law, as well as its statutes, and that it is the duty as well as the pleasure of this court to follow and adopt that court's interpretation. But we were not informed, when the case was decided, that any judicial construction had been given to the constitutional provision. It now appears that the Supreme Court of Illinois had previously considered it, and decided that donations, equally with subscriptions, if sanctioned by a popular vote before the adoption of the Constitution, are not prohibited by it, and that they are excepted from the prohibition by the proviso. This was decided by that court in 1874, more than a year before Concord v. Bk. came before us; but the decision was not called to our notice, and it was not reported until 1877. It may now be found in R. R. Co. v. Pinckney, 74 Ill., 277.

See 10 OTTO.

The language of the court is very positive. We quote it at some length, as follows: "At the time the section of the Constitution referred to was framed, large sums of money in different parts of the State had been voted by municipalities to be subscribed and donated to railroad companies, on condition that railroads then being constructed should be completed within a given time; and the country, whether wisely and judiciously or not, seemed to demand that in cases where the people in these municipalities had, under then existing legislation, voted to aid railroads by subscription or donation prior to the adoption of the Constitution, such subscription or donation should not be affected by the formation of the Constitution. And we have no doubt it was in view of this demand of a large portion of the State that the proviso was engrafted in the foregoing section." * * * "A reasonable construction of the whole section will embrace donations as well as subscriptions. In one sense of the term, a donation is a subscription to the capital stock of a company. We have no doubt, at the time this section was framed, there were then in the State quite as many donations voted as there were subscriptions to stock in any other manner, and if a necessity or reason existed to protect a subscription, there was also the same reason and demand to protect a donation; and we entertain no doubt it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, by adding the proviso to the section, to place subscriptions and donations on the same footing." This authoritative exposition of the meaning of the Constitution of the State by its highest court has repeatedly been recognized by that tribunal. Middleport v. Ins. Co., 82 Ill., 562; Lippincott v. Pana, decided Oct. 1, 1879 [92 Ill., 24], not yet reported. It has also been the understanding of the Legislature of the State that donations, as well as subscriptions, if authorized by a vote of the People before the adoption of the Constitution, are saved by the proviso. In 1874 an Act of the General Assembly was passed which declared that the liability of all counties, cities, townships, towns or precincts that had voted aid, donations or subscriptions to the capital stock of any railroad company, in conformity with the laws of the State, should cease and determine at the expiration of three years after July 1 of that year, and that after that time no bonds should be issued on account of or upon authority of such vote. This implied that up to July, 1877, donations voted before July 2, 1870, were lawful and might be completed by the issue of bonds. It was an expression of the legislative understanding that such donations were not forbidden by the Constitution. Act of March 17, 1874. A similar Act was passed on the 29th of May, 1877, extending the time for issuing bonds for donations upon the authority of a vote of the people until July 1, 1880. It thus appears to have become a rule of property in the State that municipal bonds, issued to railroad companies on account of donations voted by the people before the adoption of the Constitution, are valid, though not issued until after the adoption. Such was the earliest exposition of the Constitution, made by the court of last resort in the State, twice since recognized by it, and recognized also by repeated legislative action. There is every reason to believe that the rule has been relied upon, and that on the faith of it many municipal bonds have been issued, bought and sold in the markets of the country.

In view of all this, ought this court to adhere to the construction we gave to the State Constitution in ignorance of the fact that the Supreme Court of the State had previously construed it in a different manner? At a very early day it was announced that in cases depending upon the Constitution or statutes of a State, this court would adopt the construction of the statutes or Constitution given by the courts of the State, when that construction could be ascertained. Polk v. Wendal, 9 Cranch, 87. In Nesmith v. Sheldon, 7 How., 812. it is declared to be the "Established doctrine that this court will adopt and follow the decisions of the state courts in the construction of their own Constitution and statutes, when that construction has been settled by the decisions of its highest tribunal." In Walker v. Harbor Comrs., 17 Wall., 648 [84 U. S., XXI., 744], we said: "This court follows the adjudications of the highest court of the State" in the construction of its statutes. "Its interpretation is accepted as the true interpretation, whatever may be our opinion of its original soundness." See, also, Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat., 152; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet., 291; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 [67 U. S., XVII., 261]; Sumner v. Hicks, 2 Black, 532 [67 U. S., XVII., 355]; Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall., 678 [83 U. S., XXI., 382]; St. R. R. Tax Cases, 92 U. S., 575 [XXIII., 663].

Such has been our general rule of decision. Undoubtedly, some exceptions to it have been recognized. One of them is, that when the highest court of a State has given different constructions to its Constitution and laws, at different times, and rights have been acquired under the former construction, we have followed that and disregarded the latter. The present case is not within that exception, for there have been no conflicting interpretations by the state court of the section of the Constitution we are now called upon to construe. And we are not constrained to refuse following the decision of the state court in order to save rights acquired on the faith of our ruling in Concord v. Bk. [supra]. Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet., 449 may seem to be an exception to the rule, but if carefully examined it will be found to be no exception. In that case, this court held that the Constitution of Mississippi did not, ex proprio vigore, prohibit the introduction of slaves into that State as merchandise or for sale, after the first day of May, 1833, and, therefore, that a promissory note given for the price of slaves thus introduced was not void. This was held, though it appeared that, prior to the decision, the Chancellor of the State had refused to enjoin a judgment at law recovered upon a bond for the purchase of slaves brought into the State for sale after May 1, 1833, and the Court of Errors, two Judges against one, had affirmed the refusal of the Chancellor. But the decision of the Chancellor was rested entirely upon the ground that the matter relied upon to obtain the injunction should have been set up as a defense in the suit at law. This was all that was really decided. The opinions expressed in the Court of Errors by the Judges upon the question whether the introduction of slaves after May 1, 1833, was prohibited by the Constitution, were extrajudicial, and were so regarded by this court. It was said they were not sufficient to justify this court in considering that the construction of the Constitution in Mississippi had become so fixed and settled as to preclude the Federal Supreme Court from regarding it as an open question. Groves v. Slaughter, therefore, is not an exception to the rule that this court will follow the construction given by the highest court of a State to its Constitution. On the contrary the court assented to the rule.

Subsequently, the provision of the Constitution of Mississippi was brought before the courts of the State, and it was settled by the highest tribunals that it did of itself, and without any legislative enactment, prohibit the introduction of slaves as merchandise, and for sale, and render all contracts for the sale of slaves, made after May 1, 1833, illegal and void. The case of Rowan v. Runnels, 5 How., 134, then came up to this court, where the same question was presented, and the construction given by this court to the State Constitution was adhered to in order to support a contract for slaves purchased, and apparently only for that reason. Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion of the court, said that in Groves v. Slaughter the court was satisfied that the validity of these sales had not been brought into question in any of the tribunals of the State until long after the contract was made, and that as late as the beginning of 1841, when Groves v. Slaughter was decided, it did not appear from anything before the court that the construction of the clause in question had been settled either way, by judicial decision, in the courts of the State. He added: "Undoubtedly, this court will always feel itself bound to respect the decisions of the state courts and, from the time they are made, will regard them as conclusive in all cases upon the construction of their own Constitution and laws. But we ought not to give to them a retroactive effect, and allow them to render invalid contracts entered into with citizens of other States, which, in the judgment of this court, were lawfully made."

That case is totally unlike the present. The bonds in question now were issued in October, 1870. In 1874, the highest court of the State decided that such bonds could be lawfully issued and that they were not forbidden by the Constitution. It was, therefore, conclusively settled more than a year before Concord v. Bk. was decided by us, what the meaning of the Constitution was. We are now asked to decline following the construction given and since recognized by the state court, and to adhere to that adopted by us in ignorance of the prior judgment of the state court, and that not, as in Rowan v. Runnels, to uphold contracts, but to strike them down, though they were made in accordance with the settled law of the State. We recognize the importance of the rule, stare decisis. We recognize also the other rule, that this court will follow the decisions of state courts, giving a construction to their constitutions and laws, and more especially when those decisions have become rules of property in the States, and when contracts must have been made, or purchases in reliance upon them. And it has been held that this court will abandon its former decision construing a state statute, if the state courts have subsequently given to it a different construction. In Green v. Neal [supra], the question raised was, whether the court would adhere to its own decision in such a case, or would recede from it and follow the decisions of the state court. In two previous cases a certain construction had been given to a statute of Tennessee, in supposed harmony with decisions of the state court. But subsequently it was decided otherwise by the State Supreme Court; and it appeared that the decisions upon which this court had relied were made under peculiar circumstances, and were never in the State considered as fully settling the construction of the Act. This court, therefore, overruled its former two decisions, and followed the later construction adopted by the state court. See, also, Suydam v. Williamson, 24 How., 427 [65 U. S., XVI., 742]. With much more reason may we change our decision construing a State Constitution when no rights have been acquired under it, and when it is made to appear that before the decision was made the highest tribunal of the State had interpreted the Constitution differently, when that interpretation within the State fixed a rule of property and has never been abandoned. In such a case, we think it our duty to follow the state courts, and adopt as the true construction that which those courts have declared.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the record is remitted, with instructions to give judgment for the plaintiff below on the findings made.

Cited—101 U. S., 686; 104 U. S., 471, 629; 105 U. S., 3, 295, 375; 112 U. S., 165; 12 N. W. Rep., 569; 6 Sawy., 570; 82 N. Y., 421; 37 Am. Rep., 580.

GLENDAL E ELASTIC FABRIC COMPANY, Appt.,

v.
WILLIAM SMITH.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 110-112.)

Appeal from decree.

No appeal lies from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses.

[No. 44.]

Argued Nov. 4, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Benj. Dean, for appellant.

Mr. R. P. Lowe, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

For all practical purposes, except costs, the appellant was successful in the court below. While the validity of the appellee's patent was sustained, it was a fruitless victory to him, because since the patent had expired he got no injunction and the court found he was not entitled to recover from the appellant either profits or damages. As the decree stands, it sustains an expired patent, and does no more. The appellant was left at liberty, when the decree against him was rendered, to use the patented machine in any way he chose, and he has not been required to pay anything for the use he made of it while the patent was in force. The appeal, therefore, presents only a moot case except as to costs.

See 10 OTTO.

We think the disclaimer as to the re-issued patent, division B, had no effect on the costs in this case, because the question presented for decision was whether, notwithstanding that disclaimer, the other divisions of the re-issue should be sustained. The statute as to costs after a disclaimer, R. S., sec. 4923, therefore, has no application to this suit, and the appeal is practically reduced to the single question whether, if the decree below should be reversed, the appellee ought to have his costs in that court and, if so, how much. As no appeal lies from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses (Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet., 307). And as this case comes within the reason of that rule, we affirm the decree below without examining the merits.

Affirmed.

Cited—104 U. S., 792; 105 U. S., 437, 772.

ST. LOUIS NATIONAL BANK, Appt.

v.

UNITED STATES INSURANCE COMPANY OF ST. LOUIS ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 43.)

Motions to dismiss.

This court will not decide motions to dismiss before the record is printed, when there is any question about the facts on which the motion rests.

[No. 920.]

Submitted Nov. 10, 1879. Postponed to arg't on merits, Nov. 17, 1879.

Motion to dismiss.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. W. H. Phillips, in support of motion.

Mr. Lucien Eaton, contra.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The further consideration of this motion is postponed until the case is heard on its merits. The record has not been printed, and counsel do not agree as to what it contains. We will not decide motions to dismiss before the record is printed, when there is any question about the facts on which the motion rests. In order to get a decision before printing, the motion papers must present the case in a way which will enable us to act understandingly without referring to the transcript on file.

DAVID A. COWELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

COLORADO SPRINGS COMPANY.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 55-61.)

Condition in deed—breach of—estoppel—patent to trustee—corporations of another State—real property of.

NOTE.—Conditions precedent and subsequent in deeds; who may perform and their effect; conditions not raised by implication; condition unperformed. See note to Taylor v. Mason, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.), 325; and note to U. S. v. Clarke, 34 U. S. (9 Pet.), 168.

*1. A condition in a deed conveying land, that intoxicating liquors shall never be manufactured, sold or otherwise disposed of as a beverage in any place of public resort on the premises, and that if this condition be broken by the grantee, his assigns, or legal representatives, the deed shall become null and void, and the title to the premises shall revert to the grantor, is not repugnant to the estate granted nor is it unlawful or against public policy.

2. Upon breach of the condition the grantor had a right to treat the estate as having reverted and bring ejectment for the premises without previous entry upon them or demand for their possession, such entry or demand being unnecessary under a Statute of Colorado, where the premises are situated.

3. When a patent for land issued by the United States, adds to the name of the patentee the word "trustee," without mention of any trusts upon which he is to hold the property, such addition does not prevent the legal title from passing by the patentee's conveyance. If any trust be in fact created, it is for the cestui que trust, and no one else, to complain of the patentee's action.

4. By the general comity which, in the absence of positive direction to the contrary, obtains through the States and Territories of the United States, corporations created in one State or Territory are permitted to carry on any lawful business in another State or Territory, and to acquire, hold and convey property there equally as individuals.

5. When a corporation is authorized by statute to hold real property necessary to enable it to carry on its business, the inquiry whether any particular real property is necessary for that business is a matter between the government of the State and the corporation, and is no concern of third parties.

6. When a grantee of land from a corporation by deed, which contains a condition that if he manufactures or sells intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage at any place of public resort on the premises, the title shall revert to his grantor, goes into possession of the land under the deed, he is estopped, when sued by the grantor for the premises upon breach of the condition, from denying the corporate existence of his grantor, or the validity of the title conveyed by its deed.

[No. 46.]

Submitted Nov. 5, 1879. Decided Nov 17, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Colorado.

This was an action of ejectment commenced by the defendant in error, in the District Court for the County of El Paso, Colorado, where judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, but set aside on motion and a change of venue granted to the County of Pueblo, where judgment was also rendered for the plaintiff. This judgment having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the Territory, the present writ of error was sued out.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. H. C. Alleman, for plaintiff in error:

The condition is void, being repugnant to the grant in fee simple. The conveyance of an estate in fee simple imports absolute ownership in the grantee, and any restriction or condition imposed, inconsistent with or repugnant to the estate so granted is void.

Gadberry v. Sheppard, 27 Miss., 205; 2 Co. Litt., 223 b; 2 Bac. Abr., 301, l; 4 Kent, Com., 131; Bank v. Davis, 21 Pick., 42; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y., 468; Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat., 325; Greenl. Cruise, Real Prop., Vol. 1, 470; Bradley v. Peizoto, 3 Ves., 326; Newkirk v. Newkirk, 2 Cal., 345.

Mr. F. W. Pitkin, for defendant in error, cited, in support of the validity of the condition in the deed:

Gray v. Blanchard, 8 Pick., Mass., 289; Shep. Touch., 129; Dorr v. Harrahan, 101 Mass., 531; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341; O'Brien v.

Wetherell, 14 Kan., 616; Collins Mfg. Co. v. Marcy, 25 Conn., 242; Plumb v. Tubbs, 41 N. Y., 443; Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y., 315; Nicoll v. N. Y. & E. R. R. Co., 12 N. Y., 121; Wilson v. Hart, 14 W. R., 748; Wilson v. Hart, L. R., 1 Ch. App., 463; Richards v. Revett, 26 W. R., 166.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

In May, 1873, the plaintiff in the court below, the Colorado Springs Company, sold and conveyed to the defendant, Cowell, two parcels of land, situated in the Town of Colorado Springs, in the then Territory of Colorado. The deed of conveyance stated that the consideration of its execution was $250, and an agreement between the parties that intoxicating liquors should never be manufactured, sold or otherwise disposed of as a beverage in any place of public resort on the premises. And it was expressly declared that in case this condition was broken by the grantee, his assigns or legal representatives, the deed should become null and void, and the title to the premises conveyed should revert to the grantor; and that the grantee, in accepting the deed, agreed to this condition. The defendant went into possession of the premises under the deed, and soon afterwards opened a billiard saloon in a building thereon, which became a place of public resort, where he sold and disposed of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The grantor thereupon brought the present action of ejectment for the possession of the premises, the title to which, it claimed, had reverted to it upon breach of the condition contained in its deed; and it recovered judgment. It does not appear that the Company had made any previous entry upon the premises or any demand for their possession.

The principal questions, therefore, for our determination are: the validity of the condition and, on its breach, the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action without previous entry or demand of possession.

The validity of the condition is assailed by the defendant as repugnant to the estate conveyed. His contention is, that, as the granting words of the deed purport to transfer the land and the entire interest of the Company therein, he took the property in absolute ownership, with liberty to use it in any lawful manner which he might choose. With such use the condition is inconsistent, and he, therefore, insists that it is repugnant to the estate granted. But the answer is, that the owner of property has a right to dispose of it with a limited restriction on its use, however much the restriction may affect the value or the nature of the estate. Repugnant conditions are those which tend to the utter subversion of the estate, such as prohibit entirely the alienation or use of the property. Conditions which prohibit its alienation to particular persons or for a limited period, or its subjection to particular uses, are not subversive of the estate; they do not destroy or limit its alienable or inheritable character. Sheppard Touch., 129, 131. The reports are full of cases where conditions imposing restrictions upon the uses to which property conveyed in fee may be subjected have been upheld. In this way slaughter-houses, soap-factories, distilleries, livery-stables, tanneries and machine-shops have, in a multitude of instances, been excluded from particular localities, which, thus freed from unpleasant sights, noxious vapors, or disturbing noises, have become desirable as places for residences of families. To hold that conditions for their exclusion from premises conveyed are inoperative, would defeat numerous arrangements in our large cities for the health and comfort of whole neighborhoods.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice FIELD.

The condition in the deed of the plaintiff against the manufacture or the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage at any place of public resort on the premises, was not subversive of the estate conveyed. It left the estate alienable and inheritable, and free to be subjected to other uses. It was not unlawful nor against public policy, but, on the contrary, it was imposed in the interest of public health and morality.

A condition in a deed, not materially different from that under consideration here, was held valid and not repugnant to the grant by the Court of Appeals of New York in Plumb v. Tubbs, 41 N. Y., 442. And a similar condition was held by the Supreme Court of Kansas to be a valid condition subsequent, upon the continued observance of which the estate conveyed depended. O'Brien v. Witherell, 14 Kan., 616; see, also, Doe v. Keeling, 1 Maule & S., 95, and Gray v. Blanchard, 8 Pick., 284.

We have no doubt that the condition in the deed to the defendant here is valid and not repugnant to the estate conveyed. It is a condition subsequent, and upon its breach the Company had a right to treat the estate as having reverted to it, and to bring ejectment for the premises. A previous entry upon the premises, or a demand for their possession, was not necessary. By statute, in Colorado, it is sufficient for the plaintiff in ejectment to show a right to the possession of the demanded premises at the commencement of the action as heir, devisee, purchaser or otherwise. The commencement of the action there stands in lieu of entry and demand of possession. See, also, Austin v. Cambridgeport, 21 Pick., 215; Cornelius v. Ivins 2 Dutch., 376; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S., 693 [XXIV., 1101].

The other objections urged to the title of the plaintiff are equally untenable. It seems that its title is derived through mesne conveyances from one Lamborn, to whom, in September, 1870, a patent of the United States was issued embracing the demanded premises. This patent adds to Lamborn's name the word "trustee," without mention of any trust upon which he is to hold the property. It is, therefore, contended that he must be considered as holding it for some undeclared use of the grantor, and that, consequently, he could not convey it without the consent or direction of the latter, in this case the government. But the answer to this position is given in the patent itself, by the recital that the land was purchased by the patentee of the government, thus negating the inference that the latter retained any interest in the property or advanced the purchase money. And besides, if any trust was in fact created, it was for the cestui que trust, and no one else, to complain of the action of the patentee and enforce the trust; it did not prevent the legal title from passing by his conveyance. Perry, Tr., sec. 334.

In March, 1872, the patentee conveyed the premises to the National Land Improvement Company of El Paso County, Colorado, a corporation created under the laws of Pennsylvania, with power to receive, hold and grant real and personal property; explore, locate and improve lands; transport emigrants and merchandise; construct houses and buildings, manufacture, trade and traffic; colonize, organize and form settlements; operate mineral and other lands and improve and work the same, provided such lands be located in Utah, Arizona or adjoining States and Territories lying west of the Mississippi; and to do such acts as should be necessary to promote the success of the corporation and the public good. The defendant contends that this Corporation, invested with these extensive powers to settle up the country and advance its own interests and the public welfare, had not the capacity to act in the Territory of Colorado, and to hold and convey real property there. By the Law of March 2, 1867, then in force, the Legislatures of the several Territories of the country were prohibited from granting private charters, and were only authorized to create by general law corporations for mining, manufacturing and other industrial pursuits. 14 Stat. at L., 426. His position is that Congress intended to prevent the creation of corporations like this one of Pennsylvania, as the extensive powers granted to it tended to monopolize landed estates for purposes of speculation, and thereby injure the agricultural, mining and manufacturing interests of the country; and if a domestic corporation could not be created with such powers for reasons of public policy, a foreign corporation could not for like reasons be permitted to exercise them in the Territory. The answer to this position is found in the general comity which, in the absence of positive direction to the contrary, obtains through the States and Territories of the United States, by which corporations created in one State or Territory are permitted to carry on any lawful business in another State and Territory, and to acquire, hold and transfer property there equally as individuals. If the policy of the State or Territory does not permit the business of the foreign corporation in its limits, or allow the corporation to acquire or hold real property, it must be expressed in some affirmative way; it cannot be inferred from the fact that its Legislature has made no provision for the formation of similar corporations, or allows corporations to be formed only by general law. Telegraph companies did business in several States before their Legislatures had created or authorized the creation of similar corporations; and numerous corporations existing by special charter in one State are now engaged, without question, in business in States where the creation of corporations by special enactment is forbidden.
See 10 OTTO.

The National Land and Improvement Company, the day following the receipt of the deed of Lombard, conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, the Colorado Springs Company. This Company was incorporated in 1871 for the purpose of aiding, encouraging and inviting immigration to the Territory, and to purchase, hold and dispose of lands, town lots, mineral springs and other property; also to construct and operate ditches, wagon-roads and railroads, and mills for manufacturing lumber, and generally to do all things authorized by the laws of the Territory which might tend to accomplish the purposes stated. At that time the Legislature was restricted, as already mentioned, in its power to create, by general law, corporations. It was not empowered to authorize the formation of companies to aid and encourage immigration, and for that purpose to take, possess and convey real property in the Territory. Therefore, the defendant contends that the Company could not acquire a right to the premises in controversy. But the answer to this position is, that, for some of the purposes designated in the articles of incorporation, the law in existence authorized the incorporation of companies; therefore, the incorporation here was not wholly illegal; a corporate body competent to exercise some of the powers mentioned was created, and under the statute of the Territory could acquire and hold or convey, by deed or otherwise any real or personal estate whatever, necessary to enable it to carry on its business. Whether the particular premises in controversy are necessary for that business is not important; that is a matter between the government of the State, succeeding that of the Territory and the Corporation, and is no concern of the defendant. It would create great inconveniences and embarrassments if, in actions by corporations to recover the possession of their real property, an investigation was permitted into the necessity of such property for the purposes of their incorporation, and the title made to rest upon the proof of that necessity. Water and M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal., 552.

But there is another and general answer to this objection. The defendant, as already stated, went into possession of the premises in controversy under the deed of the plaintiff. He took his title from the Company, with a condition that if he manufactured or sold intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage, at any place of public resort on the premises, the title should revert to his grantor; and he is, therefore, estopped, when sued by the grantor for the premises, upon breach of the condition, from denying the corporate existence of the plaintiff, or the validity of the title conveyed by its deed. Upon obvious principles, he cannot be permitted to retain the property which he received upon condition that it should be restored to his grantor on a certain contingency, by denying, when the contingency has happened, that his grantor ever had any right to it. Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.), 185; Miller v. Shackelford, 4 Dana (Ky.), 287, 288; Fitch v. Baldwin, 17 Johns., 161.

Judgment affirmed.

Cited—101 U. S., 356; 8 N. W. Rep., 390.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

LOUISA TWOMBLY, Admrx., etc.

v.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 78-81.)

NOTE.—Effect of repeal of statute on pending action. See note to U. S. v. Tynen, 78 U. S., XX., 153.

Motion for new trial, review of—repeal of statute—affirmance of judgment.

1. The refusal of the district court, on a motion for a new trial, to set aside the verdict because not sustained by the evidence, cannot be re-examined here on a writ of error.

2. This court cannot send a case back to the court below, with instructions to enter a judgment of nonsuit, where, since the judgment below and while the writ of error has been pending, the statute authorizing the action has been repealed.

3. Where no errors are found in the record, all this court can do is to affirm the judgment.

[No. 62.]

Argued Nov. 11, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Colorado.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. J. P. Usher, S. Shellabarger and C. E. Bretherton, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. Q. Charles, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We think that the court below was right in holding that the bill of exceptions only presented for review the refusal of the district court, on the motion for a new trial, to set aside the verdict because not sustained by the evidence. It is well settled that such a question cannot be re-examined here on a writ of error. Ins. Co. v. Young, 5 Cranch, 187; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat., 213; Mulhall v. Keenan, 18 Wall., 342 [85 U. S., XXI., 808].

Neither can we, as is asked, send the case back to the court below, with instructions to enter a judgment of nonsuit, because, since the judgment below and while this writ of error has been pending, the statute authorizing the action has been repealed. A writ of error to this court does not vacate the judgment below. That continues in force until reversed, which is only done when errors are found in the record on which it rests, and which were committed previous to its rendition. Here there are no such errors. All we can do, therefore, is to affirm the judgment, and send our mandate to that effect to the court below.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cited—103 U. S., 98.

UNITED STATES, Plff.,

v.

EMIL STEFFENS.

UNITED STATES, Plff.,

v.

ADOLPH WITTEMANN.

UNITED STATES, Plff.,

v.

W. W. JOHNSON ET AL.

(See S. C., "Trade-Mark Cases," 40 Otto, 82-99).

Trade-mark—invention—common law—Act of Congress.

1. The right to a trade-mark is a property right for the violation of which damages may be recovered in an action at law, and the continued violation of it will be enjoined by a court of equity. This right was not created by Act of Congress, but has long been recognized by the common law.

2. The ordinary trade-mark has no necessary relation to invention or discovery.

3. At common law the exclusive right to it grows out of its use, and not its mere adoption.

4. The Acts of 1870 and of 1876 in regard to trade-marks are not valid and constitutional.

[Nos. 705, 711, 719.]

Argued Oct. 22, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

NOS. 705 and 711. On certificates of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

No. 719, on a certificate of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio.

The cases are stated by the court.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., and Rowland Cox, for United States, in No. 705.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., and F. R. Coudert, for United States, in No. 711.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., for United States, in No. 719.

Mr. Geo. Hoadly, for defendants, in No. 719.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The three cases whose titles stand at the head of this opinion are criminal prosecutions for violations of what is known as the trade mark legislation of Congress. The first two are indictments in the Southern District of New York and the last is an information in the Southern District of Ohio. In all of them the Judges of the Circuit Courts in which they are pending have certified to a difference of opinion on what is substantially the same question, namely: are the Acts of Congress on the subject of trade-marks founded on any rightful authority in the Constitution of the United States?

The entire legislation of Congress in regard to trade-marks is of very recent origin. It is first seen in sections 77 to 84, inclusive, of the Act of July 8, 1870, 16 Stat. at L. 198, entitled "An Act to Revise, Consolidate and Amend the Statutes Relating to Patents and Copyrights." The part of this Act relating to trade-marks is embodied in chap. 2, tit. 60, secs. 4937-4947, of the Revised Statutes.

It is sufficient at present to say that they provide for the registration, in the Patent Office, of any device in the nature of a trade-mark to which any person has, by usage, established an exclusive right, or which the person so registering intends to appropriate by that act to his exclusive use; and they make the wrongful use of a trade-mark, so registered, by any other person, without the owner's permission, a cause of action in a civil suit for damages. Six years later we have the Act of August 14, 1876, 19 Stat. at L. 141, punishing by fine and imprisonment the fraudulent use, sale and counterfeiting of trade-marks registered in pursuance of the statutes of the United States, on which the informations and indictments are founded in the cases before us.

The right to adopt and use a symbol or a device to distinguish the goods or property made or sold by the person whose mark it is, to the exclusion of the use of that symbol by all other persons, has been long recognized by the common law and the chancery courts of England and of this country, and by the statutes of some of the States. It is a property right, for which damages may be recovered in an action at law, and the violation of which will be enjoined by a court of equity, with compensation for past infringement. This property and the exclusive right to its use were not created by the Act of Congress, and do not now depend upon that Act for their enforcement. The whole system of trade-mark property and the civil remedies for its protection existed long anterior to the Act of Congress, and remain in full force since its passage.

These propositions are so well understood as to need no citation of authorities or elaborate argument to prove them.

The property in trade-marks and the right to their exclusive use resting on the laws of the States in the same manner that other property does, and depending, like the great body of the rights of person and of property, for their security and protection on those laws, the power of Congress to legislate on the subject, to establish the conditions on which these rights shall depend, the period of their duration, and the legal remedies for their protection, if such power exist at all, must be found in some clause of the Constitution of the United States, the instrument which is the source of all the powers that Congress can lawfully exercise.

In the argument of these cases this seems to be conceded, and the advocates for the validity of the Acts of Congress on this subject point to two clauses of that instrument, in one or in both of which, as they assert, sufficient warrant may be found for this legislation.

The first of these is the eighth clause of section 8 of the first article of the Constitution. That section, manifestly intended to be an enumeration of the powers expressly granted to Congress, and closing with the declaration of a rule for the ascertainment of such powers as are necessary by way of implication to carry into efficient operation those expressly given, authorizes Congress, by the clause referred to, "To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."

As the first and only attempt by Congress to regulate the right of trade-marks is to be found in the Act to which we have referred, entitled "An Act to Revise, Consolidate and Amend the Statutes Relating to Patents and Copyrights," terms which have long since become technical, as referring, the one to inventions and the other to writings of authors, it is a reasonable inference that this part of the statute also was, in the opinion of Congress, an exercise of the power found in that clause of the Constitution. It may also be safely assumed that until a critical examination of the subject in the courts became necessary, it was mainly if not wholly to this clause that the advocates of the law looked for its support.

Any attempt, however, to identify the essential characteristics of a trade-mark with inventions and discoveries in the arts and sciences, or with the writings of authors, will show that the effort is surrounded with insurmountable difficulties.

The ordinary trade-mark has no necessary relation to invention or discovery. The trade-mark recognized by the common law is generally the growth of a considerable period of use, rather than a sudden invention. It is often the result of accident rather than design, and when under the Act of Congress it is sought to establish it by registration, neither originality, invention, discovery, science or art is in any way essential to the right conferred by that Act. If we should endeavor to classify it, under the head of writings of authors, the objections are equally strong. In this, as in regard to inventions, there is required originality. And while the word writings may be liberally construed, as it has been, to include original designs for engravings, prints, etc., it is only such as are original, and are founded in the creative powers of the mind. The writings which are to be protected are the fruits of intellectual labor, embodied in the form of books, prints, engravings and the like. The trade-mark may be and, generally, is, the adoption of something already in existence as the distinctive symbol of the party using it. At common law the exclusive right to it grows out of the use of it, and not its mere adoption. By the Act of Congress this exclusive right attaches upon registration. But in neither case does it depend upon novelty, upon invention, upon discovery, or upon any work of the brain. It requires no fancy or imagination, no genius, no laborious thought. It is simply founded on priority of appropriation. We look in vain in the statute for any other qualification or condition. If the symbol, however plain, simple, old or well known, has been first appropriated by the claimant as his distinctive trade-mark, he may, by registration, secure the right to its exclusive use. While such legislation may be a judicious aid to the common law on the subject of trade-marks, and may be within the competency of Legislatures whose general powers embrace that class of subjects, we are unable to see any such power in the constitutional provision concerning authors and inventors, and their writings and discoveries.

The other clause of the Constitution supposed to supply the requisite authority in Congress is the third of the same section, which, read in connection with the granting clause, is as follows: "The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes."

The argument is, that the use of a trade-mark—that which alone gives it any value—is to identify a particular class or quality of goods as the manufacture, produce or property of the person who puts them in the general market for sale; that the sale of the article so distinguished is commerce; that the trade-mark is, therefore, a useful and valuable aid or instrument of commerce, and its regulation by virtue of the above provision of the Constitution belongs to Congress, and that the Act in question is a lawful exercise of this power.

It is not every species of property which is the subject of commerce, or which is used or even essential in commerce, which is brought by this clause of the Constitution within the control of Congress. The barrels and casks, the bottles and boxes in which alone certain articles of commerce are kept for safety and by which their contents are transferred from the seller to the buyer, do not thereby become subjects of congressional legislation more than other property. Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How., 73. In the case of Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall., 168 [75 U.S., XIX., 357], this court held that a policy of insurance made by a corporation of one State on property situated in another, was not an article of commerce, and did not come within the purview of the clause of the Constitution we are considering. "They are not," says the court, "commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another, and then put up for sale." On the other hand, in the case of Almy v. California, 24 How., 169 [65 U.S., XVI., 644], it was held that a stamp duty imposed by the Legislature of California on bills of lading for gold and silver transported from any place in that State to another out of the State, was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States, because such instruments were a necessity to the transaction of commerce, and the duty was a tax upon exports.

The question, therefore, whether the trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in general terms as to bring it within congressional control, when used or applied to the classes of commerce which fall within that control, is one which, in the present case, we propose to leave undecided. We adopt this course because when this court is called on in the course of the administration of the law to consider whether an Act of Congress, or any other department of the Government, is within the constitutional authority of that department, a due respect for a co-ordinate branch of the Government requires that we shall decide that it has transcended its powers only when that is so plain that we cannot avoid the duty.

In such cases it is manifestly the dictate of wisdom and judicial propriety to decide no more than is necessary to the case in hand. That such has been the uniform course of this court in regard to statutes passed by Congress will readily appear to anyone who will consider the vast amount of argument presented to us assailing such statutes as unconstitutional, and will count, as he may do on his fingers, the instances in which this court has declared an Act of Congress void for want of constitutional power.

Governed by this view of our duty, we proceed to remark that a glance at the commerce clause of the Constitution discloses at once what has been often the subject of comment in this court and out of it, that the power of regulation there conferred on Congress is limited to commerce with foreign nations, commerce among the States, and commerce with the Indian Tribes; and while bearing in mind the liberal construction, that commerce with foreign nations means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens and subjects of foreign nations, and commerce among the States means commerce between the individual citizens of different States, there still remains a very large amount of commerce, perhaps the largest, which, being trade or traffic between citizens of the same State, is beyond the control of Congress.

When, therefore, Congress undertakes to enact a law, which can only be valid as a regulation of commerce, it is reasonable to expect to find on the face of the statute, or from its essential nature, that it is a regulation of commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, or with the Indian Tribes. If it is not so limited, it is in excess of the power of Congress. If its main purpose be to establish a regulation applicable to all trade, to commerce at all points, especially if it is apparent that it is designed to govern the commerce wholly between citizens of the same State, it is obviously the exercise of a power not confided to Congress.

We find no recognition of this principle in the chapter on trade-marks in the Revised Statutes. We would naturally look for this in the description of the class of persons who are entitled to register a trade-mark, or in reference to the goods to which the trade-mark should be applied. If, for instance, it described persons engaged in a commerce between the different States, and related to its use in such commerce, it would be evident that Congress believed it was acting under the clause of the Constitution which authorizes it to regulate commerce among the States. So if, when the trade-mark has been registered, Congress had protected its use on goods sold by a citizen of one State to another, or by a citizen of a foreign State to a citizen of the United States, it would be seen that Congress was at least intending to exercise the power of regulation conferred by that clause of the Constitution. But no such idea is found or suggested in this statute. Its language is: "Any person or firm domiciled in the United States, and any corporation created by the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof," or any person residing in a foreign country which by treaty or convention affords similar privileges to our citizens, may by registration obtain protection for his trade-mark. Here is no requirement that such person shall be engaged in the kind of commerce which Congress is authorized to regulate. It is a general declaration that anybody in the United States, and anybody in any other country which permits us to do the like, may, by registering a trade-mark, have it fully protected. So, while the person registering is required to furnish "A statement of the class of merchandise, and the particular description of the goods comprised in such class, by which the trade-mark has been or is intended to be appropriated," there is no hint that it is goods to be transported from one State to another, or between the United States and foreign countries. Section 4939 is intended to impose some restriction upon the Commissioner of Patents in the matter of registration, but no limitation is suggested in regard to persons or property engaged in the different classes of commerce mentioned in the Constitution. When we come to the remedies provided by the Act for the infringement of the rights of the owner of the registered trade-mark there is no restriction of the right of action or suit, to a case of trade-mark used in foreign or interstate commerce.

It is, therefore, manifest that no such distinction is found in the Act, but that its broad purpose was to establish a universal system of trade-mark registration, for the benefit of all who had already used a trade-mark, or who wished to adopt one in the future, without regard to the character of the trade to which it was to be applied, or the locality of the owner, with the solitary exception that those who resided in foreign countries which extended no such privileges to us were excluded from them here.

It has been suggested that if Congress has power to regulate trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, these statutes shall be held valid in that class of cases, if no further. To this there are two objections: first, the indictments in these cases do not show that the trade-marks which are wrongfully used were trade marks used in that kind of commerce. Second, while it may be true that when one part of a statute is valid and constitutional and another part is unconstitutional and void, the court may enforce the valid part where they are distinctly separable so that each can stand alone, it is not within the judicial province to give to the words used by Congress a narrower meaning than they are manifestly intended to bear in order that crimes may be punished which are not described in language that brings them within the constitutional power of that body. This precise point was decided in the case of the U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S., 214 [XXIII., 563]. In that case Congress had passed a statute punishing election officers who should refuse to any person lawfully entitled to do so the right to cast his vote at an election. This court was of the opinion that, as regarded the section of the statute then under consideration, Congress could only punish such denial when it was on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

It was urged, however, that the more general description of the offense included the more limited one, and that the section was valid where such was in fact the cause of denial. But the court said, through the Chief Justice: "We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is constitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting words that are not there now. Each of the sections must stand as a whole, or fall altogether. The language is plain. There is no room for construction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question, then, to be determined is, whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute so as to make it specific, when, as expressed, it is general only. * * * To limit this statute as now asked for would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one. This is no part of our duty." If we should, in the case before us, undertake to make by judicial construction a law which Congress did not make, it is quite probable we should do what, if the matter were now before that body, it would be unwilling to do, namely: make a trade-mark law which is only partial in its operation, and which would complicate the rights which parties would hold, in some instances under the Act of Congress, and in others under state law. Cooley, Const. Lim., 178, 179; Com. v. Hitchings, 5 Gray, 482.

In what we have here said, we wish to be understood as leaving the whole question of the treaty-making power of the General Government over trade-marks, and of the duty of Congress to pass any laws necessary to carry such treaties into effect, untouched.

While we have, in our references in this opinion to the trade-mark legislation of Congress, had mainly in view the Act of 1870, and the civil remedy which that Act provided, it was because the criminal offenses described in the Act of 1876 are, by their express terms, solely referable to frauds, counterfeits and unlawful use of trade-marks which have been registered under the provisions of the former Act. If that Act is unconstitutional, so that the registration under it confers no lawful right, then the criminal enactment intended to protect that right falls with it.

The questions in each of these cases being an inquiry whether these statutes can be upheld in whole or in part as valid and constitutional, must be answered in the negative; and it will be so certified to the proper Circuit Courts.

Copy, foregoing opinion duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Cited—102 U. S., 544; 105 U. S., 312; 1 McCrary, 386.

ALONZO S. HATCH, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CLEVELAND.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 124-138.)

Sale of goods—title, when passes—sale of staves.

1. A contract for the sale of specific, ascertained goods vests the property immediately in the buyer, and gives to the seller a right to the price, unless it is shown that such was not the intention of the parties.

2. Where there has been a complete delivery of the property, the title passes, although something remains to be done in order to ascertain the total value of the goods at the rates specified in the contract.

3. A contract for the sale of staves to be made, piled and counted, held to pass the title to the vendee upon those things being done.

[No. 40.]

Submitted Nov. 3, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan.

This was an action of replevin, brought in the court below by the Standard Oil Company, to recover a certain number of staves which it claimed to own and which the defendant, now plaintiff in error, had taken possession of as sheriff, under writs of execution against third parties.

Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ashley Pond and H. Greer, for plaintiff in error:

1. The interest of the Standard Oil Company in the staves in controversy at the time they were seized by plaintiff in error upon process against the Merritts, was that of mortgagees, and the legal title as owners was in the Merritts.

2. Up to the time of the seizure of the staves in controversy by the plaintiff in error, there had been no delivery of them to the Oil Company, and no actual and continued change of possession from the Merritts to the Oil Company within the meaning of section 4703, of the Statutes of Michigan.

Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich., 93.

3. As the conveyance of the staves in controversy from the Merritts to the Oil Company, was in the nature of a mortgage, and as there was no actual and continued change of possession of such staves, the conveyance was absolutely void as against creditors of the Merritts. Such is the language of the statute, and the courts have invariably construed the statute to mean just what its language imports.

This statute was taken from the statutes of New York, and has frequently been construed by the courts of New York.

Tyler v. Strang, 21 Barb., 198; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Hendrickson, 25 Barb., 484; Stevens v. R. R. Co., 31 Barb., 590.

Similar statutes have received similar construction.

Robinson v. Willoughby, 70 N. C., 358; Bevans v. Bolton, 31 Mo., 437.

4. Assuming that the agreement between the Merritts and the Oil Company operated as a sale, and not as a mortgage of the staves in controversy, the title to the 50,000 staves, which the record shows were never piled upon the land covered by the lease from the Merritts to the Oil Company, had not vested in the Oil Company at the time they were seized by the plaintiff in error, under process against the Merritts.

Messrs. Moore, Canfield & Warner, for defendant in error:

In the case at bar, all the staves except some 50,000 had actually been delivered to the vendees upon their premises, which was the place agreed upon as the place of delivery; they had been counted; and the advance payment of more than $15,000 had actually been made before they were seized by the plaintiff in error. Both parties had acted according to contract.

As between them we submit it cannot be successfully contended that the title to the staves had not passed; and as no charge of fraud is made against either the Oil Company or the Merritts, the attaching creditors stand in no better position than the Merritts themselves.

We think our argument is abundantly sustained by the authorities of which we cite the following:

Benj. Sales, sec. 311, and note G; 2 Schouler Pers. Prop., 221; Blackb. Sales, 147, 149; Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 Mich., 324; Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 Mich., 486; Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich., 388; Ortman v. Green, 26 Mich., 209; Nat. Bank v. Crowley, 24 Mich., 494; Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick., 175; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick., 280; Williams v. Jackman, 16 Gray, 517; Foster v. Ropes, 111 Mass., 10; Morse v. Sherman, 106 Mass., 430; Marble v. Moore, 102 Mass., 443; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn., 413; Waldron v. Chase, 37 Me., 414; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H., 290; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 N. Y., 258; Terry v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y., 520; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y., 118; Burrows v. Whitaker, 71 N. Y., 291; Turley v. Bates, 2 Hurl. & C., 200; Armington v. Houston, 38 Vt., 448; Shelton v. Franklin, 68 Ill., 338; Graff v. Fitch, 53 Ill., 377; MacNamara v. Edmister, 11 Hun, 597; Young v. Matthews, L. R., 2 C. P., 127; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R., 7 Q. B., 436; Ogg v. Skuter, L. R., 10 C. P., 159; Rugg v. Minett, 11 East, 210; Benj. Sales, sec. 358; 2 Schouler

Pers. Prop., 248; Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 El. & Bl., 885; Brown v. Hare, 3 Hurls. & N., 483; Langton v. Higgins, 4 Hurls. & N., 400; Tregelles v. Sewell, 7 Hurls. & N., 573; Hyde v. Lathrop, 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 597; Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass., 291; Groff v. Belche, 62 Mo., 400.

The provision in the contract for the shipping and forwarding of the staves to Cleveland, and that there should be a final inspection there by the vendees, is not sufficient to prevent an immediate transfer, upon delivery at Lapeer. Nor does the clause in the contract respecting insurance and risk in case of destruction by fire.

There was no need of the stipulation that the risk or any part of the risk should be with the Merritts, after the staves were delivered at Lapeer, if it was not intended that the title should then pass to the Oil Company.

Martineau v. Kitching, L. R., 7 Q. B., 436; Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall., 194 (89 U. S., XXII., 869).

The agreement between the Standard Oil Company and the Merritts has none of the necessary elements of a chattel mortgage.

1. In order to create a chattel mortgage, there must be a debt which one party has contracted, and which he is liable to pay. The mortgage is simply a security for such payment.

2. There must be a right of redemption upon payment of the debt.

Van Brunt v. Wakelee, 11 Mich., 177, and cases there cited; Cary v. Hewitt, 26 Mich., 228; 2 Story, Eq. Jur., secs. 1030, 1031.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Contracts for the purchase and sale of chattels, if complete and unconditional and not within the Statute of Frauds, are sufficient, as between the parties, to vest the property in the purchaser, even without delivery; the rule being that such a contract constitutes a sale of the thing, and that its effect is, if not prejudicial to creditors, to transfer the property to the purchaser against every person not holding the same under a bona fide title for a valuable consideration without notice. The Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn., 211; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How., 384, 399; 2 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 493; Leonard v. Davis, 1 Black, 476-483 [66 U. S., XVII., 222-225].

Nine hundred and forty-four thousand white-oak barrel staves, of the value of $17,500, were attached by the defendant as sheriff of the county, under certain processes mesne and final, which he held for service against the manufacturers of the staves, to secure certain debts which they owed to their creditors. No irregularity in the proceedings is suggested, but the plaintiffs claimed to be the owners of the staves by purchase from the manufacturers, and they brought replevin to recover the property. Service was made, and the defendant appeared and demanded a trial of the matters set forth in the declaration. Issue having been joined between the parties, they went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiffs. Exceptions were filed by the defendant, and he sued out the present writ of error.

Errors assigned in the court are as follows: (1) That the court erred in instructing the jury that, as soon as the staves were piled and counted, as provided in the second agreement, the title to the same vested in the plaintiff Company as vendee, and in refusing to instruct the jury that the only interest the plaintiffs acquired in the staves before they were delivered was as security for advances in the nature of a mortgage interest. (2) That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that if there was no actual delivery of the property and change of possession the agreement of sale was void as against the creditors of the manufacturers, because not recorded as required by statute. (3) That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that if the evidence did not show that the fifty thousand staves not piled on the leased land were not counted, the title to that parcel did not pass to the plaintiffs for any purpose, and that the defendant, as to that parcel, was entitled to their verdict. (4) That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that under the agreement no title to any of the staves passed to the plaintiffs until they were actually placed upon the leased land and were counted by the designated person, and in instructing the jury that the title to the staves piled near the leased land passed to the plaintiffs. (5) That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that no title to any staves passed to the plaintiffs other than those contracted to be sold by the first agreement, and that if the jury find that there was any portion of the staves replevied not of that description, that as to such portion the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover. (6) That the court erred in excluding the testimony offered by the defendant, as set forth in the record.

Sufficient appears to show that the manufacturers of the staves, on the day alleged, contracted with the plaintiffs to sell them one million of white-oak barrel staves of certain described dimensions, to be delivered as therein provided, for the price of $30 per thousand, subject to count and inspection by the plaintiffs, who agreed to receive and pay for the same as fast as inspected. But before the staves had been furnished, to wit: on the 28th of August in the same year, the parties entered into a new agreement in regard to the staves, in which they refer to the prior one, and stipulate that it is to continue in operation, subject to modifications made in the new contract, of which the following are very material to the present investigation: (1) That the manufacturers shall make and deliver the staves properly piled in some convenient place, to be agreed between the parties, on land in Deerfield, to be controlled by the plaintiffs, and that the delivery shall be made as fast as the staves are sawed. (2) That the plaintiff shall furnish a man to count the staves from week to week as the same shall be piled. (3) That when the staves shall be so piled and counted, the person counting the same shall give the manufacturers a certificate of the amount, which, when presented to the plaintiffs, shall entitle the party to a payment of $17 per thousand as part of the purchase price. (4) That, upon the piling and counting of the staves as provided, "The delivery of the same shall be deemed complete, and that said staves shall then become and thenceforth be the property of the plaintiffs absolutely and unconditionally."

Other material modifications of the first agreement were made by the second, some of which it is not deemed necessary to consider in disposing of the case.

Early measures were adopted to perfect the arrangement, as appears from the fact that the manufacturers, October 4 in the same year, leased to the plaintiffs a small tract of land to be used for piling and storing the staves; and the case shows that all the staves except fifty thousand were piled on that site, the fifty thousand staves being piled on land owned by the manufacturers, about one hundred or one hundred and fifty feet distant from the pile on the leased tract, on which were certain buildings owned and occupied by the lessors, the mill where the staves were manufactured being situated on the same section a little distant from the other buildings. None of the staves were manufactured when the contracts were made.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs that the lease was never filed in the clerk's office and that it was never recorded in the office of the county register of deeds. Certain admissions were also made by the defendant, as follows: that the parties to the contracts acted in good faith in making the same, and that the contracts and lease were duly executed; that all the staves seized were manufactured by the said contractors, and that all except fifty thousand of the same were piled on the leased tract.

Nothing was required at common law to give validity to a sale of personal property except the mutual assent of the parties to the contract. As soon as it was shown by competent evidence that it was agreed by mutual assent that the one should transfer the absolute property in the thing to the other for a money price, the contract was considered as completely proven and binding on both parties. If the property by the terms of the agreement passed immediately to the buyer, the contract was deemed a bargain and sale; but if the property in the thing sold was to remain for a time in the seller, and only to pass to the buyer at a future time or on certain conditions inconsistent with its immediate transfer, the contract was deemed an executory agreement. Contracts of the kind are made in both forms, and both are equally legal and valid; but the rights which the parties acquire under the one are very different from those secured under the other. Ambiguity or incompleteness of language in the one or the other frequently leads to litigation; but it is ordinarily correct to say, that, whenever a controversy arises in such a case as to the true character of the agreement, the question is rather one of intention than of strict law; the general rule being that the agreement is just what the parties intended to make it, if the intent can be collected from the language employed, the subject-matter, and the attendant circumstances.

Where the specific goods to which the contract is to attach are not specified, the ordinary conclusion is that the parties only contemplated an executory agreement. Reported cases illustrate and confirm that proposition, and many show that where the goods to be transferred are clearly specified and the terms of sale, including the price, are explicitly given, the property, as between the parties, passes to the buyer even without actual payment or delivery. 2 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 492; Tome v. Dubois, 6 Wall., 548, 554 [73 U. S., XVIII., 943, 946]; Carpenter v. Hale, 8 Gray, 157; Martineau v.

Kitching, L. R., 7 Q. B., 436, 449; Story, Sales, sec. 300.

Standard authorities also show that where there is no manifestation of intention, except what arises from the terms of sale, the presumption is, if the thing to be sold is specified and it is ready for the immediate delivery, that the contract is an actual sale, unless there is something in the subject-matter or attendant circumstances to indicate a different intention. Well founded doubt upon that subject cannot be entertained if the terms of bargain and sale, including the price, are explicit; but when the thing to be sold is not specified, or if when specified something remains to be done to the same by the vendor, either to put it into a deliverable state or to ascertain the price, the contract is only executory. In the former case there is no reason for imputing to the parties any intention to suspend the transfer, inasmuch as the thing to be sold and the price have been specified and agreed by mutual consent, and nothing remains to be done. Quite unlike that, something material remains to be done by the seller in the latter case before delivery, from which it may be presumed that the parties intended to make the transfer dependent upon the performance of the things yet to be done.

Suppose that is so; still every presumption of the kind must yield to proof of a contrary intent, and it may safely be affirmed that the parties may effectually agree that the property in the specific thing sold, if ready for delivery, shall pass to the buyer before such requirements are fulfilled, even though the thing remains in the possession of the seller.

Where a bargain is made for the purchase of goods, and nothing is said about payment or delivery, Bailey, J., said the property passes immediately, so as to cast upon the purchaser all future risk, if nothing remains to be done to the goods, although he cannot take them away without paying the price. Simmons v. Swift, 5 Barn. & C., 857.

Sales of goods not specified stand upon a different footing, the general rule being that no property in such goods passes until delivery, because until then the very goods sold are not ascertained. But where by the contract itself the vendor appropriates to the vendee a specific chattel, and the latter thereby agrees to take the same and to pay the stipulated price, the parties, says Parke, J., are thus in the same situation as they would be after a delivery of goods under a general contract, for the reason that the very appropriation of the chattel is equivalent to delivery by the vendor, and the assent of the vendee to take the specific chattel and to pay the price is equivalent to his accepting possession. Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad., 313, 340; Shep. Touch., 224.

When the agreement for sale is of a thing not specified, or for an article not manufactured, or of a certain quantity of goods in general without any identification of them or an appropriation of the same to the contract, or when something remains to be done to put the goods into a deliverable state, or to ascertain the price to be paid by the buyer, the contract is merely an executory agreement, unless it contains words warranting a different construction, or there be something in the subject-matter or the circumstances to indicate a different intention. Benj.

Sales, 2d ed., 257; Blackb. Sales, 151; Young v. Matthews, L. R., 2 C. P., 127-129; Logan v. LeMesurier, 6 Moore (P. C.), 116; Ogg v. Shuter, L. R., 10 C. P., 159-162; Langton v. Higgins, 4 Hurls. & N., 400; Turley v. Bates, 2 Hurls. & C., 200-208.

Exactly the same views are expressed by the Supreme Court of the State as those maintained in the preceding cases. Speaking to the same point, Cooley, Ch. J., says, when, under a contract for the purchase of personal property, something remains to be done to identify the property or to put it in a condition for delivery, or to determine the sum that shall be paid for it, the presumption is always very strong that, by the understanding of the parties, the title is not to pass until such act has been fully accomplished. Such a presumption, however, is by no means conclusive; for if one bargains with another for the purchase of such property, and the parties agree that what they do in respect to its transfer shall have the effect to vest the title in the buyer, he will become the owner, as the question is merely one of mutual assent, the rule being, that if the minds of the parties have met, and they have agreed that the title shall pass, nothing further, as between themselves, is required, unless the case is one within the Statute of Frauds. Consequently, it was held by the same court that if one purchases gold bullion by weight, and receives delivery before it becomes convenient to weigh it, and on the understanding that the weighing shall be done afterwards, the bullion would become the property of the buyer and be at his risk, unless there were some qualifying circumstances in the case. Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich., 386-388; Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 Mich., 324, 328; Ortman v. Green, 26 Mich., 209, 212.

Decisions of other States are to the same effect, of which the following are examples: Iron Works v. R. R. Co., 62 N. Y., 272, 274; Groff v. Belche, 62 Mo., 400-402; Morse v. Sherman, 106 Mass., 430, 433; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick., 280, 283; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn., 413-419; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H., 290-300.

Modern decisions of the most recent date support the proposition that a contract for the sale of specific ascertained goods vests the property immediately in the buyer, and that it gives to the seller a right to the price, unless it is shown that such was not the intention of the parties. Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore (P. C.), 551; Benj. Sales, 2d ed., 280; Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Cl. & F., 600; Calcutta Co. v. DeMattos, 32 L. J. (N. S.), 2 Q. B., 322-338.

There is no rule of law, says Blackburn, J., to prevent the parties in such cases from making whatever bargain they please. If they use words in the contract showing that they intend that the goods shall be shipped by the person who is to supply the same, on the terms that when shipped they shall be the consignee's property and at his risk, so that the vendor shall be paid for them whether delivered or not, such an intention is effectual to pass the title. S. C. on appeal, 33 L. J. (N. S.), 2 Q. B., 214; Calcutta Co. v. DeMattos, 11 W. R., 1024, 1027.

Support in some of the cases cited is found to the theory that the terms of the bargain and sale in this case, inasmuch as they indicate that the intention of the sellers was to appropriate the staves when manufactured to the contract, are sufficient to vest the property in the buyer when the agreed sum to be advanced was paid even without any delivery; but it is quite unnecessary to decide that question in view of the evidence and what follows in the second contract between the parties.

Provision was made that a convenient place should be designated by the parties where the staves should be piled as fast as they should be sawed. Such a place was provided to the acceptance of both parties, and the plaintiffs furnished a man as agreed to count the same from week to week as the staves were piled. Enough appears to show that all the staves except as aforesaid, were piled and delivered at that agreed place.

In a contract of sale, if no place of delivery is specified in the contract, the articles sold must, in general, be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale, unless some other place is required by the nature of the article or by the usage of the trade or the previous course of dealing between the parties, or is to be inferred from the circumstances of the case. Decided cases to that effect are numerous; but the rule is universal, that if a place of delivery is prescribed as a part of the contract, the vendee is not bound to accept a tender of the goods made in any other place, nor is the vendor obliged to make a tender elsewhere. Story, Sales, 4th ed., sec. 308.

Where, by the terms of the contract, the article is to be delivered at a particular place, the seller, before he can recover his pay, is bound to prove the delivery at that place. Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me., 147.

So when the intention of the parties as to the place of delivery can be collected from the contract, and the circumstances proved in relation to it, the delivery should be made at such place, even though some alterations have been made in the place designated. Howard v. Miner, 20 Me., 325-330.

Much discussion is certainly unnecessary to show that, where the terms of bargain and sale are in the usual form, an absolute delivery of the article sold vests the title in the purchaser, as the authorities upon the subject to that effect are numerous, unanimous and decisive. Hyde v. Lathrop, 3 Keyes, 597; Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick., 175, 183.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, if the plaintiff proves delivery at the place agreed and that there remained nothing further for him to do, he need not show an acceptance by the defendant. Nichols v. Morse, 100 Mass., 523.

Even when a place of delivery is specified, it does not necessarily follow that the title does not pass before they reach the designated place, as that may depend upon the intention of the parties; and whether they did or did not intend that the title should vest before that, is a question for the jury, to be determined by the words, acts and conduct of the parties and all the circumstances. Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me., 45.

Where it appears that there has been a complete delivery of the property in accordance with the terms of a sale, the title passes, although there remains something to be done in order to ascertain the total value of the goods at the rates specified in the contract. Burrows v. Whitaker, 71 N. Y., 291-296; Crofoot v. Bennett,

2 N. Y., 258; Graff v. Fitch, 58 Ill., 373; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y., 118, 125; Terry v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y., 520, 525.

Beyond controversy, such must be the rule in this case, because the contract provides that upon the piling and counting the staves as required by the instrument, the delivery of the same shall be deemed complete, and that the staves shall then become and henceforth be the property of the plaintiffs absolutely and unconditionally.

Except the fifty thousand before named, all the staves were so piled and counted; and the case shows that the person designated to count the same approved fourteen certificates specifying the respective amounts of the several parcels delivered, and that the plaintiffs paid on each the $17 per thousand advance as agreed, amounting in all to $15,148.

Personal property may be purchased in an unfinished condition, and the buyer may acquire the title to the same though the possession be retained by the vendor in order that he may fit it for delivery, if the intention of the parties to that effect is fully proved. Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall., 180 [89 U. S., XXII., 863].

After an executory contract has been made, it may be converted into a complete bargain and sale by specifying the goods to which the contract is to attach, or, in legal phrase, by the appropriation of specific goods to the contract, as the sole element deficient in a perfect sale is thus supplied. Benj. Sales, 2d ed., 263; Rohde v. Thwaites, 6 Barn. & C., 388.

Examples of the kind are numerous in cases where the goods are not specified, and the decided cases show that if the seller subsequently selects the goods and the buyer adopts his acts, the contract which before was a mere agreement is converted into an actual sale and the property passes to the buyer. One hundred quarters of barley out of a bulk in a granary were agreed to be purchased by the plaintiff, he having agreed to send his own sacks, in which the same might be conveyed to an agreed place. He sent sacks enough to contain a certain part of the barley, which the seller filled, but, being on the eve of bankruptcy, he refused to deliver any part of the quantity sold, and emptied the barley in the sacks back into the bulk in the granary. Held, in an action brought to recover the whole amount, that the quantity placed in the sacks passed to the purchaser, as that part was appropriated by the bankrupt to the plaintiff. Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 El. & Bl., 855; Browne v. Hare, 3 Hurls. & N., 484; S. C., 4 Hurls. & N., 821; Tregelles v. Sewell, 7 Hurls. & N., 573.

Stipulations in respect to the forwarding and shipping the staves are also contained in the second agreement, but it is not necessary to enter into any discussion of that topic, as it appears that the manufacturers, if they did anything in that regard, were to act as the agents of the plaintiffs, and if they failed to transport the same to the place of shipment seasonably, the plaintiffs were authorized to do it at their expense. Nor is it necessary to discuss the stipulations as to insurance, as it is clear that they contain nothing inconsistent with the theory that the property vested in the plaintiffs as soon as the staves were piled and delivered at the agreed place of delivery.

558

Proof, of a satisfactory character, was exhibited that much the greater portion of the staves were piled upon the leased site, and that the residue were piled on land adjoining, and within a hundred or a hundred and fifty feet from the larger pile. Witnesses examined the staves piled there several times, and one of them testified that he was there July 10, 1875, with one of the sellers, and made a thorough count of the staves, the number counted being 780,000, and he states that he counted the staves in both piles, and that there were no other white-oak staves on the premises.

Taken as a whole, the evidence shows that the parties treated both piles of the staves as delivered under the contract, the one as much as the other, and that they regarded both as properly included in the adjustment of the amounts to be advanced. When the agent of the plaintiffs went there, as before explained, with one of the sellers, it is certain that they counted both piles, and it is clear that in view of the evidence and the circumstances the jury were warranted in finding that the property in all the white-oak staves piled there passed to the plaintiffs when they were piled and delivered at that place, neither party having objected to the place where the smaller parcel was piled.

Actual delivery of the staves having been proved, it is not necessary to make any reply to the defense set up under the state statute in respect to the sale of goods unaccompanied by a change of possession. Objection is also made that the lease of the premises designated as the place of delivery was not recorded, which is so obviously without merit that it requires no consideration.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is obvious that the first five assignments of error must be overruled.

Exception was also taken to the ruling of the court below in excluding certain testimony offered by the defendant to show that the staves were not cut and made at the time some of the certificates were given to secure the advance, and to show that the staves included in the small pile were never in fact counted, and that no certificate specially applicable to them was ever given. Responsive to the objection of the defendant, the court below remarked, that, if the staves were subsequently piled there to the satisfaction of the plaintiffs, the title passed, it appearing that the certificates were given and the advance paid, which is all that need be said upon the subject, as it is plain that the ruling is without just exception.

Judgment affirmed.

CHARLES W. KIRTLAND, Plff. in Err.,

v.

LEONARD L. HOTCHKISS.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 491-499.)

State taxation—on bonds and mortgages in another State—domicil of owner.

1. So long as a State, by its laws prescribing the mode and subject of taxation, does not intrench

NOTE.—Power of States to tax. See note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.), 514; and note to Dobbins v. Erie Co., 41 U. S. (16 Pet.), 435.

100 U. S.

upon the legitimate authority of the Union, or violate any right recognized or secured by the Constitution of the United States, this court, as between the State and its citizen, can afford him no relief against state taxation, however unjust, oppressive or onerous.

2. The Constitution does not prohibit a State from taxing one of its resident citizens for a debt held by him, due by a resident of another State, and evidenced by the bond of the debtor, secured by deed of trust or mortgage upon real estate situated in the State in which the debtor resides.

3. A debt, for purposes of taxation, is situated at the domicile of the creditor, although secured by mortgage upon real estate situated in another State. [No. 23.]

Argued Oct. 30, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Errors, Litchfield County, State of Connecticut.

This action was brought in the Superior Court of Litchfield County, Connecticut, by Charles W. Kirtland, a citizen of Connecticut, to obtain a perpetual injunction against Leonard L. Hotchkiss, collector of taxes of the Town of Woodbury, in that county, to restrain said Hotchkiss and his successors in the office of collector of taxes, from the enforcement of certain tax warrants levied upon real estate of Kirtland, in said Town of Woodbury, and from the collection from said real estate of certain taxes claimed by Kirtland to have been unlawfully assessed.

These taxes were assessed against Kirtland by reason of his ownership of certain bonds held in the City of Chicago, Illinois, secured by a mortgage of real estate in said city.

In the progress of the cause the following stipulation was entered into:

"The parties agree that the only question in the case is, whether said bonds owned by the petitioner, drawn in the form and secured in the manner and form as above stated, were or were not liable to taxation under the statute in such case made and provided. If they were so liable, then the injunction to be dismissed; if not, then the injunction to be made perpetual."

Upon the inception of the action, a temporary injunction was granted against the enforcement of the alleged illegal taxes.

By agreement of the parties, in accordance with the practice of the State of Connecticut, the cause was submitted upon a statement or finding of facts, to the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, as to what decree should be passed, and what judgment rendered, by the Superior Court upon these facts. In accordance with the advice of the Supreme Court of Errors, a decree was entered in the Superior Court dismissing the petition of Kirtland and dissolving the temporary injunction. Kirtland thereupon assigned errors, and made a motion in error to the Supreme Court of Errors, by which latter court the judgment of the Superior Court was affirmed; whereupon Kirtland sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. William Cothren, Ashbel Green and Julien T. Davies, for plaintiff in error:

1. The Statute of Connecticut above set forth, by its terms, directs the taxation that is here complained of.

No question is raised with respect to a want of compliance with the statute by the state officials.

2. Either property or acts of business situated without the jurisdiction of the State of Connecticut.

icut, are burdened by the taxation of the plaintiff in error by reason of his ownership of the bonds in question.

The court below says that the right of the plaintiff in error to receive his principal and interest is "a personal right, and accompanies the person of the creditor."

Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn., p. 438.

This maxim has no force independent of international comity.

See Savigny, System des Heutigen, Romischen, Rechts, Vol. 8, p. 171, sec. 366; Story, Conf. L., sec. 379; Whart. Int. Law, sec. 11; Westlake, Private Int. L., 126; Guillander v. Howell, 35 N. Y., 658.

This court has adopted, in the application of the doctrine that personal property follows the owner, the rule that this fiction "yields whenever it is necessary for the purposes of justice that the actual situs of the thing should be examined."

Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall., 150 (74 U. S., XIX., 113). See, also, Hervey v. R. I. Locomotive Works, 93 U. S., 664 (XXIII., 1003). See Doe, J., Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 5 Barn. & C., 438; Downie v. Downie's Trustees, Cases Court of Sessions, 3d series, Vol. 4, p. 1067.

For cases of taxation, where it has been held that visible, tangible property could not be taxed when situate beyond the jurisdiction of the taxing States, see, People v. Comr. of Taxes, 23 N. Y., 224; Pacific Steamship Co. v. Comr. of Taxes, 46 How. Pr., 815; Foreign Held Bonds Case, 15 Wall., 300 (82 U. S., XXI., 179).

Negotiable choses in action must now be regarded as possessing the incidents of property, and as capable of a situs of their own.

Foreign Held Bonds Case (supra); British Com. L. Ins. Co. v. Comr. of Taxes, 31 N. Y., 32; S. C., 28 How. Pr. 41; State v. St. Louis Co. Ct., 47 Mo., 594; People v. Home Ins. Co., 29 Cal., 533; Atty-Gen. v. Bouwens, 4 Mees. & W., 172.

In many instances and for many purposes, it has been held that non-negotiable choses in action do not follow the person of the owner.

Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y., 292; Gold v. Strode, Carth., 148; Yeomans v. Bradshaw, Carth., 373; Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall., 405 (76 U. S., XIX., 761); Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall., 296 (78 U. S., XX., 141); Brown v. Kennedy, 15 Wall., 591 (82 U. S., XXI., 193).

In the case of a foreign bankrupt, an attaching creditor can collect from the bankrupt's debtor at the domicile of the latter, a debt due the bankrupt, and hold it against assignees, or the other creditors by operation of law.

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 358; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cranch, 289.

It becomes necessary to examine: (1) What is the subject of taxation by the State of Connecticut in imposing the taxes complained of; and (2) What situs or habitat, shall be assigned to that subject?

This court, by a happy generalization, has decided that the subjects of taxation are "persons, property and business."

Foreign Held Bonds Case (supra).

Does the tax in question fall upon a person? It by no means follows that the tax falls upon that person who first pays it.

St. Louis v. Ferry Co., 11 Wall., 423 (78 U. S., XX., 192); Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall., 426 (79 U. S., XX., 451); State Freight Tax, 15 Wall., 232 (82 U. S., XXI., 146); see, Bank of Commerce v. N. Y. City, 2 Black, 620 (67 U. S., XVII., 451); Bank Tax Case, 2 Wall., 200 (69 U. S., XVII., 793).

The interposition of the person in whose possession any property may be, in the process of raising a tax, is in the stage of its assessment. The person is assessed, not taxed, with reference to any particular property. It is the property that is taxed. Real estate, that is often not in the open and notorious possession of anyone, is quite as conveniently assessed to unknown owners or to no owners at all, as to any particular person. Personal property, if worth taxing, is always in the possession of some one; but the tax on it could be raised without difficulty, if the assessment were to no person, provided the tax collector were sure of finding this personal property at hand, and where it could be levied upon, when the tax came to be paid. Assessing a person with respect to personal property makes him the tax collector of the State, so far as that particular piece of property is concerned, but it is not necessary to the legality or validity of the exercise of the taxing power, and does not change the burden of taxation from the property to the person. The taxes complained of do not therefore fall upon a "person."

Is this a tax on property? The Statute of Connecticut speaks of money at interest as the subject of the taxing power. But it is clear that the money lent by Kirtland cannot be taxed.

R. R. Co. v. Jackson, 7 Wall., 263 (74 U. S. XIX., 88); Kirtland v. Hotchkiss (supra).

Kirtland has received for his money certain paper writings called bonds, secured by deeds of trust on Cummings's land in Chicago. These paper writings, the case shows, never have been in Connecticut, and always have been in Illinois.

The tax, therefore, cannot be upheld, if it be laid upon the bonds themselves of Kirtland, as property subject to taxation by Connecticut.

People v. Commissioners of Taxes, 23 N. Y., 224; Foreign Held Bonds Case (supra).

This court has recognized the distinction between a debt or credit and its evidence.

Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall., 103 (76 U. S., XIX., 602); Pelham v. Way, 15 Wall., 196 (82 U. S., XXI., 55); People v. Hibernian Sav. & L. Soc., 51 Cal., 243.

If Connecticut has the right to tax these bonds, that right existed when the bonds were made, and affected the contracts themselves. The borrowing power of Cummings was affected by the existence of that right.

Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet., 449.

A burden upon Cummings' property is, therefore, laid by the taxation of these debts.

People v. Hibernian Sav. & L. Soc. (supra); Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall., 480 (90 U. S., XXIII., 112).

So far as actual property is concerned, Cummings' property that is to pay these bonds, is all the property that there is in existence to bear the burden of Connecticut's taxes. That property is situated in Illinois, out of the jurisdiction of Connecticut.

If the taxes complained of fall on property, they burden either (see supra).

- (a) The money lent by Kirtland.
- (b) The bonds themselves (the paper writings).
- (c) The property of Cummings. Or,
- (d) The debts owned by the plaintiff in error,

i. e., his rights in the property of his debtor, Cummings.

Each and every one of these possible subjects of the taxes complained of, must be assigned a situs beyond the territorial limits of Connecticut.

If the taxes complained of cannot be sustained as "taxes on property," to which a situs can be assigned within the State of Connecticut, can the acts of "business" performed by the parties to the bonds of the plaintiff in error already performed, and in the future to be performed in the State of Illinois, be assigned such a situs?

The whole question resolves itself into this:

Are acts of business, performed out of the territorial jurisdiction of the State of Connecticut, by any theory, to be regarded as within that State for purposes of taxation?

See, State v. Township Com. of Readington, etc., 36 N. J., 66; Cooley, Const. Lim., 493.

The "business," of the plaintiff in error, with respect to the bonds in question, has been and is to be actually performed in Illinois; is not protected by Connecticut, either by her material power or against direct competitors, and for the purposes of taxation by that State, must be held to have a situs beyond her jurisdiction.

3. The Statute of Connecticut here complained of, is repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that, in directing the taxation of a subject that is beyond its jurisdiction, it violates and interferes with the sovereignty of the State of Illinois.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How., 490; Story, Confl. L., sec. 257; The Apollon, 9 Wheat., 370; see, also, Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 213; Hervy v. R. I. Locomotive Works (supra); Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S., 720, 722 (XXIV., 568); Guilander v. Howell (supra); Reynolds v. Geary, 26 Conn., 179; Lamb v. Bowser, 7 Biss., 372; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall., 223 (68 U. S., XVII., 531); Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff., 494; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How., 173; Whitcomb v. Phoenix Ins. Co., Vol. 8, Ins. Law Jour., 624; Ward v. Maryland (supra); Crandall v. The State of Nevada, 6 Wall., 35 (73 U. S., XVIII., 745); Passenger Cases, 7 How., 283; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S., 595 (XXIV., 793); Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall., 314 (83 U. S., XXI., 357).

4. The Statute of Connecticut here complained of, is repugnant to the 10th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States, by which it is provided that "No State shall * * * pass any * * * law impairing the obligation of contracts."

Edward v. Kearzey (supra); Walker v. Whitehead (supra); Foreign Held Bonds Case (supra); Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How., 301.

5. The Statute of Connecticut here complained of, is repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, by which the States are forbidden to deprive any citizen of life, liberty or property "without due process of law."

U. S. v. Rice, 4 Wheat., 246; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch, 481; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall., 139 (74 U. S., XIX., 109); affirmed in Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall., 610 (83 U. S., XXI., 430); St. Louis v. The Ferry Company (supra); Foreign Held Bonds Case (supra); Tappan v. Merchants' Bank, 19 Wall., 490 (86 U. S., XXII., 189); The Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall., 229 (85 U. S., XXI., 895); Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall., 658 (87 U. S., XXII., 459).

6. The Statute of Connecticut here complained of, is repugnant to section 2, article IV., of the Constitution of the United States, by which it is provided that "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

Coryfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. (C.C.), 371; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall., 168 (75 U. S., XIX., 357); Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S., 176 (XXIV., 716); Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 36 (83 U. S., XXI., 394); Bradwell v. State, 16 Wall., 130 (83 U. S., XXI., 442); Ward v. Maryland (supra); The Passenger Cases (supra); Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet., 462; People v. Hibernian Sav. & L. Soc. (supra).

VII. If the Statute of Connecticut complained of is constitutional, its effect is to restrict the making of similar contracts, the result of business transactions had outside of the State of Connecticut.

Mr. Morris W. Seymour, for defendant in error:

The Connecticut court, as its decision discloses, discussed carefully and philosophically the nature and character of the property, the taxation of which it upheld. Its situs, for the purposes of taxation, was exhaustively considered. And it is but another form of expressing a claim already made, to assert that substantially the only question in this case, as it is presented by the record, is whether said court erred in holding the situs of the debt due Kirtland to be in Woodbury for the purposes of taxation, under our statute.

Our position, that the Connecticut court did not err in its conclusion as to the situs of the property, seems to be sustained by the decisions of this court.

Foreign Held Bonds Case, 15 Wall., 300 (82 U. S., XXI., 179); see, also, Cooley, Tax., pp. 15 16; Latrobe v. Baltimore, 19 Md., 13.

Hilliard in his work on the Law of Taxation, page 132, says: "Debts and choses in action, being a species of intangible property, are deemed, for purposes of taxation, to be situated at the domicile of the owner. Thus choses in action are properly assessed in the county where the owner resides. So money loaned by one in a certain city and made payable there, cannot be taxed him as personal property, he not being during the year a resident either of the city or of the State."

Burroughs, Taxation, secs. 41, 134, 482; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt., 152; Thomas v. Mason Co. Ct., 4 Bush., 135; People v. Commissioners of Taxes, 23 N. Y., 224; People v. Park, 23 Cal., 138; Johnson v. Oregon City, 3 Oreg., 13; Hall v. Co. Comrs. of Middlesex, 10 Allen, 102.

The provision in the bonds, that principal and interest shall be payable in Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and the provision in regard to taxes, in no way affect the conclusiveness of the argument as to the situs of the property in question. See article in the Am. Law Reg., January, 1879, p. 1 to 8, citing on this point, page 3, Black v. Zacharie, 3 How, 513; Far. Bk. of Md. v. Iglehart, 6 Gill., 56; Balt. City Pass. R. Co. v. Sewell, 35 Md., 252, 253.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

See 10 OTTO.

We will not follow the interesting argument of counsel by entering upon an extended discussion of the principles upon which the power of taxation rests under our system of constitutional government. Nor is it at all necessary that we should now attempt to state all the limitations which exist upon the exercise of that power, whether such limitations arise from the essential principles of free government or from express constitutional provisions. We restrict our remarks to a single question, the precise import of which will appear from a brief statement of the more important facts of this case.

The plaintiff in error, a citizen of Connecticut, instituted this action for the purpose of restraining the enforcement of certain tax warrants levied upon his real estate in the town in which he resided, in satisfaction of certain state taxes, assessed against him for the years 1869 and 1870. The assessment was by reason of his ownership, during those years, of certain bonds, executed in Chicago, and made payable to him, his executors, administrators or assigns in that city, at such place as he or they should by writing appoint and, in default of such appointment, at the Manufacturers' National Bank of Chicago. Each bond declared that "It is made under, and is, in all respects, to be construed by the laws of Illinois, and is given for an actual loan of money, made at the City of Chicago, by the said Charles W. Kirtland to the said Edmund A. Cummings, on the day of the date hereof." They were all secured by deeds of trust, executed by the obligor to one Perkins, of that city, upon real estate there situated, the trustee having power by the terms of the deed to sell and convey the property and apply the proceeds in payment of the loan, in case of default on the part of the obligor to perform the stipulations of the bond.

The Statute of Connecticut, under which the assessment was made, declares, among other things, that personal property in that State or elsewhere should be deemed, for purposes of taxation, to include all moneys, credits, choses in action, bonds, notes, stocks, except United States stocks, chattels or effects, or any interest thereon; and that such personal property or interest thereon, being the property of any person resident in the State, should be valued and assessed at its just and true value in the tax list of the town where the owner resides. The statute expressly exempts from its operation money or property actually invested in the business of merchandising or manufacturing, when located out of the State. Conn. Revision of 1866, p. 709, tit. 64, ch. 1, sec. 8.

The highest court of the State held that the assessments complained of were in conformity to the state law, and that the law itself did not infringe any constitutional right of the plaintiff.

This writ of error is prosecuted upon the ground, as asserted by the plaintiff, that the Statute of Connecticut, thus interpreted and sustained by its highest court, is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

In McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 428, this court considered very fully the nature and extent of the original right of taxation which remained with the States after the adoption of the Federal Constitution. It was there said "That the power of taxing the people and their property is essential to the very existence of government, and may be legitimately exercised on the objects to which it is applicable to the utmost extent to which the government may choose to carry it." Tracing the right of taxation to the source from which it was derived, it was further said: "It is obvious that it is an incident of sovereignty, and is co-extensive with that to which it is an incident. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation, but those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation."

"This vital power," said this court in Bk. v. Billings, 4 Pet., 563, "may be abused; but the Constitution of the United States was not intended to furnish the corrective for every abuse of power which may be committed by the State Governments. The interest, wisdom and justice of the representative body, and its relations with its constituents, furnish the only security, when there is no express contract, against unjust and excessive taxation, as well as against unwise legislation."

In St. Louis v. Ferry Co., 11 Wall., 423 [78 U. S., XX., 192], and in State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 15 Wall., 300 [82 U. S., XXI., 179], the language of the court was equally emphatic.

In the last named case we said that "Unless restrained by provisions of the Federal Constitution, the power of the State as to the mode, form and extent of taxation is unlimited, where the subjects to which it applies are within her jurisdiction."

We perceive no reason to modify the principles announced in these cases or to question their soundness. They are fundamental and vital in the relations which under the Constitution of the United States exist between the Federal and State Governments. Upon their strict observance depends, in no small degree, the harmonious working of our complex system of government, Federal and State. It may, therefore, be regarded as the established doctrine of this court, that so long as the State, by its system of taxation, does not trench upon the legitimate authority of the Union, or violate any right recognized or secured to the citizen by the Constitution of the United States, this court, as between the citizen and his State, can afford no relief against state taxation, however unjust, oppressive or onerous.

Plainly, therefore, our only duty is to inquire whether the Federal Constitution prohibits a State from taxing, in the hands of one of its resident citizens, a debt held by that citizen upon a resident of another State, such debt being evidenced by the bond of the debtor, and the payment of the debt or bond secured by deed of trust or mortgage upon real estate situated in the State in which the debtor resides.

The question does not seem to us to be very difficult of solution. The creditor, it is conceded, is a permanent resident within the jurisdiction of the State imposing the tax. The debt which he holds against the resident of Illinois is property in his hands. 15 Wall., 320 [82 U. S., XXI., 187]. It constitutes a portion of his wealth, and from that wealth he is under the very highest obligation, in common with his fellow-citizens of the same State, to contribute for the support of the government whose protection he enjoys.

The debt in question although a species of in-tangible property, may, for purposes of taxation, if not for all purposes, be regarded as situated at the domicile of the creditor. It is none the less property because its amount and maturity are set forth in a bond. That bond, wherever actually held or deposited, is, at best, only evidence of the debt, not the debt itself. The bond may be destroyed, but the debt—the right to demand the repayment of the money loaned, with the stipulated interest—remains. Nor is the locality of the debt, for the purposes of taxation, affected by the fact that it is secured by mortgage upon real estate situated in Illinois. The mortgage is but a security for the debt, and, as held by this court in 15 Wall., 323 [188], already cited, the right of the creditor "To proceed against the property mortgaged, upon a given contingency, to enforce by its sale the payment of his demand, * * has no locality independent of the party in whom it resides. It may, undoubtedly, be taxed by the State when held by a resident therein," etc. Cooley, Tax., 15, 63, 134 and 270. The debt in question, then, having its situs at the creditor's residence and constituting a portion of his estate there, both he and the debt are, for purposes of taxation, within the jurisdiction of the State. It is, consequently, for the State to determine, consistently with its own fundamental law, whether such property owned by one of its residents shall contribute, by way of taxation, to maintain its government. Its discretion in that regard is beyond the power of the Federal Government in any of its departments to supervise or control for the reason, too obvious to require argument in its support, that such taxation violates no provision of the Federal Constitution. Manifestly it does not, as is supposed by counsel, interfere in any true sense with the exertion by Congress of the power to regulate commerce among the several States. Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How., 73; Cooley, Tax., 62. Nor does it, as is further supposed, abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or deprive the citizen of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or violate the constitutional guaranty that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges of citizens in the several States.

Whether the State of Connecticut shall measure the contribution which persons resident within its jurisdiction shall make by way of taxes, in return for the protection it affords them, by the value of the credits, choses in action, bonds, or stocks which they may own (other than such as are exempted or protected from taxation under the Constitution and laws of the United States), is a matter which concerns only the people of that State, and with which the Federal Government cannot rightly interfere.

Judgment affirmed.

Copy, foregoing opinion duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Cited—104 U. S., 80, 111; 35 Ohio St., 36; 36 Ohio 36; 38 Am. Rep., 549.

JOHN LAMMERS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

P. C. NISSEN ET AL.

Review of state judgment.

Where there is no dispute as to the law, and the only question is one of fact, and the finding of the trial court has been affirmed by the higher State Court, this court will not disturb the judgment of the State Court unless the error is clear.

[No. 72.]

Argued Nov. 17, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska.

The case appears in the opinion.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter, S. W. Packard, Jas. Coleman and G. C. Moody, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. H. Powell, Bartlett, Tripp, B. F. Grafton and H. E. Paine, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question in this case is, whether, as a matter of fact, when Lammers, the plaintiff in error, purchased from the United States lot 1, sec. 12, T. 33, R. 1, Dakota City land district, there was in front and outside of the meandered line of the lot any land that could be cultivated or that bore trees of value or grass sufficient for grazing purposes. There is no dispute between the parties as to the law. The District Court of Cedar County found there was such land and this finding has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of Nebraska on appeal. Under such circumstances we ought not to disturb the judgment of the state court unless the error is clear. No less stringent rule should be applied in cases of this kind than that which formerly governed in admiralty appeals, when two courts had found in the same way, on a question of fact.

After a careful examination of the evidence, we are satisfied with the result reached by the court below and the judgment is, consequently, affirmed.

AMERICAN EMIGRANT COMPANY,

*Appl.,
v.*

COUNTY OF ADAMS.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 61-71).

Swamp land grant to States—grant by State—valid contract—purchaser from county.

*1. Though the grant made by Congress by the Act of Sep. 28, 1850, of the swamp and overflowed lands to the States in which they lie, is expressed to be for the exclusive purpose of enabling said States, with the proceeds thereof, to reclaim the lands by means of levees and drains; it is questionable whether the security for the due application of such proceeds does not rest upon the good faith of the State alone, and whether the State may not exercise its discretion in this behalf without being liable to be called to account, and without affecting the title to the lands: at all events, it seems that Congress alone has the power to enforce the conditions of the grant (by revocation or otherwise), in a clear case of violation of the trust; and since, by the Act, the proceeds of the lands are to be applied to the designated purposes only "as far as necessary," the State has, at least, a large discretion as to the "necessity" of employing the proceeds of the lands to the reclamation thereof.

2. A grant, by a State, of its swamp and overflowed lands to the several counties in which they are situated, to be disposed of for general county purposes subject to the conditions of the Act of Congress (Sep. 28, 1850), is valid, and a disposition of such lands made by a county by contract in pursuance of the state grant cannot be retracted or rescinded by the county on the ground of its being a violation of the Act of Congress.

3. In Iowa, such a disposition of lands by a county,

*Head notes by Mr. Justice BRADLEY.

See 10 OTTO.

if approved by a vote of the people under the Act of the Legislature of that State passed in 1858, is valid, though made for less than one dollar and a quarter per acre, the minimum for the ordinary sales of such lands; and, if the contract for disposing of the county's swamp lands include also a sale of its claim against the United States for indemnity for lands sold by the latter, the county cannot, against its own act, maintain a bill in equity for setting aside such sale, though within the law prohibiting the assignment of claims against the government.

4. If the purchaser from the county under such a contract was bound thereby to do certain acts, such as to introduce a certain number of settlers within a certain period, or to reclaim the lands, the obligation to perform such acts, if not made a condition of the sale, lies in covenant merely, and does not avoid the sale. It is only when covenants are mutual and dependent, or when their performance is made an express condition, that a breach involves an avoidance of the contract.

[No. 16.]

Argued Nov. 27, Dec. 2, 3, 1878. Decided Dec. 16, 1878. Decree rescinded and case ordered for reargument Apr. 21, 1879. Reargued Oct. 27, 28, 1879, and finally decided Nov. 24, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. N. M. Hubbard, J. A. Harvey, Benj. F. Butler, C. C. Nourse and O. D. Barrett, for appellant:

It was argued in the circuit court that the Act of the Legislature of 1858, authorizing this contract, legislated a diversion of the grant, and therefore this contract was invalid.

That question cannot be raised in this case. No such issue is made in the bill.

1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 4th ed., 327; Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves., 302; Glasscott v. Lang, 2 Phil., 310; Gresl. Eq. Ev., 231-2; Brainard v. Arnold, 27 Conn., 617; Bailey v. Ryder, 10 N. Y., 363.

The contract cannot be invalid for that reason, because it is well settled that the Act of 1850, known as the "swamp land grant," was an absolute grant of the lands to the States, and passed the title at once; and if an absolute grant, then, of course, as courts have already often held, the State took absolute title, clogged with no condition, and can dispose of it and give absolute title; that the trust is not one that attaches to the land, but is one reposed in the good faith of the States; and that the execution of the trust is a question of expediency, of political economy, rightfully intrusted to the state sovereignty, and is a question in which no private rights are involved, and one which no private rights can affect.

Barrett v. Brooks, 21 Iowa, 148; Suprs. of White-side Co. v. Burchell, 31 Ill., 648; Dunklin Co. v. Dist. Court, 23 Mo., 450; Cooper v. Roberts, 18 How., 181 (59 U. S., XV., 341); Kansas v. Stringfellow, 2 Kan., 321; Parks v. I. C. R. Co., 24 Ia., 189; Pease v. Hubbard, 37 Ill., 257; Newell v. Bureau Co., 37 Ill., 253; Allison v. Halfacre, 11 Ia., 450; People v. Auditor-General, 12 Mich., 171; People v. Pritchard, 17 Mich., 260; Fremont Co. v. B. & M. R. R. Co., 22 Ia., 91; S. C., in 9 Wall., 89 (76 U. S., XIX., 563); R. R. Co. v. Smith, 9 Wall., 95 (76 U. S., XIX., 599).

The principle established in these authorities is in harmony with the legislation of the several States on the subject. Their statutes will show that nearly all the States receiving lands under this grant regarded their title as absolute, and disposed of them under Acts, in many cases much more objectionable in this respect than the Iowa Act of 1858, more especially Illinois, Missouri, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Oregon and Arkansas. If this Act is, for the reason suggested, invalid, then so are the statutes of these several States, and the titles to millions of acres of land disposed of under them are worthless. This legislation of the States, supported by express sanction of their courts, and acquiesced in by the General Government, for a period longer than is required under our limitation law to give absolute repose to titles, cannot be disturbed without seriously endangering the title to millions of dollars worth of property, purchased on the faith of such legislation and decisions.

In any event the court cannot, for that reason, declare this contract void. If the power of disposition in the State is absolute, and the trust rests in the faith of the State to apply the proceeds, then the title of the Company is complete, and the land discharged of the trust. But if the trust attaches to the land, then it takes and holds it subject to the trust, and the remedy is by bill to enforce its execution.

Messrs. Frank M. Davis and R. P. Lowe, for appellee:

The lands involved in this suit are swamp. It is so alleged in the petition and admitted in the answer.

Swamp lands, under the Act of 28th September, 1850, is defined as being "Such lands as are usually unfit for cultivation, in ordinary staple crops, such as corn, wheat, oats, etc., in ordinary and average years; not such as are utterly worthless by reason of overflow, but such as cannot ordinarily be successfully cultivated."

Thompson v. Thornton, 50 Cal., 142; Keeran v. Griffith, 31 Cal., 465; Keeran v. Allen, 33 Cal., 542; Keller v. Brickey, 78 Ill., 133.

That municipal organizations, such as counties, may take title to land and execute trusts, is held by the following cases:

Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 2 How., 127; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo., 543; Hill, Trustees, 3d Am. ed. (marg.), 45; Dill. Mun. Corp., sec. 437; Bell Co. v. Alexander, 22 Tex., 350-364.

When a trustee has an interest in the trust property and conveys the property, the deed is void, except as to the interest of the trustee; and no property, public or private, can be acquired in the trust property in violation of the terms of the trust.

Price v. Methodist Church, 4 Ohio, 547; Story, Eq. Jur., secs. 1257, 1258, n. 2 and 3; Church v. Marine Ins. Co., 1 Mas., 341.

A trustee will not be allowed to purchase at his own sale, nor acquire a profit out of the trust property at the expense of the trust.

Story, Eq. Jur., secs. 465, 1258; Fox v. Horah, 1 Ired., Ch., 358; Tiff. & Bull. Tr., 418.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises upon a bill in equity originally filed by Adams County against the appellant, in the District Court of Adams County, Iowa, and afterwards transferred to the Circuit Court of the United States. The object of the bill was to rescind a certain contract between the County of Adams and the American Emigrant Company, made in September, 1862, whereby the County agreed to convey to the Company its swamp lands, and its claim against the government for indemnity on account of swamp lands belonging to it, and which had been sold by the public land officers; also to rescind a deed executed on behalf of the County in pursuance of the said contract; and to recover back the moneys and proceeds which the defendant had realized from the property and the said claim. The case is of the same general character as that of the Emigrant Co. v. Wright Co., decided at the Term of December, 1877, and not yet reported [97 U. S., 339, XXIV., 912]. The Act of Congress, and the laws of the State of Iowa which bear upon the case, and the character of the general operations of the defendant, are fully set forth in the opinion in that case, and need not be repeated here. Suffice it to say that, on the 30th day of September, 1862, a written contract, similar to the contract in that case, for the sale of the swamp lands of Adams County, and of all the fund and claim of the county on the General Government therefor, was signed by the chairman and clerk of the Board of Supervisors of said County, and by the American Emigrant Company, by its agent, F. C. D. McKay, and was recorded among the proceedings of the Board. By this contract the Company agreed to take the lands and fund and claim and to make for the County any public work or improvements therefor which the Board of Supervisors might request, and which were authorized by law, to the amount of $2,000, at any time after October 1, 1863; or to pay the Board, if they preferred to do the work themselves, the sum of $2,000 in money by the 1st of January, 1865. It was further agreed that the lands should not be taxed as long as the County held the legal title; and the Company agreed to settle all the lands fit for settlement with white settlers and purchasers—by selling farms of the usual size, one third in three years, another third in five years, and the whole in eight years. It was also declared that the Company took the lands subject to the provisions of the Act of Congress of September 28, 1850, 9 Stat. at L., 519, and expressly released the State of Iowa and the County from all liability in reclaiming said lands, or in the draining thereof; and that any contract existing between the County and any person, in relation to said lands or funds, was to be respected and fulfilled by the Company.

Subsequently a deed was executed in pursuance of this contract by the Supervisors of the County, bearing date the 7th of September, 1863, and purporting, for the consideration of $2,000, to convey to certain trustees, in trust for the American Emigrant Company, certain lands particularly described, stated to amount in the aggregate to 3,680⁵¹/₁₀₀ acres, although the several parcels foot up only 2,235 acres, and the parties concede that, after certain reservations mentioned in the contract, the actual quantity conveyed by the deed was only a trifle over 2,000 acres. The deed contained an agreement on the part of the County that the lands within the County which might at any time be duly selected as swamp or overflowed lands, and all such lands as might not be included in the conveyance, if any, should be conveyed on request, and that any proceeds of the claim on the United States, if any should be received, should, on like request, be assigned and transferred to said American Emigrant Company, its trustees or assigns; and that any lands that should be located under or by any scrip, which might be obtained on said claim should also be conveyed, on request, to said Company, its trustees or assigns.

It appears from the proofs that the defendant, the American Emigrant Company, has sold about 1,500 acres of the land, upon some of which the purchasers have made improvements; and has paid to the County the said sum of $2,000 mentioned in the contract, which was paid in June, 1865, and has also paid certain expenses incurred on behalf of sixteen different counties with whom the Company had like contracts, of which Adams County was one, the one sixteenth part of which, as stated by the defendant, amounts to $4,562; and a further sum of $1,200 paid to one Grinnell as agent of Page, Adams and Montgomery Counties, all together, on behalf of Adams County, about $7,000.

On the other hand, the Company has received under the contract, from the United States, in cash, the sum of $6,075.11; and in addition to the lands specifically conveyed, patents have been issued to the County for 2,043 acres, to which the defendant is entitled if the contract is carried out; and there is still an unadjusted claim for about 3,000 acres more.

The circuit court decreed the contract and deed to be void, and ordered a restitution of all moneys and securities received by either party by virtue thereof, saving the rights of bona fide purchasers, and referred the matter to a master to take the necessary account. This decree is appealed from; and the question for us to decide is, whether it is or is not sustained by the pleadings and proofs in the cause.

The grounds laid by the bill of complaint for avoiding the contract are, in substance, as follows: first, that the sale of the County's swamp lands was made at a much less price than the law allowed them to be sold for; that by an Act of the Legislature of Iowa, then in force, regulating the disposal of such lands, it was made unlawful to sell the same at a less price than $1.25 per acre, whereas, by the said contract, nearly 8,000 acres were sold for $2,000; second, that the sale of the County's claim against the United States for indemnity was void, as being contrary to law; third, that the contract and deed were procured by false and fraudulent representations, both as to the quantity of lands comprised therein, and as to the validity and condition of the claim against the United States for indemnity, it being represented that the County was entitled to only about 2,000 acres of land, and that the claim for indemnity had been rejected and was of no value; that these representations were made by agents of the defendant, who well knew the falsity thereof, to the officers and agents of the County, who were entirely ignorant in the premises, and liable to be easily imposed upon; fourth, that false representations were made as to the object of buying the lands, namely: that the defendant desired them only for immediate settlement and improvement, whereas it has never made any effort to drain or cultivate them, and never had any intention of doing so; fifth, that the delivery of the deed was procured by fraud, the same having been executed as an escrow, and left with the clerk of the Board of Supervisors to be delivered only upon the execution and delivery of a mortgage upon all the lands to secure a compliance with the terms of the contract; whereas, by a fraudulent combination with said clerk, the defendant procured the delivery and recording of said deed without giving any such mortgage. The bill also set up insufficient consideration for said lands and the indemnity claim, and failure of consideration; that the defendant had failed to drain or improve the lands, and to release the County from its obligations in that behalf; that it had refused to pay a certain claim for over $2,000 against said County for services of an agent, in consequence of which the County had been prosecuted and obliged to pay $2,700 for judgment and costs. It was also charged that the defendant had made use of fraudulent misrepresentations and bribery to procure a vote of the people of the County in favor of the sale, which was required by the laws of the State. The bill further stated that, on discovery of the frauds thus charged, the Board of Supervisors passed a resolution repudiating and rescinding the contract; and concluded by praying that the contract be declared void, and for an account.

See 10 OTTO,

The answer specifically denies the charges of the bill, and claims, in substance, that the contract was fairly entered into, and that the complainant had failed to perform its part thereof, and had prevented the defendant from fulfilling its part, so far as it remained unfulfilled. The answer not being sworn to, except by an agent of the defendant, who was not a party to the bill, of course is not evidence.

A great deal of evidence was produced, showing the proceedings had in the General Land Office and in the State in relation to the claim and location of the swamp lands, and in relation to the claim for indemnity against the Government; the services of agents; the negotiations between the parties respecting the contract in question; the representations that were made; the proceeds and value of the lands and the disposition thereof. And although it is evident to us, from all the evidence taken together, that the agents of the defendant were well informed in regard to the rights of the County, and that the Supervisors of the County were quite ignorant thereof, and liable to be easily imposed upon; and although it is very clear that the latter believed that the lands to which the County was entitled were only about 2,000 acres, and that the claim for indemnity against the government was of no value, yet we see no sufficient proof that the contract was procured by false and fraudulent representations; and we are unable to sustain the decree of the circuit court on this ground. The case, in this respect, as to the character of the proofs, is very far short of that of the Emigrant Co. v. Wright Co. [supra].

But there was one aspect of it which, at the conclusion of the first hearing, we thought deserving of consideration, and that was the general character of the transaction, viewed in connection with the Act of Congress by which the swamp and overflowed lands were granted to the State. This Act was passed September 28, 1850, 9 Stat. at L., 519, and is entitled "An Act to Enable the State of Arkansas and Other States to Reclaim the 'Swamp Lands' Within Their Limits." By the 1st section it was enacted: "That, to enable the State of Arkansas to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, the whole of those swamp and overflowed lands, made unfit thereby for cultivation, which shall remain unsold at the passage of this Act, shall be and are hereby granted to said State." The 4th section declared that the provisions of the Act should be extended to and their benefits be conferred upon each of the other States of the Union in which such swamp or overflowed lands might be situated. These lands, therefore, were granted to the several States in which they lie for a purpose expressed on the face of the Act; and that purpose was "To enable the State to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim them." The 2d section of the Act, after prescribing the method in which the lands should be designated and patented to the State, concluded with the following proviso: "Provided, however, That the proceeds of said lands, whether from sale or direct appropriation in kind, shall be applied exclusively, as far as necessary, to the purpose of reclaiming said lands by means of the levees and drains aforesaid." Our first view was, that this trust was so explicit and controlling as to invalidate the scheme finally devised by the Legislature of Iowa for the disposal of the land, and under which the contract in question was made. But on more mature reflection, after hearing additional argument, we are satisfied that such a result did not necessarily follow. The history of the state legislation on the subject is briefly as follows:

The Legislature of Iowa, by an Act passed in January, 1853, granted the lands to the several counties in which they were situated, subject to the conditions of the Act of Congress and such laws as the Legislature might thereafter pass. It created a drainage commissioner's office, and county surveyors to lay out drains; after draining, the lands were to be appraised and sold at auction to the highest bidder in small tracts; and it provided for reclamation of the lands in detail. Other Acts were subsequently passed in pursuance and furtherance of this general scheme, which was clearly conformable to the purposes of the congressional grant. The difficulty we had arose upon the subsequent Act of the Legislature of Iowa, passed in 1858, by which it was declared (by section 1) that it should be competent and lawful for the counties owning swamp and overflowed lands to devote the same, or the proceeds thereof, either in whole or in part, to the erection of public buildings for the purpose of education, the building of bridges, roads and highways, or for building institutions of learning, or for making railroads through the county or counties to which such lands belonged; and (by section 2) it was enacted that the proper officers of any county might contract with any person or company for the transfer and conveyance of said swamp or overflowed lands, or the proceeds thereof, or otherwise appropriate the same to such person or company, or to their use, for the purpose of aiding or carrying out any of the objects mentioned in the 1st section. It was further provided that, before any such contract could take effect, the proposition should be submitted to a vote of the people of the county for their approval or rejection. There was a proviso in the 3d section that no such sale should be valid, unless the person or company purchasing should take the lands sold subject to all the provisions of the Act of Congress (before referred to), and should expressly release the State of Iowa and the county from all liability for reclaiming said lands. A supplement was passed in 1862, proving that no county should be released from its obligation to make the necessary drains and levees contemplated by the Act of Congress passed Sep. 28, 1850, and the Act of Assembly passed in 1853.

The contract in dispute was made under this law, and our first impression was that it introduced a scheme subversive of the trust imposed upon the State by the Act of Congress; that its effect was to devote the lands and proceeds thereof to purposes different from those which the original grant was intended to secure; that it threw off, or endeavored to throw off, all public responsibility in relation to the trust; and hence that the scheme itself and the contract based upon it were void. But a reconsideration of the subject has brought us to a contrary conclusion. The argument against the validity of the scheme is, that it effects a diversion of the proceeds of the lands from the objects and purposes of the congressional grant. These were declared to be to enable the State to reclaim the lands by means of levees and drains. The proviso of the 2d section of the Act of Congress declared that the proceeds of the lands, whether from sale or direct appropriation in kind, should be applied exclusively, as far as necessary, to these purposes. This language implies that the State was to have the full power of disposition of the lands; and only gives direction as to the application of the proceeds, and of this application only "as far as necessary" to secure the object specified. It is very questionable whether the security for the application of the proceeds thus pointed out does not rest upon the good faith of the State, and whether the State may not exercise its discretion in that behalf without being liable to be called to account, and without affecting the titles to the lands disposed of. At all events, it would seem that Congress alone has the power to enforce the conditions of the grant, either by a revocation thereof or other suitable action, in a clear case of violation of the conditions. And as the application of the proceeds to the named objects is only prescribed "as far as necessary," room is left for the exercise by the State of a large discretion as to the extent of the necessity. In the present case it is not shown by allegations in the bill, or otherwise (if such a showing would be admissible), that any necessity existed for devoting the proceeds of the lands in question to the purposes of drainage. No case is shown as the basis of any complaint, even on the part of the General Government, much less on the part of the County of Adams, which voluntarily entered into the arrangement complained of. Our conclusion, therefore, is, that this objection to the validity of the contract cannot prevail.

Having disposed of the questions of fraud and of the supposed invalidity of the state legislation, the other grounds alleged for setting aside the contract will not require extended discussion.

One of these grounds is that the sale of the County's swamp lands was made at a much less price than the law allowed them to be sold for; that, by an Act of the Legislature of Iowa then in force, regulating the disposal of such lands, it was made unlawful to sell them at a less price than $1.25 per acre. This question has been decided adversely to this view by the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of Audubon Co. v. Emigrant Co., 40 Iowa, 460. It was there held that, when a county devotes its swamp lands to purposes specified in the Act of March 28, 1858, it is not limited in price to $1.25 per acre, but may devote them to such purposes, upon such terms as may be agreed on, if the contract be approved by a vote of the people. The contract in that case was substantially the same as in this, and was sustained. As this is a question of state law, if we had any doubt upon it, we should defer to the decision of the state court.

Another question suggested for relief is, that the sale of the County's claim against the United States for indemnity for lands sold by the government was contrary to law, and void. If the law prohibiting assignments of claims against the government applies to such a claim as that which was the subject of the contract in this case, the government might have refused to pay it; but after it was paid, the County being particeps criminis, cannot, against its own act, have a standing in a court of equity either to recover it from the appellants, or to have the contract avoided. So far as the state laws are concerned, the Supreme Court of Iowa has frequently sustained contracts precisely like that now under consideration. See, Audubon Co. v. Emigrant Co. [supra]; Allen v. Cerro Gordo Co., 34 Iowa, 54; Page Co. v. Emigrant Co., 41 Iowa, 115; Ringgold Co. v. Allen, 42 Iowa, 697.

The allegations of the bill to the effect that the Emigrant Company has not fulfilled its engagements with respect to the drainage and settlement of the land, rest in covenant merely, and afford no ground for avoiding the contract. Where covenants are mutual and dependent, the failure of one party to perform, absolves the other and authorizes him to rescind the contract. But here the contract was largely carried into execution soon after its inception. The engagements of the appellants to introduce settlers and the like were to be performed in the future; and their performance was not made a condition, but, as before stated, rested in covenant. In case of a breach, they would lay the foundation of an action, but nothing more.

To the same category belongs the question whether the appellants ought to have paid the claim of Frank M. Davis. The agreement required them to respect and fulfill any contracts then existing between the County and any person in relation to the lands and funds which formed the subject of negotiation. Davis had a claim against the County for services in surveying the lands and in prosecuting the indemnity claim. The County insisted that the appellants should pay this claim, which they refused to do, alleging it to be unjust and collusive. In 1866, Davis sued the County, and obtained judgment for $2,200. In 1869, this judgment, with interest and costs, then amounting to over $2,700, being paid by the County, was formally demanded of the appellants, and they again refused to pay it. It is claimed that this refusal entitles the County to repudiate the whole contract. We do not think so. It is one of those matters that rest in agreement merely, and is not in the form of a condition. The agreement is an independent one, a part of the consideration of the contract, it is true; but its non-performance raises an action merely, and does not annul the entire contract. We are disposed to think that as the appellants had notice of Davis' suit, and co-operated in its defense, the claim of the County is valid; but, being a mere legal demand, it cannot be recovered in this suit; and we are satisfied that it constitutes no proper ground for the relief sought by the bill.

See 10 OTTO.

Looking at the whole case as presented to us, we think that the complainants below were not entitled to a decree, and that the bill should have been dismissed.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree dismissing the bill without prejudice to the right of the County to bring an action at law for any breach of the terms of the contract.

Cited—107 U. S., 564; 10 N. W. Rep., 51; 15 N. W. Rep., 621.

CHARLES H. HOLDEN, Appt.,
v.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 72-74.)

Interest, rate of.

Where the local law allows the rate of interest to be fixed by the contract of the parties, the rule adopted by this court is to give the contract rate up to the maturity of the contract; and thereafter the rate prescribed for cases where the parties themselves have fixed no rate.

[No. 47.]

Argued Nov. 6, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. William A. Meloy, for appellant, cited, on the question of interest, Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 How., 118 (63 U. S., XVI., 301); Burnhisel v. Firman, 22 Wall., 170 (89 U. S., XXII., 766); Macomber v. Dunham, 8 Wend., 553; U. S. Bank v. Chapin, 9 Wend., 471; Ludwick v. Huntzinger, 5 W. & S., 60.

Messrs. Thomas H. Talbot, Enoch Totten and A. J. Cresswell, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This record presents no ground for controversy as to the facts, and only one legal point that requires consideration. But for the importance of that point as a matter of local law we should dispose of the case without a formal opinion.

On the 13th of October, 1870, at the City of Washington, Charles H. Holden, the appellant, made his promissory note of that date to John B. Wheeler, or order, for $5,000, payable four years from date at the Bank of Washington, with interest at the rate of ten per cent, payable semi-annually. On the same day he executed

NOTE.—The rule for calculation of interest. See note to Story v. Livingston, 38 U. S. (13 Pet.), 359.

When interest is recoverable as damages, or on money. See note to Sneed v. Wistar, 21 U. S. (8 Wheat.), 690.

to David L. Eaton a deed of trust of certain property in the City of Washington, to secure the payment of the principal and interest of the note as they should respectively fall due. On the 19th of October, 1870, Wheeler indorsed and delivered the note to the appellee, Talbot, who paid him at the time, as the consideration of the transfer, the sum of $5,000. Talbot thereupon became a bona fide holder of the instrument. On the 28th of July, 1873, he executed to his co appellee—the Savings and Trust Company—his promissory note for $1,500, payable at ninety days, and pledged the note of Holden as collateral security. Talbot's note is still unpaid. The interest on Holden's note was paid up to the 13th of April, 1873, and $75 on account of interest was paid subsequently. The principal and the residue of the interest are unpaid. Eaton, the trustee in the deed of trust, died on the 13th of February, 1873. On the 30th of September, 1871, Holden conveyed the trust premises to John Chester, one of the defendants. This bill was filed on the 18th of November, 1874. It prayed that a trustee should be appointed in place of Eaton; that the successor so appointed should be directed to execute the trust; and for general relief. The court below found, among other things, that Holden was indebted to Talbot on the note in the sum of $5,000, "with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 13th of April, 1873, less the sum of $75," and that the Savings and Trust Company had a lien on the debt for $1,500, and interest from April 13, 1875. It was decreed that a new trustee should be, and he was thereby, appointed, and that in default of payment of the amount due from Holden, and the costs, the trustee should proceed to sell the premises described in the deed of trust, etc. From this decree Holden appealed to this court.

The note of Holden, including days of grace, matured on the 16th of October, 1874. Up to that time there can be no doubt that the rate of interest to be paid was that called for by the note. But what is the rate chargeable thereafter? The court below allowed continuously the rate expressed in the note. Was this correct? This is the question we are called upon to decide.

The subject of interest in its historical aspect was considered by this court in Nat. Bk. v. Mech. Nat. Bk., 94 U. S., 437 [XXIV., 176].

The statutory provisions relating to interest in the District of Columbia are as follows:

(1) The rate of six per cent per annum is allowed upon all moneys due, where there is no contract upon the subject.

(2) Parties may stipulate in writing for ten per cent per annum, or any less rate.

(3) If more than ten per cent is taken upon any contract, all the interest received may be recovered back, if it be sued for within a year.

The rule heretofore applied by this court, under the circumstances of this case, has been to give the contract rate up to the maturity of the contract, and thereafter the rate prescribed for cases where the parties themselves have fixed no rate: Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 How., 118 [63 U. S., XVI., 301]; Burnhisel v. Firman, 22 Wall., 170 [89 U. S., XXII., 766]. Where a different rule has been established, it governs, of course, in that locality. The question is always one of local law.

This subject was fully examined in the recent case in this court of Cromwell v. Sac Co., 94 U. S., 351 [XXIV., 195]. We need not go over the same ground again.

Here the agreement of the parties extends no further than to the time fixed for the payment of the principal. As to everything beyond that, it is silent. If payment be not made when the money becomes due, there is a breach of the contract, and the creditor is entitled to damages. Where none has been agreed upon, the law fixes the amount according to the standard applied in all such cases. It is the legal rate of interest where the parties have agreed upon none. If the parties meant that the contract rate should continue, it would have been easy to say so. In the absence of a stipulation, such an intent cannot be inferred. The analogies relied upon to support a different view are obviously distinguishable from the case in hand.

The decree will be altered according to these views.

It appears that since this appeal was taken, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Esq., the trustee appointed in place of Eaton, has also died. Another trustee in his stead will be appointed here.

As modified in these two particulars, the decree will be affirmed and remitted to the court below for execution.

Cited—103 U. S., 698; 68 Ind., 205; 84 Ind., 378; 43 Am. Rep., 99; 129 Mass., 82; 37 Am. Rep., 313; 95 N. Y., 490; 47 Am. Rep., 65.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR, COLLECTOR, Plff. in Err.,
v.

EMIL HEROLD.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 75-78.)

Duty Act—question for jury.

1. Under the Act of June 30, 1864, imposing a duty on ground chicory, it was not error for the court to say to the jury that ground chicory was the same thing as burnt chicory.

2. Whether or not the article imported was a new preparation and something other than ground chicory, was a question of fact for the jury.

[No. 77.]

Argued Nov 18, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

This action was brought in the court below, by the defendant in error, to recover an alleged excess in duties collected by the defendant, now plaintiff in error. Upon the trial, evidence was introduced showing the importations by the plaintiffs from a foreign port into the Port of New York, in the year 1873, of certain merchandise upon which a duty had been assessed by the defendant, at the rate of five cents per pound, under section 11 of the Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to Increase the Duty on Imports, and for Other Purposes," approved January 30, 1864, which provides a duty "on chicory root, four cents per pound; ground, burnt or prepared, five cents per pound." Upon the ascertainment and liquidation of said duties, the plaintiffs duly protested and appealed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and brought this action in due season, pursuant to the requirements of the Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to Reduce the Duties on Imports and to Reduce Internal Taxes, and for Other Purposes," approved June 6, 1872, which provides a duty in lieu of former duties "On chicory root, ground or unground, one cent per pound."

The testimony which was offered by the plaintiff tended to show that the article in question was commercially known as "finely ground chicory, in papers," or "paper chicory," and was pulverized chicory; that chicory is grown extensively in Germany, where it is largely used as a substitute for coffee. The root, when dug from the ground, is first washed and scraped, then split and cut by machinery into pieces or sections which are partially dried in the sun and then kiln-dried in which latter condition it becomes an article of commerce to this country. Of this there are two forms, "light kiln-dried" and "extra kiln-dried," neither of which are burnt or roasted, except such as is necessarily incident to the process of kiln-drying.

The next process is burning or roasting, which is done in heated cylinders. It is necessarily roasted before it can be ground. Then it is ground in mills, from which it emerges in coarse and fine particles commingled, in which condition, or when simply burnt or roasted, it is not an article of commerce. The chicory is then passed through sieves, by which the coarse and fine particles are separated from each other. The coarse particles are packed in barrels or casks for shipment, and is called in trade "coarsely ground," or "granulated chicory," the finer particles, after being again ground and reduced to powder, are packed in small paper bags, weighing ordinarily one quarter of a pound each, sometimes half a pound, which are packed in casks. This kind is called "finely ground chicory, in papers," or "paper chicory." Both forms are drier than the atmosphere, and absorb moisture from it; the first more slowly than the second, because the particles are larger.

The cases or paper packages of "paper chicory" are placed in damp cellars or vaults attached to and a part of the large chicory manufactories, some of which are exclusively for the manufacture of paper chicory, in order to hasten the absorption of moisture, and in some factories the hastening of absorption is further facilitated by allowing steam to escape into the cellars. The greater quantity of moisture in finely ground chicory over that which is absorbed in the "granulated," makes the paper chicory from 15 to 30 per cent. less per pound than the "granulated."

Paper chicory, when taken out of the cellars, has the consistency of paste, and hardens as it is exposed to the air. The granulated chicory also hardens by exposure.

The granulated chicory is usually sold by importers in this country, to coffee dealers and coffee roasters, to adulterate coffee; the paper chicory is sold exclusively to consumers, mostly Germans and Scandinavians in the Western States, who use it as a substitute for coffee.

The defendant introduced evidence to show that the natural absorption of moisture was hastened by artificial means, e. g., by steam introduced through pipes in the vaults or cellars, See 10 OTTO.

and that this operation was an essential and usual process in the preparation of the paper chicory. On the part of the plaintiff, evidence was offered that nothing had been done to the chicory in these vaults, except to allow the natural absorption of moisture to take place by exposing the paper chicory to the air. Some of the witnesses testified that paper chicory had different traits, as to taste and smell, from granulated chicory.

The plaintiffs gave some evidence to show that a different article from the imported article called "patent chicory," or "chicory coffee," was made by an admixture of water and foreign ingredients. It was not claimed that the plaintiff's goods contained any admixture of foreign ingredients.

Verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case further appears in the opinion.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Stephen G. Clarke, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We think it was not error for the court to say to the jury that ground chicory was the same thing as burnt chicory. The chicory root cannot be ground until it is burned, and burnt chicory is not an article of commerce until it is ground. Whether or not the article imported was a new preparation, and something other than ground chicory; that is to say, whether it was prepared chicory and not simply ground chicory, was a question of fact that was properly left to the jury.

Affirmed.

ISAAC S. HURT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 100-104.)

Union of equitable and legal causes of action.

*In the Federal Courts the union of equitable and legal causes of action in one suit is not permissible under the Process Act of 1792, substantially re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, declaring that in suits in equity, in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States the forms and modes of proceeding shall be according to the principles, rules and usages which belong to courts of equity. So held in a case transferred to the Federal Court from a court of Texas in which State the union of equitable and legal causes of action in one suit is permitted.

[No. 49.]

Argued Nov. 6, 7, 1879. Decided, Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips, W. P. Ballinger and W. Hallett Phillips, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James Lowndes, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the plaintiff in a District Court of Texas to quiet his title to certain real property situated in Galveston, in that State. On application of the defendant it was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States.

*Head note by Mr. Justice FIELD.

The petition, which is the first pleading in a suit according to the practice which obtains in Texas, sets forth that the plaintiff is the owner of the premises; that he purchased them of one Molsberger and wife, in June, 1874; that those parties acquired them in December, 1865, and had subsequently, until the sale to the plaintiff, claimed and held them as a homestead; that in April, 1867, certain parties designated as Marsh, Denman & Co., recovered judgment against Molsberger in the County Court of Galveston on a debt contracted in 1866, while the premises constituted the homestead of himself and family; and in October, 1873, under an execution issued thereon, the premises were sold by the sheriff of the county, for the sum of $30, to the defendant, Hollingsworth, one of the members of that firm, and to him the sheriff executed a deed of the premises, which has been recorded in the county.

The petition avers that this deed is a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff, and prays that the cloud may be removed and his title quieted. The defendant filed in the circuit court an answer to this petition, in which he admits that the plaintiff was in possession of the premises, and had obtained a deed of them from Molsberger and wife, who had purchased them in 1865, but denies that they constituted a homestead of Molsberger and family continuously from that time until the alleged sale to the plaintiff, or that they were such homestead when the sale was made by the sheriff to him.

The answer then avers that the defendant became the owner of the premises by his purchase; that the plaintiff wrongfully withholds the possession from him, and the rents and profits, which are of the value of $75 a month. He, therefore, prays that the title may be declared to be in him, and that he may have judgment for the possession of the premises and the value of the rents.

These pleadings were subsequently amended so as to show the value of the property and the amount of its rents, and in some other particulars not material to the question now presented.

The case was considered by counsel and treated by the court as an action at law, and by stipulation made at the December Term of 1875, the parties waived a jury trial and submitted "the matters therein, as well of facts as of law, to the court." The evidence was then heard; and at a subsequent Term the court gave judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendant recover the title and possession of the property; and also the sum of $420, as damages for its use and occupation, and have a writ of possession.

This judgment was subsequently vacated and a rehearing granted, when a motion was made by the plaintiff to transfer the cause, it being one seeking equitable relief, from the law docket of the court, upon the ground that it had been improvidently placed there by the defendant, to the chancery docket, to be there proceeded with according to the rules and practice of the circuit court sitting in chancery; and also a motion to take from the files of the court so much of the answer as purported to be "a cross suit, reconvention suit, or cross-bill," because the court, sitting as a law court, had no jurisdiction to grant in that suit the relief prayed by the defendant. These motions were accompanied with a petition for leave to amend the bill of complaint. But the court, considering that the case was on its law docket, and had been submitted for its judgment, refused to sustain the motions. In disposing of them, it observed that it was a court both of law and equity, and had cognizance of both kinds of cases; that though the cause was an equity cause, the court had cognizance of it, and the question presented was, therefore, simply one of regularity of pleadings and proceedings; that the parties had waived all matters of mere form by going to final hearing on the merits and submitting the case to the court, and that their substantial rights had not been violated by this mode of proceeding. The court thereupon heard the evidence presented by the parties, which related principally to the point whether the premises had been abandoned as a homestead at the time of the sheriff's sale mentioned in the pleadings; and rendered a similar judgment to that previously entered. The case is brought here both on writ of error and on appeal, the plaintiff adopting both modes to obviate a possible objection, which otherwise might have been taken to our jurisdiction.

There would be great force in the observations of the court below, if the different causes of action presented by the parties could, by the usual forms of proceeding, either at law or in equity, be disposed of in one suit. It might, then, very well be said that as by stipulation the case had been submitted to the court for determination, it was too late to object to the form of the proceedings. If it was an equity case, then it was properly before the court; if it was a case at law, a jury having been waived, it was also properly there. In either view, the relief warranted by the facts would be administered. But here no such disposition could be made of the case presented by the petition and the one presented by the answer. The first is strictly a suit in equity seeking special relief, which only a court of chancery can grant.

The second is an action at law for the recovery of real property, with the rents and profits. The two cases are entirely different in their nature, and can be determined, where the distinctions between legal and equitable proceedings are maintained, only in separate suits. In the one case, if the allegations of the plaintiff be sustained, the judgment must be declaratory and prohibitory, adjudging that the deed of the sheriff to the defendant constitutes a cloud upon his title, and enjoining the defendant from asserting any claim to the premises under it. In the other case, if the defendant establishes his averments, the judgment must be for the possession of the premises and the rents and profits.

In the Federal Courts such a blending of equitable and legal causes of action in one suit is not permissible under the Process Act of 1792, substantially re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, which declares that in suits in equity, in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, the forms and modes of proceeding shall be according to the principles, rules and usages which belong to courts of equity. 1 Stat. at L., 276, sec. 2; R. S., sec. 913. This requirement has always been held obligatory upon parties and the court whenever the question has been raised. Thompson v. R. R. Co., 6 Wall., 134 [73 U. S., XVIII., 765]. A party who claims a legal title must, therefore, proceed at law; and a party whose title or claim is an equitable one must follow the forms and rules of equity proceedings as prescribed by this court under the authority of the Act of August 23, 1842, 5 Stat. at L., 518, sec. 6. The case of Hornbuckle v. Toombs, reported in the 18th of Wallace, 648 [85 U. S., XXI., 966], does not conflict with this view; it only decides that the Process Act of 1792 does not extend to proceedings in the courts of the several Territories, which may be regulated by their respective Legislatures.

In this case there is nothing in the answer of the defendant which would render it good as a cross-bill, even had it been drawn in due form and filed as such bill by leave of the court, for it seeks legal and not equitable relief. Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 398.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the court below should have granted the motions of the plaintiff. So long as the Process Act, respecting the modes and forms of procedure in equity cases, remains in force, parties have a right to insist that its provisions, however variant from the practice of the state courts, or open to objection, shall be followed, and should be permitted to recede from a stipulation waiving them, improvidently made, as the one in this case evidently was, at any time before final hearing and judgment.

There is an additional reason for sending the case back: that the evidence as to the abandonment of the homestead of the plaintiff is very unsatisfactory, and leaves great doubt on our minds whether the conclusion reached by the court below on this point was correct. We do not think that a homestead can be considered as abandoned because occupied by tenants, and the owner is temporarily residing elsewhere. According to the decisions of the Supreme Court of Texas, it would appear that, in order to work a forfeiture of the right to the homestead, the owner's cessation of occupancy must be with an intention of total relinquishment, shown by clear and decisive circumstances. The trifling sum at which the premises were suffered to be struck off would seem to indicate that at the sale little confidence was felt in the validity of the title which would be acquired. On the re-hearing, this matter will receive a more full and careful consideration.

The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to allow the plaintiff to amend his petition, or bill of complaint, as he now designates it, and to strike out of the answer of the defendant his prayer for the possession of the premises and the value of the rents and profits; and it is so ordered.

Cited—106 U. S., 678; 111 U. S., 386.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

JOHN N. TROOK.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 112, 113.)

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court dependent on amount; interest cannot be added to give jurisdiction; how value of thing demanded may be

See 10 Otto.

Jurisdiction as to amount—part of judgment remitted.

1. In cases brought here by writ of error for the re-examination of judgments of affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the value of the matter in dispute is determined by the judgment affirmed, without adding interest or costs.

2. Where the judgment, after $1,500 had been remitted to avoid a new trial did not exceed $2,500, under the rule established, in R. R. Co. v. Grant, ante, 201, this court has no jurisdiction.

[No. 436.]

Submitted Nov. 17, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

On motion to dismiss.

The grounds for the motion for dismissal sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. G. Payne, for defendant, in support of motion.

Mr. Enoch Totten, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In cases brought here by writ of error for the re-examination of judgments of affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the value of the matter in dispute is determined by the amount of the judgment affirmed without adding interest or costs. The judgment in this case, after the $1,500 had been remitted to avoid a new trial, did not exceed $2,500. Such being the case, under the rule established in R. R. Co. v. Grant [ante, 231], our jurisdiction has been taken away.

The motion to dismiss is granted, each party to pay his own costs.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JAMES O. CURTIS ET AL.

JAMES O. CURTIS ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 119-124.)

Paymaster's bond—breach of condition.

1. A breach of a paymaster's bond does not occur until he or his legal representatives, or sureties are required to refund moneys in his hands.

2. Until there is a breach of the condition of the bond, which renders him or his sureties liable, there can be no right to interest on account of such breach.

[No. 706, 707.]

Argued Nov. 6, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for United States.

Mr. Thos. H. Talbot, opposed.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants in the circuit court, Curtis and Foster, were sued, on a bond which they shown; what cases reviewable without regard to sum in controversy. See note to Gordon v. Ogden, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 33.

had given as sureties of Oliver Holman, Paymaster in the Army of the United States. Holman, though dead, was named in the writ. The bond was for the sum of $20,000, and was subject to three conditions, namely: that he should faithfully discharge his duties as paymaster, that he should regularly account when thereunto required for all moneys received by him, and "Should refund at any time when thereunto required any public moneys remaining in his hands unaccounted for."

The only breach of this bond alleged in this declaration is that he did not refund when thereunto required the sum of $3,320.02, with interest. The defendants were duly served with process and after appearance by attorney, and after several continuances from May Term, 1873; until June, 1876, made default. On the assessment of damages they appeared at the hearing and an agreed statement of facts was filed. On this the court entered a judgment for the sum claimed in the declaration and interest from the service of the writ, to which judgment both parties bring writs of error.

To the error assigned by the defendants it is sufficient to say that, having been served with the writ and appeared by counsel, and having thereafter suffered a voluntary default, that default was a confession of indebtedness on account of the breach of the bond assigned, namely: the failure of Holman, their principal, to pay over the moneys in his hands when thereunto required and of such demand as raised the obligation to pay by his sureties. There remained only the question of the amount due from him on account of money in his hands, and of this the auditor's statement of account was evidence which was uncontradicted. There is, therefore, no error of which they can complain.

The United States, however, asserted a right to interest on the amount found due by the auditor from the date at which Holman ceased to be paymaster, namely: Nov. 30, 1865.

Without attempting to decide any other case but this, we are of opinion that the breach of the bond on which the defendants were sued did not occur until Holman, his legal representatives, or his sureties, were required to refund moneys in his hands; that is, until some notice was given that a definite sum had been found in his hands, due the United States, by the proper accounting officer. Of course, until there was a breach of the condition of the bond, which rendered him or his sureties liable, there could be no right to interest on account of such breach.

The agreed statement shows that no such statement was made or rendered to Holman in his lifetime, or any demand to refund. Nor does it appear that any such statement was rendered to his executors, or a demand made of them or of the sureties, except as it was made by the service of the writ.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the earliest moment at which anyone became liable on account of the breach of the condition of the bond now sued on was the service of the writ on the defendants, and that such service was a sufficient demand.

As the court properly allowed interest on this basis, the judgment is affirmed.

Cited—106 U. S., 535.

WILLIAM MCINTYRE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOHN GIBLIN.

Negligent shooting—damages for.

1. In an action for negligent shooting and wounding plaintiff, there is no error in the charge to the jury, that, in computing the damages, they might take into consideration "a fair compensation for the physical and mental suffering caused by the injury."

2. The charge was not erroneous because the words "and mental" were included.

[No. 173.]

Submitted Nov. 24, 1879. Decided Dec. 1, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. Sheeks & Rawlins and S. A. Merritt, for plaintiff in error:

Only in actions for willful and malicious injuries, not for injuries arising from negligence, can damages for mental suffering be recovered.

Johnson v. Wells, 6 Nev., 224; Wilson v. Young, 31 Wis., 574; Field, Dam., sec. 630; 2 Greenl. Ev., sec. 267, and note; Sedg. Dam. (marg.), 35-37; Wadsworth v. Treat, 43 Me., 163; Curtis v. R. R. Co., 18 N. Y., 534.

Messrs. Hoge & Jonasson and E. D. Hoge, for defendant in error:

That compensation for mental, in connection with physical, suffering may be recovered in an action like the present, is well established.

Sher. & Redf. Neg., sec. 606; R. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall., 90, 105 (72 U. S., XVIII., 591, 594); Ransom v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 15 N. Y., 415; Curtiss v. R. R. Co., 20 Barb., 285; S. C., 18 N. Y., 534; Morse v. Auburn, etc., R. R. Co., 10 Barb., 621; Peoria Bridge Asso. v. Loomis, 20 Ill., 235; Beardsley v. Swann, 4 McLean, 333; Oliver v. N. Pacif. Tr. Co., 3 Oreg., 84; West v. Forrest, 22 Mo., 344; Masters v. Warren, 27 Conn., 293; Memphis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Whitfield, 44 Miss., 466; Seger v. Barkhamsted, 22 Conn., 290; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush., 451; Hanson v. Fowle, 1 Sawy., 497; Koch v. Oregon Steamship Co., reported in Forum, Oct. 1875, p. 683; Pa. & O. Canal Co. v. Graham, 63 Pa., 290; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass., 552; Holyoke v. R. R. Co., 48 N. H., 541; Matteson v. R. R. Co., 62 Barb., 364; Smith v. Overby, 30 Ga., 241; Cox v. Vanderkleed, 21 Ind., 164; Gould v. Christianson, Blatchf. & H., 507; Cooper v. Mullins, 30 Ga., 152.

The only case which seems to give expression to a contrary doctrine from that stated in the above authorities, is the case of Johnson v. Wells, 6 Nev., 224.

But that case has been overruled by the same court, in the case Quigley v. C. P. R. R. Co., 11 Nev. 369.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to recover damages for the careless and negligent shooting and wounding of Giblin, the plaintiff below, by McIntyre, the defendant. On the trial the court charged the jury that in computing the damages, they might take into consideration "A fair compensation for the physical and mental suffering caused by the injury," and the only question submitted to us now is, whether this charge was erroneous because the words "and mental" were included.

We think, with the court below, that the effect of this instruction was no more than to allow the jury to give compensation for the personal suffering of the plaintiff caused by the injury, and that in this there was no error.

Judgment affirmed.

EDWARD CLARK, Trustee, and LOUISA MCGHAN, Appts.,

v.

